The opening work, the Partita in D Minor, was a bit disappointing because the beautifully flowing melody was marred by the wavering tone displayed in the slower passages. In the lower registers one often heard a rasping tone, which was no doubt due to the artist's method of "attacking" the strings. However, the middle and upper registers gave forth a beautiful, full-throated tone when the artist had got over the temporary strain of the first parts of this Partita. Mr. Szigeti did full justice to the Chaconne, the fifth movement, with all its technical intricacies. Especially striking was his interpretation of the arpeggios in this movement, which were played with great fluency. And though this complex work can be a trial if the performer is the least

Most of the Quebec students had learned English at the Colleges Classiques—institutions for secondary schooling giving a broad and thorough grounding in arts.

Throughout the discussions a sense of national identity was revealed; both in the French and the English students. On topics concerning Canadian culture they often had different points of view, but about national uniqueness they thought with one mind—as Canadians.

And what did the French Canadians think of their stay in Toronto? They loved it. Fraternities confused them, Hart House astounded them, and the size of the campus amazed them.

One Carabin said of their stay in Toronto, "Our sejour: The select group of hosts who received us so warmly during this Varsity weekend had all the qualities we could wish for and one major fault — immeasurable prejudices in our favour.

...Two Weekends

by Ed Roberts

Parties that end at one a.m., eight o'clock lectures every morning, 6,000 students in residence, Saturday classes and no lecture-cutting.

Those were some of the things which most impressed the 20 Toronto students who travelled to the University of North Carolina last weekend. But there were two other things which resulted in much deeper and longer lasting impressions, impressions of horror.

Most obvious of the two was UNC's system of Student Government, and that gave U of T students plenty to think about. But another impression of UNC life, which emerged only as the weekend drew to a close, proved even more horrifying to the Canadian group.

It was the almost complete refusal of the UNC to engage in anything resembling a deep discussion, the sort of discussion which we usually term "a bull-session".

The 7,000 students at the State University of North Carolina are entirely self-governed. And as desirable as this may seem, it was precisely the point which made U of T students shudder.

"Are even university students capable of wisely using powers as broad as those allotted to the UNC Student Government?" was the way most of us put it.

Included in the Student Government's powers are complete control over discipline, the power to assess fines and the power to suspend students for periods of up to one and a half academic years (three semesters).

These powers are entrusted to a special council under UNC's governmental system, which is modelled closely after that of the American federal constitution.

And lest anyone think the power of suspension is rarely used, it should be pointed out that we were told that an average of 25 students a year were suspended for breaches of the student honor code.

This is the main reason why most of the Toronto students shuddered just a little as officials of the student government explained the set-up.

None of us could remember 25 U of T students having been expelled during our entire careers at the University, and in fact we could only remember four or five suspensions.

Honor courts aside, the whole concept of an honor system rather puzzled the Toronto students, who simply could not understand why a formal code of honor was needed.

When we heard that UNC students were supposed to turn in to the authorities any student caught "cheating, lying or stealing" most of us were aghast: we explained that we'd all been brought up to a code of honor and didn't feel that such a personal thing needed formal codification.

Later we found out that the private attitude of many UNC students was exactly the same as ours.

They usually said "I private support the honor system, but I can't see the need for a formal code".

Many of them compared the whole set-up to "a Mickey Mouse club".

Other aspects of UNC's student government proved equally perplexing to the U of T students.

Perhaps the most perplexing was the complete separation of the executive and legislative branches of government, as is the case in the American federal government.

While this system may work on a national level, our conversations at UNC soon revealed that at the student level it all too often led to bitter personal feuds between members in the two branches of government.

Another amazing fact was the existence of two student parties which contested all elections for student government posts. The two parties were not, as would be only normal to expect, branches of the two American national parties.

The two—called the Student Party and the University Party—exist only on the University of North Carolina's campus, and they formulate programs based completely upon local issues.

Perhaps the best way to sum it all up is to merely quote the words of a UNC law student whose name seems to have been lost in a welter of memories of the weekend.

"It seems to me that the whole difference between our Student Government and the system used by the University of Toronto is merely illustrative of the basic difference in the political minds of the Americans and the British. The British are essentially pragmatic, whereas we're much more formal", was the way he put it.

A better understanding . . . .

The attitude of the UNC students towards deep-rooted discussions came as a distinct surprise to the Toronto students.

The attitude in itself is simple, and was marvelously summed up by an article which appeared, quite coincidentally we're sure, in the UNC paper during our stay there. In so many words, the article advised students to beware of any deep-thinking, and it ended by quoting Shakespeare's famed dictum "... he thinks too much, such men are dangerous" (Julius Caesar).

The attitude became more and more apparent as we tried to engage UNC students in deep discussions of the sort which are so prevalent on the U of T campus. Again and again groups of our students found they were being sidetracked back to banalities by UNC students who either wouldn't or couldn't get into "deep discussions".

Maybe we would find that if we had been able to get to know our American counterparts a bit better they would be willing to engage in these discussions, but I don't really think so.

This aversion to discussion of deep issues came clearly to the fore when the inevitable question of segregation was raised. Significantly enough it was first brought up by students from UNC.

The discussion, such as it was, only confirmed the beliefs that many of us have held for a long time: most thinking people in the South realize integration is inevitable but many of the older generation refuse to accept this stand. The younger generations are still not whole-heartedly in favor of it (inter-racial marriage seems to be the biggest fear) but they support the idea. And progress, however slow it may seem, is being made.

Significant items on the credit side: UNC is integrated — there are 22 negro students enrolled there this year (out of a total enrolment of nearly 7,000). A negro is at present chairman of the Atlantic region of the United States National Students' Association. And the student government at UNC is now preparing to introduce a bill, which will fully integrate all stores, restaurants and theatres in Chapel Hill, the town in which UNC is situated. This bill has received the full support of the local merchants.

But I think most of us felt that such progress as was being made, while it was a step in the right direction, was only a step.

The other things about UNC which impressed us were minor compared to questions of student government, attitudes towards thinking, and segregation.

First of all was the concept of a university town, something that is almost unknown in Canada. Chapel Hill is wholly a university town, and every activity in the town is geared towards the students. The town has no other reason for existence.

Another thing was the high proportion of students in residence—6,000 out of an enrolment of 7,000. About 1,200 of these live in fraternities, which are both recognized and controlled (to a degree) by the university administration.

And then there was the one a.m. curfew on all residence girls—which meant all parties started about 7 p.m. and then went until shortly after midnight.

And the fact that a UNC student is not allowed to cut more than three classes in any one course without risking expulsion from that course. And of course the concept of eight o'clock lectures, as well as Saturday morning classes, was foreign to our nature.

But the girls in our party found the 6 to 1 boy-girl ratio "simply delightful", even if some of us didn't think we'd like to go to a university where such a situation existed. (The U of T's ratio is about 2 to 1).

But the one thing which emerged most closely from the weekend was an appreciation of the value of such exchanges.

All of us agreed that the opportunity to meet and talk with students was valuable, if only to point up some of the differences between our educational system and theirs.

This Is Our Once-a-Year — Book

Sales booths for Torontonensis will be set up in the larger faculties and colleges this week. Look for them in Engineering, Victoria College, University College, Trinity and Nursing from 12-2 p.m.

A number of the yearbooks have been allotted to be sold at a reduced rate and students ordering yearbooks early will get the benefit of the reduced rate until the allotted number is reached.

Students in faculties where no booth has been set up can order their copies through their faculty 'Nensis' representative or at the Students' Administrative Council Building.

That Sticky Substance

If you ever venture into the SAC building, down the stairs past that den of iniquity the Varsity office, to a small cluttered—I mean cultured—office, you'd see amongst the boxes of last year's photographs and piles of this year's grad biography forms, three interesting specimens of the editorial staff of the 1960 Torontonensis.

The girl who greets you as you enter is Sandra Whittall, editor-in-chief of the all-campus yearbook, second woman editor of Torontonensis in 62 years, and the eighth devotee to edit the Nensis for two consecutive years. Pert and enthusiastic, Sandra has proved through Nensis '59 that she has the organizing ability, patience and talent needed to produce a book of 448 pages, containing news and pictures of the year's events from all faculties and colleges.

Besides being in French and German IV at U.C. and Torontonensis IV at U of T, she is managing to play basketball, to take an active part in the VCF, and, oh yes, to learn how to play the guitar. Her reasons for editing the Nensis this year are she claims, not for publication. It may be that she loves the feeling of power and tyranny that it gives her, but we'd be more inclined to think that she has in her blood not printer's ink, but that fragrant, sticky substance that pervades the yearbook office—rubber cement.

Sandra hopefully outlined her duties as sharpening pencils and dusting the office; everything else is the job of the two assistant editors—it's such good experience for them, of course, Marg Fisher and Jack Clissold, both in second year Political Science and Economics, were section editors last year, but there any similarity ends.

Marg, carrying on the blond-and-blue-eyed Nensis tradition, is apparently involved in just about every activity at Victoria College. The Bob Revue, the Music Club, the Broadway Group, and Gilbert and Sullivan all make their claims on Marg's abilities and nonchalant willingness. She gained her publications experience at North Toronto Collegiate, and; last year, as editor of the Nensis Fall Activities section.

The other assistant editor, Jack Clissold, provides the necessary note of dignity and tall-and-handsome masculinity for the Nensis staff. In charge of the layout for the professional faculty organizations last year, Jack produced a pleasing and dignified section. Jack commutes daily from Applewood Heights, west of Toronto, but as a well-hazed fraternity pledge has a centre on Campus at the house of the discriminating—but not discriminatory—Beta Theta Pi's. The staff has so far been unable to deduce any connection between his work on Torontonensis and his intentions to study law. His first efforts at sitting and watching others work show that he has great promise in the editorial field.

the thinking man's yearbook

This year, the first 2,000 copies of the Torontonensis are being offered to the students at the stupendously low price of $2.00 per copy, half the price of last year's year book. Rumours to the effect that these copies are last year's misprints are entirely unfounded, for the $2.00 books are definitely 1960 copies of Torontonensis in excellent condition.

Such a drastically reduced rate must be explained to be believed. The Board of Governors has approved an increase in SAC fees, and as a natural result the Nensis budget has been increased. To give students direct benefits from this 2,000 copies are being sold at $2.00.

This innovation is an experiment in an attempt to insure that more undergraduates provide themselves with a copy of the Torontonensis, which is designed to appeal to everyone on the campus. Although the sales have been increasing steadily along with the increase in student enrolment, the number of copies sold last year was not reasonably proportionate to the total enrolment at the university. In 1955, 1,500 copies were issued, and by 1959 this number had increased by almost one third to 1,900 copies. However, out of a total approximate enrolment of 13,000 students, 1,900 copies does not seem many. This year, the number is sure to pass the 2000 mark.

This week the sales campaign gets into full swing. Already, the SMC quota of 200 books at $2.00 each have been snatched up in two days without a real advertising campaign. A proportionate number of the books at a reduced rate will be allotted to each faculty where booths will be set up at noon hour during the week. This will be the only time $2.00 copies are available through faculties. After November 27, there will be a limited number of these on sale at the SAC office.

The new offer is a remarkable one, and all students are urged to get their copies immediately before the allotted number has been sold.

'Napping Hoax

A kidnapping reported to The Varsity last Thursday night turned out to be a complete hoax.

An anonymous phone caller to The Varsity said Trinity students had kidnapped quarterback Jim Biggar of the Faculty of Dentistry football team, to prevent him from playing in Friday's Mulock Cup semi-finals.

The caller also said some money had "changed hands".

Although Biggar had missed Thursday night's football practice, he did turn up for the game on Friday.

Dents still lost to Trinity, 40-6.

Salaries Up

An overall increase in salaries for full-time teaching staffs at the four major Canadian universities was reported by a Bureau of Statistics release Saturday.

The University of Toronto was cited as one of the four universities where the academic staffs averaged $8,035, an increase of nearly 30 per cent on 1956-57 salaries.

According to the report, deans averaged $15,875, up 28.3 per cent on the 1956-57 salaries; professors $12,175, up 40 per cent and instructors and lecturers averaged $5,502 an increase of 32 per cent.

Grants

But there is a possibility Ottawa would ask for some sort of guarantee that the province would use the money for education.

The proposed agreement will likely call for legislation by both federal and Quebec governments if only to change tax rates and deductions.

Two weeks ago Premier Sauve told a press conference Quebec had proposed a solution to the problem to Ottawa.

Premier Frost Friday said the proposal will be discussed at the 1960 sitting of the Ontario legislature. He said Ontario tax experts are to make an immediate start on studying the possibility of a 1960 changeover to the new system.

The new proposal, Mr. Frost said, is in line with representations made by Ontario, especially by provincial treasurer James N. Allan at the last federal-provincial conference. He said it was also in line with Ontario policy towards municipalities.

"Our representations and arguments, which we think are fundamentally correct, are that the various levels of government should have revenues which leave them as free as possible to conduct their own business," he added.

He said that the federal grants—which Ontario universities have accepted since their inception—have done a great deal of good.

"Nevertheless in their administration there has undoubtedly been an infringement upon provincial responsibilities," Mr. Frost said.

He said while Ontario had not felt this infringement reached "any objectionable extent, nevertheless facing a conference year which we hope will deal with the very fundamentals of federal-provincial problems we think it is very well and timely to get back to the basic facts of the situation."

"It must be understood," he continued, "that this (the agreement) is in no way a recognition of the province's claims for a realistic and just apportionment of tax sources and revenues in which we have an equal right in common with the federal government in accordance with our constitution."

These matters will have to be solved at the next federal-provincial conference, he said.

"What we are interested in now is a recognition of the principles which, when established, enable other things to fall in their own place."

He said Quebec had contended "with a good deal of validity" that the present arrangement is a positive infringement on the rights of the provinces as contained in the BNA Act.

He said increased administrative costs arising from an increased corporation levy would be negligible.

Finance minister Fleming, in an address to commerce students at Laval University, Quebec, after his meeting with Mr. Sauve Friday said: "I can assure you that the federal government is determined to find a just solution to this problem and to suppress definitely this cause of friction between Quebec and Ottawa."

The federal grants, he said, "constitute solely a necessary help for the universities without the federal government intervening in any provincial field."

But he acknowledged that while other Canadian universities approved of the grants, it was obvious that Quebec felt altogether differently about them. He said those who know Quebec's history understand the province's attitude.

Food Chemistry

Angling For Freshmen

One of the lesser-known faculties in the University of Toronto will make a bid to draw the attention of first-year students this week.

The Department of Food Chemistry will illustrate its work in the chemistry of plant and animal materials in relation to human consumption with a series of displays and exhibits at an Open House, Nov. 25 and 26.

Although it is part of the School of Household Science, Food Chemistry faculty members stress that, contrary to popular opinion, they do not teach "cooking and sewing".

The course in food chemistry is based on the fundamentals of physics, chemistry, biology and microbiology.

The department also undertakes research projects. Among those in progress at the present time are studies of the effect of fluoride in food on the concentration of fluoride in the tooth structure, and the nature of certain chemical preservatives which inhibit the growth of common food molds.

During the Open House, staff and graduates will answer questions from first year students about undergraduate courses and research work. Hours are from 12-6 p.m. Wednesday and 2-6 p.m. Thursday.

The Open House will be held at 157 Bloor St. W., on the third floor.

HOCKEY BLUES WIN TWICE

Blues Bop Clarkson Hicken Scores Twice

Potsdam, N.Y., Nov. 20 (Staff) — Varsity Blues won their first game of the season on the third try as they defeated the Clarkson Golden Knights 5-4 in a penalty filled exhibition game here tonight.

George Hicken led the winners with two goals, including the winner in the third period, as Blues came from behind twice for the win.

Blues wasted no time in opening the scoring when John Gatten tipped in Howie Roth's drive at the thirty second mark. Clarkson game back to take the lead on goals by Tom Sheppard and Mel Tomalty.

Varsity tied it up when Dan Cherepecka took a relay from Pete Warren and whipped home 20 foot shot.

Clarkson again took the lead when Mike McCann scored with the period only 14 seconds old. Blues took only 27 seconds to tie the game again, as Roth finished off a three way passing play from linemates Murchie and Gatten.

Two quick goals put the game on ice for Varsity early in the third period. Harry Neale, a standout all the way for Blues, went end-to-end to put his team one goal in the lead at 2:44, and Hicken scored 19 seconds later.

Sheppard scored again a minute later, but Varsity held on until the finish.

Notes . . . . . Blues received the lions share of the 19 penalties getting 12 of them . . . . . Epp suffered a broken nose in the second period and left the game early in the third period . . . . . the Murchie-Gatten-Roth line was the outstanding line on the ice . . . . . Neale and Sullivan stood out on defence . . . . . shots on goal were 46-29 in favour of Varsity.

Murchie Leads Blues In St. Lawrence Win

Canton, N.Y., Nov. 21 (Staff) — Two goals by Varsity's Jim Murchie when his team was shorthanded gave the Blues a 3-1 decision over St. Lawrence "Larries" as Varsity gained their second win in two nights.

Blues had a big margin in play throughout, but only seemed to be able to convert it into goals when playing a man short.

Aside from Murchie's clutch performance, a big share of the laurels for the win must go to goalie Don Keenan, who was sensational as he turned away all but one of the 36 shots thrown his way, and only weakened after Varsity had built up a three goal lead.

With Gordie Epp in the penalty box, Murchie batted in a goal-mouth pass from John Gatten to give Blues a 1-0 lead near the nine minute mark in the second period.

Murchie scored again at the five minute mark of the third stanza with his team shorthanded. He took a pass in his own zone and drove down the boards cutting behind the Larries defence to score on a backhand shot.

George Hicken put the game out of reach when he whipped home a pass from Dan Cherepecka, again with Varsity shorthanded.

A penalty to Hicken set up the lone Larries goal. Terry Slater stole an errant Blues pass at centre ice and scooted over the blue line to catch both the defence and the goalie napping with a 15 footer.

Notes . . . . . Once again Blues got the majority of the many, many penalties handed out by the "referee?" . . . . . Shots on goal were 47-36 in favor of Blues.

VIC, TRINITY ARE IN MULOCK FINAL

Trinity Triumph 40-6 Matheson Standout

By MARK PEARSON

* Trinity Black Panthers trounced a game but out-classed Dentistry squad 40-6 in Friday afternoon's game in Varsity Stadium to advance into the Mulock Cup finals.

Dentistry started off with a spirited drive, marching the ball deep into Trinity territory from the kickoff. It seemed that pre-game rumours of an upset were well founded. However Trinity's defence finally caught and held to give Trinity possession in their own end.

Then the superior Trinity squad, led by quarterback Lynn MacMurray, marched right back up the field for a touchdown. After Matheson broke through centre for 10 yard spurts, MacMurray pulled his favourite play, an option around the right end, to score the TD. The convert attempt failed.

From this point on there was no question of the outcome. Trinity's defence kept an inept Dentistry offence nailed down, permitting the Panther offence to score at will. Matheson scored the next Trinity major on an off-tackle play from the five. The convert, a trick play with McMurray passing to Joy, made the score 13-0.

Dentistry recovered a fumbled punt on the Trinity 42 yard line. The combination of Morgan and Biggar, and a series of passes led to the Dentistry touchdown. Biggar threw a 20 yard pass to Morgan in the end zone from a short punt formation. The convert was missed and the score became 13-6.

From the kickoff Trinity marched into Dents territory and Matheson scooted around the end to make the score 19-6. Repeating the formula of busting up the centre and then running wide to keep the Dentistry defence guessing. Rusty Dunbar banged over from the one for the fourth Trinity touchdown. The trick convert play worked again with McMurray passing to Swinden.

This ended scoring in the first half with Trinity leading a fading Dentistry crew 26-6.

In the second half the magic word was "pass". The difference between the teams became apparent as Dents had a fine passer in Jim Biggar but no receivers, while Trinity had both passer and receiver. Matheson and MacMurray scored TD's on running plays and Young converted both majors to close the scoring at 40-6. It was a decisive win for the Panthers but they must hit harder and faster if they hope to beat Vic in Tuesday's final at Varsity Stadium.

THE MULOCK CUP

This is what some 60 football players from two colleges will be competing for when Trinity meets favored Victoria in the 1959 final at Varsity Stadium tomorrow.

Victoria Edge Skule Flash Strong Defence

By Mark Pearson

Victoria's Red and Gold held off a spirited team of Skulemen to clinch a playoff spot in the Mullock Cup finals with a 13-7 victory in the first game of Friday's doubleheader on a frozen field at Varsity Stadium.

The climax of a fierce rivalry between the two teams was a rough, tough game highlighted by crushing gang-tackling and fierce blocking. A stubborn Vic defence held Skule in their own territory until SPS kicked out of bounds on their own thirty. After firing up the middle to draw in the Skule defence, Victoria opened the scoring with quarterback Mike Milne throwing the long pass to Ed Skeoch for the touchdown. The convert was wide, leaving the score at 6-0.

Skule started to roll, hitting well on the pro pass for short gains. Vic countered with a strong roll-out play but Skule held Vic down at the Vic 15 yard line with some fine punting. Then big Don Seeback broke around left end and gal-second Vic touchdown. Oaks converted to make the score 13-0 at the end of the first quarter.

A fired-up Skule team took the kickoff at their own fifteen and headed downfield for the Victoria end-zone. From the short punt formation Derek Lunn rolled to the right and hit Mannerow on the Vic seventeen. With third down and five yards to go, Lunn attempted a pro-pass into the end zone. It was too long and Vic regained possession on their own twelve.

Vic marched to mid-field but a bad snap and a kick recovered on the line of scrimmage stopped this drive. With a good combination of line bucks, passes, and a penalty thrown in for good measure, Skule barged down to the Vic four. Schafer dove over for the touchdown and kicked the convert to make the score 13-7.

The second half was played in the old style of rockem-sockem football that would have warmed the heart of any coach. The teams were very evenly matched as the ball saw-sawed back and forth across the centre-field stripe. Vic made a drive that went to the Skule four where alert Ed Pashkewych intercepted a pro-pass.

The game ended 13-7 in favour of Victoria, giving the Red and Gold a shot at Trinity in the Mulock Cup finals at Varsity Stadium on Tuesday afternoon at 1 p.m.

Lunn and Schafer were standouts for the Engineers, with Seeback and Milne carrying the load for Vic.

LYNN MacMURRAY, Trinity quarterback whose fine play has sparked his club on their drive to the Mulock Cup finals, runs over for a TD on the option play as Trinity slaughtered Dents 40-6 in Varsity Stadium Friday afternoon. Trinity now play Vic in the final. Victoria are shooting for their second championship in a row. —Horban

"Big Blitz" Bust?

A campaign to recruit 3,000 University of Toronto students for canvassing for the U of T National Fund appears to have flopped.

After two weeks of intensive campaigning for student volunteers, returns yesterday totalled 1,613 prospective volunteers.

Biggest failures were the faculties of Engineering and Medicine. No Medsmen volunteered for the giant one-night Toronto blitz, and four skulemen out of a 2,000-man faculty promised their services.

However, St. Mike's, Victoria, Nursing and Trinity overshot their volunteer quotas.

The volunteer deadline was set for yesterday, but officials said names will still be accepted for the big blitz Nov. 30.

"The number of volunteers for the Blitz Campaign in the faculties of Medicine and Engineering is very disappointing," said Blitz Chairman Barbara Leaman, last night. "These are the faculties which boast about their spirit," she said, "but they never prove it."

$18,000,000 is expected from this public campaign to help meet the cost of the immediate needs in the University of Toronto development program.

Money has been collected at the rate of $1,000,000 per week but the Blitz must collect enough to meet the expected amount before the campaign closes on Dec. 1.

Contributions have reached the $8,072,000 mark including a $304,813 donation from the Victoria College Board of Regents and alumni.

"University College results are also disappointing," she said, "but students can still volunteer so that their faculty can achieve its quota."

Area chairmen, responsible for selecting teams and team captains from their respective faculties will be chosen tomorrow.

Canvassers will meet at 5:15 p.m. Monday Nov. 30 at the following locations: Trinity College, Strachan Hall; St. Michael's, Brennan Hall; Victoria, Burwash Hall; University, Howard Ferguson Auditorium; Medicine, Women's Union Theatre; Engineering, Hart House; all others, Drill Hall.

Food will be served at these centres and Blitz kits given out. After returns have been made at the Drill Hall there will be coffee, donuts and dancing.

Van Treasures Open For View

By LEE RICHARDSON

Treasure Van, a display sale of international handicrafts from nine different countries was officially opened by University of Toronto President Claude T. Bissell in the Howard Ferguson Hall Monday afternoon.

The display and sale will be open until Nov. 27.

One of the main features of the display is Yugoslavian handicrafts which will occupy the entire back wall of the Hall. Although technical complications have held up the unloading of Yugoslavian shipment, officials are confident they will be on hand shortly.

A preview of the Treasure Van sale has been on display, in miniature, in the main library.

Treasure Van is one of the few opportunities afforded the World University Service to raise the funds which are devoted to helping students in other countries. It earns approximately $15,000 a year and since most of the work is on a volunteer level, expenses are low.

The purpose of the Treasure Van is not only to make money. It is concerned with contributing to world peace through understanding.

The display includes handicrafts from many countries, and provides an opportunity to become better acquainted with the diverse cultures of these countries.

Alexandra Johnston, Treasure Van convenor, said "It is a wonderful place to pick up an unusual Christmas present."

There are many low-cost items available, and compared to similar merchandise sold in Toronto gift shops, all the prices are quite reasonable.

Treasure Van publicity director, Richard Gladstone, said "We are confident the sale will be a big success. We made $5,243 last year and we hope to make more this year with a five day sale instead of last year's four days."

Cartoonist

Jack Reppen, cartoonist in the Toronto Daily Star's sport pages, will hold an exhibition of his works at Gallery Moos from Nov. 14-Dec. 1. He is the first Canadian to have an exhibition at the gallery.

The exhibition consists primarily of abstract works, but sports pictures are also included. Both oil and ink drawings are found in the collection.

The Gallery Moos has branches in Europe. It is situated at Avenue Road and Davenport.

UC Theft

University of Toronto police were called to Whitney Hall, the University College Women's residence Monday night to find over $150 missing from the residents' purses.

The only trace of the thief was a large footprint outside the fire door of the building.

The money was taken by a man, apparently a youth, who was seen disappearing through the door as the girls returned to their rooms after dinner.

Rooms in all three houses of the residence were ransacked by the thief who is believed to have entered the building and hidden there for some time, as the doors are locked during the dinner hour.

Caput Pronouncement Soon On Fraternities

The Caput, supreme disciplinary body on the University of Toronto campus, is still considering the question of fraternities.

A statement from the Caput issued yesterday says the problem of Greek letter organizations was discussed at length in a weekend meeting and that a complete statement of the results of the Caput's findings will be released "as soon as possible."

In an earlier statement, the Caput said it was studying fraternities "with a view to definite action" following an incident in which Barbara "Bobbi" Arrington, a Negro co-ed was discouraged from joining a sorority.

Immediately after the Arrington case was brought to light, U of T President Claude T. Bissell made a declaration of principle that any action of discrimination based on race, religion or color strikes at the heart of the life of the university.

A special committee under R. G. Ellis, Dean of the Faculty of Dentistry, has been investigating fraternities and sororities for almost a year, since the Caput found members of two fraternities guilty of vandalism last January.

President Bissell said although the fraternities and sororities are technically private clubs, they are composed of undergraduates of the university and therefore the university is concerned in what they do.

"The university will not remain aloof," he said, "because of its technical position as being apart from sororities and fraternities."

The Caput is made up of the heads of all colleges and faculties on campus, and the warden of Hart House. President Bissell is the chairman.

The Caput controls most matters having to do with university discipline and has the power to expel students.

270 Signatures:

Petition Response Good

One of the originators of a petition on nuclear disarmament which is now circulating on the University of Toronto campus said last night he is pleased with the wide response in support of the plan.

Rev. J. S. Cunningham, Chaplain of Hart House, said over 270 signatures have been received, with a wide representation from all faculties and colleges, and especially from science.

The petition is to be sent to the Government of Canada, urging them to press "for an immediate and permanent end to the testing and production of nuclear weapons, and for measures to prevent the spread of such weapons to countries that do not have them."

The Committee for Nuclear Disarmament is holding a public meeting at 5 p.m. today in Convocation Hall, Trinity College to introduce this petition and a similar petition sponsored by students to the university. Faculty and students are invited.

WORKING for a grant response to a petition for nuclear disarmament, Rev. J. S. Cunningham and graduate student Bogden Kipling mail petition copies to staff members. (VSP by Harpur)

Non-conformist Humanists Attack Christian Concepts

A member of the Humanist Guild charged yesterday "Christianity is an unconditional demand on us of a standard behavior."

John R. Mayer, a lecturer in philosophy from McMaster University challenged Christianity on the grounds of "rationalization and truth" at a meeting of the University of Toronto Humanist Guild.

He said, "An individual in the community is called upon to respond without knowing why. This is not encouraged by Humanists."

"The Genesis story of creation has only a symbolic value today which most churches realize. The doctrine of evolution has insights which the Genesis story does not possess."

Mr. Mayer stated Humanists believe in God but not in paradoxes, diets, doctrines or dogmas.

"The concept of Hell," he said, "is a means to punish the mis-believers and the ignorant."

As a religion, Humanism is not interested in converting but in enabling people to cope rationally with problems.

"Humanism," he said, "is not trying to replace Christianity or to add to it but is merely a search for the truth through intellect."

The University of Toronto CCF Club elects its model parliament leader today and the race is heavy with University College students.

Giles Endicott, (IV UC), present president of the club is a contender for the party leadership as are former presidents Gerry Caplan and Steve Lewis, both (IV UC).

The CCF Club's platform for the model parliament will be drawn up at subsequent meetings, which are held at 1 p.m. in room 111, University College.

All students who are not members of other political parties are eligible to vote

OK Sydney Smith Hall For New Arts Building

The new university arts building, to be the largest building on campus, will be named Sidney Smith Hall, after the University of Toronto's former president.

The University Board of Governors yesterday decided on the name for the new building which is being built west of St. George St. and will unite the 11 departments of the arts faculty.

Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs at the time of his death, Hon. Sidney Earle Smith had been president of the U of T for the 12 years ended 1957.

During his years as a teacher and administrator at Toronto, Dalhousie, and Manitoba Universities, Dr. Smith frequently referred to the Faculty of Arts as the hub of a university.

The new building, part of the current five-year U of T expansion plan, is scheduled to cost approximately $5,800,000.

Paying tribute to Dr. Smith, his successor Dr. Claude Bissell yesterday said, "The University of Toronto was his life. Within a few years of coming here, he had raised most of the fundamental problems, and by the time he left, he had solved a good many of them".

Computation Of Grants Still Quebec Problem

Reports from Quebec last night indicated that the province and Ottawa still have not come to complete agreement concerning federal grants to universities.

The point at issue, however, is the basis on which the grants will be computed.

The solution of the seven-year problem was reported by Ottawa last Friday. The announcement said the federal and Quebec governments had agreed that the province would be able to levy its own grants and in return get tax abatements from Ottawa.

But the basis for the abatement would still be on the present head-of-population basis.

Each province is allotted an amount equivalent to $1.50 per head of population, which is then distributed to the pro-vince's universities on a student population basis.

Quebec is dissatisfied with this system because it has more students proportionally than some of other provinces. Because of this she receives less money per student than do these other provinces.

Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures for 1958 show that Quebec, had her universities accepted the grants, would have received $250.00 per student.

The University of Toronto's financial report for 1958 shows it received $363.00 per student in federal grants.

It is understood that Quebec has not as yet proposed any means of solving this problem, but it is not expected to prevent Quebec universities from accepting grants already allotted under the present system.

Britain Picks Creighton For Africa Commission

A professor of history at the University of Toronto was yesterday named by Prime Minister Macmillan as one of the 26 members of a commission to study the problems of the Central African Federation.

Donald G. Creighton, one of Canada's leading historians, who last year resigned from chairmanship of the department of history to devote more time to writing and research, will take part in a study of the political setup of the Federation in preparation for constitutional changes.

Mr. Macmillan named most of the members of the commission who will serve under Viscount Monckton, a former Conservative minister in the British government.

Prof. Creighton has made the study of Canadian development his main field. He is the author of The Commercial Empire of the St. Lawrence of the North and a two-volume biography of Sir John A. Macdonald, Canada's first prime minister.

He said last night he expects the commission will meet early next year and presumed he would go first to England, and then to Africa, where the commission would have to spend a great deal of time.

"I don't regard this as a prolonged interruption of my writing," he said, "and I have a great interest in the kind of problems involved in Central Africa."

U of T president Claude T. Bissell expressed the University's pride in Prof. Creighton's appointment to the commission.

Serving on a commission is no new experience for Prof. Creighton. In 1938-39 he was a member of the Royal Commission on Dominion-Provincial Relations.

Negro political leaders in the British protectorates of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland oppose their six-year-old federation with white-dominated Southern Rhodesia, which has internal self rule.

Colonial Secretary Iain Macleod said the commission wanted as members, "Commonwealth representatives with a deep knowledge of federal problems."

on the petition

Nuclear disarmament is a middle position between two extremes. On one side is total military preparedness, involving both nuclear and conventional weapons. This we can call the armed camp theory.

On the other extreme is total disarmament, if necessary unilateral. This constitutes the pacifist position.

Strangely enough believers in the armed camp theory and pacifist theorists are both opposed to nuclear disarmament for almost exactly the same reason.

The armed camp theory is a simple one. It is that we can deter our "enemies" from war only by maintaining a balance of arms, or as it is more properly called "a balance of horror" with them.

The pacifist theory on nuclear weapons is slightly more complex. It is roughly this: there are only two ways of ending war; 1) by the enlightened and intelligent abolition of all armaments, or 2) through the fear of complete annihilation. Now, if complete disarmament is impossible, then the existence of nuclear arms at least guarantees that because of fear, no war of any kind will start. This may be a tenuous guarantee, but it is better than nothing.

On the other hand, nuclear disarmament presumably removes the deterrent of fear and clears the decks for a conventional war.

Therefore, ends the theoretical pacifist argument, if our government is not prepared immediately to divest itself of all weapons bar none, it should hold on to its nuclear weapons until it is so prepared or until the spread of pacifist belief makes weapons useless.

This is why both the proponents of armed defence and the proponents of pacifism oppose nuclear disarmament.

Against this opposition, a fairly convincing case can be made out for nuclear disarmament. It is this: the problem of nuclear war is not one problem but two. First there is the general problem of war, involving fundamental questions of the morality and justice of the sacrifice of lives, our own and others'.

But there is another problem. It is the problem of possible annihilation. Nuclear disarmament, as the pacifists point out is no solution to the problem of war. But it is a solution to the problem of total annihilation. Once we have done all we can to ensure simply that life will endure, we can then address ourselves to the problem of war. Nor, from this point of view, will nuclear disarmament make the problem of war more severe by the removal of the deterrent of fear, since fear cannot possibly be the basis for a lasting peace. The threat of nuclear war is too open to accident and perhaps even too hard to grasp to be any kind of guarantee. If anything can save us, it will not be fear but intelligence and humanity.

It is not easy to choose between these positions. We have in a recent issue of The Varsity expressed our pacifism in strong language, and we believe that the death of one is no less an offence than the death of a million. But we would hate our principles to betray us into rejecting a plan, the acceptance of which might signify important changes in the general attitude toward disarmament as a whole.

Because to threaten a man's life is just as odious to us as a weapon of peace as it is as a weapon of aggression or defence in time of war, we must reject the conventional arguments against nuclear disarmament both from the armed camp and from pacifist theory and declare ourselves to the extent of their admittedly "limited goals" on the side of the petitioners.

Chin Up And Keep Fighting

J. B., Archibald MacLeish's modern interpretation of the Book of Job, stays close to its biblical antecedent and manages to retain much of the dramatic power of the original.

Unfortunately, the anonymous biblical poet had God to fall back on at the climax of his poem, and Mr. MacLeish is forced to reject the old boy and go on to what becomes a painfully anticlimactic scene.

The result is an unsatisfying answer philosophically and a disappointing finale dramatically.

For if God is removed from the Book of Job and nihilism is rejected, there is no other answer possible, than "Keep your chin up and keep fighting boy, because you never know how things are going to turn out in the end."

This is the answer Mr. MacLeish gives. It emerges as unconvincing answer and leads in the second act, to a weak dramatic climax.

The play opens on the setting of a circus that has been travelling "through the towns and cities of the earth, year after year, time out of mind, playing the Old Testament story of the suffering of Job."

The mildly ironic introduction, is carried over into the action of the play. Two unemployed actors, who have been reduced to selling peanuts and popcorn in the circus, take on the parts of Satan and God, and the play begins.

Job, or J.B. is represented as a sort of pious Rotarian, who thanks God for his "luck" in achieving a fine warm secure family and in gaining control of corporations.

The temptations begin, as one by one all of Job's possessions are stripped away, his family is destroyed, his body is stricken with boils and sores. Finally even his wife is compelled by rapid and irrational rush of catastrophes to reject God. She calls upon her husband, in an echo of the bible, to "Curse God and die!"

The purpose of all of this, is to compel Job, to accept the sin of knowledge — to curse God and the world he has made. Satan, the tempter, works upon Job with doubt. There is no reason for the world and hence no justice. There is nothing but existence brings only meaningless suffering on the "dry dung heap of the world."

God, or the actor who assumes the role of God, insists that suffering is the route through which one comes to truly know God. One sees God best "from the ash-heap". Throughout the first act, Job refuses the temptations of Satan. He cries out for reason and for justice, but never once does he question that such things exist. At the climax of his suffering, he still chants "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away; Blessed be the name of the Lord."

The series of calamities which befall Job all take place in the first act and make for exciting drama. Mr. Kazan has squeezed the maximum number of effects from Boris Aronson's unusual setting. People move about at different levels and achieve several vivid tableaux.

Frederick Warlock, the Mr. Zuss who assumes the role of God, has the air of the outraged patriarch he is called upon to portray. He has a fine booming voice and as the play progressed he seemed to grow in stature and power. Satan, is represented in the play as a young man, one of the bitter youths who refuse to accept the "wisdom" of their elders. Unfortunately Basil Rathbone, who takes the role in the play, is most obviously not a young man, and his movements on stage, which were intended to express a kind of demonic energy, seemed strained and at times awkward. However, Mr. Rathbone is still a fine actor. Although Mr. Rathbone has a fine delivery on long passages, he did not seem up to snappy repartee he is at times called upon to give and many of his one line shafts fell flat.

Michael Higgins as J. B. and Eulalie Noble as his wife both turn in fine well-rounded performances. They are ably supported by James Ray and Richard Kuss, as the "roustabouts" who alternate in a series of roles as the messengers who bring to J. B. the news of his calamities.

After the dramatic intensity of the calamities which befall J. B., the answers of the comforters and the dialogue with God are, in a sense, anticlimactic.

The second act of MacLEISH's play is not equal to the first. The "comforters" arrive in response to Job's plea for "reason" and Satan's desire to afflict his soul, and they engage in a wonderfully ironic discussion with Job. They are represented as a Marxist, a scientist, and a cleric who try, with their "modern" panaceas to absolve Job of the guilt he feels must be his in order to deserve that afflictions God has set upon him.

When God finally does give J. B. his "answer" it is the same one he gave to Job, and Mr. MacLEISH has wisely chosen to insert the incompar-

Brahms Betrayed

We'd like to know just what in heaven's name is going on at Massey Hall this season to produce a concert like last night's with the T.S.O.

Uncertainty and lack of balance more or less ruined what should have been a superb evening of the music of Brahms. Certainly by this time we should not have to apologize for Brahms, for in spite of decades of defamation his work has continued to flourish. And yet after this concert we wonder just what for? We have never been more disappointed.

One or two reservations are in order. The pianist, Claudio Arrau of Chile, bolstered his fine reputation in Toronto yet another notch, in spite of the fact that the rest of the team was running interference.

The First Piano Concerto is not the easiest vehicle either for lyrical expression or for dynamic and technical brilliance. Arrau was able to call upon both in ample measure, and even sift some of it through the lumpy mass of gunch on top. Poor chap. But he certainly got the enthusiastic response from the audience which he deserved.

As well, Hyman Goodman, concertmaster, the subject of some doubtful controversy (unwarranted, in our opinion) in these pages the last few days, provided a sweet, soaring, passionate violin obbligato for the second movement of the Symphony No. 1.

Now and again the symphony seemed to be able to play itself almost in defiance of the interpretation. Take for example the end of the second movement, or some passages in the third and fourth. But the music was plagued with all sorts of wierd distortions that brought up a few instruments (e.g. horns or trombones) at the expense of the rest. We didn't hear the cellos or violas properly until after the intermission, and then only in absolutely explosive As for tempos, we have the same criticism here: Concerto: far too variable and certainly not what was intended.

After about thirty seconds of the first movement, Concerto we were just about ready to get up and go, but we felt surely this could not be representative of the pianist would give us. For his sake only (and for Brahms) we stayed. Fifty-two minutes of boring, dry, academic, uninspired fumbling by the orchestra lasted we cannot say; they were certainly return and try to do justice to the symphony, but indicated they had little success.

Are we being unfair? We sincerely hope the orchestra worked hard; we must laud their efforts. The matter is one of artistic purity and truth. We stand for the artificialities and inconsequences of that we heard last night. This is a betrayal of his music and above all of our orchestra. What average concert-goers going to think? Are we to return so enthusiastically for another boring concert they can sit comfortably at home and watch Garry Moore? And can we blame them for that, a most unfortunate affair all round.

from the Old Testament into his play. answer is simply to stop asking so many questions. God's will is inscrutable and for man to question him and demand of the universe. He must assume the goodness of God and of the divine punishment. His action, Job accepts the guilt of his sins, and begs forgiveness of God. He seeks peace but in obedience".

the dramatic finish of the biblical poem. answer of "faith" and the later restoration of God is a reward for his faith.

er, this is precisely the point where Mr. Beckett takes leave of Job and where his play of philosophical interpretation begins to deteriorate. He is accepting "blind obedience" J. B. seems to second thoughts and rejects it. He will not give his right to question God's universe. He enters life, not with servile acceptance of God's will, but with an attempt to explore and understand it. He is outraged at Job's return to "life", in the face of the suffering that awaits him. He is how a man, having experienced evil, submit himself to what appears to him as hardship.

seems to us, is the real failure of Mr. Beckett's interpretation. If one accepts God, there is no alternative to "blind obedience". It is to challenge the will of God and only lead to the anarchistic conclusion of the end of the universe — that there is no order in the universe and no reason for man's suffering. He presumes to question God, then one is left with the questions are born of doubt, to proceed to the conclusions of Satan.

B. refuses to take the next step. When with universe he will neither "laugh" but insists upon action accompanied by wife returns and the theme of love is as justification for man's activity.

in the Book of Job, is the theme of the answer to a serious question to Job's children. God finally answers him, Job realizes his blindness. He is, as Thomas Wolfe saw him, a man who cannot understand, nor even love, as J. B. receives it, seems like a man to a drowning man.

MacLEISH's final answer strikes us as American. J. B. refuses to withdraw until he has attained complete understanding. He must participate and as long he has can keep going. Inaction, is wrong and itifies itself. We must keep moving even in the wrong direction.

It is a mistake to reject the play J. B. finds it deficient as philosophy. A play of assertion and J. B. is not intended to be a play is "dramatic" or it is nothing, and philosophy there is, is derived from an understanding of the action and the comments of the audience on their involvement in that action.

and of Mr. MacLEISH a systematic explanation of a philosophical "weltanschauung" is just "Job" is to create a good drama first and this point of view through his art. This is an extremely well J. B. is as fine an achievement as we are likely to see at the theatre at any time.

Another Canterbury Tale

The martyrdom in 1170 of Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, is the subject of the Trinity College Dramatic Society's present production — and a most astonishing production it is.

According to Herman Voaden, editor of a Canadian printing of the play, Eliot had no idea when he wrote the play that it would be the success it later proved to be. He wrote it in 1935 at the request of an association known as the Friends of Canterbury Cathedral for their annual festival that year. It was presented in the Chapter House of the Cathedral — a medieval hall seating less than 500 persons. Since the only exit was at the back of the Hall (leading into the cloisters) the body of the murdered Archbishop had to remain on stage until the end of the production; it was then carried out, preceded by the Chorus, who held lighted candles and sang the Litany of the Saints. It was, in Voaden's words, a most impressive ceremony; there was no curtain, no scenery, and little lighting; the acoustics were poor, and "the Hall had a certain Gothic bleakness."

It would have been very difficult indeed for the Trinity players to approximate that production more closely than they did Monday night. Their (Continued on Page 6)

Today is your first opportunity to get tickets for the Mickities '60 production, "Short Engagement", which will be staged at Hart House, January 5, 6 and 7.

Paul Hrynkiw, who got excellent reviews for his part in Mickities '59 will take the leading role again. A newcomer with a powerful voice, Mona Kelly will play his feminine counterpart, under the direction of Dawn Egan.

The original book-show deals with a student theatre group's thrills and troubles when presenting "Cyrano de Bergerac" for a terribly top-drawer New England resort town.

The script, written by Philip Nicholas has been coupled with exotic music by veteran song-writer Mike Lococo and other SMC students.

Tickets are on sale now for $1.25 at the Hart House Theatre box-office and in St. Michael's Co-operative.

theatre is the Trinity College chapel, built in a modified 16th century perpendicular Gothic style — with a bleakness equal to that of most 12th century cathedrals. The knights' entry for the assassination is via the rear doors of the chapel, as it was in the original; there is no curtain, no scenery, and scant use of lighting effects. The effect of this sort of production, and in fact the effect of the entire play is one of extreme realism.

The essential matter of the play, as Eliot pointed out, is straightforward and somewhat limited. An Archbishop returns to his parish, foresees that he will be killed, and he is killed. But no extraneous material has been added; the play concentrates on death and martyrdom, and director James Cunningham's use of this fact adds great force and much impact to the Trinity production.

The most outstanding performance in Trinity's rendition of Murder is given by John Saxton as Becket. He at once portrays the dignity of an archbishop; the passionate courage of a holy man, the benevolence of a parish priest, and the agonies of expected, violent death. His finest hour is the sermon early in Part II, in which he begins as the kindly father of the flock speaking of the meaning of Christmas and of the feast of the martyrdom of St. Stephen, and moves to the grave Christian saint beholding his imminent death. His diction is flawless; his intonation is superb; the depth of his portrayal moves the audience in a truly dramatic way.

By way of contrast, many of the other performances appear to be consciously dramatic, and therefore when Becket is off-stage the play becomes less a drama and more a kind of poetical oration. The worst offenders in this regard are the members of the chorus, whose phrasing unfortunately seems somewhat contrived much of the time. Nevertheless, their incantations in the first part are on two or three occasions positively chilling. Director Cunningham has followed the lead of the early professional productions of the play, and has distributed most of the lines to be spoken by single voices or groups of two or three; this allows much more for dramatic movement. The blending of light, medium and dark voices at all times distracts one from the monotony of choral hysteria.

The roles of the three priests and the four tempters are well executed. The four knights, played by Ramsey Derry, Gerald Wright, Cunningham and William Whitla, are excellent; their arguments at the close in defense of the murder are so well done that they very nearly destroy the principal meaning of the play.

If there is one glaring flaw in the direction, it is the use of 20th century costuming on two of the characters; as the characters in no way are connected with the present, the innovation is without meaning and is distracting.

The acoustic problems in the chapel are considerably more formidable than one might expect any student producer to solve; the use of so much up-stage speaking makes the problem even worse and renders much of Part I virtually inaudible. The choir, however, is most effective, although the soprano's intonation was on Monday night not especially secure.

One of the most striking aspects of the production is the stylization of the movements of the chorus; although Eliot himself did not specify the patterns of dance, they had the effect of reminding us that he was in 1935 more a poet than a playwright.

Girl Swimmers Love London, But...

BY PAM HILL

London, Ont. — For the first time yet, McGill won the Women's Intercollegiate Swim Meet here Friday and Saturday.

The red and white finished first in the two-day meet with 50 points. Western was second with 38 points, and Toronto third with 32. Queen's amassed only 20 points.

The diving and synchronized solos and duets were held at the Thames Hall Pool Friday night. The all-round winner was last year's big threat, Pauline McCullagh of McGill. Miss McCullagh placed first in the diving, and first in the synchronized solo. In both events, she demonstrated perfect execution, control and finesse, all so necessary for a champion and competitor. Miss McCullagh has competed in the Canadian Swimming Championships for two years now.

Second in the diving was Dorothy Roll, also of McGill, followed by Judy Osler of Western. Toronto's entries, Lil Bobson and Betty Hill, both did exceptionally well for their first year of competition. Miss Bobson shows the potential, but exhibits a nervousness that detracts from her finesse. Only time and practice can remedy this, and we're confident in a first next year.

Second in both the synchronized solo and synchronized duet was Toronto, represented by Joanie Tait and Liz Bell and Anne (Ferguson) Russell respectively. Queen's won the duet.

Friday night's events certainly put McGill in the lead with 18 points, to Western's 12 and Toronto's 7.

Saturday noon the speed events took place. The first event was the 200-yard medley relay. It was expected that Western's five-membered speed team would take all the speed honours, but not so. McGill's medley team of Nancy Hankin, Sue Armacost, June Walker and Heather Brooks-Hill established a new Intercollegiate record of 2:27.0 — the only record of the day.

And the rest of the meet was little different. McGill placed first in the 50 backstroke, 50 freestyle and also the 200-yard freestyle relay. Western took first in the 100 freestyle and 75 individual medley, while Queen's had their sole first in the breast-stroke.

But Toronto was not by any means out of the picture. Val Lewis, still the fastest swimmer on the team, got our only first in the 50 butterfly, with a time of 33.2. In the individual medley, she placed second with a time of 52.6. Cathie McBrien of Western has placed first with 52.2!

Further, the medley relay team of McCullen, Armstrong, Lewis and Hill placed second, Lowell Pelton's time for the 100 freestyle placed her second, but an official judge's decision put her third. Lowell got an official second in the 50 free, Sally Bambridge (of Carabin fame) came second in the breast-stroke. Sandy McCullen came third in the backstroke. A freestyle relay team of Hill, Philpott, Hunt and Pelton also placed third. At least we placed in every event!

The meet was really a ball (aren't all these away weekends?) and we were glad to see the cup go to McGill for a change. They sure had the team! But, then again, there's next year...

Ken Cattell, who earned a Master of Commerce degree at the University of Toronto's Institute of Business Administration, likes his growing responsibility at the Bell.

I chose the Bell because I wanted to join a company that is sure to grow. But what pleases me most is the Bell's plan to give me a broad base of experience — and the way this plan is now being followed!

"For the first three months I worked with a Commercial Representative visiting customers' premises, both business and residential. After a 6-weeks Service Representatives' course, followed by a period in this work, I was made a Commercial Representative myself — an interesting job that lets you see the part that the various Bell services play in modern business.

"After some months in employee instruction and results analysis, I am now gaining valuable experience in the business sales market, with its vast possibilities. My growing experience and growing responsibility makes me glad I joined the Bell!

TENNIS ANYONE? Harvey Griggs (SPS) grimaces in pain as his fractured leg is strapped down for a trip to the hospital. He suffered the injury in a collision with a Trinity soccer player during the championship game which Trinity won 8-1. The score was only 2-1 when the injury occurred. —Harpur

Win Mulock Again With Team Effort

By NOEL BATES

Trinity College Panthers yesterday received the worst defeat ever administered in Intramural football history as Victoria College's Red and Gold beat them 50-0 to win their second successive Mulock Cup on a rain drenched Varsity Stadium field.

It was the result of a hard-hitting, spirited and well drilled squad simply outclassing the Trinity team. Not until the second half did the Trinity team begin to tackle at all, and by that time it was too late.

Quarterback Mike Milne engineered a well balanced attack for the winners, going to the air only 9 times, but completing 6 of those for 128 yards and four TDs. Don Seeback was the top ground-gainer for Vic, piling up 121 yards on 12 carries plus 38 yards on a screen pass, the sum being good for two TDs.

A hard charging Vic line allowed the Panthers only 92 yards rushing, and 19 passing. Pathetic in the face of the three hundred plus rolled up by Vic.

Opening up very quickly in the first minutes of the game, the big team from Vic recovered a fumble on Trinity's option play and sent Pete Stewart over on a 15-yard run for a TD, but the score was not counted because of a penalty.

However, one minute later, Don Seeback took a screen pass from Vic QB Mike Milne and assisted by some excellent blocking from both the referee and the Vic linemen was able to run 38 yards for the first score of the game. The convert was blocked.

The next score came after Rick Oaks blocked a Trinity punt and Jim Mills recovered it in the end zone for the second major of the day. The pass for the convert was incomplete.

The back-breaker came with four minutes gone in the first quarter, when Mills made his second interception of the day to set up a 33 yard run by Don Seeback. Two plays later, Stewart went off tackle for the TD.

It was this last series beginning with Mill's interception that killed Trinity's chances of winning. For immediately following this, the rain began and with Vic's defence remaining firm, there was little hope for the Panthers.

Vic continued its scoring game and unfortunately continued accumulating penalties, about the only major fault of the team.

Stewart was the victim this time as another screen pass from Milne and a 30 yard run was called for clipping. Vic kicked after the penalty and immediately the defence picked off another of the losing quarterbacks passes.

They began a march late in the second quarter, and Seeback's 33 yard run was the big play in the sequence which was climaxed by a "tackle eligible" play with a pass to John Norman for the six-pointer. Foss's convert made the score 25-0.

The second half started and it appeared that Trinity were regaining some of their spirit until Seeback ran back a kick 55 yards for a touchdown.

The tackle eligible play was used again in the third quarter when Frank Dawe took a pass from Mike and made the score 37-0.

In the fourth quarter, Rick Oaks, with the aid of some fancy footwork managed to boot the ball into the end zone after a bad snap by Trinity, where he fell on it for the 7th TD of the game.

The final score was 50-0.

Notes . . . Foss tackled very hard for the Vic team from his defensive halfback post . . . Mills picked off three Trinity passes . . . Stewart, Hobbs, and Condelin played well in the backfield . . . as a matter of fact the whole Vic team played spirited ball, there being very few mistakes especially on the defensive squad . . . main fault of the Trinity team was their poor tackling and complete lack of spirit.

Boxing Team Aims For Another Championship

By MIKE CHYKALIUK

Last year a newcomer strolled into the Hart House gymnasium and commenced exercising earnestly with the weights. Upon the completion of the third jerk a muscular arm tapped him gently on the shoulder.

"Son, this is a boxing gymnasium, no weight training is allowed in here during this hour. If you want to join the club you're certainly welcome. However, you must skip first, then shadow box, hit the bags, and finally spar with another boxer."

The newcomer joined the club and went on to become the 147 lb. intercollegiate boxing champion.

The muscular arm and the gruf voice, which masks a heart of gold, belong to Tony Canzano, coach of the Varsity boxing team. This crafty coach has copped the intercollegiate crown for the past two years. Judging by his standard inaugural address to rookies, this year could be another fine one for his Blues.

All four title winners in 1959, Roger Kirkpatrick, Mike Butt, Bob Dods and Art Vachon, are back for another go at it. Pushing them for team positions are experienced men like Jim McManus, Tom Godwin, Val Spring, Paul Wilton and Ozzie Hutchinson.

The best of the early season newcomers appear to be Pat Wooton, Robert Turner and Izak Bouwer. The latter is a graduate student from South Africa.

The weakest links are the heavy and light-heavyweight divisions, where, to date, no candidates have appeared. Coach Canzano may move Tom Godwin into the light-heavy spot but is still seeking a heavyweight.

Manager Jim Bacon discloses that the first exhibition bout will be held in mid-December. The finals will be held in February in Montreal.

PHE Retains Softball Title, Defeating Vic

BY PAM HILL

P & HE took their second consecutive soft-ball championship Monday noon on Trinity backfield by defeating Victoria; 6-5.

The first inning was by far the most active in the game. With Vic at bat, Barb Black's pitching was fast and steady, but the under-dogs were hitting. Mary Ellen Anglin, Pat Humphrey, Donnie Lewis and Lauranne VanValkenburg all crossed the plate to make the score 4-0 in the top of the first.

On a quick play and fast run to first, Lauranne VanValkenburg, Vic's pitcher and strongest hitter, got a charlie-horse, which caused a slight pause, but no damage to her pitching in the next inning.

For P & HE, Barb Black was the first to cross the plate, driven in by Joy Mahood's double. Sue Robertson then hit what should have been a single, but all of the short-stop, second-base man and centre fielder erred, and Sue's hit was good for a homer — the only one of the game. Allayne Patterson later got in for the tying run.

There was no more scoring until the top of the third when an error by Phys. Ed's first base-man, Joy Mahood, allowed Mary Loney's hit to bring in Lauranne.

There was some beautiful fielding by both teams, with the outs going very quickly. But the most fantastic play I've ever seen in girl's base-ball was made by Lee Pickerell, playing short for Phys. Ed, in the top of the fourth. A fly came whizzing by at waist level about six feet to her left. How she ever even saw it, let alone moved and caught it, I'll never know. But it was a beauty!

The score was 5-4 for Vic, going into the bottom of the fifth and last inning. Vic's catcher had left the spot, and unfortunately, Vic's substitute players were unable to be present. The first base-man played behind the plate, and a fielder moved to first.

But Phys. Ed. was hitting. Barb Black hit a lovely triple, was brought in by Lee Pickerell, who was also hit home. There was a bit of walking over the third base-man, but nobody seemed to notice. As soon as Lee crossed the plate, the game was over. P & HE won the game 6-5, and the series: 2-0. Congratulations!

Trinity Win Group One Soccer, 8-1

Trinity won the Division One soccer championship on the back campus yesterday, walloping SPS 8-1 with a six goal out burst in the second half.

The score at half-time was 2-1, but the Engineers played the second half without Harvey Griggs, who suffered a fractured leg in the dying moments of the first half.

Goal scorers for Trinity were: Witty (4), Meikle (2), Henderson, Godfrey.

UC-PHE continued unbeaten in Group One lacrosse, plastering Victoria Firsts 11-1. Howie Roth and Bert Naylor led the Redmen with a hat trick apiece, Don Fleming notched two while George Spanetz, Bob Misner and Stan Fraser added singles.

UC III shutout SMC "C" 1-0 on Mike Muir's goal in hockey action. VicV whipped UC IV 5-3. Meds II defeated Vic III 4-3.

Meds, Engineering Shove Blitz List Close To Quota

By SUSIE BRESLIN

Swelled by late returns, a list of student volunteers for a University of Toronto "Big Blitz" shot breathtakingly close to its 3,000 goal last night. Over 300 volunteers from Engineering and 60 from Medicine, plus scattered additions from nearly every college and faculty on campus, brought the canvasser total to 2,400.

Blitz chairman Barbara Leaman said last night she sent her 'apologies to Engineering—they've done very well. I'm still disappointed in Medicine although I know this is a bad time of year for them'.

As the volunteer list grew, a layer of frosting was laid on blitz night plans.

On campaign night radio station CHUM will broadcast live from the Drill Hall, with mobile unit reports covering movements of canvassers, from 4-11 p.m., officials announced.

A Drill Hall stock-market board will be kept continually filled with up-to-date reports during the course of the blitz.

Prominent television stars and celebrities are being enlisted to serve coffee and accept returns from canvassers as they return from the blitz.

A Brinks truck will tote off canvass returns promptly at 11 p.m.

Heads of colleges and faculties will address canvassers before they set out on the campaign.

The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night squelched proposed changes in the blitz set-up.

Council decided, after long debate, that canvassers would have to register with their colleges and faculties.

The motion in effect denied a request by fraternities that they be allowed to send out members registered under the fraternities.

Council members felt much action would be in direct contradiction to principles set down several weeks ago, when council disassociated itself from any formal recognition of fraternities.

Member Mike Sherman (IV UC) said he would like to approve the fraternity request in order to get more canvassers for the blitz.

But such a move was impossible in view of previous action of council regarding fraternities, he said.

SAC president Walter McLean said President Bissell and the Caput had already made it clear that fraternities were not recognized by the university.

Sending students out to canvass for the university in the name of a fraternity would be a contradiction, he said.

Miss Leaman last night said "I'm very pleased that the fraternities have decided to support us almost in toto". All but two fraternities have cancelled scheduled Monday night meetings, she said. The remaining two could not cancel their meetings due to previous commitments.

Miss Leaman said officials have decided to allow students to turn up at collecting points on the night of the campaign "if they know where their colleges and faculties are meeting". Officials would prefer that students signed volunteer lists before Nov. 30, however, she said.

The massive canvassing group will meet at six spots on campus before the blitz, to be given meals, instructions, and blitz kits. They will then board busses for transportation to their canvassing points, and will approach about 20 - 25 homes before their return to the Drill Hall.

Apartment houses have been left out of canvass lists because apartment houses are locked, officials said.

However, a public appeal will be made to open apartment houses to canvassers, and if they are opened, a crew of students will be delegated to each apartment block.

Colleges and faculties registering greatest returns on both an amount and a proportionate basis will be presented with sets of the Encyclopaedia Britannica in the Drill Hall after the canvass is completed.

A dance in the Drill Hall will follow the five-hour blitz.

Pidhaini Causes Near-Riot At Mass Armaments Meet

A pint-sized riot flared up Wednesday in Trinity Convocation Hall at a meeting sponsoring a disarmament petition.

After several speeches on the banning of atomic weapons were heard, the floor was thrown open to a question and answer period.

Suddenly one University of Toronto student, Oleg Pidhaini, jumped to his feet and shouted "Is this an open meeting or what?"

Hart House Chaplain, Reverend James Cunningham, chairman of the meeting, ruled yes.

"Then I demand two minutes to give my opinions against disarmament," Pidhaini said.

He marched up to the front of the Hall, seized the microphone, and began delivering his speech.

"Disarmament is an invitation to war and the problem is political in nature and always highlighted by the existence of tyranny. Therefore the only way to solve the problem is to do something about tyranny," he said.

A shotgun blast of hisses, boos, catcalls and shouts of "Hitlerism, Hitlerism," broke loose from the crowd.

All at once the whole hall was in an uproar.

Although no one could hear him, Pidhaini continued his speech, yelling to top the noise of the crowd.

After two minutes, someone disconnected the microphone, but still Pidhaini kept on talking.

Mr. Cunningham moved forward to calm the excited student.

At first the chaplain tried to gently take over the mike, but Pidhaini had an iron grip on it.

He tried to reason with him. That failed too. Pidhaini talked even louder making his point with waving hands and a shaking head.

Eventually the Chaplain took hold of his arm and led him away.

The furor died down and more questions were asked. An unidentified student rose from his seat and began talking pro-pacifist and pro-disarmament.

He spoke for nearly ten minutes.

A student in the back of the hall cried "If Pidhaini was limited to two minutes why don't we limit these pacifists also."

It was agreed and the meeting continued.

Meanwhile in the corridor outside the hall, a group of young communists, members of the Campus Communist Club, heckled Pidhaini as he left.

Students circulating nuclear disarmament petitions are asked to return petition forms as soon as they are completed to Rev. J. S. Cunningham, chaplain's office, Hart House.

Jaws Open as Polished Dents Building Gleams

Dr. Willard C. Fleming, Dean of the Faculty of Dentistry at the University of California, attacked dental education in North America Wednesday.

In an address to the convocation commemorating the dedication of the new Dental Building, Dr. Fleming said there had been several new dental schools and dental buildings dedicated in the United States in recent years. "It has been a disappointment that, to a large extent, the only thing new has been the building," he said.

"There has also been little change in curriculum, admission policies, recruitment, administrative procedures and in methods of teaching," he continued.

He accused dental students of having mainly a material interest in dentistry as a career. Considerable importance was placed on expectation of financial reward, social prestige, independence, and favorable hours, he said.

Dr. Fleming claimed dental and medical organizations had not shown much initiative in adapting themselves to social changes.

He attributed this to the leaders, of necessity in the older age group, who were successful under the present system and could see no reason for change.

Also, he said, the problem of professional competence in students had overshadowed the need to develop an awareness of social problems ahead.

He advocated a change that will eventually look forward to teaching all of health sciences in an atmosphere of "man and his total environment". In a world of changing social pressures and a changing philosophy of the relation of the state to the citizen, he said, "we have to broaden the base of our educational program".

"The problems of health have gained national significance and no longer can be considered as strictly matters of a personal relationship between the physician or dentist and his patient," he said.

"The development of a department of social studies in medical and dental schools—or should we say a department of humanistics—is not too far out of line."

Premier Leslie M. Frost, speaking at the dedication of the new $6,000,000 building, said the new facilities would enable Toronto to graduate 124 dentists annually, an increase of 50 over last year.

He said provincial grants for all educational purposes would total more than $200,000,000 this year, with $24,000,000 going to nine universities to help meet maintenance and construction costs.

The cost of the new building has been underwritten by the Ontario government. The fund for the building has been laid away over a period of years and will not add to government debt. Dr. Bissell said he hoped that the government would not be discouraged by the present campaign for funds and would repeat the gift in the future.

Mr. Frost said the Charter for the original Dentistry Association was one of the first bills to come before the government when it was first formed.

Lt.-Col. W. E. Phillips pointed out having the dedication at this time was to add an incentive to the expansion campaign and to give people an example of the kind of work their money would be used for.

Charge "Hippocratic Hypocrisy"

Victoria's Debaters Uphold Doctors

Physicians were attacked as "Hippocratic hypocrites" by Victoria College debaters last night.

The Alumnae Hall, Victoria College, was the scene of action as the Faculty of Medicine and the Victoria Debating Parliament teed off on the topic "Resolved That This House Deplores the Materialism of the Medical Profession". The motion was defeated.

First speaker for the government, Don Cornish (III Vic), defined materialism as "a tendency to give undue importance to material interests". He claimed the "gentleman" general practitioner was a thing of the past, and modern doctors are no longer concerned with serving humanity.

Cornish said the ill-treatment of cadavers, the "temporal suitcase of the human soul", by medical students tended to breed disrespect for the human body. This has led doctors to place more faith in material gains than in spiritual rewards, he said.

Cornish deplored the time modern medicine spends in prescribing "sugar-coated pills" for imaginary ailments. He pointed out that 60 per cent of the modern physician's fees telling the patient he is perfectly well and should go home.

He said that "fee-splitting" caused doctors to regard patients as sources of income, and as persons of inferior social status.

Jeffery Duckworth (I Premeds), defended sugar pill treatment or placebos, as necessary to fulfill psychological needs. He claimed that patients turned away from one doctor would go to others until satisfied they had been "treated".

Duckworth redefined "materialism" as the concern of doctors with "bodily ills". In this sense he defended the materialism of the medical profession. In sloughing off the "concern" of doctors with monetary gains, he used Albert Schweitzer as an example.

The "assembly-line" methods of contemporary medicine were criticised by the second government speaker, Nancy Hamilton (I Vic). She said the use of such methods, and the high degree of specialization in came from such treatments, and advocated the policy of medicine, destroyed the former, close, doctor-patient relationship. The practice of taking "fixed" numbers of students from different districts is also deplorable, she said.

Final speaker for the Noes, Sam Izenberg (I Premeds), pointed out high fees charged by some specialists were justifiable when the long years they had spent at school were considered.

He claimed that the classic phrase, "Is there a doctor in the house?" has more significance than those outside the profession realize. "A doctor is on duty 168 hours a week", he added.

He said that Toronto, home of Drs. Banting and Best, Gordon Murray, and a world-renowned Cancer Institute, should be the last place to look down on the medical profession.

Closing his speech, he warned members of the House to vote wisely since as a future member of the medical profession, "the lives you save may be your own".

Dents Building

Dr. Roy G. Ellis, Dean of the Faculty of Dentistry, said a great deal of credit was due to the architect for completing the building at the original tender price, and at the same time incorporating in it every feature necessary. This is the first dental building designed by this architect, and judging by the comments by visitors from abroad, he said, it won't be the last.

Treasure Van Booming

Treasure Van, the sale of foreign handicrafts which opened on campus Monday, is receiving enthusiastic support from students and the general public during its University of Toronto visit.

"We are very pleased with the way things are going", Treasure Van publicity Director Richard Gladstone said last night.

By Wednesday evening $1,677 had been netted for the World University Service, sponsor of the sale. $1,000 was added to the total between noon and 6 p.m. yesterday.

Treasure Van officials are confident at least two-thirds of the U of T goal of $6,000 will be reached.

One quarter of the proceeds go to WUS, an international university organization which sends aid for educational purposes to underdeveloped countries and sponsors student seminars and conferences to promote international understanding.

Yugoslavian hand carved flutes and Indian incense have been top sellers so far at U of T. The flutes, which sell for $1.35 each, form part of the display highlighting this year's sale. The Yugoslavian shipment arrived on campus Tuesday after being held up in Toronto harbour for several days during a dispute over a mistake in an invoice.

Although student purchases are usually confined to the lower-priced items, a French-Canadian wooden lamp and a copper coffee set each valued at $50 were sold yesterday.

The sale which ends today is open from 12-6 p.m. and 7-10 p.m. in Howard Ferguson Hall, U.C.

Nfcus President Gerin's Proposal: A Country-Wide Mass Conference

The possibility of the National Federation of Canadian University Students extending its projects to include a country-wide conference was discussed last night by Jacques Gerin, President of the Nfcus National Executive at an External Affairs Committee meeting.

The idea was first proposed at the Nfcus conference in Saskatoon by delegates from the University of Toronto.

The proposed plan suggested a mid-Canadian campus be host to 1,000 students from all across Canada for a mass meeting.

President Claude T. Bissell who was approached on the subject last week said he was "interested in any project which makes Canadians interested in the universities."

At last night's meeting Mike Sherman, Student Administrative Council National Affairs Chairman, said financial support will be necessary from both the government and individual sponsors. The estimated cost would be $100,000, to $200,000.

Premier Douglas of Saskatchewan has guaranteed his province's support of this project, and has dared Premier Frost to equal this effort.

A preliminary report will be prepared by Toronto's Nfcus association, to be presented at the National Association in Ottawa in December.

Gerin, last night said "the idea of bringing as many people as possible together will give the greatest opportunity for the interplay of ideas as possible."

He said "the United States has had similar conferences which have been very successful in creating a greater understanding throughout the country."

With such a large number of students, he said, "we will be able to attract top speakers, and have discussions on topics of national interest."

This conference, Gerin said, "would last for 4 or 5 days, students would hear a speech from some noted person, and then break into groups of 20, to discuss the topic more fully."

He added, "this type of thing is a basically good idea."

Gerin said "there are 75,000 students in Nfcus, and this mass conference realizes this body's potentiality. A student community grows aware that it's not here only to study, but must develop its potentiality to act as members of an active community."

last weekend, some of the 28 delegates felt that the ability to compromise was one of the basic diseases now attacking the Commonwealth.

This, they believed, leads to "superficiality," and the refusal to discuss pressing problems for fear of hurting someone's feelings.

Resolutions passed by the council urged:

—that a permanent Commonwealth council be set up, consisting of equal delegations from each independent member and of observers from the remaining colonies for the discussion of matters of common concern; that these sessions be held in camera,

comment

bissell bristles

One of the most interesting of the addresses made recently by Dr. Claude T. Bissell was given before Toronto Life Underwriters.

In it Dr. Bissell attempted to reconcile his avowed interest in liberal and creative arts with some sort of ideal that the underwriters might be expected to underwrite. To do this he stated that the cold war was being fought on a cultural front as well as on a scientific and technological front. This of course makes the creative arts important weapons in the cold war, and places the university "squarely in the front rank."

Two quotes from the speech communicate the tenor of Dr. Bissell's comments:

"... if we neglect our own creative arts we may be sure that we will make no impression on those ancient civilizations of the East for which art is as necessary as daily bread."

In other words we must produce some culture in order to win over the uncommitted but cultured (and incidentally hungry) peoples of the East.

"... and we must above all, ensure the health of our culture, so as to make the political and social way of life we believe in an exportable commodity."

These remarks bristle with unfortunate implications.

For one thing, the liberal arts courses are turning out hordes of people every year who have no intention of being of help in the cold war, and others who could not even if they wanted to.

Our writers are just as likely to turn out violent attacks on our political and social way of life as anything else; our painters and poets are producing work hardly accessible to most people here let alone the uncommitted masses everywhere. And there are just as likely to be communists coming out of Economics and Political Science as there are mixed free-enterprisers. Altogether a pretty useless lot as far as giving the Russians their come-uppance goes.

Of course Dr. Bissell may simply have meant that creative production of any kind will gain us more respect in the world, and make our political and social system more acceptable by association.

But that would hardly be a very honest way of converting the world. And most creative artists we know would resent the use of their art as a device to put over a system of politics that must stand on its own feet or not at all.

Not only that, but this rather totalitarian ideal is not quite compatible with sentiments expressed by Dr. Bissell in various other places including later on in this very speech where he lauds the ideal of independent research and scholarship.

Either Dr. Bissell does not recognize the incompatibility, or else he is aware of it, but making sure that the underwriters heard first the part they would most sympathize with.

It reminds us of what Dr. Robert M. Hutchins said when he was here last week. He said that some university administrators in the U.S. seemed to feel that the only way they could raise money was by misinforming the public as to what a university should be. But the public gets its revenge by insisting sooner or later that the university become what they have been misled into thinking it is. Dr. Hutchins said he didn't think this would happen in Canada.

Maybe it will.

Who Gets What . . .

● ARTS BUILDING:

A new building on St. George Street that will house 11 non-college departments of the Faculty of Arts. Design provides for as many as 5,000 students and 330 staff at one time.

● FACULTY OF ARTS:

In addition to the new arts building, there are plans for new Physics, Chemistry and Zoology buildings which will provide space for an increase in Arts enrolment of 54% by 1964.

● FACULTY OF APPLIED SCIENCE and ENGINEERING:

A new four storey building on St. George Street adjoining the present MacLennan Laboratories will make possible (1) departmental expansions and (2) facilities for a 73% enrolment increase of up to 3,500 students in 1964.

● CIVIL ENGINEERING:

New equipment including a materials-testing machine of 1,000,000 pounds capacity that will be the first of this substantial size in Canada, and scattered facilities centralized in the new Engineering Building.

● COMPUTATION CENTRE:

More facilities available for experimentation including special equipment that is extremely sensitive to temperature changes, and new quarters in the Physics Building.

● CHEMISTRY:

New Building on West Campus to provide accommodation for increased enrolment.

● ATOMIC ENERGY:

A sub-critical nuclear assembly, one of the first of the expansion products to be completed, has been installed in the basement of the Wallberg Memorial Building. It will greatly enlarge the research facilities for undergraduate and graduate students in Engineering Physics.

● AERONAUTICAL ENGINEERING:

New facilities in the proposed Engineering Building will allow the department to do in labs undergraduate work that must be done by means of field trips to industrial plants. When new labs for aircraft design, fluid mechanics, propulsion and structures are completed, this department will be the foremost of its kind in Canada.

● AEROPHYSICS:

A new laboratory on Dufferin Street has just been completed.

● METALLURGICAL ENGINEERING:

New facilities for the study of physical properties of metals and extractive methods will be provided in the move to new quarters in the Wallberg Building.

● PHYSICS:

A new building on the west campus will double space for Physics.

● ZOOLOGY:

Will move into its own building which will provide new laboratories, lecture rooms and office space.

● DENTISTRY:

Has already moved into its new Dental Building which has facilities to handle almost double the present enrolment.

● FORESTRY:

Has already moved into new quarters on St. George Street, where new and enlarged laboratories have made extensive research in such fields as the strength of wood materials and the lumber drying process possible.

● LAW:

Will return from Siberia to new quarters on the Campus.

● MEDICINE:

New space for research projects will be provided for in major rearrangements in the present Biology and Hygiene buildings and by additions to the Research Building.

● PHARMACY:

The former Dental Building on College Street will be altered to fit the needs of an increased enrolment in Pharmacy.

● BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION:

Additional facilities for interim requirements will be provided when space in the Economics Building has been released. Ultimate requirements will be met by new building on the West Campus.

● RESIDENCE HALLS:

New accommodations for at least a ration of one residence unit to every fifteen students enrolled.

● MUSIC:

New Building and auditorium for the Faculty of Music is planned immediately below the Museum. The school of Music will be housed in a renovated wing of the Economics Building.

● ARCHITECTURE:

To move into new Architectural Building on West Campus with facilities for 270 students.

● GRADUATE STUDIES:

New administrative quarters to be provided at 65 St. George Street.

● PHYSICAL and HEALTH EDUCATION:

Women students will move into the already completed Women's Athletic Building and male students will have space for all their activities in the Men's Athletic Building.

● SOCIAL WORK:

Will take over released space in the Economics Building and later will have their own building on the West Campus.

● UNIVERSITY LIBRARY:

A new addition is planned with emphasis on increased stack space and study facilities to meet undergraduate and graduate requirements.

● PHYSICAL and OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY:

Will expand from Devonshire Place into new space in the Biology Building.

● ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE:

Women's residences will be expanded with the opening of the Loretto College with accommodations for 194 staff and students. The college library facilities will be increased with additional reading room space.

● TRINITY COLLEGE:

Increased residential space with additions to St. Hilda's and the completion of the college building across the quadrangle. In addition new buildings are planned for Devonshire Place to provide more classrooms and academic offices.

Micro And Macrocasm

Dear Sir:

After each daily lecture hour, multitudes of happy boys and girls (some in a hurry no doubt to arrive early for the next lecture) swim in both directions across the Hoskin Street cross-walk. Concerned usually with the pursuit of some felicitous or grave conversation they are incognizant of all else excepting perhaps, the curb on the other side of the street.

Although cross-walks are useful in areas with a minimum of pedestrian traffic, the one on Hoskin Street is confusing and dangerous. Those people who use it, however, must still get to their destination, and so, in order to be fair to all concerned, traffic lights should be installed. This would give automobiles and pedestrians alternate opportunities of free and safe movement. If the city authorities were convinced by the SAC or Varsity to install the suggested traffic lights, these groups would be credited with the prevention of unnecessary accidents and misery.

David Rubin (II U.C.)

Dear Sir:

My name not having been removed from the staff mailing list I was sent a copy of the Faculty Petition to the Government of Canada urging "the end to the testing and production of nuclear weapons". I could hardly believe my eyes and a great experience of joy welled up inside me.

This is the first time in my experience that the Senior University Community is taking an active stand in a matter of immediate concern. While at University I could never reconcile myself to the aloofness of the Senior University Community toward matters of great concern. After all, the majority of our fellow citizens are in the cab of a transport truck, bent over machines of production, on the bumpy seat of a tractor, in the mineshafts, at office desks, at dictaphones or at the dishpans. Who are these toiling millions to follow if the community best equipped to lead remains mute? My joy increased with every name listed in the petition. I could not further reflection made me delve into the actual text of the petition. Finally, dismay has become mingled with joy, joy over the University's breast with inaction, dismay over the shallowness of the argument.

The weakest point of the petition is the naivety, by which it treats the existence of the arms race as the disease which has to be cured. If two feuding farmers each possess a rifle, it is childish to claim that the rifles are the cause of their feud or the removal of the rifles will bring peace to the feuding parties. Farmers need no rifles in order to wage wars. They can divert streams from their course, poison rivers, allow weeds to spread or actively spread gossip, they can undersell or outbid in the market and by countless other devices the feud may cripple the neighbour to such an extent that physical death might have been a salutary alternative.

It should be quite obvious that armaments are the mere symptoms of forces working beneath the surface which must be tamed before present feuds can be ended. The Customs officer at the National boundary is the economic gun ceaselessly firing salvos at the neighbour. The Immigration Officer is that symbol of power saying to whom this parcel of God's earth shall belong. The armed sentry at each border ensures that neither officer betray one ounce of what we proudly call "National Sovereignty". To the Asian mother it makes little difference if her child died of malnutrition caused by the officer of National Sovereignty or whether it dies by his bayonet. The latter could have been forgiven as a "crime of passion", not so the former.

It would behoove the Senior University Community to base its pleas on well thought out arguments and not be misled by mere appearances. To the toiling millions the armament race may indeed appear as the cause for our troubles, the educated must probe a little more deeply. If their concern is genuine they should be fearless in exposing even the most cherished misconceptions.

The other main weakness of the petition is the appearance of it being prompted by fear rather than indignation. Surely, it is not death itself which is so offensive as the indignity of human beings treating one another in such brutal ways. From that point of view it makes little difference whether we destroy 2 millions by one atom blast or 200,000 by conventional bombs. The atrocity is the same in both cases. To the minds of the vulgar such a difference may seem all-important but to those nurtured in our best traditions the most relevant maxim should be that it is better to suffer than to do evil. We may indeed be fearful for the millions who will suffer death or infirmity or we may mourn the loss of our civilization. Neither fear nor sorrow, but indignation about our ways of dealing with each other must prompt our reform.

In my own crusading activities I have been most often chided for counting on "a sincere desire for agreement". My critics may be right in this, but if the Petition's success must also rest on that uncertain foundation why not demand that we remove the CAUSES for the armament race? If we are going to be serious and imaginative we should press for a complete overhaul of existing political institutions, including the Nation State and consequently the United Nations Organization. The gist of the present Petition is "Let us throw away our biggest clubs". My plea is "Let us institute a just order among ourselves and the clubs will rot before they are needed". I have put some constructive suggestions into my pamphlet "Temporalism", available at the Bookstore, and could not repeat them here. It is my hope that the public will take account of some of these points.

Bruno Morawetz.

MINSTRELS: OMnipRESENT

Picture the late winter, in the opening months of the year 46 B.C., and a tremendous and eternally reverberating upheaval, political, cultural, and social, is under way in Rome's world. It is, then, a time when elderly men are wont to look back, and re-examine the days of their youth, even the days of the far, dim past. And out of fear of the unknown future (even the feebly understood present), as much as through fondness for younger days when there was innocence in the land, three great men are relaxing after their late-afternoon meal, snug around the charcoal fire in its copper basin, recalling the golden past.

With the fiercely republican Brutus and the even-tempered epicurean financier Atticus as his audience, Cicero muses on the days when minstrels trod the halls of ancient Italy. "Would there were still extant those songs, of which Cato in his Origines has recorded, that, long before even his time, the several guests at banquets used to sing in turn to the praise of famous men! For all that Ennius counts Naevius (c. 240 B.C.) among primitive bards and fauns, Naevius' Punic War, like a work of Myron, still yields pleasure."

Bards and fauns. The stuff of legend; a singer with something to sing about. Besides men of the stature of Naevius, Cicero means, one may assume, the unknown creators of those ballads which are characteristic of the "dark ages" of every young civilization. Ancient Greece had her prehistoric bards, whose tales of gods and heroes spun the shimmering threads with which Homer, as late as 800 B.C., wove together the oldest tapestry extant in European literature, of the ancient way of life. To the ancients, history began with the Trojan War, and of its heroes Homer sang. Of the men who provided him with the colours for his mural (a sort of Border Minstrelsy, if you will) we know nothing.

But let us assume an analogy, and glance at the era of minstrels that gave leph and human colour to the lull before our own Renaissance.

In France we find the humble jongleurs; in Anglo-Saxon lands they were called glee-men. They were poor folk, itinerant, often hungry, but cheerful in their calling.

Professionalism (or specialization on a more sophisticated scale) set in, but the art did not atrophy. On the contrary, it flourished and spread, and a new kind of dignity was known to these men; a dignity we find common for such entertainers in the Homeric age. A new musician class grew up, whose members were called menestrels. Close political alliance between England and France at this time made the name common in England as minstrel. Elsewhere on the Continent we find troubadours, trouveres, minnesingers, and meistersingers, all really united by one aim: to entertain with song.

Of what did their entertainment consist? We have seen how, in prehistoric Greece, they sang of the heroes who left to fight at Troy, of the battles fought, of the adventures endured, of the glory won. And in Mediaeval Europe our minstrels took the cue. Europe was one great road to battle. Because of the Crusades, they were beloved by the feudal folk of all classes. For they were the "newspaper reporters" of the day, carrying throughout the countryside reports of the distant armies, and in their art of inseparably united poetry and music they told tales of the brave and chivalrous knights who had gone to fight for the King. They were always welcome wherever they might go, and could count on a good meal and a night's rest at any castle, in return for their entertainment.

As was not the case in Greece and Rome, however, as Cicero laments, a fair amount of their literature has survived (and here we must nod to Sir Walter Scott). Remember Sir Patrick Spens? Lord Thomas and Fair Annet? The Gay Goshawk? These are popular remnants of their work. Love, politics, and morals were treated in dialogues, disputations, laments, lays, in rondeaux, villanelles, and pastourelles. Some of the men? Bertran de Born and Raimbaut de Vaigueres come to mind, as well as Adam de la Halle, Walter von der Vogelweide, Michel Beheim, and Hans Sachs. Richard the Lion Heart was a proud member of the guild. Adam Puschmann contributed to our knowledge by collecting 334 of the German "Tone" in a valuable song-book.

Where written methodical history fails, then, these songs, in ancient times as in our own, have charted the political and social changes of civilizations. Here and there they have been caught up in great epics like Homer's poems, but have themselves died away through a perverse oversophistication. Cicero could well mourn their passing. When we consider the beauty and naivety of those which have survived from our own Middle Ages, we have a treasure-trove whose riches Cicero could only guess at.

There were also good performances by John Gardiner as Trofimov, Claude Bede as Gae, and with the fine acting of Mervyn Blake as Pishchik and Charles Palmer as Feers, we again saw the value to a play of having the minor roles well-handled.

The other actors ranged from the un-convincing portrayal of Syna by Bena Shuster to the very competent acting of Barbara Hamilton as Charlotta and Tudi Wiggins as Varla.

The sets provided a simple, if somewhat uninteresting background to a performance which certainly did credit to the high demands (and great rewards) involved in the production of the Chek-novian drama.

Look At All The Angry Men

Look Back In Anger (University) is more of an unbridled scan than a "look", more of a psychotic howl, than a critically angry examination of life in the English welfare state.

John Osborne's play, which labelled him as the first of the "angry young men" and upon which this film is based was a searching, brutally critical, wildly rational attack on contemporary English society and its emotional concomitants. What we find in the film version, however, is an abandoned, irrational flaying of anything social that moves and some things long since dead. Jimmy Porter's abuse flows like a slashed artery. He rails against the church, the welfare state, his wife, her mother, middle-class morality, bureaucracy, the "Sunday Times" and a myriad of straw men, he gleefully creates for emotional target practice. Jimmy is no longer merely angry; he is in crying need of a psychiatrist. The film's screenplay, a hard mosaic of cynical epigrams, only flirts with a clutch of social issues, without ever really coming to grips with any of them. Despite this shotgun attack, however, the strongest thing in the film is Osborne's deep, dark anger. In scene after scene, he shakes his fist from the screen and shakes the audience like beans in a rattle.

His drama, from the first scene, drags the moviegoer's feelings into its neurotic circles of despair and disillusionment as a whirlpool drags at a chip.

His story, a sort of psychological striptease in which the characters spend most of their time wading around in each other's shallow psyches, is disarmingly simple and despite its sick overtones, very real. It tells of Jimmy Porter, a young university graduate (Richard Burton), gratuitously educated by the welfare state, frustrated in a nation living in twilight and contemptuous of his social creator. He has stolen his wife (Mary Ure) from the hated middle class above and with her and his business partner (Gary Raymond), exists in a sordid Midlands attic. Most of the time he looks and acts like a laxative advertisement — before. For money, he operates a candy stall in the marketplace. For amusement, he ceaselessly berates his dotting wife. When she lies down invitingly, his only reaction is to walk all over her. The only escape from their self-created hell is the bed in which they can perform that "silly symphony" the world has for people who cannot stand the pain of living. Finally, she can stand it no longer and goes home to her parents, not telling Jimmy that she is pregnant. Her actress friend (Claire Bloom), a visitor in the garret, remains. Jimmy calls her "an evil-minded little virgin", but she becomes his mistress. In the end, broken by the miscarriage of her child, his wife returns wanting only to be "a lost cause" in the attic of emotional torment.

This is all very dramatic stuff, but then it is all very well done.

Director Tony Richardson, possessing in addition to mature craftsmanship, a rare sense of cinema artistry, moulds the many facets of his production into an evocative, forceful whole.

As written, all of the characters have plenty of red blood in them and they are coloured up still further by a brilliant cast which opens its collective veins into every line. The actors seem to have been struck, like the characters in the drama, with the social and spiritual challenge of their roles and they all play with a plain honesty that compels belief. Richard Burton, regrettably substituting madness for anger, bawls, spits, snarls and shouts his way through the Jimmy role with a quick-bodied versatility that brings the character and frequently the film, tartly alive. Mary Ure, a winsomely beautiful and sensitively creative actress, skillfully radiates all the varied colours of the abused wife's emotional spectrum. And a subtle fusion of conventional demerity and animal abandonment is present in Claire Bloom's fine interpretation of the affection-starved, meddling young actress. Also notable are Gary Raymond, a suitably common as dirt companion and Edith Evans, whose Cockney landlady anatomizes much of the contemporary English character ("Just being alive, chewing the cud and having a nip of what you fancy every now and then").

In the transfer from stage to screen, the drama acquires new reality, new impact and through the camera, a larger and more impressive dimension. Photographer Oswald Morris, a superb and inspired technician, works primarily in a harshly lit, angularly composed, stark, low-key style that abets the production's pervading mood of emotional imbalance. His camera follows Jimmy to his raucous jazz club (which features some hot sounds by the Chris Barber band), into the seething open air market and through the grim street of his dismal provincial town.

The film's total effect, is regrettably, not seriously disturbing. One is almost left with the feeling "well, so what". But the production is guaranteed to make the customers forget their troubles in the simple animal pleasure of watching someone else's. It presents a picture competently calculated to stir the viewer's emotions, but somewhat unlikely to satisfy his intelligence.

Cherry Orchard

Within the period of a month, Toronto audiences have been fortunate enough to have the opportunity of viewing two classics of Russian drama, the first, Turgenev's "A Month in the Country" and on Wednesday evening at Eaton Auditorium Chekhov's "The Cherry Orchard", performed by the Canadian Players.

Chekhov clearly represents the highest peak of that school of Russian dramatists known as the Russian realists. Obviously influenced by his great predecessors Turgenev and Ostrovsky, he employed their techniques further than they ever dared and infusing these with his own peculiar genius, he created works whose influence is still being felt in the world's drama.

These techniques seem, on the surface, to be quite simple, almost too simple. They call for little plot and even less action, relying instead on the interplay of characters and their emotions so that any impact must come from effective dialogue and the accumulation of detail which must always be absorbing if not necessarily pertinent. Thus the result tends to be rather static, so much so that although an audience may be touched at the end of such a play, they are often at a loss to say what it was all about.

In "The Cherry Orchard", Chekhov created a theatre-poem of the suffering of change. It is the story of the refusal of an aristocratic family to give up their beloved cherry orchard and symbolizes the refusal to see reality and the clinging to the past of a group of pitiable but sympathetic characters.

These characters, having come together "to save the cherry orchard", all suffer the passing of the estate in different ways, thus adumbrating this change at a deeper and more generally significant level than that of any individual's

The Hart House Glee Club will be joined by the Michigan State Glee Club and Colgate University Men's Glee Club for the annual Tri-University concert in the Great Hall tomorrow night, at 8:30 p.m. Tickets at $1.25 are on sale at the Hart Porter's Desk. Women do not have to be escorted.

experience. Each sees in the orchard some value — economic, sentimental, social, cultural — which he wishes to keep, while Chekhov, never really involving himself in any of his characters' ideas, is content to describe the changing moods and perceptions of his characters as the time for decision comes and goes.

Lyubov, the heroine, and her family, represent the old aristocratic way of life. There is a cultural and sentimental tie to the cherry orchard and just as they were unable to save the beautiful orchard, so their type of people were ineffectual in attempting to preserve a way of life which would be destroyed as surely as would the cherry orchard itself.

Chekhov in this, his last play, does however suggest some alternatives to Lyubov in the persons of Lopakhin and Trofimov.

Lopakhin is that popular figure of late 19th Century literature, the "new man," usually an enterprising capitalist, he is helping to build a new Russia through his hard work and energy, while still perhaps sympathizing with the old Russia. Trofimov, on the other hand, is a young student who sees nothing good in the old and awaits the dawning of a new era for Russia.

Lyubov, unable to take Lopakhin's practical and economically sound advice to cut down the orchard and save her financial position, awaits the loss of her estate while throwing a rather hysterical party which ends with Lopakhin's announcement, in pride mixed with some guilt, that he was the purchaser of the estate.

The last act is epiphany: the action is now seen in a new and ironic light. The occasion is the departure of the family; the windows are boarded up, the furniture piled in the corners,

slask from warsaw

The Polish Community of Toronto has a good reason to be proud of the latest cultural import from behind the Iron Curtain. The Polish State Folk Ballet (Slask) of Warsaw. This highly skilled group of dancers provided some surprises for those who thought of Polish dancing in terms of the stately Polonaise and the gay polka. As these dancers, who will repeat their program to-night at Maple Leaf Gardens, showed us, Polish dancing is as exciting as the best dancing to be found anywhere. The intricate footwork, the whirling skirts and the robust spontaneity combined to fill the audience with an enthusiasm not often experienced in Toronto theatres.

These wonderfully costumed dancers gave us a sampling of dances and songs from the different Polish provinces at the same time giving us a glimpse of the variety of Polish music and dance which ranges from the traditional western sounds of Silesia province to the Balkan-like music of the Tatra mountains.

Most amazing and almost unbelievable is that few of this group have had any formal musical training. This may account for their vitality and enthusiasm but hardly explains their wondrous skill. In fact, the only criticism I could find would be the contrived arrangements of some of the music, and those few spots where folk dancing gave way to sophisticated choreography. But certainly the ease with which these dancers were able to group and re-group in line and circle patterns left no doubt as to the capable direction provided by their founder Aga Hadynowa and their choreographer Elwira Kaminska.

The dances themselves consisted of a few basic Polish and Slavic steps which in different combinations and patterns gave the dances a common element while still affording enough difference to lend variety and surprise to their numbers. This necessary variety and element of surprise was aided by effective programming which had the slow and melancholy followed by the very fast and all this interspersed with beautiful choral and solo singing by people whose untrained natural voices were perfectly suited to the folk song idiom.

The effective use of lighting further enhanced the dancing although the use of shadows in one of the numbers was more of a hinderance than an aid. All in all the whole evening was one of those unforgettable theatrical experiences only provided by the exciting combination of music and dance well performed.

Tickets are still available for the last performance tonight.

Anyone Wanna Be a Tea-Taster?

If you have ever thought of becoming a tea-taster or a beer-taster, the University of Toronto Food Chemistry Department has a way of finding out if you fit the qualifications.

One of the more novel displays at a two-day food chemistry exhibit which ended last night in the Home Economics Building, was a flask of "Phenylthiocarbamide."

This colourless, odorless and sometimes tasteless fluid is used by tea companies and breweries to test the taste buds of prospective "sample tasters." A taster is used to determine the quality of the beer, alcohol, and tea before it hits the market.

For 80 per cent of people the fluid tastes bitter. These are "in" as far as company personnel are concerned if they apply for a beer or tea-drinking job."

But for the other 20 per cent of the populace the chemical will strike the taste buds as pure water. And these people are "out."

Chemistry professor Ellen

Freeman was asked if there was a simpler name for the chemical. "Sure," she nodded, and wrote it on the bottle: "Sometimes bitter, sometimes tasteless."

Meanwhile a U of T student wandered into the exhibit room. One of the professors there handed her the flask of phenylthiocarbamide.

She tried it and made a face. Wiping her mouth with a handkerchief, she turned and sputtered "Hey, it's bitter".

"Good. You're all set for a job," quipped Dr. Freeman.

Another professor, Dr. John Meade was working over a jungle of test tubes and machinery down the hall. The scientific maze was labelled "Chromophotomatic Process". It is used to separate plant pigments.

"What is it?" we asked.

"In a word," he said, "a hot house luncheon."

Dr. Meade's laboratory also boasts the only framed bicycle wheel on the U of T campus.

The old iron rim hangs high

By TERRY BOURKE

in one corner of the lab for all to see.

A fellow professor, Dr. John Kagan, said every time we become "frustrated we twirl that wheel. Then we return to our experiment in faith that the human wheel of progress can still turn."

The range of nationalities in the food chemistry department bridges two worlds.

A young Pormosan student working on her Master of Arts, Susie Wu has her own lab and is determining the effectiveness of present-day methods of preserving and canning.

Next door in another lab, John St. Rose, from the West Indies, is trying to come up with answers to some other food problems baffling today's industry.

At an exhibit dealing with flourine, department head Dr. Dorine Smith said a current food chemistry project is tracking down the real effect of flourine on the teeth.

"At the moment there is strong evidence this chemical can be harmful to the teeth, even if used in small amounts, as many communities are doing today," she said.

"If a person doesn't get the proper amount of calcium and other minerals required, a touch of flourine will lead to a mottling of his teeth," she said.

The Food Department has been holding its exhibit on and off for the last 11 years. The number of people who show up to see it is always slim.

Dr. Smith complained. "The chemistry students go to a lot of trouble to put on this exhibit. And this year the attendance was a bit disappointing."

She added she thought the reason for poor turnout was the result of her department being placed on the top floor of the Home Economics Building - "way up in the sky."

"It's hard for the students to find us here."

On the food floor everything is strictly scientific.

As each person leaves the exhibit, he is given a coffee.

tor and demand decisions of him not through emotion but through reason. There is such a harmony of style that the sequence of events is not absolute. Brecht preaches realism, the full awareness that what is being viewed is a play and not a slice of life. He says to the audience "The actual world exists and it is our subject. But this play and this stage are not identical with it."

"The artist who belongs to this theater no longer attempts to create his world . . . His purpose is to create images informative of the external world."

In The Hamlet of Stepney Green, Leon Major achieves this by breaking the emotional involvement of the audience with songs directed and pointedly sung to the audience. With speeches made out of context to the audience. The play lends itself naturally to the Brechtian tradition by its sudden bursts of music (one of the songs is entitled; they are not really themselves) and the participation of a ghost who observes the internal play, comments on it and acts as a "Deus ex machina" in its unfolding.

In one scene in the first act, David Levy's father Sammy is finally dying after years of annual "wolf" cries. The action is very moving and the most melodramatic scene in the whole play. But Major at the moment of Sammy's death has a light, folksy and happy tune streaming from behind the set, distributing the solemnity of the scene and reminding us that "this is not actually happening — this is a play".

The use of an "apron stage", a stage with no curtain is another technique similar to the bared pipes in modern architecture, to produce a certain realism and consciousness.

The ghost of Sammy Levy makes such informative remarks like "life is a search for security", "it's so easy to make a child and so hard to make a friend", and "the world is a tropical island . . . make the most of your youth" ad infinitum.

Even with all of this Major and Russell claim that the play has no moral. The theme points out the lack of communication between parents and children, and a few other facts of life.

To watch Wally and Leon in conversation is most interesting. Wally starts off with a calm, almost innocent expression in appearance, voice and explanation. The flow of words is serving its purpose. I copied down a few notes — head up — Leon cuts in wildly with no introduction into our conversation. Soon he has captured us, first by the mop of hair and failure to keep still and then by what's being said, forcefully, and to the point. Wally excuses himself or just sits there and looks at you.

There are no arguments. As Leon says, "we have similar ideas and besides arguments are too costly, we can't afford them." Some people have criticized the play as having too much chopped out. When asked about one omitted part, Wally said, "Leon thought that it was in bad taste. I don't particularly mind whether it's in or out."

One looks like an overly healthy avant-garde actor and other like a well-defined intellectual. One shouts and the other speaks. One could be the "strong silent type" and the other the hot fudge sundae, so I asked to one of the leads, what he thought.

"Wally", he said, "is a 'nice guy', talented in a partnership known mostly through business. Leon is the actors' director, allowing freedom and giving ideas and atmosphere rather than giving specific orders". Even-tempered and easy to get along with was the final judgment and oh yes, of course, talented.

When the production got underway both Russell and Major did their work quickly. Wally Russell said that he had thought about the play for months and then within a few short days he knew exactly what he wanted at every instance. Leon acted the play out over and over again in the most casual situations and when the time came, everything went like clockwork. They both expressed amazement at the rapidity with which they wrote down the nebulous thought of a few months.

The rehearsals were fewer than usual, publicity rolled, the lights went up and the critics were kind. Some nights there were one hundred spectators and the actors rejoiced because they had a response—someone to entertain and they love to play their roles. Other nights there were barely thirty. The night I attended Dino Narrizzano, looking out on the half-empty house, stopped echoed out at the audience — "I think that we'd all have a better time if you moved up as close as possible to the front!" — Anna Reiser hid her face and took a tearful break over the backyard fence of the set. The actresses upstairs in the dressing room "couldn't understand".

It seems like an impossible task to define what went wrong. It could be that the theater the play and the people involved didn't have the established recognition as professional theater. It could be that the story was too ethnically centred, about a Yiddish family. Perhaps it was the technique employed, perhaps people don't want to be experimented on. Maybe the story was too simple and too "European".

But what if the causes are deeper than that? What if L, R and M are poor producers? And what if Toronto is too blank to deserve a good theater? I'm not sure that even New York will be the test. Somehow it seems that Europe has spoiled these, talented people into thinking that anything new and intellectual will be accepted.

In the meantime the ghosts departs but the memory lingers on.

Humanism Explained

John R. Mayer, philosophy lecturer at McMaster University, yesterday defined a Humanist as a cross between an existentialist and a rationalist, in a U of T Humanist Guild-sponsored address.

He was giving his second lecture here this week, called "The Challenge of Humanism," in which he described Humanism as holding sacred the ultimate value of the human individual.

"Man's whole duty is exhausted in doing his duty to his fellow man," he said.

"The universe and its order is self-created and self-governing, not by design, but by the nature of the universe itself."

"The Humanist hasn't time to contemplate why the universe exists for he should be considering the problems of nature," he said.

"Churches," he said, "have a negative influence on the community. Myths taught in churches have a functional value as they are beautiful, inspirational and stimulating but they are taken in a sense not meant."

"They are misinterpreted and misused and like tranquilizers interfere with the integrity of the individual."

Humanists are not crusaders as they are not trying to convert people to their way of thinking, he said.

Mayer said, "Human freedom is a crucial point. If man is given freedom he will act in accordance to a universal moral law. To know good is to do good."

"Humanism gives an adequate ethic without referring to punishments or rewards," he said.

ing banners and signs, plugging disarmament, to go to North Bay to protest the stationing of Bomarc missiles there.

Main speaker at the meeting was Professor Ken McNaught, of the U of T History Department.

He said the picture of the Japanese frying like eggs after Hiroshima, has to be multiplied many times before we can get an idea of the horrible destruction today's bomb power can inflict.

A balance of fear, he pointed out is now maintaining the peace. "However accidents are still possible and total war could happen through the agitation of a megalomaniac."

The professor said another school of thought considers the possibility of winning a future war.

"But this definition of winning a war remains very loose. There is no defence against intercontinental ballistic missiles," he added.

He said Canadians in general lack "comprehension and common sense concerning the precise power of the existing stock-pile in east and west arsenals of atomic weapons."

Speaking on the Pidhaini affair later, the Student Christian Movement secretary, Alan McLachlin, said it was "too bad the whole incident had to happen."

"This was a question and answer period, not a speech making period. The student in question overstepped his privileges by asking to give a talk in the first place."

The petition is sponsored by the U of T Disarmament Committee on Nuclear Weapons. So far leading academic heads from across the campus have signed.

When the petition has been finally drawn up and completed it will be flown to the Prime Minister in Ottawa.

Students attending the meeting were given copies of the petition and asked to obtain signatures from among the student body.

The petitions will also be posted in colleges and faculties by SAC representatives.

Meanwhile, the disarmament proposal also came under fire at a Students' Administrative Council meeting Wednesday night.

Debating a proposal to support "the efforts of the University Committee on Nuclear Disarmament to bring about a solution to present problems of nuclear disarmament" made by Peter Dembski (III SMC), council debated the pros and cons of the proposed petition.

Main objection came from Dave Tavender (IV Trim), who said he would support a move to ban nuclear testing, but felt nuclear disarmament would leave the Soviet Union in a superior defensive position.

Carol Jones (III SMC) told council the petition specifically asked only for a ban on testing, not for complete disarmament.

Council supported the motion with nine abstentions and no opposing votes.

says...

"TV or not TV? — that's the question."

You hear a lot about the terrible effect TV is having on children. I'd like to put in my two cents worth for the other side of the question. Take the argument about TV interfering with such activities as reading. If this is true, then why do public libraries all over Canada report a sharp rise in book withdrawals since the advent of TV? And where has the sharpest rise occurred? In the children's departments. I hold that TV has stimulated children's mental activity, opening fabulous new worlds of interest to them.

Another thing - TV encourages family unity. Being together is a mighty important thing for any family. I suppose that most of us are happiest at times like this, when we share our experiences with one another.

That's why it's so important to take every measure possible to keep your family together always. It's only sensible to make sure you have the proper insurance to implement this aim. The North American Life & Casualty Family Plan is intended to protect the family group. It covers father, mother, and all the children (even those yet unborn) with just one reasonable premium. Insure the kind of family living that lets you relax together in confidence. Come in tomorrow and find out all about our Family Plan. See you soon.

Confidently,

HOCKEY BLUES HOST LAVAL

JOHN GATTEN (left) and HOWIE ROTH (right) are two of the players Varsity fans will see performing tonight at the Bloor Street Ice Emporium when the Blues open the 1959 Intercollegiate season hosting perennial contenders Laval. Game time is eight bells.

Laval Are Visitors In League Opener

Varsity Blues play Laval University tonight at the Bloor Street Ice Emporium in the first league game of the new season and Varsity hockey fans will find out whether coach Jack Kennedy has been able to rebuild his graduation-depleted championship squad into a contender for the Intercollegiate title for 1960.

If we can believe the press releases from the US concerning the Blues' recent two game tour of St. Lawrence University and Clarkson College, Varsity has an amazing team.

Blues won both their games against the schools, something they have not often done in the past. According to the bulletin the Blues are a "polished and hard-driving" team.

The "smashing offense" of the Blues "pressed" at the Clarkson net for the better part of the game continues our correspondent. "Toronto's devastating offense and control of the puck" is described in glowing terms, and Don Keenan, Blues' goalie is described as "excellent."

Unfortunately games are not won by press clippings, and Laval are not likely to be at all impressed by the glowing notices. Particularly since some of their players are not bilingual. Kennedy will go with only three lines in tonight's game with Laval for the first time this season. Peter Warren suffered a broken hand in practice yesterday and will not dress for the game. Another doubtful starter is ace defenceman Harry Neale.

Neale is suffering from an inflamed tendon in his ankle and apparently has found skating painful and uncomfortable. The only other injury is being sported by Gord Epp in the form of a fractured schnozz. He will play though, and is not expected to be unduly hampered by the injury.

Don Keenan will continue guarding the pipes for the Blues, as Kennedy does not feel that Bob Giroux is ready following a two week layoff due to a fractured cheekbone. Giroux is expected to be in the nets when Varsity face Michigan Wolverines Monday night at the Ice Emporium.

This year's league is going to be a very tight affair, with almost every team except McGill having a good chance to take the title. Laval are perennially strong as are University of Montreal, and off last year's showing Queen's will be nobody's fool.

Tonight's contest starts at eight bells as does Monday's with Michigan. Don't miss either.

Rugger Blues May Yet Play U of Michigan

Varsity Rugger Blues, paced by three tries from some fine backfield running, trounced Toronto Scottish 15-0 in a post-season exhibition game Saturday on the Back Campus.

The backs displayed their best running and handling of the season as they relished a dry field and fine weather — a sharp contrast to the mud slogging of previous weeks.

The Blues were without six regulars, sidelined through injuries, but the intermediates who took their place proved more than adequate. One of them — freshman Harry Nicholson — plunged over for a second-half try. A penalty goal in the first half rounded out the scoring.

Leo Colman, Barry Reed and Paul Chapman were standouts in the forward play, while Bill Chadwick at scrum-half showed his strongest running of the season. He scored a try in the second half.

The Blues, who finished out of the Ontario Senior A playoffs but won the intercollegiate championship, are still trying to arrange a fixture with University of Michigan. The U.S. squad was supposed to play in Toronto the other weekend but four of their overseas players were stopped at the border by immigration officials because their student visas did not permit them to leave the U.S.

It is possible the Blues might go down to Ann Arbor after the Grey Cup weekend — if Michigan weather doesn't go into a

comment by dave griner

Heckling by fans has been an integral part of every sports contest since time immemorial, and while it is abusive towards the individual more often than the team, it generally contains a coarse humor which even the object can detect and appreciate.

Sometimes there is no humor in the remarks. They are merely intended as abuse, pure and simple. Generally an athlete can tolerate the remarks as he is constantly on the move and not always in earshot of a particular person or group of persons.

There are also times when the object of such remarks is unable to move, and in this case the author of the immensely clever (so he thinks) words usually ends up on the receiving end of a good solid punch right in the kisser.

Such an incident took place last Friday afternoon during a hockey game between UC and St. Michael's College at the Arena.

A UC player was penalized and proceeded to the penalty box to serve the two minutes. He was beset by three fans from St. Michael's who abused him until he could no longer take it and finally hauled off and slugged one of his tormenters.

A general brawl ensued as players from the UC team moved in to help their fellow player. The end result was that the referee was forced to call the game with 4.48 minutes left in the last period.

To the players' credit, there was never any suggestion that the fight would carry over onto the ice.

What is incredible though is that the three fans from St. Mike's were on the other side of the rink when the penalty was originally assessed. Apparently they deliberately went over to the other side to sit behind the rival player and abuse him verbally.

How small can you get? This sort of action suggests the mentality of a five year old, and I am insulting the majority of five year olds.

A motion was passed at a meeting of the Intramural Sports Committee absolving the UC player of all blame in the incident. One College abstained from the otherwise unanimous vote.

Why? The fan or fans got exactly what they were asking for, and probably less than they deserved.

Apparently not only do the St. Mike's fans have no manners—some of their players lack them too.

In a game Thursday between St. Mike's B and SPS III, St. Michael's, in a forty minute straight time game, managed to accumulate no less than 60 minutes in penalties including four ten-minute misconducts for abusive language. The referee was constrained to report that this was the roughest game he had ever handled and that the responsibility for the trouble lay entirely with the St. Michael's team.

All this in a Group Four game where winning or losing is anything but a matter of life-and-death or even a championship.

If this is a protest against the suspension of a certain St. Michael's athlete, it is a poor one. Grow up St. Mike's! Even a five-year-old has better manners than you are displaying.

UC Lacrosse Team Finish Undefeated

One of the best Intramural lacrosse teams of all time closed out the regular season Wednesday night, defeating Medicine 11-2. UC-PHE have swept through the eight game schedule undefeated, out-scoring their opponents by the fantastic margin of 103-11 and winning by 10 goals or better in every game but two.

Well balanced scoring punch is apparently the secret of their success. Bert Naylor leads the scoring with 27 goals, closely followed by Howie Roth (of hockey fame) with 20.

Four of the other five regular players have scored over ten goals apiece. Dave Misner (14), Jim Hill (15), and Don Fleming (also of hockey fame) and Stan Fraser (of soccer fame) have 11 each.

UC are solid favorites to win the championship by surviving three hounds of the championships. The only team which appears to be able to give them a battle is SPS who looked extremely good defeating Vic 9-3 Thursday to clinch second place in Group One.

It may be expecting too much however, as UC whipped the Engineers 15-5 and 10-0 in the two league games. In hockey action: Med IV beat SPS VIII 9-0. Baird got the hat-trick for the Doctors. Trinity B edged SPS V 3-1, and Pharmacy clobbered Knox 6-1. SPS III tied SMC "B" 1-1, while SPS VI whipped Trinity "C" 7-1.

Lacrosse saw Vic II defeat SPS V 4-2 on two goals by Vaughn, while Pre-Meds I won a football match over SMC

Forestry Win Soccer Title Over Knox, 3-1

Forestry defeated Knox 3-1 on the back campus last Wednesday afternoon to win the division II soccer championship.

Knox chose to play with the wind during the first half, but the Forestry defence was always able to break up the rather weak efforts of the Knox offense.

During this period Forestry moved into a 1-0 lead when outside left Ralph Tippet scored. Knox tied the score almost immediately on a free kick by Stan Boyd.

Centre-forward Dave Kill scored the winner in the second half with a hard shot from close in. Hank Van Bers put the game on ice when he converted Tippet's action into a

Election Night Atmosphere Sees Blitz Net $40,000

By SUSIE BRESLIN

With all the hustle and bustle of an election night at party headquarters, 2,300 University of Toronto students invaded the Drill Hall last night and shared the excitement of a $39,614.82 victory for the National Fund.

The total was termed by officials to be a "minimum" final figure. If all pledges for funds given to canvassers are realized, the amount may well reach $50,000.

Over city radio from the Drill Hall, President Claude Bissell termed the Big Blitz "the most exhilarating moment of the campaign".

"We're interested in money, of course", but the "sense of enthusiasm" worked up by U of T students made it "the high point of the campaign," he said.

Radio station CHUM provided the Drill Hall with an air of feverish excitement during the five-hour campaign. Station announcers interviewed students, recorded Skule yells and made campaign progress reports all during the evening.

Television stars Bob Goulet and Toby Robbins added a touch of glamor when they appeared briefly to cheer the hard-working canvassers on.

Varsity Queen Marjorie Chapman aided the campaign by selling records of the Varsity Song in a special booth.

But the Drill Hall's focal point throughout the evening remained a frantic, heavily-policed, littered area where team captains handed in bags of returns, officials punched a

Professor States Nuclear Petition Attracting Support Across Canada

By TERRY BOURKE

A University of Toronto professor said last night colleges across Canada are hopping aboard a U of T petition bandwagon calling for a ban on nuclear weapons.

Ken MacNaught of the U of T History Department said in a CBC television interview the petition, drawn up last week by 14 faculty members and one student, has captured wide public support.

The professor said he hoped the leadership provided by the biggest university in the country would be able to spearhead public interest in the petition.

"History shows the Canadian government always follows very carefully the stream of public opinion. We believe if the public becomes sufficiently aroused over this subject the government will be forced to take notice."

Free-lance Broadcaster, Alan Anderson, who interviewed the professor, said something like this was bound to happen because academic leaders have been "long in talking about peace but short in giving concrete leadership."

"Is this a watered-down petition designed to offend few and enchant the many?" Anderson asked.

"It upholds the minimum position possible on banning nuclear weapons which most people can agree to without taking a radical stand," the professor said.

"Do we need a Bertrand Russell to give us dynamic leadership in this field," quipped Anderson.

"This is not relevant," Mr. MacNaught said. "We need all leaders, from both the sciences and humanities to make the petition a success."

"Maybe U of T students think this resembles another Stockholm peace plan."

"Not if they've read it thoroughly," snapped the professor. McGill, Queens, and McMaster Universities are now circulating petitions on their campuses similar to the one at U of T.

Meanwhile the Toronto petition

Why Not Expel Non-Conformists? Asks Bissell as 500 Graduate

By SUSIE BRESLIN

Almost 500 University of Toronto students received graduate and undergraduate degrees in a special fall convocation last night.

The colorful, hour-long ceremony also saw President Claude T. Bissell plead with the new graduates to maintain their connection with the university, and said he would limit himself to speaking that connection.

"If you don't believe by now that manners make the man, that what's worth doing at all is worth doing well, that honesty is the best policy, and that it's love that makes the world go round, I doubt if my saying so at this point will convince you," the president said.

Speaking at the end of a month-long university campaign for funds, Dr. Bissell said "what is really vital is the continuing communication of the university with the general public".

He said university alumni are in a prime position to "pass on something of the ideals and values of the university strengthening thereby the prospects of the country for intellectual leadership."

"The values to which we are dedicated here are sometimes tragically misunderstood. Why don't we expel students who are outspoken non-conformists? Why don't we expel staff members for the same reason? Why don't we censor student publications? Why are we against discrimination that is based on creed or color, regarding it as the negation of all that we stand for, although at the same time we take pride in our high academic standards—in other words in our rigid discrimination in intellectual grounds? Books are written and speeches made to explain these matters, but individual graduates carry more conviction than all of them," he said.

"You, and all our other graduates, are the key people in this communication between the University and the community. You stand after tonight in a life-long relationship with the university," he said.

"An undergraduate may fail or withdraw, a member of the staff may leave for another post, but a Toronto graduate once is a Toronto graduate always," he said.

The convocation ceremony saw degrees and diplomas conferred upon students in almost every faculty and school in the university. Largest proportion of graduates was the Bachelor of Arts group, including students who had written supplemental examination and students in education.

Also receiving degrees were 145 candidates for the Masters' degree and 26 Doctorate candidates.

Newly-installed Chancellor F. C. A. Jeanneret conferred the degrees. About half of those eligible for degrees were present at the convocation.

The Edward Kylie Trust Award

Applications may be made to the Secretary of the Edward Kylie Trust on or before December 31st, 1959, by candidates for the Edward Kylie Trust Award for the year 1960-61. These applications should be made in writing and should give particulars of the qualifications and record of the applicant with a view to the following requirements. The Award will be made to a male student who is a British subject, either a graduate or an under-graduate of Arts, preferably in the course of Modern History at the University of Toronto, to enable him to pursue his studies in Great Britain. The Trustees shall make their award to that candidate who appears from his record at the University to be most likely to occupy a position of leadership and influence in the Community.

The sum available is Eight Hundred and Fifty Dollars ($850.00) for the year 1960-61 and the Trustees may renew the award for a second year if they are satisfied with the first year's record.

The Trustees, upon receiving applications, will arrange for the examination of the candidates and if the Trustees are not satisfied as to the suitability of any of the candidates they will have the right to withhold the award.

bewildering array of adding machines, and a big blackboard was kept filled with an ever-changing mass of chalked-in totals.

Assembly-line coffee booths, muddy floors, a Brinks truck, a public address system playing popular dance tunes, and a floor filled with jiving students completed the Drill Hall's atmosphere last night.

Walter McLean, Students' Administrative Council president, called the blitz "a superb effort" on the part of U of T.

"Congratulations to Miss Leaman and her committee, and to all the students who showed that they really do love Old Toronto", he said.

When final figures are in, prizes for highest returns and highest percentage returns are expected to go to Victoria College and the School of Nursing, officials said.

The blitz provided many anecdotes for its student volunteers.

A greyhound bus loaded with canvassers on the way to their blitz locations found it impossible to make Forest Hill Road. The students were herded out to climb the hill by foot, and a hardier Toronto Transit Commission bus gave the blitz bus a helping push from behind.

One Engineering canvassing group went outside blitz limits to canvass in the Park Plaza's King Cole R Room, and reportedly obtained a pledge for 7,000 pints of beer from a customer. One-half pint was paid in advance.

One canvasser was started to receive a pledge for $1,000 from a Toronto resident. Many reported pledges for $100.

Hunt's catering service reported that 60 gallons of coffee were consumed by canvassers when they returned to the Hall.

An additional, unspecified amount was received from canvassers themselves by the sale of records of the Varsity Song by the Carl Tapscott singers. Columbia Recording Co. has made publishing history by agreeing to turn over all proceeds from sale of the records to the National Fund.

Officials said the only precedent for the student blitz was at University of British Columbia, where students turned in $45,000 in proceeds. Final U of T figures are expected to exceed this amount.

Those Minnesota Beats: Nowhere To Be Found

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 28 — A philosophy student doing graduate work at the University of Minnesota ran into some trouble recently when he tried to find out all about beatniks.

Ken Franz was scheduled to appear at a program put on by the Lutheran Student Association. With him were to be a panel of beatniks.

The beatniks expressed their non-conformity by not showing up for the meeting, so Franz carried on alone.

"Beats," he said, "try to find in each moment excitement, life and creative energy. They try to sharpen their senses to see meaning in everything."

He added that beats differ from animals only in their creativity.

Beats ignore death, by living wholly in the present, he said. As for heaven, he said "I believe they think that heaven is on earth, and earth is hell, so to hell with heaven."

Soviet Professors May Come Here

HAMILTON, Nov. 27 (CUP) — There is a distinct possibility that Soviet scientists may lecture in Canadian universities.

Dr. H. G. Thode, vice-president of McMaster University, said last week an agreement had been signed between Canada and the Soviet Union for an exchange of scientists.

The principal of the McMaster science faculty said the agreement had been produced during a trip to the Soviet Union last month with four other Canadian scientists. Dr. Thode is a nuclear physicist.

The proposed program includes an annual exchange of three highly-qualified scientists for a period of up to three weeks to give lectures, conduct seminars, and acquaint themselves with the scientific establishments of the host country.

As yet, no universities have been named to receive the visitors, but Dr. Thode hopes the plan will take effect immediately.

In addition, the Soviet Academy of Science and the National Research Council, co-

Gremlins?

In last Saturday's edition of the Telegram, it was reported that Dr. McCormbie had held a philosophy lecture in the King Cole Room of the Park Plaza Hotel in honor of Grey Cup day.

The plot was revealed yesterday. Not only was the class a hoax, but Dr. McCormbie is a lecturer in biology, not a philosophy professor.

Whoops!

For those of you who missed your Varsities yesterday (we hope there were a couple of you), here is the news behind the news.

Sunday, on the eve of press time, the press at the North Toronto Herald gave up the ghost.

An expert on printing presses was flown in from Chicago, and by last night everything was rolling again.

So we printed today instead.

Thieves pried the bottom off the safe in the Hart House Dining Hall early yesterday morning and stole an estimated $1,000 in cash.

Police said the robbers broke into the office between midnight and 6 a.m. through a side door.

Van Gets Half Goal

Treasure Van ended its annual visit to the University of Toronto Friday after raising slightly more than half its U of T goal of $6,000.

In the five-day sale of foreign handicrafts $3,300.65 was collected.

Treasure Van officials said last night they were very satisfied with the way things turned out. Although attendance equalled previous figures, officials claimed that proceeds failed to reach the goal because articles were less expensive than usual. Although nine countries were represented in the display there were fewer items for sale than in past years, they added.

Of the amount collected at U of T, $825 will go to the World University Service, sponsor of the Canada-wide sale. The money will be used for material aid to students and universities in underdeveloped countries. The remainder of the proceeds furnishes upkeep and supplies for the Van.

Sports Car Club

Abner's Super Supper

Abner Steinberg may be $14,000 in the hole but he isn't letting that worry him a bit.

Steinberg, the man behind the University of Toronto sports car club, has planned a lavish banquet for the middle of this month.

To be held at Les Cavaliers, a palatial edifice owned by an Italian countess, the banquet has the title of "Grand Spree d'Endurance" in true sports car tradition.

Not that Steinberg and co-convenor Bud Martin are obsessed with fire, but the menu boasts "Shashlik Flamman" and "Omelette Surprise Flambee", both burning brightly.

"This stuff won't be served on spikes, either," said Steinberg. "We'll have real silver swords."

The banquet hall has massive chandeliers which Steinberg described as "crystal."

"That is, they may be glass," he added, "but they look like crystal."

Major Gerald P. Lewis-Wood, well-known in the racing business, will address the gathering.

Following the banquet, there will be dancing and entertainment provided by Alexander Rothschild, an astrologist, or as Steinberg terms it, "a fortune-teller."

"Like where my next fortune will come from," he added.

Steinberg also said he hoped to have an extra added attraction imported from India, but he couldn't say what it would be.

The party is by invitation only, and all members of the U of T sports car club will be automatically invited, so you'd better join fast.

Any non-members wishing to take part in the festivities can speak to Steinberg.

"Their request will be taken into consideration," he said.

For a man who's supposed to be flat broke, such a display of wealth is a bit unusual. But Steinberg doesn't seem to think so.

"I accomplished a small business deal recently," he said, "which put me slightly further on the road to financial solvency."

tion has seen faculty members signing left and right while the number of student signatures has hit a slump.

So far over one-half U of T's 1,000 professors have put their names on the petition which urges Canada to press in world councils for an immediate and permanent end to the testing and production of atomic weapons.

One of the faculty members in charge of the petition, Hart House Chaplain James Cunningham, last night said: "Perhaps many of the students were not signing because they either had not read the petition or did not fully understand what it is aiming at."

Mr. Cunningham pointed out the petition was not advocating a "pacifist stand."

"Some students seem to think the petition wants them to put their name on a document which is calling for the west to throw down its arms and open the door to the Russian."

"And anyone who thinks this is completely uninformed," he added.

He made it clear that the purpose of the petition is to "stop the testing of A-bombs and H-bombs on both sides, to end the production of the weapons, and to halt the spread of them to countries who do not already possess them now."

The chaplain said there has been too much talk about disarmament and pacifism. "I am not a pacifist, the people who are sponsoring the petition are not pacifists, and lastly it is not a disarmament petition," he said.

Mr. Cunningham said he believed ultimately nuclear disarmament would come. "This can only be accomplished by encouraging the establishment of a necessary system of international inspection and building sincere desire for the agreement on both sides", he said.

He blamed a meeting sponsoring the petition last Wednesday for misleading many students.

At that time a small riot took place when one of the members in the audience accused the participants at the meeting of being a group of pacifists.

Mr. Cunningham said it was "unfortunate the whole thing had to happen, but it probably was the fault of the people behind the petition for labelling the meeting a 'disarmament conference'."

The planned time period for circulating the petition reaches the half-way mark tomorrow. When it is finally drawn up next week, a committee of six will be elected to take the document to Ottawa.

A copy of the petition has been posted in every college and faculty building. During the last week faculty representatives have been around campus getting signatures.

"We hope that with most of the university behind the petition it will offer an incentive to statesmen across the world to push even harder for international progress toward peace", Mr. Cunningham said.

Bogden Kipling, lone student on the committee which launched the petition, said the strongest endorsement of it has come from the medical and law societies.

Earlier Kipling said the university community has a responsibility to the community at large to speak on this grave problem.

He expressed the hope that the whole student body would associate itself with the committee.

Busy Old Debaters

In the debates over last weekend the University of Toronto Debating Union squared off with three colleges and decided that the opposite sex should not be abolished and that Charlie Brown should be the next Canadian Governor-General.

In a third debate, the team came to a tie verdict over the question of whether a woman without a profession is a parasite on society.

The two defeats were chalked up over Queen's University and the Royal Military College. The UTDU tied with Sir George Williams College.

The members of the teams were David Higgins (II SPS), Dick Jones (I SPS), Walter Fox (II UC), and Stig-Ove Hansen (I UC).

It is expected that all three colleges which faced U of T will come to Toronto to debate early next year.

why johnny can't read

The other day we paid our yearly visit to the U of T library.

Appropriately enough we were looking for a book. We knew approximately what it was. Hating to depend on assigned reading lists we like to explore until we find just the book to suit us. This used to be simply a matter of browsing around the Wallace Room, perhaps going through an entire section book by book until we found the right one.

These days, however, exploring in the library is like foraging for game in the Barren Lands.

For one thing, when you don't know exactly what you want the catalogues, old and new, are not very helpful. You have to go right to the books. And the only way you can get to them is in the stacks.

After about an hour in the stacks we had decided that all the juicier items had been removed to the Wallace Room, we suppose so that they would be more accessible to all.

So up to the Wallace Room we went. And that's about as far as we got.

With the Wallace Room under lock and key the only way to go through a section, feeling around for a book would be to fill out a separate card (in duplicate) for every book in the section, thumb through it and hand it back. But even this is impossible since Wallace Room books are filed according to author and title. Theoretically, then, barring those titles which are obviously not appropriate, the only way to survey the books on certain subjects is to fill out cards for almost all the books in the room.

As an example, in the old days, we often went into the Wallace Room knowing the kind of book we wanted, and would browse through the philosophy, history, political science, economics, Greek literature and other sections before we found it. It was an education in itself.

We can't do it any more though. It's too frustrating both for us and the library staff.

What this means is that the new rules have made our use of the library almost totally dependent on standardized assigned reading lists, while our professors rightfully tell us to browse around until we find something that suits us.

The rules may have been thought necessary by a harried administrative staff. But in the short period they have been in operation, they have removed the element of individual initiative from library-going, have cramped our modest efforts at independent research, and have destroyed the library as an aid to liberal education.

Thank God for the bookstore. These days we do most of our reading there.

fill out a card . . .

and wait . . .

When students returned to school in September they found changes in the library system. The most noticeable was the closed shelf system in the Wallace Room.

"It is inadequate," they said, "It is frustrating", and "It is plain lousy."

These words express the opinions of the students on their beloved social center.

The books in the Wallace Room have been put behind a wooden enclosure. Mr. Blackburn, chief librarian, says that this measure was resorted to not only because of a large number of books that were stolen but because students hid books in the shelves and at times forgot where they put them. Thus books were lost for months on end. Added to these factors was the monopolizing of books by the students. The chief librarian said "If used as intended the open shelf is the ideal system."

Many students feel that they should not be punished for the stupid acts of a few. They also state that the librarians themselves were partially responsible for the books being stolen. Many students claim that their briefcases were carelessly checked out or at times were not even required to open them.

With the new system, students have to apply for books. In doing so they complain of long waits and being given the wrong books. Library officials say this is due to some inexperience on the part of assistants and that by January they will have become fully efficient.

Students claim that they have to apply for books whose contents are unknown to them. Many times they have to return the book because it does not contain what they need. "It is confusing," said one freshman, "I don't know what is in a book when I apply for it and when I get it, the book does not contain what I wanted."

Paul Watson, II Art and Arch., described the Wallace Room as "my daily exercise in futility." Mickey Lester, III Arts claims "It is methodical and orderly."

There are others who back up Lester because they claim that they are able to get a book easier than last year and that the books are in greater circulation and not monopolized by one student for the whole day. This is the view of Mr. Blackburn when he said "The closed shelves will actually make material more readily available than it has been in the past."

"The strongest reason", one student said, "for the return of the open shelves is the fact that the students are not able to browse." This was not only helpful in finding books which would have consumed valuable time in hunting in the catalogue but also many students picked up books which were not related to their studies. This method of browsing undoubtedly added to the education of the student.

Many suggestions have been put forward in an effort to return to the open shelves. Many have called for a closer checking of briefcases. "I wouldn't mind walking through an X-Ray machine" was the reply of one student to the question of whether he would mind a thorough check.

Sheldon Greenberg, II Modern History, suggested a wide coloured band be put on the outside of each book. Each subject would have a different colour. In this way students would find it difficult to hide books on the shelves since a misplaced book could be readily seen by the librarians.

Jerry Caplan has suggested that the enclosure remain but that students be allowed inside to browse. Before entering they would have to hang up all coats, purses and other objects that might conceal a book.

Various members of the teaching staff have suggested that any student caught stealing a book be expelled from the university and students found to be hiding books be penalized.

Dr. I. Lambi, of the Department of History, said that "the closed system is not beneficial. I wonder whether or not an arrangement could be made for first and second year students to get into the shelves."

Complaints are also being put forward about the lack of books in the main library. Many students find it difficult to write because one or two copies of a book are often out. They shudder to think of the pen when exam time comes.

Martin Yaffe, a first-year student, hesitates before I apply for the main library because of the time and because I don't know what I applied for. He has to wait for enough books for the course.

Dr. Lambi stated that "the lack of books in Russian is a problem." He has to wait for the writing of his students because he has to obtain the required books.

Mr. Blackburn admits that the library was perhaps a serious problem. He has planned for the expansion of the library now desperately in need of books on the supply of books.

The library has a world looking for a print. They also have a world looking for a print. They also have a world looking for a print.

The library is ordered as it possibly can be. As an estimate that there are books placed on the shelves every day.

Mike Sherman, IV, says that there are enough books in the city to get books in the main library. He says that arts colleges allow colleges to take books.

In addition to the reading room and the room (one student history library he him to walk) the branches of the Toronto Royal Ontario the Canadian Institute Affairs library to the result of bad John Booker, "students take ### tyranny

Dear Sir,

The Committee for Nuclear Disarmament considers as their purpose to prevent the nuclear war, thus insuring our survival and the survival of our civilization. These are very humanitarian goals.

But the naïveté of this Committee in sponsoring such a petition is surprising. This "first step" is a very great mistake and the members of the committee either do not see or perhaps even do not want to see that this is the most reliable way for not reaching these goals.

The public opinion's pressure acts only on the democratic governments of the West, who are concerned about reelection, while such pressure is not imaginable in the Soviet Union, where the dictatorship decides what the public is supposed to think and do. In consequence this petition will only press the Western governments to bow to the conditions of the Soviet Union, who immediately will use this situation for their own proposed goal — the tyranny of communism in the world. Then the only possibility in avoiding the war will be unconditional surrender.

We should never forget that thousands of people did not survive the confinement in the concentration camps of Vorkuta, Karaganda, Kolima and many others. But it seems that here we are only concerned by these conditions.

A. Zundaks, H. U.

an explanation

Dear Sir,

The petition to the Government of Canada which has recently been circulated among staff and students of this university expresses a timely and admirable concern about the danger of nuclear war. It is because we share this concern, and recognize the essential right-minded of the committee which drafted the petition, that we have signed it. But we have done so with serious misgivings which must have been shared by others who signed, as well as many who refused. We have misgivings because, while the petition spells out what it does propose, it fails to spell out what it does not propose, and is in consequence dangerously vague in its implications.

The petition calls for (1) steps to prevent the spread of nuclear arms to countries which do not now have them, (2) an immediate and permanent end to the testing and production of such weapons. It does not call for (3) the scrapping of already existing nuclear arms. We take this to be a deliberate omission. We take the petition to argue that already existing nuclear armaments provide whatever deterrent to aggression is needed, and that therefore proposals (1) and (2) could safely be put into effect; and that these proposals not only would halt the well-known dangers of nuclear contamination but also might create the kind of settled relation among the great powers which has a chance of initiating a lasting peace. If thus spelled out, we find the proposals of the petition if not wholly safe — none can be — at least reasonably so. They are proposals with which we agree.

But the petition does not spell out that the scrapping of nuclear arms is not now proposed. Nor does it make it clear that the reason for not proposing this is the continued need for a deterrent against aggression. Indeed, there is room for doubt as to whether its authors are convinced of this need. They speak, for example, of the "proved tendency" of "armaments races" to "provoke rather than prevent conflict." If "armaments races" are meant to include attempts to maintain a sufficient level of armaments to provide a deterrent against aggression, then a counter-instance to this generalization is found in the outbreak of the Second World War, one of the causes of which was, in our view, the disarmament of Great Britain and France. The petition would appear to reflect an insufficient awareness of the fact that a reduction of armaments, if leading to unbalance, may actually increase rather than decrease the danger of war.

Expressing the hope that its proposals might constitute a "first step toward disarmament", the petition at least gives the impression that the next step should be total nuclear disarmament (the title of the drafting committee was, after all, 'Committee for Nuclear Disarmament'). In our view, the most likely effect of such a step, under present military conditions, would be to create such an unbalance of conventional armed strength as positively to encourage the outbreak of hostilities — if not on a world-wide scale, then piecemeal in accordance with a world strategy. Only nuclear disarmament as part of a disarmament program including both nuclear and conventional weapons would be less than suicidal for the West. Possibly our view is shared by the authors of the petition. But one wishes they had spelled it out.

The petition also expresses confidence that "the problems involved in the establishment of the necessary system of international inspection can be solved if there is a sincere desire for agreement." What this statement says is quite acceptable and indeed innocuous, if somewhat empty. But what it seems to suggest is that the authors are confident that there is a sincere desire for agreement; and this appears to us, in spite of the recent apparent "thaw" in the cold war, still a very questionable assumption. We should therefore interpret the petition as advocating even its limited aims, not on the basis of a mere belief that there is sincere desire for agreement, but conditional upon the establishment of a satisfactory system of inspection. And we should most emphatically repudiate any suggestion that someone might derive from the petition that unilateral nuclear disarmament by the West, in any form, is being asked for.

The acceptability of the petition, in our view, thus depends on the following interpretations: (1) that it directly asks for nothing beyond the stopping of testing and production of nuclear weapons, and steps to prevent the spread of such weapons to countries which do not now have them; (2) that it calls even for these steps only provided they can be achieved (a) bilaterally, (b) with an adequate system of inspection; (3) that any more radical steps toward nuclear disarmament to which it looks forward are to be pressed for only in conjunction with, if not total disarmament, at least a reduction of conventional arms so as to ensure parity of armed strength taken as a whole. To accept nuclear disarmament without these safeguards would be to abandon a defence policy altogether.

We are not unmindful of the view, held by many, that if defence involves even the slightest risk of nuclear war, it cannot be morally justified at all. We are, moreover, sure that many who sign the petition will do so because they have reached such pacifist conclusions. In a matter so excruciatingly difficult to decide, we cannot but respect their position. We cannot, however, at the present time share it. And we have signed the petition on the assumption that our above interpretation of it (which does not entail the pacifist conclusions) is compatible with what it actually says.

Gill's Unexpected Shaw Delight

The program note in Robert Gill's production of "The Simpleton of the Unexpected Isles" is an excerpt from Shaw's preface to the play, where he quotes the New York critics as saying he was "a dignified old monkey throwing coco-nuts at the public." Shaw objects to this treatment on the grounds that a play is not a coco-nut nor is he a monkey, but after seeing last night's performance at Hart House Theatre one respects the New York critics.

The play is set in the fool's paradise of a tropical island, and to point the situation, Shaw has provided a fool, Jddy, (short for Idiot) is an impotent, weak-headed curate of the Anglican church, ably played by Rodney Archer and he wanders happily through most of the production loving everyone with such an appalling sexlessness that he repels the island's highly polygamous society. The play's ideas start off with references to genetics and the virtues of a well bred (in the genetic sense) master race. This theme is pretty well exhausted by the end of the second act, so to keep things moving we have England's secession from the empire and finally a real live judgment day, complete with angel.

This last gives rise to a piece of dialogue:

ANGEL: This is the Judgment Day!

SIR CHARLES: Well I'll be damned!

ANGEL: Quite possibly.

Until the last scene of the play, the jokes seemed to be a good deal more important than anything else. It was played for the laughs, and everyone enjoyed them. Shaw got rather carried away with the implication of judgment day in the play's final scene, and it would probably have been better if he hadn't.

The production is generally a good one. Very little acting is required—the players speak lines distinctly and not much more, at least in the body of the play. This style of acting was the one recommended by the author, and it worked here. There is a three scene prologue before the real action starts, played in a completely different style. Robert Graham, as a tearful Immigration Officer, gives a fine performance and Malcolm Shiner, as a junior official with empire-building aspirations has a good monologue before disappearing for the rest of the evening.

Robert Gill's direction has probably done more for the play than any amount of acting could. Pace is maintained until the final scene, blocking is often highly imaginative. Dawn Egan, as one of the promiscuous offspring of the multiple parent family puts real life into her best line, "I am the veil of the temple—Rend me!" The settings by Martha Mann are suitably bright, and Joan Westlake's eastern costumes are magnificent.

Taken as a whole, the Hart House production is a pleasant evening at the theatre. Shaw's message is obscure enough to keep one from worrying about it. It is really a number of messages, many of them obscured by the twenty-five odd years since the play was written. Shaw is quite a good enough playwright to entertain without a message, and that seems to be what he is doing here. The world may well be an "island of miracles and wonders", but the most pleasant thing to do about it seems to be laugh.

Karl Jaffary.

From The Half-World

In the city that is filled with theatres that are playing movies that run from EEP to great, avoid the house that is showing "The Man Who Understood Women." It is, I'm afraid, pretty bad.

It is therefore a pleasure to relate that by riding a few extra blocks in the nice clean subway you can sit down in the Imperial Theatre and see a picture that is often pure Cinema. That picture is "Career".

It avoids, thank God, the cloying myth that if you are pure, have talent and know people the theatre will welcome you for your own sweet self-like "Stagestruck" for example. It is a stark and brutal story of a man's climb to success.

The young man from Lansing, Mich. (played to perfection by Anthony Franciosa) is a good actor, maybe even a great one but he has a tough time of it. He is hampered by a wife that wants to eat when she is hungry and also because no matter how hard he tries he can't really be a heel. When he does, after fourteen years, reach the top, he has starved, lost his wife, spent three years fighting in Korea—he is also a veteran—lost out on a TV career because of alleged Red fun and games. He has even married a drunken tramp to further his aims. But when the applause (for him) rocks the theatre on the night following his opening, you get the feeling that the whole hard fourteen years has been worth it to him.

cbc beethoven by Kurtz

After threatening to close its doors for its orchestral broadcasts, the CBC has ingratiated itself by featuring all nine Beethoven symphonies in a series of six Friday night concerts conducted by Eftem Kurtz.

Last Friday's broadcast performances of the second and sixth symphonies were the first serious disappointment of the series. Mr. Kurtz has long enjoyed a sterling reputation as an interpreter of romantic ballet music and the more popular tone poems. His conducting style is best suited to works which have a very clear orchestral development; he would, for instance, be just the man for another recording of Schubert's Great C major symphony, for the success of this work lies in the conductor's perspicacity in emphasizing the little bits of orchestral detail which form the basis for future course of the symphony. In his early symphonies, however, Beethoven has no comprehensive system of seminal development. Mr. Kurtz's deliberation on the trivial of the second symphony cannot, then, be termed novel interpretation, but simple misreading.

His protracted view of this work did not help our attempts to discredit an early diatribe on the second symphony which was quoted in the program: "Beethoven's second symphony is a gross monster, a hideously writhing wounded dragon that refuses to die, and though bleeding in the finale, still furiously beats about with tail erect." This infamous finale served well to demonstrate the shortcomings of several sections of the orchestra, the ragged fury of the basses, especially.

But to really appreciate this group of musical sharp shooters, all trying to cover up their lack of rehearsal we had to wait for target practice on Beethoven's Pastoral symphony. This performance cannot be appraised on the suitability of the conductor's style, or whether the interpretation was appropriately sylvan. We couldn't get past the tense first level of hearing, of wondering whether this piccolo would come out with a clean top note in the third movement, or whether that horn would be able to survive Mr. Kurtz's frantic tempo in the storm section — and neither did.

The conductor's dragging tempo in the second movement, depicting a rather stagnant brook, once again justified the unfavorable comment quoted about this symphony in the program: "... much too long ... the andante might be subjected to abridgement without any violation of justice, either to the composer or his hearers." It is surprising that Mr. Kurtz, an acknowledged sacrificer of orchestral drama to winning, usually fast tempi, did not have a stronger idea of how to make this movement more sprightly and appealing.

The CRC has had the presumption to round up unfavourable comments about each of the symphonies and has thereby promised more than a routine performance of each. The conductor it has booked for the series can certainly be expected to fulfill this promise, but we seriously doubt he can do so with the rather small orchestra (less than seventy players). The first concert of the eighth and third symphonies was most satisfying and gave rise to interesting reflections on the novel program notes. Only in days when romantic music is falling into disfavor would such comments be resurrected, presumably to let us draw our own conclusions. Let's hope that we won't have occasion to use these double-edged remarks after the future concerts.

bertholt brecht's Chalk Circle By New Play Society

Brecht produced by the Berlin Ensemble under Brecht's direction may be excellent theatre. Brecht produced by the Berlin Ensemble without Brecht's direction may be very good theatre. But Brecht produced without the Berlin Ensemble or Brecht is mediocre. This was my feeling after the first part of "The Caucasian Chalk Circle" directed by George McCowan at the New Play Society. After the second act I felt I had been treated to the most entertaining and intellectually scintillating evening of this fall's theatrical season.

A vague story line connects the meandering path of the play. It wanders through palace revolutions, burning cities, and the mountains and valleys of the countryside. Grusha, the kitchen maid who fled with the abandoned royal child is the connecting link through a series of otherwise unconnected incidents. Her flight carries her from a farcical marriage to a dying peasant who rises from his death bed when he discovers the army is no longer interested in drafting him, to an even more farcical court scene in which she fights the governor's wife for custody of the child. Adzacc, the combination commentator and judge, draws a chalk circle. The child is placed in the circle, and both women are told to pull, the winner gaining the custody of the child. Grusha, unwillingly to tear the child in two, lets the governor's wife win. In true King Solomon fashion, Adzacc gives the child to Grusha. The moral of the story? Adzacc tells us directly.

Justice is to give to those who deserve it.

To produce this combination of high quality entertainment and intellectual satire in the midst of a wandering and often lost story and still retain the dramatic unity and effect necessitates the use of many devices. These same techniques used by Tennessee Williams in "The Glass Menagerie" have a totally different purpose in Brecht. Williams heightens the emotion and our involvement in it. Brecht alienates us emotionally in order to concentrate in exciting us intellectually. With a combination of earthy humour and subtle wit, farce and satire, Brecht campaigns against war, religion, fascism, hypocrisy, corruption, unscrupulous lawyers and doctors, and so many other things most of which I wasn't sharp enough to grasp.

Using a beautifully simple rotating circular platform with a mounted door frame, everything from a court to a scaffold, a house to a palace is skillfully and clearly conveyed. Lighting, artistically used, projects a red burning city and a cold blue glacier on the plain back drop. Again, as in Williams, lighting isolates characters on the stage and concentrates our attention on them. In the New Play Society production of Brecht both the lighting and music in the form of drums is most skillfully used for emphasis and dramatic effect.

Ted Follows portrays the story teller who becomes Adzacc, the judge and central figure in the second part. He brings the play out to the audience, highlighting certain points, giving us the stream of consciousness of different characters, and makes sure that we are well aware that the play is a play and not real life. Ted Follows does an extremely proficient and entertaining job in conveying the rascal who has been made judge simply because all judges are rascals. In playing the story teller in the first part, an exaggeration of gesture and speech might have heightened the effect.

Judith Teague skillfully portrayed the delightfully sympathetic Grusha. But, here again, an exaggeration of her purity and goodness would have better conveyed Brecht's desired intention of preventing any emotional involvement of the audience. Similarly, in the score of other parts, an exaggerated use of gesture and speech might have the first act as entertaining and intellectually stimulating as the second.

The New Play Society is to be congratulated for making available to Toronto audiences a fresh and thoroughly professional Brechtian social satire.

the picture. One of his best scenes—He has followed francois into the slum-street they both live on. Finding that Francois lives alone, Martin sees a chance to promote a free room. The scene moves like this:

MARTIN: Well, what if it is a cold-water flat we—well I guess the bimbos are running in and out all the time.

FRAN: What do you—oh you mean girls?

MARTIN: Yeah, girls, dames, broa—say you DO go with girls don't you?

FRAN: No. Martin stares at him, he is revolted, it can't be. He NEEDS that room, so he tries again: "You like girls don't you?"

FRAN: Of course I do, but I'm engaged.

MARTIN: Well, buddy, what times we'll have.

Shirley MacLaine gives a repeat performance (Some Came Running) as the rich tramp who has an obsessed love for Martin, who while running to a director's chair in Hollywood pauses only to give her a baby.

Carolyn Jones comes up with a goodie of a job as the agent who has a mother she dislikes, a cat she hates and an actor she loves. Miss Jones is a fine actress who, like Martin gets better as time and pictures go by.

An actress by the name of Jean Blackwell plays Francois's hungry wife and plays her well. Robert Middleton is MacLaine's father, a tough but fair-minded producer.

To sum it up, "Career" is an almost great movie. It is far from pretty but it is, take it from one who has ridden that trail, a realistic trip into that half world of theatre that only a few can really visit.

Blues Whip Laval 7-3 In First League Game

By GENE GLISKY

Laval Rouge et Or may have been meeting many new faces on the ice last Friday, but the drubbing they absorbed was much in the same style as last season, as Varsity Blues thumped Laval 7-3 in the Intercollegiate Senior hockey season opener at Varsity Arena.

Hat trick performances by veteran captain John Macdonald and rookie center John Gatten sparked the Blues' offence, although it was a solid team effort that provided the victory.

Blues buckled down to the serious business of scoring goals, early in the first period. Gatten fired his first on an assist from Jim Murchie at 3:51 of the frame. A minute later these same two worthies combined on an identical play for another goal.

Macdonald closed out scoring for the period with two goals less than a minute apart on assists by George Hicken.

Laval's Leo Bourgault scored the first of his two goals at 16:59 of the period. Michel Lagace assisted on the play.

Gatten scored his third goal midway through the second period, again assisted by Murchie. Hicken scored from Gord Epp for the final Blues tally in the period, while Lagace countered for Laval with an unassisted effort.

Scoring was limited to the first minute of play in the final period. Macdonald for Blues and Bourgault Laval scored unassisted.

With the goal scoring neatly packaged away for the night, the boys proceeded to rough things up a little. Play resumed the I love Laval form of years past. At 1:05 of the period Andre Young of Laval and captain Macdonald entered in to a brief discussion that left the Red and Gold stockinged defenseman on the long end of a bloody nose, a five minute fighting penalty and a game misconduct. Macdonald suffered a muffled tendon, a rattled creck cut, and a roughing penalty.

Eight penalties in the third period were rationed out by referee God Fevreau, five to Varsity, three to Laval.

Both Jim Murchie and Harry Neale endeared themselves to the rather sparse band of fans with their colorful, hard hitting play. Neale earned a standing ovation for his breath-taking rushing, and give it all you've got spirit.

After watching the performance of the rookies in this game, even the most pessimistic of us can't help but pick Blues as Queen's Cup champions for the sixth consecutive year.

A few defensive lapses, and careless play in their own end may cost Blues a few goals, but we feel a few more games will iron out these difficulties.

Goalie Don Keenan handled himself with the aplomb of a veteran. He handled 37 shots, showing himself both spry and alert.

Michigan Win 4-1 Outhustle Blues In Exhibition

University of Michigan outhustled and outplayed the Varsity Blues by a 5-1 score last night in an exhibition game at the Arena. Scoring in every period a superior Michigan squad took control of the game from the start and backed by the fine goal-tending of Jim Coyle, gained a convincing victory.

Pat Cushing opened the scoring for the Wolverines in the first period when he tipped in a pass from Bob White. Varsity's John Gatten was in the penalty box at the time.

Michigan blew the game wide open with two goals in the first minute of the second period. Gary Mattson scored at the 38 second mark and Steve Bochen upped the count to three 42 seconds later.

Jim Murchie got one back for Blues when he hammered home Gatten's pass near the middle of the period, but Edward Mateka restored Michigan's three goal lead on a breakaway. Bob Giroux, back in the nets after suffering a fractured cheekbone earlier in the season, got a piece of the puck but couldn't hold it.

Joe Lunghamer (honest that's how he spells it) scored the final Michigan goal late in the third period.

Varsity were badly outplayed most of the way; Giroux's return was disastrous but he was not at fault. Most of the Michigan goals were of the tip-in variety. They look soft but in reality are not.

Notes... Shots on goal were 32-30 for Varsity. Bill Griffin flattened Cushing in the third period with the hardest check of the year. Harry Neale and Cushing carried on a crowd pleasing vendetta most of the night.

Clarify Petition Purpose

A University of Toronto nuclear disarmament committee last night appealed to U of T students for support of a petition protesting nuclear testing.

Committee spokesman Bogden Kipling (SGS) said although support of the petition among U of T faculty members has been "absolutely tremendous", enlistment of support among students has lagged.

Kipling attributed an apparent lack of enthusiasm over the petition to misunderstanding of the petition's meaning and to difficulties in circulating the petition to all students.

About 500 student signatures have been turned in so far, Kipling said. Most petitions are still circulating.

"There has been some apprehension that the petition advocates unilateral disarmament. At no time did the committee consider advocating such action", he said.

"A great number of students have not yet had the opportunity to see the petition, simply because the committee has found it difficult to organize a body of canvassers so close to exams," he said.

"I hope that the reprinting of the petition in The Varsity will enable a large number of students to sign it in this way", he said.

The petition form printed elsewhere on this page may be submitted to faculty offices or the Hart House hall porter's desk.

Over 600 petition forms have been returned by faculty members so far, Kipling said.

Largest faculty response appears to have come from the Faculty of Medicine, but "I don't know of a single faculty or school from which signatures have not been received", he said.

Support for the petition outside U of T has also been overwhelming, Kipling said.

"There are numerous groups which have approached the committee already in order to explore the possibilities of at least city-wide concentrated action. These approaches have come from among the city's most respectable elements," he said.

The petition, originally sponsored by 44 outstanding members of the faculty, has since been picked up by universities across Canada, and by many civic groups throughout Ontario.

LIGHT note is struck in a discussion of nuclear disarmament. Varsity Associate News Editor Terry Bourke lends a helping hand to petitioner Bogden Kipling, while Peter Dembski watches the match.

Approve Petition

At a fiery session last night in Brennan Hall, St. Michaels College's Student Administrative Council decided 9-5 to buttress a University of Toronto petition calling for a ban on nuclear weapons.

Council vice-president Peter Dembski, who introduced the petition motion, said he felt the council has an obligation to act as a "guide and barometer to student opinion on the issue."

He said it was "becoming" university students should take the initiative to boost the moral of statesmen across the world who are attempting to reach an agreement on nuclear disarmament.

Meanwhile council president Jorden Sullivan declared war on the petition, saying it was not only impractical but also proposed a big "if" on whether or not "East-West" mutual inspection teams could be properly enforced.

Sullivan said the whole idea of the petition was "magnificent propaganda" for advancing world Communism.

"The West has been approaching Russia on the banning of A-bomb weapons for years. The Reds in turn have been crying control for years."

But when it comes down to hard facts around the conference table on disarmament issues, the Commies are always first to back out," Sullivan said.

"The petition reminds me of a little boy trying to fight a big battle with tiny sticks," he added.

Council moderator, Father Poupore, an SMC theology professor was asked what he thought about the petition.

He said he wanted to know if there were any connection between the pacifist editorial that appeared recently in The Varsity and the petition itself.

He said he thought there are certain values worth dying for.

The petition, first announced last week, was sponsored by 44 U of T faculty members, among them SMC President Rev. J. S. Kelly, and Superior Rev. John Madden.

So far no SMC students have signed the petition hanging in Carr Hall.

"It will be interesting to note the number of students who sign the petition after the council meeting tonight," Sullivan said.

Despite the fact the petition has been hanging in the college for two days, Dembski blamed lack of signatures on the fact "students either don't know where the petition is, or they don't know what it's about."

PETITION TO THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

We, the undersigned students of the University of Toronto, consider it our duty to emphasize the continuing and increasing danger of nuclear war. Such war would cause inestimable suffering, and destroy the present basis of civilization. The major powers are now involved in an armaments race, despite the proved tendency of such competitions to provoke, rather than to prevent conflict. To maintain a balance of power, East and West threaten each other with instant retaliation, risking the fearful danger of accidental war. These dangers are increased, and new opportunities for disastrous action are created, by the endeavour of other powers to obtain nuclear weapons.

We hereby urge the Government of Canada to press, in the councils of the world, for an immediate and permanent end to the testing and production of nuclear weapons, and for measures to prevent the spread of such weapons to countries that do not have them. We are confident that the problems involved in the establishment of the necessary system of international inspection can be solved if there is a sincere desire for agreement.

We believe that the achievement of even these limited goals will put a check to the increasing danger of world war, and will at the same time constitute a first step towards disarmament, in which lies our only hope of survival in a nuclear age.

Signed .....

the committee clarifies . . .

The Committee for Nuclear Disarmament would like to clear up certain misunderstandings which have arisen about the so-called "disarmament" petition.

Let it be stated categorically that the Committee is not advocating unilateral disarmament, conventional or nuclear. Nor is the Committee advocating bilateral nuclear disarmament without measures of conventional disarmament. Such measures would upset the balance of military power between the United States and the Soviet Union which the Committee recognizes to be at present a prerequisite to successful negotiations between them. The importance of this balance is illustrated by the refusal of the Soviet Government to negotiate realistically about disarmament during the period when they were clearly inferior to the West in the development of nuclear weapons. The Committee wishes to emphasize that the achievement of the immediate goals stated in the petition—cessation of testing, cessation of production, and measures to stop the spread of nuclear weapons—would not upset the present military balance.

The interpretation of the sentence "... the problems involved in the establishment of the necessary system of international inspection can be solved if there is a sincere desire for agreement" is apparently unclear. The Committee considers international inspection obviously necessary and, in principle practicable, so that it can be instituted if both sides sincerely wish it.

Lastly, Misgivings have been expressed about the name: "Committee for Nuclear Disarmament." The Committee has stressed the word "nuclear" because it is the existence of nuclear weapons which makes war the greatest disaster facing us. But the only sure way to prevent nuclear war is to prevent any major war, and for this general disarmament is necessary.

The petition has been reprinted elsewhere in this newspaper, and it is hoped that students will sign it and leave it at their faculty office, or at the hall porter's desk at Hart House. The Committee is adopting this method of circulation because of the impossibility of enlisting sufficient canvassers so near to examinations.

For the Committee for Nuclear Disarmament:

85% Of City Supports Government Student Aid

Armed with an interesting batch of newly-compiled statistics, the University of Toronto sprang back into the student aid fray yesterday.

Based on a city-wide survey, the statistics show 85 per cent of persons polled felt first-class honor students should receive higher education paid for by public funds, regardless of the personal finances of the students.

The survey also shows 81 per cent of the U of T alumni favored the plan.

The U of T fight for free education for the intelligentsia began last year with the now-famous Bissell Plan which proposed a free university education for any Ontario student with a first-class standing on their fifth form examinations.

The plan also suggested sweeping changes in the academic year.

It did not recommend any help for students with standings less than second class.

In the December issue of the Varsity Graduate, Fergus Cronin says "the great debate for financial help for bright students who could not afford to go to university has been revived by a public opinion survey conducted in Metropolitan Toronto."

Only 33 per cent of the public and 15 per cent of alumni felt all students should be given financial help to attend university.

He said at the last moment room was found on the ballot for a few questions unrelated to the expansion program, and that the questions on student aid were tacked on.

Hart House Debate to Argue China's Threat

A man who was an eye witness to destruction caused by the Chinese Civil War will be honorary speaker at tomorrow's Hart House debate.

Topic of the debate is: "China is the Real Threat to the West".

Toronto lawyer E. B. Jolliffe will base his address on impressions gained during a 1958 tour of China. He covered some 4,500 miles within the Chinese borders, met Premier Chou-en-lai and was entertained by the Chinese Law Association.

Mr. Jolliffe spent the first seventeen years of his life in China, and before coming to Victoria College in the 1920's, he studied at West Union Chinese University.

Mr. Jolliffe, former Ontario CCF leader, is in the unique position of knowing China "before and after", making him a first rate authority on China today.

S. Fromovitz (IV SPS) and J. Parnes (IV UC) will speak for the ayes. Noes will be represented by A. Barry (SGS) and R. Tan (II SMCC).

Bissell On Board

University of Toronto President Claude T. Bissell was among three Toronto men elected to the Stratford Festival Board of Governors Monday.

Other two Toronto representatives are: A. Bruce Matthews, businessman, and George G. R. Harris, Crest Theatre chairman.

Two other new governors were also elected. They are: Lionel Massey, son of former Governor General Vincent Massey and former secretary to his father, and W. H. Hemphill, Stratford businessman.

The new board will meet Saturday in Stratford to elect officers.

Queen's Fascists Hope for Victory

KINGSTON, Nov. 30, (CUP)—Queen's University has a new party with an old name contending for election to their model parliament—the Fascist party.

Gary Moffatt announced last week he will lead the "Canadian Christian Fascist" party to victory next term. "All this campaigning will be a bit of a bore," he sighed, "but once we're elected we'll see we never have to go through it again."

"It is one of society's paradoxes," he added, "that to suppress democracy, one must get elected by democratic means."

The party, he said, intends to repudiate by logical and coherent arguments, the doctrine of democracy, and to forward its program of a dictatorship based on Christian principles. Prominent among these principles will be brotherly love and the Golden Rule.

"Only love can transcend the party frictions and disputes which threaten our complex society," he said.

The party, he went on, would enforce laws that would prevent the strong from exploiting the weak. It believes that few people take enough interest to vote intelligently. Hence it is in the people's best interest to be deprived of the right to vote.

The stigma attached to the word "fascism", he said, is based entirely on the records of Mussolini and Hitler, who based their dictatorships on hatred.

"Ours is based on love," he said.

Vindicate Grade 13 Exams

University students who took two years to pass Ontario Grade 13 examinations are twice as likely to flunk out of college as their fellows who matriculated in one year.

This is one of the conclusions in a report on the Atkinson Study of Utilization of Student Resources, being conducted by Drs. R. W. B. Jackson and W. G. Fleming at the Ontario College of Education.

The report, working with the histories of 9,573 Grade 13 students, bristles with facts, figures, predications and aims at finding the factors governing the fate of the average Ontario student at university.

Some other predictions revealed by the study:

—Students who hit university young stand the best chance of graduating;

—College entrance examinations based on ability tests as used in the United States aren't accurate gauges of how a student is going to fare at university but Ontario Grade 13 exams are good indicators of this;

—First year university failures can generally be detected in Grade nine;

—Teacher estimates of student abilities at the Grade 13 level are usually accurate and should be taken with matriculation marks as conditions for university entrance.

The study reveals a general vindication of Ontario's Grade 13 exams, Dr. Fleming says in the report. The better students do in Grade 13, the better they are likely to do in the first year of university, the report says.

This vindication of the Grade 13 examinations contradicted a general feeling that high-first year failures indicated the present Grade 13 exam system should be replaced with the kind of ability tests used in the United States.

Six ability tests the study gave Grade 13 students didn't predict university performance as well as the matriculation figures. The ability tests measured things like reading speed, mathematical ability and the ability of the subject to handle abstract concepts.

Dr. Fleming said that on some of the ability tests the higher a student scored, the less likely they were to do well at university.

It is "rather alarming that academic aptitude has little to do with success" at some universities, as measured by the test, he said.

This could be the result of either low university standards or inaccurate tests, Dr. Fleming said. (Continued on Page 7)

comment

no, thanks

One of the favorite indoor sports of American sociologists and Hearst Feature writers is finding names for the generation we are supposed to belong to.

We have been called "rebels without causes" and "beat" and "disengaged" and "conformist" and "timid."

And when we read all these scholarly accounts of us, it always seems as if they are talking about someone else.

None of the labels quite seem to fit.

The chief complaint of these people seems to be that we are not doing something. They are never too clear on what we are supposed to be doing, but they are terribly certain that we should be furiously active.

We feel that we should be doing something too.

Only we are not going to take much direction from the generation that preceded us. The ones that are so upset because we're not doing the things that they did.

We've seen the results of their activity. We've seen the war that was to end war lay the groundwork for a third war. We've seen them invent bombs too terrible to comprehend and then build enormous stockpiles of them to sit on top of, crowing about "massive retaliation."

We've seen the utopian movements exhaust themselves. We've seen communists fighting communists when Communism, the end of class warfare, was to end warfare all together.

We've seen hypocrisy, ignorance and outright stupidity made acceptable and dignified with titles and public office.

And these are the people who cry down to us that we are apathetic.

We're not impressed.

We have no faith in politicians. We don't trust movements. We have little respect for religious leaders.

If they must stick a label on us in order to justify themselves, then let them.

We're not going to pay much attention to it. It doesn't have very much to do with us.

We'll do it our own way. We'll move when we are good and ready to and not before.

We'll create our petition and we'll circulate it and those of us that wish will sign it.

And if they want to laugh and fit labels and mock our naivete then let them have their fun.

We've seen what they've done. We've seen the way they chose to do it. We've seen the mess they left behind them.

No thanks.

The petition may seem futile. It's not the way they would have done it.

But then they haven't got anything better to offer us.

And until they do, we'll keep on signing the petitions. dls

Brown Of The C

by Bob Saunders

J. M. S. Careless, Brown of the Globe, Volume 1: "The Voice of Upper Canada 1818-1859," from MacMillan of Canada.

To make a nineteenth-century doctrinaire Manchester liberal with strong Presbyterian religious convictions into an attractive person for the benefit of the mid-twentieth century reader would seem to be a formidable task. Yet Professor Careless has performed this task and done so well. Indeed it is refreshing to read such good biography. George Brown is well served.

He has not always been treated so well and so effectively. The first biography of Brown, written shortly after his death by his political colleague and disciple Alexander Mackenzie, was a work of great piety and understanding but of little readability. That by John Lewis in the Makers of Canada series was more readable but less satisfactory as a book of reference. Accordingly, just from the viewpoint of having a new biography of George Brown based on personal papers, it is good to see this first volume of a projected two-volume work. However, to think in such narrow terms is to do this book a very serious injustice.

Professor Careless in writing of Brown has had to face certain other difficulties. Since Brown's death, a very considerable mythology of personality has been created. Brown the stern, the upright moralist, the claymore-tongued, the cold, even awe-inspiring is our picture of the man. This impression of his public personality, while fundamentally correct, is quite unattractive. Because of this rather forbidding portrait, Brown has suffered considerable wrongs at the hands of writers dealing with him. He has been pictured as a violent anti-Roman Catholic, as anti-French Canadian, as a narrow sectionalist from Canada West with none but Toronto and this province's interests in his heart and mind. It is the tragedy of a man like Brown with his ideals that he can be pictured so easily as a bigot, a violent proponent of small ideas. Nor is it easy to see a more positive side to such a man. However, Professor Careless has caught hold of this side of Brown and presents to his reader the view of a strong-minded, energetic and attractive person. Brown believed in the rigid separation of church and state, an ideal which did not appeal to the Roman Church of Pius IX. A long succession of governments in the 1850's dominated by and dependant upon the mute support of a solid bloc of members from Canada East made him solicitous of the rights of the other half of the province. Even a cursory examination of expenditures for public works in the 1850's suggests the rightness of his case. To the suggestion that such expenditures were necessary because these things were the responsibility of local government in Canada West and there were no well-developed institutions of local government to perform these functions in Canada East, he would reply that such institutions would have to be developed. Equal rights for persons and for sections of the province was the foundation of good and just government.

If his concern for one part of Canada might seem to have been excessive, it was because in his opinion that part was not receiving just treatment. Brown was a man of big ideas, nineteenth-century liberal, but he felt himself compelled to deal with small problems, or what in our day may seem to be small problems. He was a man of broad toleration even if he held vigorous opinions, a fact which is not easily understood in the 1950's when to be tolerant is to have no ideas or opinions. One of the very few regrets of this reviewer is that Professor Careless has not made enough of George Brown, the liberal. Yet he also sympathizes with the biographer for to dwell upon the point would be both too apologetic and too unjust to Brown in his role of a Canadian politician.

Almost inevitably, because of the comparison of George Brown and John A. MacDonald in their own life times, the comparison between biographies will be made. The comparison is a fair one, but to make it we must consider certain fundamental aspects of the writing of historical biography. To be successful, the biographer should have a strong emotional tie to his subject. He must either hate his subject so that he can write a good denunciation, or he must love and admire his subject in order to bring full sympathy and understanding to his work. However an uncritical love will be as equally unsuccessful as no feeling whatsoever. Love is after all based on the realization that a person's good qualities more than outweigh his bad ones. Both biographers are good writers on this basis; however, it is fair to note that MacDonald is excused of more sins (perhaps because he committed more). This leads us to a second point. It is very easy for a biographer to be seduced by his subject to such an extent that the world is seen through the subject's eyes and opinions by the writer. No final judgement of whether such a degree of sympathy is bad or good is really possible, for it is obvious that what a biographer loses, is a certain objectivity to events around his subject, he gains in being able to fully express that person's viewpoint. The danger however is that the reader may not realize to what extent he is being told of events through the eyes of that person. Professor Creighton in writing of MacDonald has tended to write his book through the viewpoint of MacDonald. Professor Careless does not see events through Brown's eyes and is therefore rather fairer in his treatment of men and events. Neither method of approaching biography is bad, but the former must be read more critically. Third, the question of style. This problem resolves itself again upon the approach of each man to his task. Creighton sees history more dramatically, more in terms of sweeping narrative than does Careless. The latter is more analytic, more cautious in his formation of judgements. This approach carries itself into the style of each man, for Creighton is undoubtedly the better writer of narrative, but Careless is his superior in writing analytically and in presentation of evidence. To make final judgement of each book as art is difficult. Not only was John A. a more attractive public person; but we also need a second volume to complete our total portrait of Brown.

The Toronto Baroque Ensemble, Greta Kräus, harpsichord, Nicholas Fiore, flute, Donald Whitton, cello, Elizabeth Benson-Guy, soprano, and Coral MacCartney, violin, will give a recital at Eaton Auditorium Thursday at 2 p.m.

The Women's Musical Club of Toronto is sponsoring this excellent group of local musicians who have given several most successful concerts and have played often on CBC. The unusual combination of performers gives this group a vast repertoire of 17th and 18th century music, some of which will be heard at this concert.

Student tickets for each of the concerts in this series are 50 cents. Other artists to be heard later in the season include the famous Swiss tenor Ernst Hoefliger, Rosalyn Tureck, piano, and the Soidenberg Chamber Players.

Give Me A Pain-Killer

When Samuel Beckett's WAITING FOR GODOT was given its London premiere several years ago, the able critic Ivor Brown called it meaningless nonsense, declaring that the author was playing an elaborate practical joke on his audience.

In writing his afterthoughts on the London theatre season, Brown included letters he had received from the intellectual elite, each claiming to be the true and only interpretation of the Gospel according to Sam Beckett.

According to these inspired souls, 1) WAITING FOR GODOT is the greatest tragedy of the twentieth century; 2) it is the greatest comedy of the twentieth century; 3) it is the greatest tragi-comedy of the twentieth century; 4) Godot is God; 5) Pozzo is God; 6) Vladimir and Estragon are two facets of the same character; 7) Vladimir, Estragon, Pozzo and Lucky are all different facets of the same character, and so on.

If such confusion can arise from the comparatively straight-forward GODOT, one can only imagine what a time these same gentlemen would have with ENDGAME, a far more obscure and personal play. (Personal in the sense that Beckett expresses himself in terms and allusions known only to a small circle of acquaintances. It is significant that all of Beckett's plays have been first performed in a small theatre to a select few.)

But what of the great majority of us who are not part of the

"in-group"? We must be content with a naive faith that the key to the enigma of Beckett's plays is locked in the impenetrable bosom of the author, who certainly isn't telling anybody anything.

It is a thankless task, armed as we are with such scanty knowledge, to try interpreting ENDGAME; one can think of it as the final stages of a human chess game (Hamm and Clov wear red make-up, Nell and Nagg wear white), but one is baffled by the action in the last five minutes of the play. One can say that the four characters are the last survivors of an atomic blast (and thus conveniently explain Hamm's blindness, his pathetic craving for pain-killer, and Nagg and Nell's ashbin residence), but one is immediately suspicious of perhaps oversimplifying the play's meaning. And on it goes.

Mr. Beckett is a master of misdirection. He tempts his audience into thinking "Aha, now I see what he's driving at!", and then does a complete volte-face.

Thus, when Hamm refers to Nagg as "Father!", we happily set about creating a new Trinity, with Nagg the Father, Hamm the Son, and Nell the Holy Ghost — Clov can represent suffering humanity. But soon after Hamm states "But for me . . . no father. But for Hamm . . . no home." It's enough to make strong men weep.

It's far simpler to say that in ENDGAME, Beckett is declaring his thoughts on life and death in a savagely humorous language which makes that of Britain's Angry Young Men seem pale in comparison, and leave it at that. Perhaps some readers will want to write letters to the Varsity.

As for the Coach House presentation of the play, Herbert Whittaker, the director, is also a master of misdirection. He and his actors have ridden roughshod over the play, and the result is the longest hour and three quarters in theatrical history.

To begin with, the two mobile characters wear plain make-up; as a matter of fact, the inhabitants of the ash bins (ash bins, mind you, not garbage cans) look much healthier than their counterparts.

That alone would be bad enough, but worse is yet to come. Mr. Beckett has given Clov two speeches, one at the beginning of the play, one near the end, which are to be delivered tonelessly. If Kenneth Pauli's opening speech was toneless, then so was the rest of his performance, which seldom, if ever, differed from that brief opening. Not that Mr. Pauli is a poor actor; he simply is trying to do his best with an essentially wrong characterization: he is not Vladimir to Hamm's Estragon.

Both men, though strongly tied to each other, hate each other's guts. Their dialogues are violent; they rant and rave at each other; it is their only escape from the horrible boredom they suffer. To play it any other way than is indicated is to risk carrying the monotony of their existence beyond the fourth wall, and the audience's restlessness, particularly towards the end, was an indication that they nearly succeeded.

Uriel Luft is another fine actor, who suffers from inadequate direction. His name is surely a clue to his character: Hamm. He is a huge, almost monstrous, character (the lines: "The bigger a man is, the fuller he is . . . and the emptier" surely refer to himself), if not physically, at least in his manner of presentation. Mr. Luft presented a rather quiet, restrained Hamm. As a result, his big narration came off like a damp squib. Nor did he suggest the finality of his closing speech. He also perpetrated several inexcusable wrong interpretations of his lines. When he asks: "A sai? A fin? Smoke?", it should be with a worried expression, not one of hope. Similarly, when he cries: "Then let it end! With a bang! Of darkness!", the last two words refer back to a previous speech (about Mother Pegg), not to the word "bang". He also missed the almost ironical poetry of "a little bit of grit in the middle of the steppe". In general, he lacked the variety so essential to the part. But perhaps Hamm can be cured.

Jacqueline White was too lively as Nell. We could not believe that she would pop off before her oversexed but senile husband. Kenneth Wickes contributed the most polished performance of the group. His story of the tailor was perfectly done, and the pathos he engendered in his final speech to Hamm was without doubt the high point of the evening.

The set was admirable, although the lighting was too warm to adequately suggest the bleakness of the scene. Perhaps it would have been more effective if the lights had been dimmed right out in the final scene, rather than closing with so abrupt a curtain.

As a final word to readers: there was no ENDGAME; you'll never get any ENDGAME, I think I'll go out now and get my pain-killer.

Victor Di Bello And His

One bitterly cold winter morning several years ago, Victor Di Bello started at Bloor and Sherbourne Sts. and tramped grimly through the snow to the corner of Bloor and Bathurst calling at every church along the route.

He was looking for a hall in which his orchestra might be allowed to hold rehearsals.

He didn't get one from the churches but fortunately the Board of Education, heard of his difficulties and gave him space in the Duke of York public school.

On November 12th, the descendent of that almost deserted musical crew, The Pro Arte Orchestra began their third season of concerts in the library of Casa Loma.

And this fall, Mr. Di Bello began his first season as conductor of the Hamilton Philharmonic Orchestra.

Victor Di Bello began his musical career at the age of ten when his mother dragged him, much against his will, to a piano teacher. He endured the initial session and found that his interest in music grew until he came to the Royal Conservatory to further his piano studies under Madeline Bowen.

As his studies in the piano progressed, he became interested in conducting, and began to apply himself to learning to wave the little black stick.

But as soon as he began to study conducting he ran into the conductor's first problem. You can wave a stick around in an empty room for only so long before you start to go quietly out of your mind.

Sooner or later you get the urge, almost uncontrollable if you happen to be seriously studying conducting, to wave the baton in front of an orchestra.

Full scale professional symphony orchestras who will submit themselves to the exuberance of a student-conductor, are a little hard to find, so Victor Di Bello took the only logical step.

At the age of seventeen he organized his own orchestra.

In its first years the orchestra just barely managed to stay together. They began by rehearsing in church halls but they were evicted as soon as anyone wanted to hold a meeting of any kind. The Board of Education gave them space in the Duke of York public school, but it was in a "tough" neighbourhood and the women musicians refused to come unless properly escorted.

One year they had space in the Sherbourne United Church gymnasium. The hall had excellent acoustics but that was all. The church never turned on the heat for them. The violinists found they just couldn't get the proper lyrical touch bundled up in overcoats and scarves.

Funds for music and rehearsal space were meagre and during the summers Mr. Di Bello worked in the CNR freight yards in order to earn money to keep his group intact.

Things began to improve when the Central YMCA gave the orchestra rehearsal space. The relations with 'Y' have remained excellent and rehearsals are still conducted there.

In 1957, what formerly had been an amateur group who played mostly for their own enjoyment, were organized into the Pro Arte Orchestra. It was decided to keep the group small and young so that they could learn to work together and grow with their music.

Around the orchestra of thirteen strings, a Pro Arte Orchestra Society was organized to help the orchestra financially. The society was composed principally of people who had known and admired Mr. DiBello's work with the amateur group. In addition to the Orchestra Society a Women's Committee was formed to lend their support to the musicians.

Mr. DiBello's title in the new organization is "Music Director" and all decisions as to the content of concerts are strictly up to him.

While working hard to build up his orchestra, Mr. DiBello continued his studies at the conservatory. He spent two years working under Heinz Unger and won a scholarship to spend a summer at Tanglewood Massachusetts.

In 1958 he made his debut with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. It was the day before St. Patrick's Day and just before he was to give his concert he received an urgent phone call from the symphony manager. In deference to the Irish music lovers some acknowledgement of the "great day" must be made. Mr. DiBello hurriedly inserted "The Londonderry Air" into his program.

The concert was well-

Orchestras

received by the critics and since 1957, Mr. DiBello has been working with Walter Susskind, in addition to his labors with the Pro Arte.

Last year he read an article in a local newspaper about the Hamilton Philharmonic looking for a new conductor. He applied and found that two other young conductors had also applied and the selection was to be competitive and based on a concert that each of them was to give.

Mr. DiBello found the orchestra cooperative and eager to help the young conductors. He came on stage, keyed up to a fine high pitch, raised his arm for the downbeat and was met with a loud crash as the fourth trombonist disappeared over the edge of the platform.

It seems he was accident prone.

However, the incident worked in Mr. DiBello's favor. It broke the tension and along with Mary Gyan, a local pianist, he went on to give a fine concert.

He came back to Toronto to await word and two weeks later he learned that he had been awarded the position of conductor of the Hamilton Philharmonic Orchestra.

The orchestra that Mr. DiBello took over was in a chaotic state. Composed principally of amateur musicians who were able to play music only in their spare time, the orchestra had seldom achieved any noteworthy performances.

Mr. DiBello began by auditioning every member of the orchestra. About 30 never even bothered to show up and of those who did, he kept only 30 musicians. Cutting the size of the orchestra from 75 to 50 he brought in 20 new musicians and began a strenuous program of rehearsal and performances.

The first concerts of the Hamilton Philharmonic have received high praise from the local critics.

Mr. DiBello has not removed himself at all from the Pro Arte even though he now spends a good deal of his time on a bus traveling back and forth from Hamilton. He believes that small chamber orchestras have a definite place in any city's music program and he wants to stay with the group he founded and help them develop into something that approaches the older established chamber orchestras of Europe.

He feels that the music of the Baroque and Classical periods that was written specifically for this kind of group is increasing in popularity. An audience that has been educated to appreciate this particular type of music is gradually being built up in Toronto.

And too, chamber music offers to the musician an opportunity for individual expression that is completely lacking in larger symphony orchestras where coordination and precision are the most important requirements.

This year the Pro Arte begins its third year of concerts in the library of Casa Loma. The panelled walls, elaborate crystal chandeliers and refreshments served during the intermission, help to reinforce the audience's appreciation of the fine music.

We have long been aware that there is a certain element on campus who have not been satisfied with the material printed in The Varsity this year. With this fact in mind, the sports staff, always eager to please their faithful readers, present a page that has a multitude of uses. Prime consideration has been given to those who like to doodle in classes. There are two inspirational offerings by Alan Walker on the page to get you started. Other uses include: a bridge score pad for use during the lectures that you are skipping; a scratch sheet for lecture notes you want to throw away, and a scoreboard for tic-tac-toe.

Ross Named York University Head

Dr. Murray Ross, vice-president of the University of Toronto since 1957 was yesterday named president of Toronto's fledgling York University.

At a Simcoe Hall press conference Dr. Ross, 47, pledged himself to dedicate the new university to "a program of liberal and general education."

"The aim of York University," he said, "will be to produce a student who understands himself, the society of which he is a member, and the world in which he lives."

He said the university—which will open its doors to students next fall and will be affiliated to the University of Toronto for from four to eight years, will concentrate geography.

Dr. Ross said there would be no teaching of the physical sciences in the early years, but that a general course in the philosophy and methods of science would be introduced later.

Dr. Ross's appointment was announced by the Hon. Robert Winters, former public works minister in the St. Laurent government, whose appointment as chairman of York's board of governors was announced last week by Ontario Premier Frost.

(Mr. Winter's appointment was challenged as illegal Tuesday by North York Councillor James Service who said the Act setting up the new university specified the chairman must be appointed by the Board of governors. Premier Frost said yesterday he had only announced Mr. Winters' appointment, not made it.)

Making the announcement of Dr. Ross's appointment, Mr. Winters referred to the new president as a "a man dedicated to the highest principles of education, someone who from the outset will command the respect of his staff, students and the general public."

The new university, which will grant degrees through the University of Toronto during its early years, will hold its first classes in Falconer Hall next fall. The university will move to Glendon Hall on Bayview Avenue the following year.

Dr. Ross said the need for the university was not due simply to overcrowding at the University of Toronto.

"The reason for more than one university in any single city is primarily to provide for some variety in higher education," he said.

"Every university develops, or should develop, its own distinct educational program, and these different programs provide for the needs of different groups of students."

Dr. Ross said York University will specialize in "general education, as opposed to early specialized education."

"The first students at York University may be the best taught students in Canada," Dr. Ross said. "This is because our teacher-student ratio will be extremely favorable and we expect every student will have a tutor."

He said one of York's major problems will be finding staff, but he said the university would not be inclined to take staff from the University of Toronto or from other universities.

He said some U of T staff-members would teach at York on a part-time basis, but none would be asked to become full-time York University staffers.

Dr. Ross, a native of Sydney, N.S., graduated from Acadia University in 1936 with a degree in economics and sociology. He did graduate work at the University of Toronto, the University of Chicago and at Columbia University.

Prior to becoming vice-president of the U of T, Dr. Ross was a professor at the university and later executive assistant to the president.

He is the author of six published books on sociology, community organization and leadership and the Y.M.C.A. in Canada. He is president of the Canadian Institute on Public Affairs; a member of the advisory committee of the Canadian Association for Adult Education and a member of the board of the Toronto Y.M.C.A.

"The aim of a liberal education," Dr. Ross said, "is simply to liberate. We all grow up in relatively narrow situations compared with the range of human life and thought around the world, or the variety of patterns that the history of mankind presents."

"We tend, therefore, unless pains are taken to provide otherwise, to be 'parochial', in one sense or another. In the

Statement on York University

By MURRAY G. ROSS

1. The major problem involved in starting a second university in the city of Toronto was whether a Chairman and a Board of Governors could be found who could mobilize the resources necessary to build a first-rate institution of higher learning. With the Honourable Robert H. Winters as Chairman and with Air Marshal W. A. Curtis and others as Governors, this primary condition for success has been met, and I have no doubt that York University will soon rank with the best universities in the province.

Personally, I look forward with eagerness to working with Mr. Winters and the other Governors in building the new university. At the same time, I leave the University of Toronto with great reluctance. The people with whom I have worked are among the world's finest — intelligent, understanding, and generous. There are few universities blessed with a Board of Governors and an academic staff of the calibre of the University of Toronto. I have especially enjoyed my association with Dr. Bissell, who has a rare capacity for leadership in an academic community.

2. Toronto is the only city of comparable size in North America with only one university. The reason for more than one university in any single city is not simply to prevent overcrowding, but primarily to provide for some variety in higher education. Every university develops, or should develop, its own distinctive educational program, and these different programs provide for the needs of different groups of students. This is as it should be, for not all human potentialities can be developed in precisely the same manner.

3. York University will, in the first years of operation, concentrate on a program of liberal and general education, and indeed we hope this program will always be the central and most important phase of our work. Since our distinctive approach is that of general education, as opposed to early specialized education, let me make clear what we mean by "a liberal and general education." We regard it as something worth having in its own right for what it is capable of adding to the richness of everyday life, and as something indispensable for those who are to go on to specialized and professional education.

The aim of a liberal education is quite simply to liberate. We all grow up in relatively narrow situations compared with the range of human life and thought around the world, or the variety of patterns that the history of mankind presents. We tend, therefore, unless pains are taken to provide otherwise, to be "parochial", in one sense or another. In the last century this was bad enough; in today's world it is fatal. A liberal education is an education so designed as to bring the student out from his parochial thoughts, feelings and attachments into the wide free life of all mankind at all times and places, in its best and highest manifestations. Without losing a viewpoint of his own or loyalties of his own, the liberally educated student sees himself in relation to the whole human enterprise, in which he must, in any case, co-operate.

This is why the words "liberal" and "general" cannot be separated. Only a general education dedicated to liberation can produce such people. Knowledge must be acquired in relation to other knowledge, in relation to the history of its own development and the man's, in relation to art, to ethics, to philosophy — indeed to the universe, which it is precisely the task of a university to report upon, represent and constantly keep before the student. He should finally know his world — as far as it can be now known — and feel enough at home in it, that he is prepared to join in the total human venture of improving and enriching it for his contemporaries and descendants. Anything less than this robs him and them of civilization itself.

The aim of York University will be to produce a student who understands himself, the society of which he is a member, and the world in which he lives. This is fundamental preparation for life in a world of rapid change, and is being increasingly recognized as such. Clarence B. Randall, a Director and former Chairman of Inland Steel Company, said recently:

"Standing as I do on the plateau of retirement and looking over my shoulder at my life, I can see with startling clarity that the greatest asset I have had in business from the point of view of personal preparation was the general education that I received at Harvard. I have no shadow of a doubt that the early selection of a specialty would have been a long-time limitation in my life, even though for a few years I might have earned more money."

HH Debate

Audience Picks Noes

The resolution: "China is the real threat to the West" was soundly defeated in last night's Hart House Debate by a vote of 55 to 14. Mr. E. B. Joliffe, former leader of the Ontario CCF party, was guest speaker and supported the Noes.

Stan Fromowitz (IV SPS), the first speaker for the Ayes, gave the house its first laugh when he announced that would assume the "unwestern idea that Red China existed".

He went on to say the West can only ask the starving peasants to be patient while the Chinese have a positive program. "They," he contended, "have an answer."

Cries of "Shame!" met Richard Tan (II SMC) first speaker for the Noes when he launched an attack against the Ayes who "would raise false and imaginary fears of China".

He finished his remarks by saying, "China is not and cannot be the real threat of the West."

Jack Parnes (IV UC) said he wanted to instal the "fear of the Chinese into the members of the house." To solve as China has done, "the most pressing problems facing the world today", Parnes advocated "mobilization of our labor force and a discarding of our bourgeois liberalism." Although the Chinese government has run over the people, they solve problems by discussion, he said.

"The nature of the Afro-Asian threat", maintained A. Barry (SGS) "is bigger than China itself."

"I would like to speak more bluntly than the African or Asian visitor would speak," said Mr. Joliffe.

"We divide into two groups those who try to do what they can to make them like ourselves and those who decide it's hopeless and try to profit while they can."

"When one backward nation does emerge, you western nations are resentful. It is the fashionable thing to say, China is industrialized—how appalling!" Joliffe asked. "What do you want? Do you want them

"Because a country becomes strong, it does not follow that it will adopt the acquisitive aggressiveness that has characterized the western countries," he said.

He stated: "There is no evidence of Chinese expansiveness... although it will help friendly governments or friendly factions within other countries."

Jolliffe predicted that "China will be preoccupied with reconstruction for the next ten years. The most irritating phenomenon is that they are doing it themselves without our help."

"Never," he said, referring to American foreign aid, "has so much been spent for so little result as in Southeast Asia. It drips from the pockets of their puppets in Korea and Formosa."

"You think you know the story when you never hear the Chinese case; my friends in China never hear the American case."

"The Formosan regime is very expansionist. I quote from the yearbook of Chiang-kai-shek, 'The islands of Quemoy and Matsu are strategically important because they will serve as spring boards for the coming counter-attack on the mainland,'" he said.

"The Peking government has been very restrained in its behaviour," he continued.

"Be friendly to them not provocative either politically or economically. Why create a monster in the future where none exists now?"

Mr. Jolliffe continued: "The threat to the West and to the world is that our peace and goodwill will fail to develop the degree of cooperation necessary to protect the world from total destruction in a nuclear war."

Post Petition*Want Open Bookshelves

A petition requesting the Sigmund Samuel Library Administration to re-open the Wallace Room as an open shelf reading room and to expand the circulation desk was placed in the smoking room of the library this morning.

Boris Freesman (II UC) and Gary Morgan (I UC), the authors of the petition, said last night that permission was refused to them to post it anywhere else in the library. They were told to put it in the smoking room because "no permission is needed there."

"All students who are interested in getting better results from the use of the library are requested to go to the smoking room and sign the petition. All students may sign while they wait for their books," Freesman said last night.

He also said, "The staff seems to recognize that petitions, by airing public opinion, influence the actions of a governing body. Otherwise, they would not have sent the recent petition to the Canadian Government requesting a ban on nuclear armament."

Morgan said that he himself had wasted a good number of hours waiting for books at the circulation desks, and that he had a "sneaky" suspicion that he was not the only one.

The petition reads as follows: "Whereas it is recognized that the Sigmund Samuel Library is not now operating at maximum efficiency to provide the students with the benefits of adequate library facilities,

We, the undersigned students of the University of Toronto, do herewith implore the administrators of the University to reorganize the present library system so as to

a) Re-establish the Wallace Room as an open shelf reading room for any and all university students.

b) Expand the circulation desk in such a manner as to provide quicker and more efficient service to the students wishing to use the facilities,

c) that the above be carried out as soon as possible so that the students of this year may better benefit from the use of the Library."

The petitioners plan to present their plea to Chief Librarian R. H. Blackburn when 5,000 or more signatures are affixed to it.

Grads Say Gov't Funds Should Go To Students

Results of a survey of University of Toronto alumni show overwhelming support for the use of tax funds in financial aid for university first-class honor students.

Nearly 81 per cent of the alumni polled were in favor of the plan as were 85 per cent of the general public who were asked.

They agreed that tax funds should be used to guarantee the students an opportunity for higher education regardless of personal finance.

The questions were included in a survey commissioned a few months ago by the university's National Fund committee to help plan its financial appeal.

Results are published in an article by Fergus Cronin in the December issue of the Varsity Graduate, a quarterly magazine published by the university.

"The survey has revived the great debate about financial aid for bright students who could not afford to go to university," says Mr. Cronin.

In other answers, 70 per cent of those polled felt second-class honor students should also be assisted from public funds and 61 per cent of the alumni agreed.

Last year, a special university committee headed by U of T vice-president Dr. Murray Ross, new president of the proposed York University, recommended financial aid to Ontario students with first and second class standings.

Long Campaign

Prof Pushes For French Program

After a year of petitions and campaigning, University of Toronto French professor Michel Sanouillet is pressing for a Canadian Broadcasting Corp. decision on a 90-minute daily French telecast.

A letter from Prof. Sanouillet to Alphonse Ouimet, CBC director of French language broadcasting, proposing French language films and telecasts will be answered by the end of this week.

Prof. Sanouillet said the majority of the viewers will be housewives, "the most important group since the French mother is the one who keeps the French language alive in the home."

"The right age for children to learn French is during the years before school. The opportunities to hear it on TV is an invaluable one," he said.

That some of the films will be suitable for viewers at the high school or university levels is a wish expressed by the French professor who hopes he will be able to use the telecasts for his students.

"Listening to the language is the best way to learn," he said. Top CBC officials are discussing the idea and a decision is expected by the end of the week although it will not necessarily be a final one.

Prof. Sanouillet is convinced that the French program from the regular French network would do a great deal of good.

Although attention regarding French broadcasting was switched from radio to TV, the proposal did not mean the hope of getting a French radio frequency has been discarded, he stressed.

Church Service

A former Vice-President of Czechoslovakia will preach at the University Church Service in the Great Hall, Hart House this Saturday. The interdenominational Protestant service starts at 11 a.m.

The visiting clergyman is Dr. Frank Uhlir who was a leading political figure in pre-war Czechoslovakia. When war was declared, he joined the underground and during his internment in a concentration camp he was converted to the Christian faith. On his release he came to Canada and took a theological degree at the University of Western Ontario.

He is presently professor of sociology at King's College, Dalhousie University.

Besides preaching at the University Church Service, Dr. Uhlir will speak at a VCF lecture, Dec. 5, in the Victoria College Music Room at 8.30 p.m. His topic is "How Can We Understand Men When We Don't Understand Man".

welcome

Dr. Murray Ross, newly appointed president of newly constituted York University told us yesterday what he would like his institution to be.

To put an ideal into practice is not easy anytime. And even with all the help it is going to get, or maybe because of it, York University will have to fight to remain the kind of university it is starting out as.

For the time being, though, we appreciate Dr. Ross's intentions.

One of these intentions was graphically expressed in Mr. Winters' announcement of Dr. Ross's appointment.

As is well known, Dr. Bissell has often used the word "angularity" to describe his idea of what the University of Toronto should be. Mr. Winters on the contrary stressed the necessity of appointing a "well-rounded" man to the presidency of York University. "He must be able to move from an academic curriculum to a planning session for a new building and be effective and at ease in both areas," he said.

It may well be, then that while the U of T becomes the home of specialized scholarship, York University will continue, as it seems to have started, to represent the ideal of the well-rounded general education, creating ultra-human beings.

Another hint of this is Dr. Ross's own subject Sociology representing in part a mediation between scientific method and the study of the human institutions and creative processes.

We are led to hope that York University will promote a renewal of the notion that part of knowing consists of an attempt to integrate what all men have known into a mature vision of the world.

Meanwhile, we wish Dr. Ross the best of luck in what Mr. Winters called "our great enterprise."

UC-SMC Feud

Dear Sirs,

This is a protest letter against the prejudiced, inaccurate report of the action in a hockey game between St. Michael's College and University College. The implications within the article are unfair and misleading.

One statement comes rapidly to the fore: "A UC player was penalized." There followed no reason for the penalty. It was handed out to the UC defenceman for striking an SMC forward in the face with his stick after the latter person had scored the tying goal.

If this is not indicative of childish revenge and complete lack of self-control, I don't know what is! It is easily seen, therefore, that St. Michael's College has no monopoly on this type of behaviour. "A general brawl ensued", is another misleading statement. No SMC hockey player entered the fight at any time, and for this alone the coach and his entire team deserve explicit praise.

That "there was never any suggestion that the fight would carry over onto the ice" is false. The UC players were willing to enlarge the battlefields but were unable to find any equally hot-headed opponents, so they turned their attention to the referees. This produced the "end result" of forcing the referee to call the game.

None of the above should be interpreted as a defence for the actions of three SMC fans who carried a prerogative to its extreme.

Scotch On The

The Crest Theatre's production of Macbeth is a tempestuous and generally satisfying one. The bloody, barbaric panorama of Scotland is drawn with a bold and colourful hand, for which most of the credit must go to the play's director, Mavor Moore. With a few notable exceptions the performances are given by competent journeyman-actors. The physical standards of production are the usual Crest standards. The production can be vital, exciting because of the efforts of Mr. Shakespeare, Mr. Moore and Mr. Powys Thomas.

Mr. Thomas, as Macbeth, combines versatility and intelligence with a rich voice and a careful understanding of verse. He is to my mind an exceptional instrument for a director, and probably the best actor for Macbeth in this country. His single major problem seems to be in making creditable the transition from the loyal general of Act I and II to the wanton, murdering despot of the later scenes, and it is only in his failure to fully justify this change that his performance lacks something close to perfection.

This is not to call the existing performance less than very good. Mr. Thomas gives us a Macbeth both strong and sensitive. His virtues are clear, his ambition obvious. Deeper yet, the conflict between his latent murderous intent and his more virtuous sensibilities is apparent. When he declares to his wife that "We will proceed no further in this business", the conflict has been resolved. No matter how forceful Lady Macbeth is in persuading him to murder Duncan, it is difficult to understand the Macbeth portrayed by Mr. Thomas becoming the assassin of Banquo and the slaughterer of Macduff's household. His virtues are presented as too strong to allow this deterioration without supernatural aid, and the production denies supernatural aid emphatically.

Once given King Macbeth, there is no real flaw in Mr. Thomas' interpretation. The contorted moral deterioration is gradual but precise, the sensitivity and strength remain untouched. "I have lived long enough . . ." is a beautiful expression of heart-sickness. The final battle with Macduff is one of the best fight scenes I have ever seen.

No Priest In Priestly

Some of the best comedy of Toronto's theatrical season is available this week and next at the York Community Theatre, and it is very peculiar indeed that only 25 people were there last night to enjoy it.

The York's fifth production of the year is J. B. Priestly's When We Are Married, and while it will not exactly make history, it is certainly entertaining enough to merit three hours away from the books—or whatever else it is that occupies your spare time.

The plot—if such it may be called—is simple enough; three couples, celebrating a joint silver wedding anniversary, find that they were in fact never properly married at all, and the results involving these six paragons of Victorian respectability include most of the possibilities you can imagine, plus a few that only Priestly could have contrived. What makes the play a comedy, as opposed to a farce, is that at the end of it all nothing important has changed—nothing important, at any rate, in terms of the values (?) to which we are introduced in the First Act.

The six players cast in the roles of the dishevelled adulterers all reveal a good sense of high comedy; what lines are lost are not the result of casual acting; rather, they are lost because they seem to have been designed for the side-splitting kind of response which would be forthcoming from a larger audience. James Rutherford gives his usual polished performance; his flustered Yorkshire alderman must be all that Priestly had in mind. James Van Evera and Ronald Hutton are good examples of intelligent casting; one suspects that the situation is not entirely new to them. As the distracted wives—or to carry the joke through, concubines—Stella Chadwick, Bridget Edwards and June Dryden are as they should be—amusing, pitiable, nasty, aggrieved, and never to be taken seriously.

Laura Mason gives a very subtle hint to her role as the maid caught up in the domestic complications of the situation; her part is the closest that Priestly gets to being sensible in this play, although she, like the others, has nothing really serious to say. Graham Fugle as the photographer who inadvertently solves everything slightly underplays the part, but this is not at all incompatible with the mild sort of humour which has apparently been Director Donald Ford's objective.

Newman Hajal as the benign reverend is unfortunately not only too benign, but also somewhat uncertain and on the whole a little deadly. The other supporting roles, however, are managed with a delightful levity which carries the comedy along when the play itself slackens.

AM&amp;D Calendar

Continued on second page. Dr. Henry Wilkin will conduct the St. John's Magna in St. John's Cathedral on Christmas Eve. Tickets are $1.00 for men and $0.50 for women.

The opening number will be the oratorio "Praise to God", which has a colourful history. Ascribed to Martin Luther by some, by others to Johann Walther, it was found, signed J. S. Bach, in a collection of works by C. P. E. Bach. A Kyrie and hymn by Byrd, Gibbons' "Hosanna to the Son of David" are other highlights of the program which will also include traditional Christmas selections.

Tickets are available free of charge at the Hall Porter's Desk. This is one of the few Hart House concerts to which women must be escorted.

Seven West Coast Painters, the exhibit which closes Monday at the Hart House Gallery is a comprehensive look at B.C. art during the past year. Previously shown at the Vancouver International Festival, the exhibit includes works by Gordon Smith, Jack Shadbolt, Herbert Gilbert, John Kerner, Don Jarvis, Takao Tanabe and Peter Aspell. One view all day long to members and on Sunday for women.

Powys Thomas, the Macbeth of the current Crest production, will speak to the U.C. Players' Guild Wednesday, December 10, at 4.00 p.m. in Howard Ferguson Hall.

The lecture, entitled "A Tale Told by an Idiot" will cover "acting and the actor, with relation to society, the individual and art". Mr. Thomas has been a prominent director, actor (Stratford, Crest, England) and is now a leading member of the permanent Crest company.

Originally scheduled for this Friday the lecture was postponed because of a Macbeth matinee.

Le Cercle francais de University College presente George Dandin, comédie en trois actes de Moliere au Theatre de Hart House, mardi, 8 decembre.

Le directeur, M. Ross Curtis a choisi M. Bart Poesiat pour représenter le riche paysan, Georges Dandin et Diana Mercus pour sa femme Angelique. Dandin, qui a eu la folle ambition de se marier avec une demoiselle bien-nee (Angelique) trouve que tout ne va pas bien.

Cette representation est placée sous le haut patronage de M. Jules Beauroy, Consul de France, de M. H. Bahler, Consul de Suisse, et de M. Arthur Bulens, Consul de Belgique.

Le "Varsity" prie l'indulgence des étudiants de français; notre presse n'a pas d'accents.

Rocks

for youthful folly. Never do we find a really wicked. The entire sequence leading to American's murder reminded me of a rising to having the boss to dinner. Miss King to be rather vehemently suggesting that to ask of a raise, but not much more. American's murder her main work is done, production benefits. In general, her grace and voice tend to imply a rather personality than the role demands.

Moore has experimented with the witches in with any other part of the play. The trained in a program note, is that they are only apprentice witches, with no superpowers, and that they prophesy a favorable return for a small fee, much like a fortune-teller. "When shall we three meet in thunder, lighting or in rain," is treated as a everyday comment on Scottish weather. Mr. Moore's argument for this interpretation certainly has points in its favour, and him to grasp his audience's attention. It also allows him to remove all magical elements from the play. This may not be a good thing (witness Mr. Thomas mentioned earlier) but it certainly adds to the production. We loose a little murky and hellfire, but the rest of the production make up for it.

Such as this is evident all evening. Mr. Moore is far more than competent, the play is brilliant.

Number of charming boy actors appear from time, the most endearing of whom is Neddes, as Macduff's son. Unfortunately Shory, playing Malcolm, also falls into and Malcolm should not be a charming even if a rather tall one. The use of humour in the battle scenes is justified. Moore's setting the period of the play back in centuries. It is very impressive armour, suggesting the battle of Philippi.

ing criticism can be made of any production. The whole effect here is sweeping and with an outstanding performance by Powys this is one to see.

ACCORDING TO ARISTOTLE

take a leisurely glance through the Art of Poetry by Aristotle for post-Socratic Athens, and will be amazed at the universality of his experience. I browsed through it again recently (Bywater's edition) and discovered a new source of amazement: what Aristotle had to say concerning the art so long ago, can be applied (with remarkably little alteration of the text) in the sphere of all the fine arts of the present day, and not least of music.

Of course, the Athenians knew music as an art, and it won a place as one of the six constituent elements of civic presentation; Aristotle mentions it as such. Most noticeable to a modern music-lover, however, is that he simply mentions it, no more. He writes, since his thesis is the poetic drama, he will understand by the laconic remark, "The effect of music is clear to all."

Perhaps to-day the philosopher's words require some small degree of analysis and interpretation. The effect could be clear to most of us, if we listened now and again after a performance and tried to find how the composer was successful in his music. Surely the answer must begin in our subconscious. Most often music's effect is not fully realized until we have pieced together the host of impressions, sensations, moods, and pictures which fine music conjures to our groping minds. It is here that we must look for the measure of the composer's communion with each particular listener.

Right now, we are going to imagine a virtuous performance of a sovereign composition, and we are to relax, to unloose to the composer our whole range of human experience. In other words we shall let the music play fully on the instrument of our mind, and we shall capture the reaction in words. It is gone. Somewhat arbitrarily I have selected Beethoven's Eroica Symphony.

Two huge chords of stately challenge burst forth. The cellos start the magic in this electric atmosphere, their disarmingly simple melody is picked up by the horns and coloured by the orchestra at large. Now we feel the full force, as yet, of the whole before us, for the forces are judiciously marshalled. Now we begin to feel the tension and stress as Beethoven carves his way into our subconscious; our whole being vibrates with height of power which we discover has been hurled against us. A few moments of pause are allowed, but nonetheless we are kept at work the whole time: our nerves tighten and, although the music almost fades away, it is such that we can't relax any longer.

Now a cortege enters upon the stage of our consciousness, and the tears trickle down our soul's exterior. We mourn the oblivion of death. But shall there be oblivion? asks the master. Here parade before us the glorious achievements of life, its struggles, triumphs, and even its loves. A huge double fugue envelopes every thought and feeling, and through all pervades the majesty of the presence of truth.

Even a troupe of dancers must enter now with restrained mirth, for a shadow like that of death is hard to dispel. But the horns, sylphs of the woodland, know the trick, and our soul is gratefully lightened.

And now, with this panorama in perspective, the apotheosis is offered. A theme in skeleton is enhanced gradually by all the gifts of the creator's art; at the moment of realization our own hearts sing forth volubly as the orchestra rollicks along in its great joy. Bacchic frenzy overtakes all, as the woodwinds warble in their merry drunkenness. The whole force joins in the delectable feast of sound. Then a whispered prayer of thanks for the grace of the heavenly Provider: the universe of sounds gathers reverently, each to add its glory to the hymn. The very stars of the heavens seem to course in their broad paths through our cognizance. The dance of life resumes in huge praise (we wonder if we have ever heard drums before this instant) as all together acknowledge the urge of joyous life.

We have thus related to our experience the vision of the composer, and have been able somewhat to measure the effect of his art upon us. It is a metaphysical chemistry, but Beethoven was a metaphysical thinker. Can we now appreciate the force of Aristotle's brief remark? He was Greek, Beethoven German, and we are Canadian, but such is this language we call Music that no dictionary is needed: the effect is one of the emotions and the spirit, and by the very token that we are human beings we can realize the effect of the music.

pipes

Years ago you could still see lead sewer pipes, blackened by age. These are almost extinct now, but their place has been taken by a new and sloppier form of ugliness—women's leotards.

And sewer-pipes they are. Women with glamorous legs hide them beneath these vile cloth creations, saying "they're oh, so warm," but if they only knew what they look like from the back.

In a way, they're appropriate. If fashion designers could think of a way to add furry little tufts to the feet of their monsters, they'd have something. And they'd be "oh, so quiet" too.

booze

A student at Oxford University thought he had found a real treasure in an ancient university regulation entitling him to a pint of beer to refresh him while studying for exams.

He made his demand to the administration, which finally gave in and supplied the liquid. The student downed it happily.

A few days later he regretted what he had done.

The administration hunted through the records, found a precedent, and promptly fined the young man £5 for not wearing a sword.

example

In case you haven't noticed, this column is written by the CUP Editor of this paper. The CUP editor has, among other chores, to root through copies of papers published by all Canadian universities. Some articles they use are reprinted within a couple of days in The Varsity. But some items just won't fit into that format.

During the recent revolt against fraternity discrimination, some U of T students burned a cross on the lawn of a sorority, Kappa Kappa Gamma.

A McGill Daily reporter suggested the students should have burned the sorority in front of the cross.

library

The call slips in the University library are all numbered consecutively in light red ink, just like dollar bills. This process we understand is quite expensive.

However we ignored that problem, until we noticed one of the staff tearing the carbon paper out of some slips. The numbers stay on the disposable part of the slip.

"Why are the slips numbered consecutively?" we asked, as the paper tumbled into the waste basket.

"I don't know," the librarian remarked, "I've asked, but nobody around here seems to know."

Reminds us of the time we tried to get three English books out all at once.

"Grawk, grawk, only two books to a subject, sir," she chirped brightly.

"But this one is for English 3j and these two are for English 3i."

"That doesn't matter, they're all in English," she said.

So we went back in 10 minutes and she had forgotten all about it.

starvation

This column will not always be filled with sweetness and spright.

This week I took a tragic document from the typewriter of a fellow student.

This student lives (just barely) by himself, and having eaten out his fees over the summer and having lost the rest to the government, he now has to live for the rest of the year on about $15 a week, gleaned from several occasional jobs.

Here is what he wrote:

Bare walls, a collection of 10 or 12 paperbacks, an empty decanter, a third-hand typewriter and cheese sandwiches symbolize the life of this university student in a big city.

Those who try to write on the side are in an especially bad way. $9 for rent, $4 for food, $2 for pencils, paper, the occasional book, and that's all.

Thursday: I'm getting weaker. The peanut butter sandwiches don't seem to have as much nourishment as I thought they would have.

Friday: week-old bread and lard for breakfast again today. Starting to shooft. Still making it to lectures. Found a two-dollar bill. Bought a copy of The Evergreen Review at the U of T bookstore.

Saturday beat up an old lady in an alley, just managed to do it. Stole her purse.

Sunday: went to church and had three communions until they got suspicious and threw me out. Went home and had the last of the bread and some carrot tops I found.

Monday: staggered to a lecture. The others passed the hat. Very few of them have much either. Spent the money on a new typewriter ribbon. Boiled the old one. It tasted fine.

Tuesday: the end is near. Begging on street corners and trying to get enough for an overdose of sleeping pills.

Wednesday: got the pills. Trying to screw up courage.

(Editor's note: here the document ends. At last report the student was still alive, trying to sell his life story to The Varsity. Contributions may be sent to SOUSES (Save the Over-worked Under-fed Student Emergency Service) care of this solemn column.

ccf chief

Gerry Caplan (IV UC) former president of the University of Toronto CCF club has been elected party leader for the coming Model Parliament. He defeated Giles Endicott the present CCF Club president.

The party's program for the Model Parliament will stress foreign relations.

The CCF Club holds regular meetings every Monday at 1 p.m. in room III of University College at which they thrash out their program.

The meetings are public and all interested students are invited to attend.

Pharmacists

Get Old Dents Building

The University of Toronto's 50-year-old dentistry building will be renovated for pharmacy students at a cost of over $1,000,000 to become one of Canada's most up-to-date pharmaceutical institutes.

University officials announced yesterday the building will be hollowed out and rebuilt with extra space provided by filling up the courtyard which now extends upwards from the third floor.

The renovations will partly be paid for by National Fund donations.

Two-and-one-half times the space presently occupied by the pharmacy department will be made available, allowing enrolment increases which have not been possible due to the overcrowding in the present Garrard St. Ontario College of Pharmacy Building.

Since the course was doubled in 1948, the faculty has needed twice the space without any increase in enrolment but since, the student body has increased from 228 to 311.

Between classes, students have to sit on benches as study rooms and the lunch room have been converted to classrooms.

The newly rebuilt building will contain the most up-to-date facilities in the country including four laboratories which will be the largest in the country.

Lab facilities will be devoted to pharmacy, pharmaceutical chemical work, pharmacognosy and compounding and dispensing. Special labs will handle radio-active isotopes and micro-biology.

Stairways will be filled in for extra space but one opening which puzzled architects was an elevator shaft for transporting cadavers to the basement before 1925.

Ponder Standards Hike After Atkinson Report

D. M. Smyth, the man who directs admissions to the University of Toronto, last night said the U of T may raise its 1961-2 admission requirements as a result of findings of the Atkinson Study of Student Resources.

Mr. Smyth said the university will look at the number of times a student may try Grade 13 and maybe limit it to two.

The Atkinson study is "tracing university careers of 9,573 1956 Grade 13 graduates and hopes to find factors influencing whether students go to college and how they do there.

U of T entrance requirements for 1960-1 have already been set. As in the past, students must make 60 per cent on an average of nine Grade 13 papers with no failures. They may write exams as often as necessary.

Mr. Smyth said a faculty committee will discuss Atkinson Study findings this winter and will publish their decision in May, 1960.

One finding of the study, released this week, is that students who take two or three years to pass Grade 13 are twice as likely to fail first year university as those who get Grade 13 in one year.

Eighty-four per cent of students who passed Grade 13 in one year passed in first year university. Of those who took Grade 13 in two years with no failures, 69 per cent passed. Of those who took two years because of some subjects passed, only 55 per cent passed first year university, the study showed.

The faculty committee will also consider a study finding that teachers' estimates in Grade 13 were a very reliable indicator of university success.

by mike chykaliuk

Dalt White had just finished posting a notice on the Hart House bulletin board when he glanced at his watch. Five o'clock. Time to go home to eat he thought and with this thought his affections raced to his wife and family at home. A smile, in contemplation of the happy evening ahead, appeared on his face.

Upon rounding the corner near the wrestling gymnasium he was seized by a burly figure and rudely dragged onto the wrestling mats.

"Do fifty sit-ups," blurted the figure. "Now do twenty bridges, thirty push-ups, and so on, and so on," till in twenty minutes time Dalt's two hundred dollar suit was soaked with perspiration.

Not till he closely scrutinized White's wrestling potential (good neck muscles, a bit soft around the middle but aggressive spirit displayed by those red cheeks) did the figure finally discover whom he had abducted.

At this point wrestling coach Jack Amos humbly apologized to Dalt White for his (Jack's) nearsightedness and did his utmost to pacify the composure of the gentleman.

When questioned about this mode of recruiting candidates for the Senior Blues Jack replied, "this was my last straw. 'As you know most of last year's team has graduated. We have some good boys, but they all weigh less than 150 pounds. In fact, I have not seen so many midgets since Sky Low Low and Pee Wee James bounced each other off the bottom rope in Maple Leaf Gardens."

What to do?

I tried reasoning for wrestlers and I even advertized in the Varsity, but to no avail.

Then I tried to entice some of Canzano's boxers to come over here. I went in his gymnasium last week and had three or four fellows talked into it, but Tony got wind of it, and I was foiled again.

At this moment he was interrupted by two bare-footed men dressed in canvass, who asked for permission to work out. Sure, go ahead, he said. The two then clutched each others jackets and began a series of kicks and giggles.

Last year, I would have made them dance in the street, but this season we have room too spare. Now on with my tale of woe.

"Next I tried psychoanalysis thinking the students were avoiding me because of B.O. or something. I got a hair-cut, a clean pair of gym clothes, a daily shave and I even read some of Dale Carnegie's literature.

Then I sat down and waited, and waited, and waited. In desperation, just now, I decided to take positive, aggressive action by seizing the first body that came along.

I'm really sorry it had to be Dalt, however, I am determined to trap me a team, and so saying he dashed off to his vigil as another pair of footsteps approached in the hallway.

4. There will be, we expect, some subjects which will be given fresh emphasis at York University. We hope to give special attention to the social sciences including psychology, sociology, anthropology, history, political science and economics. These will be basic and required areas of study, but all placed in the context of general education. We hope to give some attention to a very much neglected area of study in Canada - namely, geography. This is a discipline which, incidentally, the Soviet Union has exploited to great advantage, and it is one which, in this new world, we neglect at our peril. While in the first few years, York University will not provide special courses in physics, chemistry, or the biological sciences, we hope soon to develop a new course, similar to the one taught by Dr. Conant when he was President of Harvard, which will provide all students with an understanding of the scientific method and a knowledge of some of the great scientific discoveries.

5. The first students at York University may be the best taught students in Canada. This is because our teacher-student ratio will be extremely favourable, and we expect every student will have a tutor. Most classes will be of the small seminar type. In the future it may not be possible to retain these teaching arrangements, but we will do so as long as it is feasible. We will be for a number of years a small college, with all the advantages that this implies - intimate contacts between students, and between students and staff.

6. We hope to give special attention to helping students to read, to write, and to speak effectively. This should be a natural result of any university education, but we all know that it is not. In tutorials and in seminars we will insist not only on the mastery of certain subject matter but on the capacity to express orally or in written form the essence of the subject matter being studied and its relationship to other subject matter. Only persistent and disciplined effort will produce students who are articulate and able to communicate.

Vic Land Rezoned

Toronto Planning Board yesterday approved a zoning change which would allow a 25-storey office building with twice the floor space of Toronto's new City Hall to be built on land owned by Victoria College.

The land, on Bloor St. east of Queen's Park now holds six houses used by Vic as women's residences before the opening of the new Margaret Addison Hall.

The land would be leased to commercial purposes rather than being used by the college.

The change, approved over the objections of planning commissioner M. B. M. Lawson, rezones the property to C1V4, the city's highest-density category.

The rezoning would allow a building with a gross floor area of 864,000 square feet, twice the area of the St. Clair Ave. Imperial Oil Building, to go up on the area.

The total sum raised by the University of Toronto's Student Blitz for expansion will not be known for quite a while.

Blitz chairman Barbara Leaman said last night, "Pledge donations will not be cleaned up for some time yet but officials of the campaign expect totals to top the $50,000 mark."

With only about $3,000,000 of the total $12,60,000 to be collected, officials last night extended the overall National Fund campaign past the originally scheduled end-of-November closing to give all prospective donors a chance to contribute.

Chairman M. Wallace McCutcheon announced last night only 25 per cent of the corporate (Continued on Page 3)

BLUES PLAY KITCHENER TONIGHT

Former Blues' Stars Play For Kitchener

Varsity Blues play Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen in an exhibition game at the Ice Emporium tonight in a game that is supposed to give Toronto fans a chance to evaluate Kitchener as a factor in this year's Olympic "amateur" championships.

On the basis of Monday's game against a strong Michigan team, Blues will be lucky to stay within five goals of the powerful Dutchmen. Varsity has not suffered a defeat quite so convincing both physically and on the scoreboard at home in some years as the one that the Wolverines handed out.

Bob Giroux will be in the nets for tonight's game. The masked marvel of the Jaques Plante played his first game Monday and should give Blues the top goaltending they need to stay close to the Dutchies.

Several former Varsity players will be in uniform for Kitchener. Among them are: Mike Eliak, centre star with the Blues for several years and a former Varsity captain; Ron Casey, a standout with last year's team; and Don Rope, a veteran of the 1951-52 Blues.

Notes . . . there will not be any free skating after the game tonight . . . normally fans expect to go skating . . . this, however, applies only to Intercollegiate games . . . The Star has rated Giroux's mask uglier than Plante's . . . tough luck Bob . . . better hit Laurie's for a refund.

Basketball Blues Prep For League

BY NOEL BATES

The 1959 edition of the Varsity Blues Basketball will be returning from a four day road trip this weekend and will resume practices in preparation for their opening game against Lawrence Tech on Saturday December 12.

The team is in the same league as in previous years, playing a home and home series with McGill, McMaster, Queens, Western, and Assumption.

So far this year the team has played seven games and judging by these performances the future league games will be worth watching.

The coach, John MacManus, who is beginning his fifth year at the post, was reluctant to make any predictions about the success of the team but said only that Western and Assumption are considered the teams-to-beat.

The number of rookies on this year's team is worth mentioning. The team's roster has eight players who are new to Senior intercollegiate ball but looking at their records of playing experience this will not be anything to be held against them. Among some of these are Mike Muir (last year's intermediates), Bill Kostyk (Andy's A.C. & Intermediates) and Pat O'Neill (St. Mikes).

The five veterans returning are looked upon as being the backbone of the team with Peter Potter, Bob Ecclestone, and Jim Maguire three probabilities on the starting five.

Last year's record on the surface was only average, as the team split their schedule. But a look at the scores shows that only four points or less difference existed in three of the games which they dropped.

All in all it looks like another good season for the team when the league begins after Christmas.

Just Notes . . . There is a "yankee" on the team, JIM HARDEN who has had experience at Jacksonville in Florida is on the roster . . . Don't forget Saturday's game against Lawrence Tech . . . game time 8.00, Dec. 12

SPS In Boxla Finals UC Wallop SMC 21-0

SPS I defeated Skule II 9-4 in a lacrosse semi-final game at Hart House last night, and as a result move into the final series against the winner of the UC-Dents match today at 100 p.m.

John Lawrence, with the hat trick, and Pat Wallace who contributed a pair, led the Sr. Skule scorers. Galbraith, Dawson, McCrindle, Regimbal added all singles. Bob Bach notched all four Jr. Skule goals.

The game was closer than the score would indicate, and a little more accuracy in the shooting of Jr. Skule might have made a big difference in the game.

UC-PHE clobbered St. Mikes

"B" in a quarter-final game 21-0. Bert Naylor scored 8 goals to increase his seasons total to 35 in 9 games. UC have not been beaten to date and are heavily favoured to whip Dents in the semi-final match today noon.

Other UC scorers were: Don Fleming (5), Jim Hill (5), and Dave Misener (3).

In an earlier review of the exploits of the UC team, we mentioned their well balanced scoring power. Apparently we made a dreadful omission. We forgot to mention that George Howard Spanetz Jr. had scored four goals during the course of the season for the Redman.

Dents gained the semi-final berth by whipping SPS III 8-4. Kennedy led to Dents with five goals while Derret (2) and Longhurst added the others. For the Engineers, Kuzyk (2), McDougall and Chapple scored.

McGill Win 9-4 Take Lead In Waterpolo Set

University of Toronto waterpolo team were walloped 9-4 by a fast, opportunistic McGill team last Friday in the first game of a two game total goal series for the Intercollegiate championship.

McGill started very fast, posting a 4-0 lead in the first quarter, before Varsity fought back to make it 4-2 at the half.

The third quarter was even, both teams adding two goals, and then in the last quarter, the superior conditioning of the McGill team paid off and they added three more to their total.

Although Varsity outshot the Redmen, the McGill team had the better of the play, and the decision was never in doubt.

Big goal-getter for the Redmen was Cameron Groult, the Intercollegiate swimmer. He fired four and Dave Sherwood had three.

The second game of the series is Dec. 12 at McGill.

Wrestlers Travel To Niagara

The Blues wrestling team journeys to Niagara Falls December 5th to compete in a five team tournament sponsored by the Niagara Falls Central Y.M.C.A.

Other teams attending are from the Universities of Buffalo, Rochester, Western and Ontario Agricultural College.

The preliminary matches start at 1.30 with the finals set for 7.30 p.m.

The tournament will give coach Jack Amos an opportunity to assess his boys. Although the Toronto team has been considerably weakened by graduation the members are still expected to do well in the middle weight classes from 130 to 160 lbs.

Directory Out Soon

Student directories will go on sale this week, just in time for you to address your Christmas cards, and the price has been cut in half.

U of T Registrar Robin Ross said last night the students' portion of the university directory will be issued separately from the staff listings, to speed up the process.

Last year's directories were $1. This year they're going for small change.

Mr. Ross said this year's listings will be more complete than ever before. He said the delay in compiling the staff listings was due to the fact that they were harder to track down than the students.

Also, an IBM card system is used to list the students.

Graduate students and students in the university extension are rather slimly represented, because they register later than ordinary students.

Ruckus over Wallace Room

A verbal volcano erupted in the Wallace Room last Saturday.

An unidentified student who had been waiting in line for a book suddenly became over-heated and blasted a line of "abusive" language at the librarians behind the desk.

After a small orgy of hand waving and shouting he was taken to Mr. Land, head of the library office.

Mr. Land refused to reveal the name of the student or comment on the disturbance saying it was an "internal matter for the library to settle."

Librarians said the student had been waiting in the line for about a minute.

They added that since The Varsity carried a story last Tuesday on the slow service of the library, students have been coming in "with chips on their shoulders."

Meanwhile Boris Freesman (II UC), who hung a petition in the Sigmund Samuel Library last week calling for faster library service, said last night "over 500 students have signed the document."

The petition, which is the brain-child of Freesman and was drawn up in ancient script by Gary Morgan (I UC), asks the library administration to re-open the Wallace Room as an open shelf reading room and to expand the circulation desk.

Freesman said he decided to "work up" the petition after waiting an hour for a book from the stacks.

"When it finally came up they told me it was a stack copy and couldn't be taken out," he said.

Morgan said last Friday that he had wasted hours and hours waiting for books and had "a sneaky" suspicion that he was not the only one.

The petition reads:

"Whereas it is recognized that the Sigmund Samuel Library is not now operating at the maximum efficiency to provide the students with the benefits of adequate library facilities,

We the undersigned students of the University of Toronto, do herewith implore the administrators of the university to re-organize the present system."

When 5000 signatures have been placed on the petition it will be presented to the Chief Librarian, R. H. Blackburn.

Both Freesman and Morgan feel library officials will be forced to take "constructive action" when presented with this mandate of student opinion.

So far, reactions from students over the petition have been varied.

Ronald Rubinoff (III UC) said he signed the document because "everything on it is more or less true."

"I can't browse any more in the Wallace Room so I don't bother much with it. The closed system is slow and no good," he said.

Merle Grant (III UC) said she saw the petition Friday but did not sign it "because it was a waste of time."

Nevertheless she thought the present library set-up was "inconvenient" and added she preferred the open shelf system of last year.

Linda Alexander (II UC) said she "had every intention of signing the document."

When asked if she thought the document would accomplish anything she snapped "probably not."

Freesman said most of the students in their third and fourth years are not signing because they have easy access to the stacks.

"They just don't give a hoot for the rest of us," he added.

McGill Prof Claims Cheating Organized

Cheating on day-to-day assignments, well organized by student fraternities, exists in every Canadian university, a McGill University physiology professor said last night.

Dr. Arnold Burgen, appearing on the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. television program "Fighting Words," said he agreed completely with a quotation that organized cheating is a part of student culture.

He said it occurred mostly in preparation of laboratory experiments and essays.

Students copy similar assignments meticulously filed by fraternities, he said.

"It is very well organized: there is no doubt of it," Dr.

Ross' Prediction: Third University

Dr. Murray G. Ross, present vice-president of the University of Toronto and newly appointed president of York University, said Friday night he expects to see a third university in Toronto by 1975.

He predicted the flood of university students in the next five years will exceed all expectations.

Dr. Ross believes the U of T, now preparing for a student body of 23,000 students in 10 years time will have reached that total by 1965.

"Unless York University moves very quickly and is ready in 1965 with a campus and buildings of its own, the number of students who will not get into a university in this area will be much greater than previously anticipated," he said.

The U of T's 10-year expansion plan calls for the building of an entire new west campus to cope with anticipated increases in enrolment. Plans call for the spending of $52,000,000 in the next 10 years.

York University will open its doors next September in Falconer Hall at the U of T and move to Glendon Hall in North Bayview the following year.

U of T president Dr. Claude T. Bissell has already predicted it will have an enrolment of 10,000 within 10 years.

Dr. Ross said there is every indication there will be at least 92,000 students seeking admittance to Ontario universities in 1975, compared with the present 25,000. Of these, 46,000 will be in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

Army Man Attacks PC Defence Policy

A retired RCAF wing commander told the campus Liberal Club last night government funds which should be spent in developing a mobile striking force are being wasted.

Mr. John Gellner, who is also the military affairs editor of Saturday Night magazine, spoke on the future of Canada's defence policy, in Elmsley Hall, St. Michael's College.

Mr. Gellner said the threat of all-out nuclear war is actually very faint. "For this reason I don't feel new fighter planes are actually necessary. Thus, there is no reason for spending extra money to strengthen radar lines."

Mr. Gellner said there is a waste in Norad amounting to about $250,000,000. He felt the main drain on defence funds is "an overburdened administrative staff that doesn't fit the time."

As an example, Mr. Gellner said there are 14 higher army headquarters and only 13 battalions and added any business with more executive than workers is senseless.

He suggested the government set up a Royal Commission consisting of experts in the field of defence "to fine-comb our defence system and come up with ways of saving money."

He felt with the money saved an excellent air transport program could be developed and as a result our armed forces would become a strong mobile deterrent force.

When questioned on nuclear disarmament, Mr. Gellner said "the purpose of war is peace" and "we wage war to create conditions which are more favourable than existing ones."

"Further," he said, "we can only use such weapons that can bring about a better condition and obviously nuclear weapons are too powerful and destructive for this purpose."

Mr. Gellner said total disarmament is unfeasible because there would still have to be one force powerful enough to enforce it, and eventually this force would become tyrannical.

He said a nuclear test ban is inevitable but there will still be some cheating on the ban.

He favored partial disarmament but added it too has drawbacks.

Mr. Gellner said the purpose of NATO is to deter a nuclear war. An aggressor will start the war only if he is certain his first attack is so powerful that only a slight counter-attack will be made."

"The object of NATO is to put a certain amount of doubt into the calculations of the aggressor. The aggressor must be made to think perhaps his first blow will fail."

"For defense we have to look to an offensive deterrent. Anti-missiles are too expensive and uncertain for their purpose," he said.

Mr. Gellner, questioned about the Avro Arrow, and said the plane was "started and finished foolishly." It was simply a case of "the little fellows trying too much."

He felt the Arrow might have been kept if there had not been a change in government. The Conservatives had been against it from its beginning, he said.

Rhodes Scholar

A University of Toronto graduate has been named one of Ontario's two Rhodes Scholarship winners for 1960.

Timothy Reid, an honors graduate from Trinity College, is now at Yale University doing graduate work in economics.

He is the son of Escott Reid, Canadian ambassador to West Germany. At the end of his third year at Trinity, he was awarded an Alexander Mackenzie scholarship in political science and economics and a MacInnes scholarship in the same subjects.

He served on the board of stewards at Trinity and on the Students' Administrative Council and was an outstanding performer on the Varsity Blues football team.

The nomination was announced yesterday by A. W. Gillespie, secretary of the Ontario selection committee.

The second Ontario student named is David Stager, a graduate of the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph.

Dentsman Hits Big Time:

"Restless" Put On Wax

A new record "Restless" written and recorded last summer by Mike Lococo (III Dents) is expected to hit the record bars in the next three months. The honky tonk instrumental will be followed by another record now on paper called "Strange Mood" which Lococo has tagged the "quiet village type."

Working as a bellhop in a Niagara Falls hotel last summer, Lococo was approached by disc jockeys who were interested in some original material.

The DJs, old friends of the Dentsman, liked his music and decided to promote one of his songs.

Lococo then rounded up the best musicians he could find and recorded "Restless."

The group, formed by Lococo who plays the piano, consists of Joe and Vic Rosiane, Greg Scobie and Wally Wathem. The quintet call themselves The Starlites.

"Fooling around with Dentistry and education," Lococo said, "I don't have enough time to spend on writing music and recording."

"I'm taking Dentistry because I like to help kids," he said. He plans to specialize in Orthodontia. "I also like the money and security that goes with the profession."

"Working on St. Michael's College Mikities, records and Dentistry" I'm beginning to realize the significance of the expression—jack of all trades and master of none," he said.

Lococo is musical director of this year's Mikities production "Short Engagement," and has written nine of the 15 songs featured in the show.

St. Michael's students are finding themselves short of time so near the Christmas exams, he said. "They can't devote enough of their time to the show."

"If they had more free time and could spend it working on Mikities the cast could grind out a real professional show."

The song writers have turned some great songs this year and the show is a sure fire, he added.

Prof Says West Needs Emphasis On Spiritual

Dr. Frank Uhlir, former vice-president of Czechoslovakia, Saturday night told about 50 University of Toronto students the West must consider man's spiritual side if it is to survive against the materialist Eastern bloc.

Dr. Uhlir, now a sociology professor at Dalhousie University, Halifax, told a Varsity Christian Fellowship-sponsored meeting sociology is only meaningful when man's spiritual side is considered.

He said the real difference between East and West today lies in their differing views of what man is. The West sees him as a spiritual being, the East as a material one, he said.

Religion, he said, also provides continuing purpose for the individual against tendencies to submerge him in both East and West.

He said religion gives history purpose. "Suicideism", he said, arises when men lose the spiritual dimension in their lives.

Dr. Uhlir also preached at yesterday's All-University Church Service in Hart House. His topic was "The Suffering Church."

He said the greatest sin of the Christian Church is the division within it. It was certainly the will of Jesus Christ that the Church be one, Dr. Uhlir said.

He called for Christians to pray humbly for the Church's reunification.

Former UofT Lecturer Heads WUS Program

A former University of Toronto lecturer has been appointed Canadian Co-Director of the 1960 World University Service Summer Program to be held in Israel.

Dr. W. J. Waines, Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences at the University of Manitoba will be responsible for much of the planning and implementation of the summer program.

Plans so far include a three-week seminar at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, a period of study and work in various collective settlements, and field trips to all parts of Israel.

Approximately 45 Canadian students and professors will be selected to participate in the program in conjunction with delegates from other countries and members of the Israeli academic community.

Education Behind The Iron Curtain

While a few Canadian students struggle for one or two hours each week to learn the highly inflexible Russian language, many Soviet students are making a full-time task of studying English at various language institutes throughout the USSR.

The Teleological Institute in Moscow is such a school.

Its English Language department is housed in a four storey building on Raspopinski Prospect in the Moscow suburb of Sokolniki. Here the streets are very wide, tree-lined, and quiet. But inside the institute is humming with activity.

A student has at least five hours of lectures a day, and the barest minimum of studying is one hour for each hour of lecture, although most students do more than that, so that the result is a 12 hour day.

Saturday is a full day with lectures and study periods afterward. Sunday is a day of rest in theory only. This 12 hour day, six day a week, 10 months a year grind begins September 1 and finishes June 30.

The Dean explained to me that the Teleological Institute is not at all a part of Moscow's enormous Lomonosoff University. The department of languages, she said, at Moscow University was on a much higher level than the Institute. Gifted graduates from her school, were sometimes admitted at Lomonosoff on the basis of good marks in the very stiff competitive entrance exams.

A student enters the Teleological Institute upon completion of his 11 year Middle School course. There are many applicants for every available vacancy and the choice is settled through entrance exams on a competitive basis.

In their first year at the Institute students have 20 hours of English per week. This includes grammar, phonetics, etc. In addition they have two hours of geography and history of the English-speaking world, two hours of Latin, four hours of history of the USSR and four hours of physical training.

Although the exams are very stiff the failure rate, even at the end of the first year, is quite low as students work very hard to avoid incurring the penalty of failure—not being permitted to continue their studies in the "daytime."

Second year students have less geography and history and more psychology and pedagogics to train them for their future roles as teachers in Russia's schools. Third, fourth and fifth year students learn their English in a very practical way—all lectures, bar none, are given in English! If we turn this about we find an interesting question: How many Canadians, whose native language is English, would derive benefit from a lecture on pedagogics delivered in Russian?

Their literature course includes Chaucer, Milton, Shakespeare, Dickens, Thackeray, Galsworthy, Hardy, Wilde, Cranley, James Aldrich, Priestley, George Bernard Shaw, Graham Greene, Howard Fast, Dreiser, Jack London, Steinbeck, Hemingway, Hellman, O'Neil and others. (The only Canadian author who seemed well known was Dyson Carter, author of "FATHERLESS SONS".) The students spoke of these authors and their works with an authority which can come only of long and thorough acquaintance. Many a student, at a Canadian or American university, would have been proud of their knowledge of English literature!

I should like to point out before I go further that these students were definitely not a picked group selected for the benefit of a visiting foreigner. The Dean walked through the halls with me and from among the crowds of students I picked several and interviewed them.

The students are able to keep up this pace partly because they have no material worries whatsoever. A first year student receives about 220 roubles per month. After paying for his room, board, transportation and a few extras he doesn't have much left over. That's where the incentive program comes in. As he moves from first to fifth year his bursary increases from 220

Big Prizes,
No Takers

A "low percentage" of University of Toronto students entered the National Federation of Canadian University Students' photography contest, officials said last night.

Just over 300 entries were received for submission for the contest. Only 19 members of the 160-men Hart House Camera Club submitted entries.

Results of judging for the national contest will be released Dec. 10. Prizes of $100 will be given for winners in each of 16 categories. Cash awards will also be given to runners-up in each category.

Hart House Theatre: The University College French Club presents Molière's George Dandin on Tuesday, December 8.

Hart House Theatre: The annual medical mish-mash, Daffydil, will amuse from December 14 to 18. All tickets $1.50.

The UTDC Drama Festival will take place at Hart House Theatre on January 8 and 9, with noted author and director Robertson Davies adjudicating.

On January 8 the School of Nursing will present A Maid Goes Forth To War, Victoria College: The Flattering Word, and St. Michael's College: The Rising of the Moon.

On January 9, OCE will stage Thornton Wilder's The Happy Journey, Sunday Costs Five Pesos by the Trinity Dramatic Society, and UC will produce Strindberg's Miss Julia.

range and colour be employed?

The choir seemed too perfectly balanced: that is, contrast was not effected enough and, accordingly, a growing feeling of boredom set in after several numbers. There appeared to be no regard for definition in the entries of different voices and no attempt to bring out the textual significance of each selection. Also in the choir's disfavor was the distressing absence of even one lusty forte — something which would have added considerable shape to several of the works performed.

Although generally not a terribly satisfying concert, there were several pleasant surprises. One of these was the fact that Dr. Willan did not indulge in any distracting pyrotechnic exercises, nor was he guilty of excessive mouthings. Perhaps as a result of this, however, the choir did not appear to be unusually inspired or joyful in its Alleluias.

Getting back to the finest attributes of the concert, we must point out the overwhelming resonance of the choir's bass section; the basses continually provided the finest section work of the evening as well as the most contentedly secure and accurate entries. We must, however, reluctantly mention the frankly inadequate entries of the not once more than a few bars. Unfortunately they produced a tone which could not be described as inspiring.

Dr. Willan has for years on Canada represented the finest of English church composers; they are indeed indebted to him for many superior contributions to organ literature, as well as numerous compositions for choir and orchestra. It would seem now, however, that Dr. Willan is attempting to combat the successors of Webern and Stravinsky with a style which is on the decline, to say the least, and one which simply does not have the spirit of the age in its makeup.

The general sonority of the choir, and especially the resonance of the bass section were very much appreciated. Our disappointment stemmed from the impression that personality and depth of feeling have no place in the interpretive equipment of this choir.

talent galore

The Board of Broadcast Governors recently stipulated that within two years all Canadian television programming should contain 55% "Canadian content."

A number of broadcasters have expressed consternation at the ruling, finding it oppressive. We cannot agree.

For one thing by allowing such things as the World Series to be classified as "Canadian Content" because of its "interest to most Canadians", the Board has shown that it intends to interpret its ruling very liberally.

For another thing, the remaining 45% leaves more than enough air time to run the best non-Canadian shows produced. There will still be room for American variety shows, news commentaries and dramas, fine richly-produced shows running the complete gamut from pure entertainment to "education."

As for the Canadian part, if any broadcasters are wondering where they can find enough talent to fill 55% of their time, we can make some suggestions.

Why not turn their facilities into workshops where any Canadian with an unperformed work or an unused talent, good, bad or indifferent can have a hearing. With such a system 55% of any station's time could be filled by U of T undergraduates alone. We know of unused playwrights, poets, actors, directors, folk singers, pop singers, composers, etc., on this campus that could make excellent use of the technical apparatus of a television outlet. They could not only get a chance to see what their work looks like but would provide each other with such rarefied competition that the less talented among them would soon be filtered out.

These stations are, of course, welcome to find Canadian content wherever they can. But if they run out of material they are welcome to come among us. We will be glad to help.

Valerie
Siren

For Valerie Siren the Hit Parade is a "line production of songs", and popular only part of a succession of passing fads.

To Priscilla Wright, the Hit Parade is a measure of fame, the beginnings of a promise of a career in show business.

Music for both girls is a most important part of their thinking now and in their future. Priscilla Wright, in her first year at U of T, has plans to make a name for herself in "popular music". For Valerie Siren, the music is not only means of entertainment but an expression of true human experience.

Priscilla Wright became an overnight success in the "pop music" field five years ago with her recording of "Man In A Raincoat". She was only 17 years old when the record was made, and is now known as a child prodigy.

Priscilla's career began when her father, a commercial song-writer, needed a young girl for a spot announcement, and used his daughter. By luck, her few moments on the air were heard by Harold Pound, chief of Sparks Records, who immediately telephoned her father.

Within a few days, Priscilla had signed a recording contract.

The problem then was to find a song to record. Her father dug up an old song which he rearranged, changing the tempo and adding trumpet notes at the end of every line. The result was "Man In A Raincoat".

Priscilla's next big break came when she was played at a disc jockey's concert. The jockeys were impressed with the song and the girl when they returned home they gave the record a play on their programs.

Within a month, Priscilla and her father were on the Top Ten in the hit parade. She stayed on the Hit Parade for another six months.

Her phenomenal success on the Hit Parade followed by television appearances on the Sullivan Show, the Julius LaRosa Show, and this country on The Denny Vaughan Show at Holiday Ranch.

Valerie Siren combines a training in folk music with a love of folk music.

She feels that every folk song is an to 290 roubles. In addition, should he have excellent marks he receives a bonus of 25 per cent. Top notch students receive a "Stalin stipend" of 700 roubles. Their expenses are virtually the same as those of a first year student. As medical, dental, optical care are free and books and theatre tickets virtually so, Stalin stipend students really live the life of Riley.

During their two month summer vacation students rarely work, except a few weeks, on a volunteer basis, at harvesting time. A special committee, elected by the students themselves, allocates the space reserved for the Institute at various resorts, among the students on the basis of need and family income. Thus a student can choose between a trip to the Black Sea, a rest home in the hill country or maybe even a trip on the Volga. His request is not always accepted, but it is at least considered and if the committee decides the student's family cannot afford to pay his holidays his request has a good chance of being accepted.

On graduation a few of the top students go on to the University for post-graduate studies but most of them take their teachers' certificates and begin teaching the following autumn. The idea, too prevalent here, that teachers in the USSR have no choice in the location of their new jobs is an inaccurate one. On the other hand their choice is not absolutely unlimited. The Ministry of Education sends the Institute a list of jobs open. First choice is given to the students graduating with the best marks. Another incentive to hard work.

For every seven students there is one professor. Although very few had ever been out of Russia their English was in many cases so far from tuned — colloquialisms and all — that they would have had no trouble whatsoever passing as non-Canadians. Their salaries range from 1050 to 1600 roubles per month. (A worker earns between 800-1000.) Head of Link (similar to our department head) earns over 2000. A Choir member from 3000 up. There is a 550 rouble bonus for holders of scientific degrees.

One could not help but be struck by the impression that here was an organism succeeding in its endeavour to turn out each year on a greater number of highly competent language teachers. There are several such Institutes in Moscow and in very other Russian city of any size.

The recent shuffle in the directorship of "Short Engagement", the Mickities '60 offering, coupled with the problem of keeping the cast in top form over the Christmas holidays has set St. Michael's thespians in a furor. The musical is slated for Hart House Theatre the first week after the holidays, January 5, 6, and 7. So far less than fifty seats have been sold despite posters and ticket booths. St. Michael's students, traditionally sluggish in responding even to their own activities are being counted upon to give the cast a morale boost. Tickets are on sale daily in the Concession Hall roundabout 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

of the feelings of a cultural group that can only be expressed by an artist who knows, and understands the people from whose culture the song springs.

She has been studying music seriously for several years and feels that the study of music never ends. Her musical training will continue as long as she sings folk-songs. Although she grew up in an environment of Ukrainian folk songs her interest in serious folk-singing did not begin until four years ago when she spent a summer with a group of enthusiasts.

She studied this type of music with great intensity and worked hard to perfect her approach. Two years ago she began to sing publicly and since then has appeared several times on CBC television, and before children in youth organizations around the city.

Her favorite audience, however, is old people. She feels that an older audience understands and encourages her. They appear to be more sentimental and appreciative about their native songs.

unchristmas

Christmas is nearly upon us and you're starting to think about Christmas cards. This year there are few, although not too many, sick Christmas cards available. We call them unchristmas cards.

University students, usually find the whole business less painful if they go to the University Bookstore and buy a few dozen U of T cards. You can send these to practically anybody without offending. They aren't exactly memorable, of course, but they get the job done.

How about a change? Like, U of T unchristmas cards.

You can make these yourself. Nothing will ruin a student's Christmas holiday faster than one of these. Directions: take a sheet of essay paper; fold it in four with the printing on the outside; then on the inside you print, in jolly colorful letters: "what are YOU doing Christmas day?"

Horrifying, isn't it.

Or if money is no expense, you can have a reduced version of last year's examination timetable printed on the inside of a red fold of cardboard.

Sick cards (note: these are not get-well cards) can be sent from each faculty and college too. For instance, we foresee one from Library School with our favorite Charles Addams cartoon on it, the one where the man is standing patiently in front of the circulation desk with an arrow in his back.

"So sorry sir," the librarian purrs sweetly. "Our first-aid manual is on reserve."

Poison would naturally be the theme for Household Economics girls. Maybe a female fiend standing over a blazing cauldron muttering "what will we give SPS this Christmas?"

And from accountants the caption would have to be "See$on$ Greetings."

There are lots of other sadistic possibilities. Think it over, Merry unchristmas.

ducks

A U of T pilot told us about this. Quite illegal, of course, but very effective.

It seems the best way to hunt ducks is from a light plane. You mount a couple of heavy gauge shotguns on the wings, which you can trigger off from the cabin.

Then you sneak up behind a formation of ducks, and let fly, before they can look back over their shoulders.

A friend picks up the remains in a truck.

fable

A student struggled for years to get through the University of Toronto. He worked the year around, never had any time for extra-curricular activities. He scraped through each year with the lowest possible marks because he never had enough time to study.

Eventually he passed his finals. All summer he looked for a better job, and finally, when he was almost out of money, he found just what he had been looking for. Now he could sit back for a few hours a week and enjoy life.

Convocation rolled around and he was a few minutes late getting there. Thinking about his sudden success, and the old friends he would meet again that sunny afternoon, the student hurried down St. George Street. He turned left and walked, along Hoskin Ave. Happy as a lark, he wandered into the Hoskin Ave. crosswalk.

The truck threw him almost 50 feet. They buried him in his academic gown.

leeches

Dear Abey:

I'm a 20-year-old college student and most people say I'm good looking. I have a terrific problem about my love life. See, I've been going out with a handsome, kind, generous med man for almost a year. He loves me very much, and I love him. He's responsible and in a few years he'll have a good job with a high salary.

Now here's the fantastic problem. Right now he doesn't have enough money. I mean, enough to take me out where I want to go. We go to movies and dinner sometimes and to plays and dances, but naturally I'm entitled to a lot more, being good looking as I said. Like, I like him a lot but this other fellow works in a drugstore and makes $80 a week and has a car (Ford, but it's convertible.)

Now, he's not quite so responsible, as a matter of fact he's spent a couple of years in prison (although I'm sure he was innocent of at least one of the charges,) and has had several paternity suits served against him.

But he can give me everything I deserve. What will I do?

GREEDY

Dear Greedy:

Now don't worry, you're in a position that isn't much different from a lot of ceds. You can have your cake and eat it too, women have been doing it for centuries.

First of all have a talk with your clergyman. He'll tell you to stick with the man you love and who loves you. Then do this: keep the med man on string, by all means. He's not much of a catch right now, but he has staying qualities that the other man lacks. Make sure he's willing to stick around for a few years, and then go out with the drugstore clerk. After all, a girl has to watch out for her best interests. Chances are the ex-con won't be around very long anyway, but while he's here you may as well suck as much out of him as you can.

On the other hand, although he's pretty useless now, your doctor will be able to support you in your early middle age until you decide you want your divorce. It's always wise to keep a couple of extra mules in the barn for future use. Go to it, girl. You're a credit to the sex.

... and Priscilla Wright

important aspect of popular singing is song interpretation. Training, she feels, interferes with interpretation.

She considers personal appearances as a challenge to hold the attention of an audience. "Once you have this attention," she says, "you can make the audience do anything."

The greatest pleasure in public folk singing for Valerie Siren comes in making the audience "feel with you". The purpose in singing as in drama is for the audience to experience what the artist is portraying. But the experience is not as painful to the audience as it is to the artist who is experiencing the emotion in its original form. The audience merely experiences an imitation of the artist's emotion.

Although she does not believe that there is intellectual appeal in a folk-song, she feels that an artist must understand and feel the song in order to present it.

The labor movement and the bohemians are responsible for the present popularity of folk-singing, Valerie maintains. Labor movements are interested in the common man and in his modes of self-expression. This has resulted in a collection of "worker's songs".

"The bohemians and beatniks," she says, "in trying to escape from our materialistic society have sought true expression. In folk songs they have found some of what they are looking for."

Valerie does not believe that there is a certain type associated with either folk or classical singers. The existence of such a type would be a sign of conformity and Valerie does not like conformists.

On the other hand, she dislikes non-conformity which is done simply for its own sake. She considers "odd-balls" completely one-sided people who represent only an extreme fringe of non-conformist character.

Both Valerie and Priscilla are working hard in their fields. Show business for Priscilla is not glamorous, but the "hardest business in the world."

And even then, after years of work, talent is not a sure guarantee of success. The public still holds the success or failure of the "popular singer" in the palms of their fickle hands.

For Valerie, a folk singer must combine a good natural voice, extensive musical training and a knowledge of the people and the culture from which the folk song originated.

And then the artist who wishes to specialize in folk-music must practice diligently for long hours and present always a pleasant and engaging personality to the public.

Both girls place great importance on getting their university degrees. They feel that no matter what the future may bring them in the way of careers, a solid education will always give them something to fall back on.

They are both certain to contribute greatly to musical life on the campus.

daffydil coming up

Fertile Moon Shot

The moon will get another working over next week as the Medical Faculty's annual production of DAFFYDIL takes over the Hart House Theatre.

This marks the third year since the Daffydil format was changed from a revue to that of a book show. The story deals with a Russian project to send a rocket to the moon manned by the world's most fertile woman and virile man; the search for these two chosen people becomes a major problem. The woman turns out to be a Russian discus throwing champion by name of Tanja; the man, a Toronto medical student.

The book is the fruit of the efforts of half a dozen medical students including Daffydil Chairman Manfred Harth, Peter Adam, one of the Directors, explained (?) that "There is really no attempt to be faithful to the plot. It's only something to tack it on to." He denied that the show would offer any serious solutions to problems of East-West conflict, but he did say that "it will prove beyond a doubt that men are superior to women."

Music and lyrics for the show purport to be original, and have been written by Mel Ball, Roy Sholket, Joey Starr and Martin Jerry. The orchestra is under the direction of final year student Sheldon Schiller, who has a dance band of his own.

For the 10th year in succession, choreography is by Sid Vouden, who has done work with the CBC. One of the dance numbers will be in Russian style, but Vouden denies that he has ever been to Russia.

The cast is made up of about a quarter of the enrolment in the faculty, including 25 of the faculty's 80 women — the loveliest 25, of course.

Daffydil will run Monday through Friday next week, December 14th to 18th. Tickets are available at Hart House Theatre all week, at the POT huts Monday, the Medical Society office Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, and the students' lunchroom in the General Hospital Wednesday. Already Thursday and Friday nights are near-sold out.

Germany Quebec Crusader Here Bissell Speaks Scholarship For Canada Arts Panel Asks Residence Loans

Students interested in promoting international understanding will have a chance to do so while studying at a German university under a scholarship sponsored by the World University Service.

The scholarship, announced last week, is open to undergraduates in their third and final years and to recent graduates. It covers the cost of tuition, board and travel within the German Republic.

Duration of the award is twelve months, starting Oct. 1, 1960. Applicants must be willing to assist the campus WUS Committee on their return.

Preference will be given to students with a knowledge of the German language.

Applications are available from WUS of Canada, 22 Willcocks St. and must be returned to that address by Jan. 20, 1960.

Frank Scott, Montreal poet and crusading lawyer, will discuss the arts in Canada with three University of Toronto English teachers Thursday evening.

The panel, sponsored by the U of T CCF Club, will be moderated by Hugo MacPherson of the University College English department. He is a Canadian Broadcasting Corp. art critic and a moderator on the program "CBC Views the Shows".

Also participating will be Jay Macpherson, Victoria English teacher and poetess and Douglas Grant, UOC professor and scholar of Restoration and 18th-Century literature.

Mr. Scott's career as a crusader for civil liberties in Quebec includes taking to the Canadian Supreme Court the cause of Quebec's well-known Padlock Law which the court ruled invalid and the case of the cancellation of the liquor licence of Montreal Jehovah's Witness restaurateur Frank Roncarelli.

The panel will begin at 7:15 p.m. in Victoria College's Margaret Addison Hall.

At 4:15 p.m., Mr. Scott will speak on "This Affluent Society" in room 8, UC.

OTTAWA — University of Toronto President Claude T. Bissell Friday voiced support of the idea that the government should legislate to allow loans to universities for building residences.

Addressing the Ottawa branch of the University of Toronto Alumni Association, he said the real luxury in university education is the high first-year failure rate, not the cost of building residences.

He supported the idea of loans for residences in reference to the fact that the National Conference of Canadian Universities has several times urged the Government to implement this proposal.

He stressed the need for more residential accommodation in universities and said this emphasis is in a sense the answer to those who complain that residences are an unnecessary luxury.

"The evidence is overwhelming," he said, "that the regulated life of a residence and the example of senior members do produce better academic results."

He continued: "It is from the residences that will come the cultivated taste, the interest in art and music and letters of which this country still stands in such desperate need."

Perhaps the great intellectual problem of our times, he said, is the problem of the failure of communication between specialists.

The answer to this problem, he said, will be found not in the classroom but in the informal hours outside classes when students talk over together the problems which deeply concern them, he said.

McGill President Lauds Sauvé's Horse-Trading

MONTREAL — The head of McGill University says Quebec's Premier Sauvé, in his willingness to work out an agreement on education grants, has given Quebec universities their brightest outlook in years.

Dr. F. Cyril James made the statement in a special report for the McGill News, official publication of the McGill Graduate's Society.

Dr. James said McGill hopes to wipe out a $3,460,424 deficit if the Federal-Provincial grant plan goes through.

He said Quebec's refusal over the past seven years to accept Federal aid has forced McGill to use capital funds from investments.

"It is an exhilarating prospect to contemplate the possibility that by the solution of the controversy, McGill might return to invested endowments the amount it has borrowed and once again be in a position at least as good as that of universities in the other nine provinces," he said.

UBC Puts On The Dog

VANCOUVER, Dec. 6, (CUP) —The headlines on The Ubysey last week were the biggest of the year.

"THUNDER DAY" screeched out the two-inch-high letters on the University of British Columbia newspaper. What did it mean? Flood? Devastation? No.

The headlines were for a dog.

Peter Meekison, president of the UBC Alma Mater Society, invested the dog ("Thunder") as UBC mascot.

The solemn ceremony was also attended by other student councilors and a pep band.

Officials of the event said the dog had been chosen because he seemed to "personify all the attributes of a mascot." Besides, the statement went on, "Thunder also looks very much like student councilor David Edgar."

A huge picture of the beast was centered on the front page. On both sides were commemorative poems, one of which terms the animal "Ubysey's latest blunder."

Deadline for entries in the annual Hart House Exhibition of Photographs is Feb. 12, an HH Camera Club spokesman said last night.

A new ruling for color slides marks the only departure from tradition in this year's contest, exhibition manager Ed Hoshkiw said.

Color slides will only be accepted if they are printed in m. 2X2 mounts, he said. Color slides were formerly accepted if they were mounted in any size.

The ruling is necessary because the Camera Club only has equipment to project the specified size, he said.

Entries will be accepted in five divisions.

—junior black-and-white submitted by those who have never entered the contest before.

—senior black-and-white submitted by those who have done well in the junior division in other years.

—Karsh trophy for pictures depicting campus life taken since Jan. 31, 1959.

—photo essay for a series of three to eight related prints.

All entries must be submitted by 5 p.m., Feb. 12, Hoshkiw said. Entries will be judged Feb. 14, and hung in the HH Art Gallery Feb. 15-27.

A private showing for entrants, Camera Club members and guests will open the exhibition Feb. 15.

Any HH member may enter the contest.

Poland

As in the Soviet Union, education in Poland is regulated by the guiding hand of the state, but here the approach to the matter is slightly different.

Although the majority of schools are state maintained, there are general-secondary schools, and vocational schools operated by religious orders as well as one Catholic university at Lublin.

Poland too, provides free education, stipends and requires practical application of technical subjects during the school year. But since a large proportion of the population is Catholic, parents may request that their children be given religious instruction in elementary and secondary schools.

Youngsters begin school at an early age. At three they enter nursery schools where they receive instruction in games and calisthenics, Polish, nature study, music, simple arithmetic, "artistic and technical exercises."

They then enter compulsory seven-year elementary schools, and cannot leave them until the age of 16. However, those who begin work at this age must continue general, and vocational education up to 18 years for 12-18 hours a week. These hours are classed as hours at work, and the laborer-students receive their usual wages.

Graduates of the elementary schools may enter general-educational lyceums for four years, prior to university, after they have sat for entrance exams in Polish and Mathematics. These schools are, for the most part, co-educational except in the larger cities. After the completion of the final year would-be graduates must pass a matriculation exam before a state examination commission.

Also at the secondary school level are a number of vocational schools — akin to the Soviet polytechnical schools — now being increased to put more stress on this type of education. Vocational schools are divided into two parts, three-year trade, and five-year technical schools. The first trains skilled workers for industry, and agriculture, and theory is put into practice during the study term either in the school workshop, or under actual work conditions.

The most capable graduates of these schools go on to the technical schools entering into the third year where they receive training in vocational and general subjects. Graduates of these schools may enter higher educational institutes, but in general only 10 per cent of them do so, and then mainly to stress subjects studied at the secondary level.

The proposed increase in polytechnical education which is now being considered will not, so the government claims, do away with humanistic education as this branch of studies is thought to be necessary for life in a modern society. However, it feels that there is a definite need to acquaint the student with the fundamental process in industry, and agriculture.

Once in university the student receives partial, full and prize scholarships (given for outstanding achievements) without regard to the economic status of the parents.

In addition, students are given 280 zlotys a month — $11.20 tourist rate — and up to 500 zlotys monthly during the fifth year.

Students from out of town stay in hostels for almost nothing. Lunch and dinner may be had for a few pennies in cafeterias, but breakfast must be bought in restaurants. Few students buy textbooks because they can be obtained from libraries. But should they want their own books, these can be purchased quite inexpensively.

The school year finishes in May, and the final exams are written June 15. Should a student fail, he may make another attempt during supplementaries, written in September. If he fails again, he may make another request — this is rarer — to write again in four days, placing the blame for the failure on the shoulders of his professors. If he is allowed to write, and fails again, he must repeat the subject.

Following exams, most students go to student camps — similar to summer camps in Canada — for a two week expenses paid vacation, either in the Northern lake district or in the Southern mountains.

Czechoslovakia

There appears to be more restrictions on Czech students than their Soviet or Polish counterparts, and in general their system does not seem as liberal.

All students start their scholastic life in the elementary nine-year schools. At the age of 15 the student finds a more diversified system. There are three levels. Of great importance are specialized institutions and apprentice schools, providing theoretical and practical training for industry. Secondary schools are conducted for workers in factories, and there are general two to three year secondary schools.

To enter university each applicant must write an exam in the subject he hopes to stress. However, the number of applicants exceeds the space available, and less fortunate ones are directed into other branches of study, mainly in the technical area.

Professors, and experts approved by the Ministry of Education and Culture draft the university curricula which include such compulsory subjects as political economy, dialectical and historical materialism and "the foundations of scientific socialism".

The curricula are said to contain all that the student need know to pass, and the textbooks are prepared along its outlines.

All students may participate in collective or individual talks with professors, "to aid them in maintaining good study habits". In addition they are in contact with the student committees.

If a student misbehaves socially or politically the committee can send him to work in a factory for a year. As one committee member told me, "Should they come from rich families, who opposed the entrance of the new regime, they may be sent to a factory to work until such time as the workers are satisfied they can participate fully in the new regime of 'workers and peasants'."

During the first year of the eight year study period in university, students work five days a week in a factory, and study one day at university. In the second year they become full-time students, but in the last year 6-10 weeks of work are required from them half way through the study period. During that time all expenses such as travel and accommodation are paid for by the state. Student stipends are also continued.

In the first year students are given 200 crowns a month for 10 months (tourist rate is seven to a dollar). During vacation students may travel or work to supplement their stipends. In the second year this amount is raised to 400 a month, in the third it is 600 and the fourth 800, and in the final 1,000. There is also an additional stipend for those with high marks.

All students receive the same basic stipend even if they live at home. Those who live in hostels pay two crowns 60 heller a month — the balance is paid by the state — for lunch and breakfast, and 50 crowns a month for a two bed room or 20 crowns for a five bed room, often with bunk beds. Rooms range from rather modern and spacious to little better than the worst cubicles in some of our YMCA's. The price of the room includes light, radio and two or three blankets.

Kitchener Triumph 6-1 In Lacklustre Exhibition

Kitchener Waterloo Dutchmen are going to need player help if they are to win the Olympic hockey title at Squaw Valley next February, but they needed no help in beating the listless Varsity Blues at Varsity Arena in an exhibition game Friday night.

Varsity held the KW team to a 1-1 tie for almost half the game as Neil Munro's goal early in the first period was matched by former Blue Mike Elik's tally in the same stanza.

Varsity experimented in the second period with a style of play that left it up to goalie Bob Giroux to hold off the experienced Dutchmen all by himself for three or four minutes at a time.

It didn't work, and at the end of the period Blues found themselves on the short end of a 5-1 score.

Dutchmen outshot Varsity 20-3 over this period.

Butch Martin, Bob McKnight and Bob Forham were the marksmen that ended any hope the Blues might have had of pulling an upset over the touted K-W squad.

Don Rope, a former Blue of the 1951-52 season scored the final goal late in the third period.

Varsity Captain John Macdonald was helped from the ice in the first period following a collision with McKnight. He suffered a badly pulled muscle in his right shoulder and did not see any action after the mishap. It is expected that he will be ready for the Montreal game this Friday.

Despite the easy win, Kitchener did not impress on-lookers as being good enough to whip the Russians at the Olympics. K-W Coach Bill Durnan admitted that he had his eye on 13 or 14 top-notch players whom he hoped to sign in time for the games.

Some observers felt that last year's edition of the Blues could have whipped K-W by "three or four" goals.

Only standouts for Varsity were Harry Neale and Neil Munro along with goalie Giroux who played extremely well under trying circumstances.

Kennedy expressed dissatisfaction with the positional play of his team as well as the general lack of hustle that has characterized their last two games, both losses.

Chappelle Leads SPS In Swim

School of Practical Science won the Intramural swimming meet rolling up 76 points to easily outdistance their nearest rival Trinity who had 56, UC had 31 points and then came Victoria, SMC, Pharmacy, and Architecture in that order.

Don Chappelle, a freshman in Engineering, was the individual star, winning the 50 and 100-yard free style events and leading the Skule 200-yard medley relay team to victory.

Chappelle also set records in winning the two races. He posted a time of 24.0 seconds in the 50 yard dash; the old mark was 24.6. His time of 53.5 seconds was only 1.4 seconds off the Senior Intercollegiate record and easily broke the old 100-yard mark of 56.5 seconds for Intramural competition.

Basketball Blues Lose On Tour

Varsity Basketball Blues returned Sunday from a week long tour of New York State, during which they played and lost three games with top ranked American teams.

A big, fast Seton Hall squad outclassed Varsity to win Wednesday 84-47. High scorer for Blues was Boris Wolchuk with nine points.

Friday, St. Peter's handed Varsity a 102-50 plastering. High man for the Blues was Jimmy Maguire with twelve points. The final game saw Blues play their best game although losing 83-56. Mencil was high scorer for Blues with twelve as they were only outscored 36-34 in the second half.

Coach John McManus admitted that his team was outclassed in every game, but expressed satisfaction at the consistent play of Maguire and Danny Norman.

Blues play St. Lawrence in Hart House this Saturday night.

UC Slaughter Dentistry 20-4 Gain Lacrosse Finals vs. SPS

UC Redmen moved into the Intramural Lacrosse finals by virtue of a 20-4 rout of Dentistry Friday noon in Hart House. The win pits them against Sr. SPS in the best of three finals beginning today at 1:00 p.m.

Bert Naylor continued his scoring spree as he hammered eight goals behind the harassed Dentistry goalie to bring his total for two play-off games to sixteen and his season's tally to 43 in only ten games.

Hat tricks went to Jim Hill, Don Fleming and Stan Fraser, while Howie Roth added two and George Spanetz (of the big mouth) one. Kennedy and Derrett had two each for the Dentists who almost equalled the high number of goals scored on UC this season. SPS managed five in one game.

The game itself followed the usual pattern as UC wore down their rivals for three quarters and then poured it on in the last eight minutes. The three-quarter score was 11-3.

UC are heavily favoured to whip the Engineers in two straight games, and thus regain the title they lost to St. Mike's last year. In the only two games that the finalists have met this year, UC have been easy victors, winning 10-0, and 15-5.

The series continues on Wednesday at noon and a third game if necessary will be played Friday.

Big man for the Engineers to stop is Naylor; if they can keep him from scoring as SMC did last year, they might have a chance.

Hungary Protest

Petition Hits UN

A petition signed by more than 20,000 Canadian university students in an attempt to stop the reported execution of 150 Hungarian young people was presented yesterday to a United Nations commission.

Wallace B. Nesbitt, vice-chairman of the Canadian delegation to the UN, presented the petition to Sir Leslie Monroe, special representative from New Zealand to the UN who is conducting an investigation of the 1956 Hungarian uprising.

Mr. Nesbitt said evidence of shocking events in Hungary in the past few months necessitates the co-operation of Hungary in clearing away any suspicions by means of an agent such as the Red Cross.

The student petition was instigated at the University of British Columbia after reports from the United States and from Hungarian refugees in Canada that Hungarian youths who had participated in the Hungarian Revolution had reached the legal age of execution and were to die this fall.

Although the Hungarian government denied this report, the UBC petition quickly spread to other university campuses, including the University of Toronto.

Nuclear Protest

Petition Hits UC

A sparsely-attended University College Parliament yesterday voted support for a recent University of Toronto petition calling for a stop in the testing and production of nuclear weapons.

A resolution that "UC should support the disarmament petition" was passed 17-10.

Opening up for the government Richard Stren (III UC) quoted President Eisenhower who in one of his perceptive moments stated "there is no alternative to peace!"

Stren stressed the dangers of nuclear war to civilization, pointing out that scientists estimate 25 times as many atomic weapons exist as are necessary to wipe out mankind.

He pointed out the possibility of war being caused by an accident. Recently a flock of geese flying from the north triggered the U.S. retaliatory mechanism which was stopped only at the last moment, he said.

First speaker for the opposition Oleg Pidhaini (IV UC) based his argument on his statement that the Soviet Union has no desire for agreement.

"Russia has to preserve a state of internal tension in order to preserve a semblance of continuing class struggle," he said. "To carry this out, Russia maintains her existence by means of secret police. As a result her economic system is unproductive."

Should Mr. Khrushchev acquire some Christian principles and allow his people more freedom, he will be suppressed, Pidhaini predicted.

Final speaker for the government, Bogdan Kipling (SGS), reiterated the petition was not framed for the interest of Khrushchev.

"It called for the Canadian government to take steps to reduce world tension and limit the spread of nuclear arms. These measures can be taken without diminishing the strength of the west and may eventually lead to world disarmament," he said.

Kipling suggested that the western nations test the sincerity of Khrushchev disarmament proposal.

Last speaker for the opposition Malcolm Wallace (II UC) stated the petition was based on a falsehood, and was not effective in swaying public opinion.

He said students misunderstand the petition, and its effect on the Canadian government is unclear.

Wallace pointed out that much government diplomacy is carried out in secret and it is unlikely that the petition would change their maneuvering.

He did not sign the petition and said that mainly socialists had asked him to sign it.

A speaker from the floor pointed out that perhaps the Socialists were more interested in mankind, something that the Tory minds would not be able to comprehend.

Store Window Fired At Vic Student Loses Rifle

Metropolitan Toronto Police yesterday confiscated the rifle of a Victoria College student after a .22 calibre slug winged through the window of a Yonge St. furniture store near the Vic men's residence.

Dave Keenleyside (IV Vic), a resident of Gate House at Vic said last night police questioned him at 3.30 p.m. yesterday and then took his rifle.

They told him a .22 slug had passed through an upstairs window of the Rawlinson furniture store on Yonge St. about early yesterday afternoon.

Police decided the bullet had probably come from the third floor of Gate House. They searched the floor and found Keenleyside's gun.

But he has a perfect alibi. He was downtown at the time—in City Hall.

At the approximate time of the shooting he was asked by a City Hall police officer if the violin case he was carrying contained a violin or a machine gun.

Keenleyside does not believe his rifle was fired yesterday "I can't even see how it could have been fired to hit the store window. The store is slightly around the corner from Gate House and there are a number of trees in the way," he said.

Police questioning Keenleyside noticed his short wave radio and asked him if he picked up police calls on his set.

"They obviously didn't think I am the criminal type. When I answer 'no,' they told me what the police frequencies are," he said.

blitz

Returns from the University of Toronto's Blitz have now reached the total of $45,700.

With still 600 to 700 pledges outstanding, the final total is expected to top $50,000 but fall short of the $75,000 goal.

SMC Calls For Help, Brings In New Lead

Last night the Saint Michael's Students Administrative Council passed a motion which reversed its former stand on outside talent in Mickities, the annual review of SMC.

Voting 11-2, the council approved permitting Fin Arts Chairman Tom Sutherland to bring in non-SMC talent to fill the position of male lead. The conflict was renewed when lead Paul Hyrkiw resigned.

It was pointed out that Hyrkiw was ill and also under strain as lead in the Ryerson review and member of the Ryerson SAC. On this basis, Sutherland asked to be released from a promise made earlier to council.

In a motion of Nov. 17, which was approved unanimously, he stated he would not recruit outside SMC.

Dorothy Szymco, asked if the cast would advance one member, should the motion be defeated. Sutherland said a cast meeting Monday had given approval to his motion, in an effort to save the work of some 45 crew men.

Co-producer Marg Hamilton, speaking from the floor, said "much blood, sweat and tears had already gone into the show and that if it fails now I'll lose faith in St. Mike's." It will be a black mark against the name of the school, she said.

John Shields, the new lead from the St. Michael's Choir School, is the only one capable of handling the difficult leads opposite Mona Kelly and her "operatic voice". Miss Hamilton said.

Carol Jones said if the show

"flopped it was the student's responsibility not the council's." The main leads "hardly ever show up and the cast had to be begged before they turned out," she added.

Miss Hamilton pointed out that even the well-established AVR had to go out and look for a cast. She said there was no hope of promoting anyone of the cast to the lead spot.

Earlier in the evening, Council established a committee to investigate the barring of unworthy members from SAC sponsored events such as Mickities.

Jordan Sullivan said "I have done much soul-searching in view of the strong stand I took."

Newly reinstated SMC SAC President Jordan Sullivan said "I have done much soul-searching in view of the strong stand I took on the earlier motion, and I feel this preserves the spirit of that motion, namely that no SMC student be denied a position in favor of outside talent."

The motion was put to a vote when Miss Jones and Miss Szymco asked to be recorded as voting against it.

Debate Decides*Keep Christmas Sacred

Christmas should not be abolished as a religious holiday, regardless of its commercial connotations, the house decided in a debate held in Hart House Monday night.

Hart House Chaplain Rev. J. S. Cunningham, speaking after the debate said he wasn't quite sure that the question was debatable.

"Christmas, synonymous with Santa Claus, is part of our way of life," he said.

Rev. Cunningham said he hates the affront of shopkeepers and the crass commercialism that drains people of their money at Christmas.

John Calvert speaking for the abolition of Christmas said, "We should remove the name Christmas from December 25 and call it Security Day, Liberty Day or even Dollar Day."

"Christ himself didn't like festivals. He didn't appear as a gift package wrapped in shiny, krinkly paper," he said.

John Burbidge said he dislikes the abuse of the religious festival. "Secularly, Christmas means good will and friendship. Parties, card-sending and festivities symbolize this," he said.

Speaking from the negative side, Boyd Dowden said, "God is a myth invented by man to account for the existence of man. Who needs God? Throw out God and bring on the drinks. Let reason be your guide."

"Revelation can never be accepted in the face of reason. Christianity, Christmas, humbug," he said.

Ralph Eposito said, "As an advocate of Mary's little boy, I claim that joy, gratitude and love are needed to do anything."

"Take Christ and joy and gratitude and love from Christmas and you have a hollow shell."

Communists

The club's opinions are presented in the Communist Viewpoint, a mimeographed publication which first appeared on campus last month.

The club follows the views of the Communist Party of Canada which is allied with the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

Regarding national affairs, the club believes that the means of production and distribution ought to be owned by the people of Canada "because at the present time, decisions on this are not made by the democratic action of the people but by boards of directors," Goldstick said.

"The majority of the people are working to produce the goods and services of the country, which must be given up in a large share to non-productive capitalists," he said.

Goldstick termed Krushov's proposal for nuclear disarmament "sound." "It provides an opportunity for the western governments to express their sincerity in desiring peace by accepting it."

"The U of T student and staff petitions for nuclear disarmament are good things. There are, of course, other things involved in this question. The NATO council called for a 15 nation nuclear task force, but there is obviously no military advantage from spreading the same nuclear arms around to the possession of 15 governments," he said.

"The only purpose it could serve is to make it harder to disarm," he said.

The idea of the Hungarian government holding students for execution is ridiculous," Goldstick said.

"This supposes that the Hungarian government was so scrupulous that it would hold students till they were of age before executing them and so unscrupulous that they would execute them for crimes which they had committed while under the age of 18 which is contrary to Hungarian law," he said.

"This also would allow world opinion time to mobilize against them," he concluded.

Goldstick believes the exchange of visits between Eisenhower and Krushov allowed America to see Mr. Krushov.

"The Soviet people are even now seeing movies and press analyses, and discussing the subject. In this way they are getting a chance to evaluate the temper of the American people," he said.

"From what I have heard, the evaluation is positive."

Reports from the USSR have indicated there is a wave of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union, Goldstick said, "there is no truth in this at the present time. A few synagogues which were closed not by arbitrary measures but by a falling off of support," he said. "Actually, cultural activities have been re-established."

"The Communist Party of Canada is in a poor position to criticize the policies of the USSR when they have performed the greatest feat in history and the CPC has only a few thousands isolated followers. Such action would only increase cold war tensions," he said.

"By and large, they are doing the right thing."

Nfcus Travel Service Used More Than Ever

OTTAWA, Dec. 9, (CUP) - This fall more Canadian university students than ever before made use of their own all-student travel service.

Between Sept. 1 and Dec. 1, inquiries to the travel department of the National Federation of Canadian University Students increased 40 per cent over the same period last year, according to the head of the department.

J. P. Jinchereau said "So far 118 students have contacted us about travel information or assistance in making plans for European travel."

The NECUS travel department — the only travel bureau operated for university students or recent graduates — is one of the services provided by NFCUS headquarters in Ottawa.

The department offers its own conducted tours as well as assistance for individuals, in addition to a guidance service.

Out of the 118 inquiries, 56 came from Ontario, 26 from Quebec, 25 from the West and 11 from the Maritimes.

"Last year during the ten-month period from Nov. 1 to Aug. 31, 553 students wrote in asking for assistance," Mr. Jinchereau said.

"Eighty students travelled on our three conducted tours to Western and Central Europe," he said, "and individual travel arrangements were made for 24 students including ten exchange students who went to Europe under the sponsorship of the Canadian Association for Students of Economics and Commerce (CASEC)."

fixola

In the midst of the present TV scandals, it has been suggested that a more serious "fix" than that of quiz shows may have been going on.

We have heard it suggested that the system by which the popularity of television shows is rated may also be fixed.

If this were true it would not surprise us at all.

We have always known that cultural programs are really the most popular shows on television.

Thoreau And

After so long, I'm not sure there's any point pretending that this column has any continuity, but a few months (actually only weeks it seems like months) ago I broke off in the midst of some heady political speculations with a promise (or a threat) that I would write some more, so I'm—if you'll excuse the expression—committed.

At that time I was putting forth the belief that all government, including democracy logically involved coercion and that all individualism involved anarchy. The reason for this seems to be that both the government and the state unfortunately tend to become deified. This doesn't have to happen, but so often it does.

Deification of the state is not such an exotic growth as it is sometimes taken to be. It has as its basis a belief that can be held by a lot of presumably good people. This belief is simply that the law of the government must be obeyed under all circumstances.

This is the belief that is supposed to have kept Socrates in prison even when a chance was offered for escape; the state had accused him, condemned him and was on the point of giving him what by our standards was a highly humane execution but he would not escape. The law had to be obeyed. This is generally represented as being one of the most noble things about Socrates, and in this fascist age it is not hard to see why. The virtue of tragic submission to fate, necessity, or whatever other catch phrase is used to mythologize the authority of the state is deeply recognized right now.

This "virtue" has many subtle and unsubtle variations. One of these took place earlier this year in the SAC right here at the University of Toronto. A motion was put on the floor that, if passed, might have caused quite a bit of distress in certain quarters. During the debate on the motion one of the more prominent members of the Council, a man noted for his interest in good government asked to speak. What he said was roughly this: "Often during my years at this university I have deplored the fact that student governments do not realize that they are governments and must accept the responsibility of governing. This responsibility means that we must occasionally forget that we are human beings, must forget the emotional and personal motives that might tend to distract us from the cool and dispassionate performance of our duties. The motion on the floor represents one of these occasions. It is nasty, it is cruel, it is perhaps even vicious, but there are times when a legislator must do nasty, cruel and vicious things in fulfilling his responsibility."

There is the gospel of the corporate man on fairly well developed form, complete with the emphasis on a tragic necessity.

In this case as in most of the others, there is a very good reason why the cause of the dire "necessity" was not specified. Because as a matter of fact, the motion in question was not passed and strangely enough the sky has not fallen in, nor have any other horrible consequences followed.

In short, the necessity was not explained, because there was no necessity. Luckily it often happens, as in this case, that the governing body realizes that the necessity does not exist. But it also often enough happens that the whole legislative body is hoodwinked by a spurious necessity. Thus capital punishment is "necessary", war is "necessary", albeit no longer feasible; for the capitalists economic inequalities are "necessary"; for the communist it is "necessary" to enslave men now, that they may be free in a far-distant future. On and on it goes. And it must go on because if anyone were allowed to challenge the notion that there are deep and tragic necessities of one sort or another, then the proposition that the law must be obeyed unconditionally would

Sir Ernest MacMillan returned to podium of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra last night, for the first time since his retirement three years ago. For his programme he chose the music which has been most dear to him during his three decades of prominence in Canadian music, Mozart and Schubert. A constant supporter and prime mover in original Canadian compositions, he also chose a short Theatre Overture, Opening Night by Montrealer Robert Turner.

Billy The Kid

at least be open to question, and the state would be just another dead god, dogmatized.

Is this an extreme statement of the situation? Of course it is.

The presumed antidote to all of this is individualism, but individualism can be dangerous too. The proposition that goes with the deification of untrammelled individualism is: the law of the government must be disobeyed unconditionally. Even when it is not carried as far as this there are dangers. To illustrate: The other day I was browsing through a book store and noticed a soft-cover biography of Thoreau, the Walden man, a member of the New England transcendentalist group, who among other things once refused to pay taxes as a protest against government policy. The subtitle on the book was something like "the story of a man who believed in doing what he wanted to." A few minutes after I left the store I walked by a movie marquee advertising a western about Billy the Kid. There was Billy facing me with a gun and beside him appeared this publicity material: "Billy the Kid, who said, 'Nobody tells me what to do. I do as I please'."

The moral of this story is simply that anyone whose hopes for the world rest with the notion of individualism must answer this question: what is the difference between Thoreau and Billy the Kid? And that anyone who does answer this question will be discouraged from basing his hopes for the world on individualism. For from the point of view of individuality there is no difference between them. The difference is one of morality.

That is the trouble with basing one's notion of law either on the state or on the individual. In the case of the state the trouble is obvious. A state as such is not necessarily moral. And the same thing goes for the individual.

The conclusion from this that I would like to stress here is the paradoxical one that a man simultaneously must be an individual and must not be an individualist. He must be an individual in order to resist the bondage of the state; he must not be an individualist in order to resist the bondage of himself.

What can save him from both kinds of bondage is a morality that serves neither himself nor his government exclusively. The grounds of this morality is a topic we must save until later. This column is being written at 2 a.m. and that is no time to discuss the grounds of morality.

There is one aspect of an individual's morality, though, that I would like to say something about now, because it relates directly to his relationship with the state and its laws.

It is this: it is a common practice to distinguish man from lower forms by the things he is capable of doing; for instance, he is capable of opposing his thumb to his other fingers, and thus finds it easier to grip things than an ape does. And there are less mundane examples. But I would suggest a change in this conception. As injustice becomes more and more codified in the laws of the national state—and they are so codified, no matter what state is meant—a man will be distinguished from lower and more submissive forms, not by what he can do, but by what he refuses to do. Today this may well be the first moral law; the refusal to follow blindly either one's own impulses or the impulses of the national state, specifically called laws.

This is a general rule. If I manage to get another of these columns written before the end of the week, or if not, later, I would like to illustrate the general rule of refusal with a discussion of a specific mode of refusal: pacifism. Pacifism by no means simply involves a refusal to obey one's own government's injunction to fight; it also encompasses a peacefully negative attitude towards the enemy, and so represents this principle on more than one level.

The Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola, K.364, was the first work which gripped our attention. A product of Mozart's transitional period, this work, like the others Mozart wrote in concertante form, can by no means be considered gay, impetuous music as everything under K. 400 is commonly considered. The most unfortunate aspect of the Kochel number has been the black and white division we now have between numbers and late numbers, light effervescence and cynical melancholy. Mozart's musical experience was continually changing after his every trip to Italy, after he had the precision of the Mannheim orchestra we see some new forms and ideas enter into his composition and the extraordinary precision of the Mannheim school inspire this particular sinfonia.

The other extreme of adoring the note which Mozart wrote is just as much an insult to the composer, as Berlioz demonstrates so well in his famous attack against the Russian critic Oulibicheff. Russian knew the precise hour at which the author of Don Giovanni wrote the note of every one of his sonatas for a chord; he knew who fainted on hearing two clarinets play a major third in the orchestra of Mozart's first opera, and was angry if two clarinets played the notes in Beethoven's Fidelio. M. Oulibicheff is only doubtful on one point, and that is he was not quite sure whether Mozart was God.

As irrelevant as all this may seem, last night's performance of the sinfonia concertante, with Hyman Goodman, Stanley Solomon as the soloists, Sir Ernest MacMillan as the conductor, was a failure to recognize superior musical quality in this work tended to emphasize its excellence as a cure for insomnia. The first time in Mozart's composition the horn and the oboe achieve their brightness as orchestral instruments. In the Maestoso, the horns and oboes (two of each in addition to the strings being the concert orchestration) come in with conversational responses to the theme announced by the strings instead of simply running through a series of contrapuntal variations. The technical simplicity of the horn part assured us of the confident and direct registration which was realized.

In the opening string tutti, however, Sir Ernest seems to have forgotten Mozart was trying to recapture the artistic experience which the Mannheim school offered him. The net result was shockingly thin, devoid of any tension almost in the spirit of the composer's divertimenti. Later passages, and in particular the final presto, possessed a interpretive beauty all their own; for the fact that the presto's pizzicato was not really have been stressed, they provided with accompaniment by throbbing strings among the most pleasant sounds of the evening.

Both soloists showed a thorough understanding and familiarity with the other. We particularly admired Mr. Solomon's discretion in tuning his viola a half note higher than its orchestral sisters to a clearer definition. Mozart implies the ould be done but does not specify it; ification presumably being that the viola is written in the key of D.

The other major work was Schubert's at C major symphony, called No. 7 on program but more correctly No. 9, and found Sir Ernest at his best but his forvassals in primitive form. From the first solo, tempo and balance were irreachable but the unfortunate technical errors started to shake us. Very often this phony can sound repetitive to the point boredom, but not if the conductor is care-in building the melodic line and here Sir Ernest's strong, sure hand was in its best evidence. Details which sound unimportant first later emerge as the main course of the symphony; these the conductor noted to allent advantage.

The ugly slur which ended the first move-was due to an arbitrary revolution of sizeable portion of the strings against the of the orchestra. The first movement further marred by the inadequacy of trumpets, which should almost drown the rest of the orchestra, proclaiming her inversion of the theme or an addition of new material.

The most obvious and hence most common treatment of the third movement usually stresses the rushing, searing repartees between the cellos and violins. Instead of giving this thick tapestry in the orchestral ground (which has always struck us as an un-Viennese interpolation by some 19th century conductor) Sir Ernest experimented with the subtler woodwind parts. Unfortunately these emerged as technically inferior to it was a good try.

The architectonic glory of the last movement flooded out any technical trivialities.
The powerful brass quarried strong tones for a romantic tower, but the strings supplied the contemporary mortar. The violins came more ragged as the movement proceeded until in the final tutti we could sworn that a dozen castanets were recently introduced.

The ineffectual ballet suite from Gretry's rotten opera Cephale et Procris was used in the lumpy form which the 19th century conductor Motil gave it. Its only commendation is that it is one of Sir Ernest's favorites; tuneful but musically irrelevant, a piece of music which is justly written.

snow white

The University of Toronto discrimination scandal ended several weeks ago in a flurry of fuss and feathers.

U of T President Claude T. Bissell snapped back at the offending organizations immediately. Playing the stern father, he said in effect, we can't have this sort of thing on our nice clean campus.

A couple of days later the headlines died down, and the affair was forgotten, except by a few people concerned, on both sides of the battle line.

Bobbi Arrington was sickened by the whole mess. The Students' Administrative Council was thinking about putting up posters saying what a grand thing equality of race is. The sorority of girls were cursing the tactless handling of the issue by a couple of their leaders.

There was a bit of talk about a Caput investigation. This too died down, when the first Caput meeting after the Arrington incident led to a statement saying they were considering the relationship between fraternal organizations and the university.

A long period of time has passed since then. We are still waiting for disciplinary action to be taken. If it is taken here, other universities will perhaps learn that social rights can be granted to all races, and should be, especially at a university of allegedly intelligent and free-thinking persons.

The beams of a hypnotic trance have extended far too long from the deep south of the United States up to sororities and fraternities on the U of T campus.

The whole problem was brought to our mind forcibly a couple of days ago when we received word of a survey held among American universities to determine the extent of racial discrimination there.

Sixty-three colleges and universities all across the United States were polled.

Fifty of these institutions said fraternities and sororities on their campuses practiced discrimination. Half of them said such discrimination was forced on them by their national groups.

Approach an individual girl and ask her whether she is in favor of discrimination based on race, color or creed and she will probably say she is against it, on principle, at least.

But then she will go on to explain her position as a sorority member.

"I am a member of a large social group, run by an organization which knows better than I what should be done in such cases," she may say.

Or perhaps she will tell you one small Canadian chapter is helpless to fight against the will of so many other chapters, all of which she is sure support discrimination.

If you get too close to home, she will give you the "who are you to tell me how to choose my friends?" approach.

It's painful to see the influence these organizations have over the young women who enter them.

Their arguments are feeble and they themselves feel a little silly sometimes trying to defend a position they feel is wrong.

In the southern United States the discrimination against Negroes is far from subtle. There are signs over drinking fountains reminding the Negroes of the need for bowing down before the Superior White Race.

In Canada we have a more civilized outlook. Here we are subtle.
"We'll take in Jews, Negroes, or anybody else," a frat man will tell you, "but they never join. After all, they wouldn't be comfortable."
"And anyway," he might add, "Think what a problem it would be at parties."

Yes, we forgot. That is an important problem to any social organization.

We admit it would be wrong to force fraternities and sororities to integrate Negroes into their "brotherly little bands. When a fraternity or sorority member finds himself unable to cope with a rational argument in favor of integration, they usually fall back in anger and snap out, "You can't tell me how to choose my friends." They are right, in a way.

We aren't suggesting that every Greek letter organization on this campus should have to accept a quota of Negroes every year.

If we suggested they restrict their choice, we would be telling them how to choose their friends. We ask that they widen their choice.

The individual members of U of T fraternities and sororities have said several times they aren't in favor of discrimination.
They are apparently too weak or too well indoctrinated to try to break away from their pure white southern brothers and sisters.
Fraternities and sororities do a great deal more harm than good, both to the university that has been unfortunate enough to become connected with them and to the brain-washed members.

25 Universities Have Now Agreed On Renewed Model United Nations

MONTREAL, Dec. 8. (CUP)—To date 25 universities from Canada and the United States have agreed to meet in Montreal in February to breathe life into the remodelled University Model United Nations.

Lester B. Pearson will be one of the speakers at the first session of the revamped UMUN.

The newly-elected executive from the four major universities and colleges in Montreal have indicated a "world famous" speaker may also come to the meeting.

Earlier this fall, the UMUN almost collapsed because of internal difficulties. Since then, the students' associations of McGill University, the University of Montreal, Sir George Williams College and Loyola College have attempted to revive the UMUN.

Former chairman Robert Reeves of the U of M has resigned because he says he is unable to devote enough time to the job. Jean Dupriez will take his place, but Reeves will remain on the executive.

Another organization, the Student United Nations Association in Canada, has indicated it will hold a conference at the end of the UMUN conference.

Irwin Steinberg, a fourth year Commerce student at McGill, said "The main purpose of SUNAC would be to educate the student in UN affairs."

Steinberg says he hopes the delegates to the UMUN will attend the SUNAC conference to discuss the set-up of that organization. SUNAC would hold a national conference, a national seminar and a national model UN, and would also set up a national publication and essay contests.

SUNAC would also deal with problems that face the UN, and Steinberg says he hopes the opinions of this proposed body would be sent to the UN in New York.

He said SUNAC has the support of the United Nations Association in Canada.

Exam Change Possible For Ontario Grade 13

The Ontario Department of Education is considering a new way of marking Grade 13 departmental examinations but says it shouldn't worry the student who is normally prepared for the exams.

F. C. Asbury, assistant superintendent of the department's secondary school education branch, said papers will be closely watched over the summer.

Speaking to the Ontario Education Research Council last weekend, he explained that although more objective style questions will be used for Grade 13, essay questions are not being thrown out.

The experiment, he said, is being carried out to overcome wide variations in marks in recent years.

About 3,000 objective questions prepared by the Secondary School Teachers' Federation have been passed on to examiners.

Subjects in which these objective questions will be asked are zoology, French composition, chemistry, history, trigonometry and statics.

Crazy, Man, Crazy

Coffee Shop Jam Session

A University of Toronto student launched an off-the cuff jam session in a Hart House coffee shop yesterday afternoon.

Phil Fairman (II Vic) had everyone in the Tuck Shop, an eatery nestled in one corner of the House and off limits to females, swinging and singing as he strummed out the notes on his mandolin.

This is how it happened. Fairman and three of his pals were sitting around a table in the shop talking quietly, when one of the attendants handed him a large package shaped like a mannequin.

Fairman stripped off the paper and inside was a slightly tarnished and weathered mandolin with four pieces of adhesive tape running down the back to cover the cracks.

Evidently Fairman had bought it from a friend earlier in the week. His friend did not have the instrument with him at the time but promised to leave it at the coffee shop for Fairman to pick up later.

And now there it was. After coaxing from his buddies, Fairman began plunking out some tunes.

As classes broke af on the hour, students began wandering into the shop.

By this time the campus troubador and his friends were singing. Others joined in. Soon the whole place was in a musical uproar.

At one point in the jamboree, an artsman, Paul Chennan, clutching a black case containing a violin strolled up to the counter for a coffee.

Suddenly some one in the room shouted, "Hey, we need you".

But he never got around to playing it. Both musicians decided it was impossible to synchronize violin and mandolin and still come up with anything close to a melody.

So Fairman continued playing and Chennan joined in with the rest of the coffee shop chorus.

Quipped Fairman after the performance: "Tomorrow I'll pass the hat."

George Cadbury, one of the United Nations' financial advisors today will address the campus UN Club on the various technical assistance programs of the UN.

He recently returned from a three-year trip to Jamaica where he investigated that area's finances for the UN.

The meeting will begin at 4:15 p.m. in room 3F, University College.

A Technical Achievement..

The reproduction of the portraits in Yousuf Karsh's PORTRAITS OF GREATNESS represent a unique achievement in the history of printing. The fine photographic studies it contains were reproduced by sheet-fed gravure, under the supervision of the University of Toronto Press. The world-renowned house of Enschede in Haarlem, Holland, which has been turning out fine printing for more than two hundred and fifty years, was entrusted with the making and reproduction of the gravure cylinders. The text was first printed by offset lithography on paper especially manufactured for this book in Paris, France; the gravure printing of the portraits followed.

The problem of securing perfect facsimiles was heightened by the extraordinary range of tones in Mr. Karsh's portraits, from the deep velvet-like blacks to the delicate modelling of the light flesh-tones; the latter had to be reproduced without showing the normal half-tone screen. The result is as close to the quality of Karsh's original mat-finish prints as has ever been attained by any printing method.

The University of Toronto Press believes that the technical excellence of this production is worthy of the great academic institution for which it acts as publisher.

The first edition of PORTRAITS OF GREATNESS has been exhausted, but a new edition is in production, which will be delivered in February. Gift Certificates, which include a mounted reproduction of a photographic study from the book, are now on sale in the University Book Department for Christmas giving, entitling the recipient to one copy to be delivered in advance of publication of the next edition.

Canadian Math Courses Claimed Behind Russian

A professor helping to rewrite Ontario's mathematics curriculum believes our students are behind both Russian and American students in mathematics.

Rev. D. T. Fraught, of Assumption University, Windsor, believes Canadian students have fallen behind Russian students as much as three years. He also says U.S. schools have beaten us to the punch in introducing modern mathematics concepts.

The professor analyzed Ontario mathematics teaching at the first annual meeting of the Ontario Educational Research Council.

A new course of study, using most of the old one, is expected to be in use in Ontario Grade 9s by 1962, he said. A Grade 10 course will be ready in 1961 for experimental use.

In a recent competition between Canadian and U.S. schools the best Canadian, placing gained was a 33rd for an Ontario school.

"This means there were 32 schools in the U.S. that could produce in four years students better equipped in mathematics. A preliminary survey has disclosed that each of those 32 schools had introduced some of the modern mathematics concepts," said Father Fraught.

Ontario still teaches the same courses it did in 1900. Mathematicians are planning one Grade 13 course for students not mathematically inclined and two others of greater difficulty for the gifted.

TWO of the athletes Varsity fans will be able to see in action this weekend are shown here. On the left is Dan Norman, he will be in the lineup when the Basketball Blues play St. Lawrence Saturday at 3.00 p.m. On the right, Neil Munro, one of the stalwarts for the Hockey Blues this year. Munro and Harry Neale form the top defence pair in the Intercollegiate League.

Blues Host Carabins In League Encounter

Varsity hockey Blues will be after their second straight Intercollegiate victory when they meet University of Montreal Carabins Friday night at the Arena.

Blues will probably be without veteran right winger and Captain John Macdonald. He suffered a possible shoulder separation in a collision with a Kitchener defenceman last Monday night and is expected to be out for a few weeks.

Varsity, who were so impressive in their 7-3 conquest of Laval, have since disappointed everyone with two lacklustre displays in exhibition games.

Coach Jack Kennedy is faced with the problem of getting his charges back into the same form they showed for Laval for this all important league game.

Montreal are expected to be as good or better than last year, when they extended Blues on one or two occasions. Nine of their 1958-59 team have returned.

Prominent among these are two four year veterans: centre Maurice Duhaime and left winger Jean-Marie Beland. Also among the returnees are goalie Pierre Schooner and defenceman Roland Hebert.

Duhaime appears to be the most dangerous, he has been one of their top scorers for the last two years.

Much importance is placed on the game because it is felt in most quarters that the league is going to be very hard fought this season. Queen's apparently have goalkeeping troubles, but their forwards leave little to be desired.

Good news for Kennedy came in the news that Jim Brooks, a member of last year's powerhouse, has decided to return to hockey. He will probably fill in for Macdonald until the captain returns.

Another potential starter is Howie Roth. A ten goal man with Blues last year, Howie has been sorely missed by linemates John Gatten and Jim Murchie. His return could spark that line to several goals.

Bob Giroux, so impressive against Kitchener, will continue in goal for the Blues.

The game is Carabins' first league encounter. They were beaten by Clarkson in exhibition play (Toronto beat the same team 5-4) but edged St. Lawrence 3-2, almost the same score as the 3-1 beating Toronto handed the Larries.

... and in this corner by sharon milgram

The girls intercollegiate teams are beginning to roll or be rolled over as the case may be.

Last week the senior and intermediate basketball teams, along with the volleyball team, travelled to Western for an exhibition series.

For the basketball teams, the trip was quite successful. The intermediates, in a straight time game defeated Western 20-13. Scoring in this game was quite evenly spread among the forwards.

The senior team, for the first time in a good many years, led at the end of the first half, but had to settle for a draw as the final whistle blew. The score was 33-33.

High scorer for the Varsity girls was Marg Anne White, who sank a good number of free tosses in the first half only to have the ball refuse to go through the hoop for her in the second half.

Making a very strong bid to stick with the senior team was Shirley Quan who sank some amazing shots from almost impossible angles.

Top playmaker for Toronto was Judy Smith, who, when not setting someone else up, potted a few herself.

For the volleyball team, the trip was not quite as successful. As one observer so aptly put it, "Toronto got creamed." Need more be said?

Bits 'n Scraps: PHE III led by Milly Hutt and Judy Smith swamped Vic Fr I to enter the interfaculty basketball finals against the winners of the PHE I and PHE II game.

SMC Defeat Trinity 2-0 In Hockey

St. Mike's tightened up the Group One hockey standings by handing Trinity a 2-0 defeat. Chief architect of the victory was Jim Cooney whose acrobatic, reminding rescued his team several times. Fullan and Kennedy were the goalgetters.

Other games saw St. Mike's "B" edge Med II 2-0 on goals by Byrne and Bachman, and Med IV win 2-1 over St. Mike's "D". Elder and Diamond scored for Meds, Sandala for SMC.

In a major volleyball semi-final match UC edged SPS III 15-8, 7-15, 16-14. Minor league playoffs start today. SPS III had previously defeated Meds 15-2, 17-15.

Naylor Scores Five UC Win 12-4, Lead In Lacrosse Finale

Bert Naylor fired five goals to lead UC Redmen to a 12-4 triumph over SPS in the first game of a best of three final lacrosse series in Hart House Monday noon. The second game of the series will be played today.

Also instrumental in the win was UC goalie Hartley Nathan whose fine tending stymied the Skule forwards time and again.

UC took a quick 2-0 lead on goals by Naylor and Dave Misener in the first quarter, but SPS fought back and tied the score before the end of the stanza.

Skule pressed strongly in the early part of the second quarter as their checking seemed to disorganize the UC attack, but Nathan made three incredible saves in a row off John Lawrence and Bob Dawson to keep the score even.

Naylor's artistry put UC ahead to stay when he scored with his side one man short and then a minute later scored again. Misener added another just before the half ended with UC ahead 5-2.

The third quarter was even, both teams scoring once, Lawrence scored for SPS while Roth went the length of the floor for the UC tally.

UC wrapped the game up with a three goal burst early in the third quarter. Naylor's persistent forechecking set up his own goal, then Hill passed to Don Fleming for another and finally George Spanetz ran through a tiring defence to make it 9-4.

Later in the period, Naylor Misener and Howie Roth added insurance goals. John Lawrence (3), and Bob Dawson scored for SPS, and were the pick of the Engineers.

UC are heavily favoured to wrap the title today.

Wrestlers Place 2nd At Niagara

Last Saturday the University of Toronto wrestling team captured second place in a seven team invitational tournament held at the Central Y.M.C.A. in Niagara Falls.

Defending champions, Central Y.M.C.A. of Niagara Falls were again the winners.

All five members of the Toronto contingent reached the finals, with three of them capturing division championships. Sophomore Ken Brown won the 137 lb. class, Roger Doner the 167 division and Rod Carrow the 191 lb. class.

This Saturday the Blues again travel to Niagara Falls for exhibition matches against the Central Y team.

With only two of five members eligible for intercollegiate competition Coach Jack Amos and manager Harry White are still scouring the campus for fresh talent.

The following are the final results of last Saturday's tournament:

- 137 lbs. Ken Brown (U of T) def. Don Puccio (Niagara Falls).
- 147 lbs. Bill Polito (U of T) lost to Mac Valente (U of Buffalo).
- 157 lbs. Don Shepley (U of T) lost to Mike Gessford (Jewish Center).
- 167 lbs. Roger Doner (U of T) def. Bob Knox (U of Buffalo).
- 191 lbs. Rod Carrow (U of T) def. Ron Javer (Niagara Falls).

Athletic Night Saturday

The first Athletic Night of the year will feature a full program of sports at Hart House Saturday evening, December 12th. Basketball will be one of the main attractions with Lawrence Tech of Detroit tangling with the Toronto Blues at 9.00 p.m. West Hill Collegiate will meet North Toronto Collegiate in a preliminary basketball game at 7.00 p.m. Intercollegiate Water Polo will be presented in the pool at 7.30 with the second game of a total goal series for the College championship. Varsity will oppose McGill who won the first game 9 to 4.

The Varsity Swimming team will take over the pool at 9.30 for an Intercollegiate Dual Meet with Niagara University. Boxing is an added attraction on the program as Tony Canzano will hold a series of exhibition bouts to select the Intercollegiate Boxing Team. This team will represent Toronto at the Intercollegiate Championships to be held this year at McGill February 12th and 13th.

The Varsity Basketball Blues will be trying to maintain their winning streak over Lawrence Tech. In three previous meetings Toronto has won twice. They last met in 1957-58 when the Blues downed the Blue Devils 79-55. The Tech men have a tall squad this year with 10 of their 13 men over the 6'2" mark.

Two of their best are 6'5" centre Clayton Pethers, second highest scorer on the team last year and 6'4" forward Henry Podeszwa selected as the most valuable player. Against these men Coach John McManus will match 6'5" forward Jim Maguire and 6'4" centre Boris Wolchuk. Wolchuk and Maguire were two of the Blues high scorers in recent games against Seton Hall, Iona and St. Peters. Although the Blues dropped all three games against these powerful teams it is expected that they will fare much better against Lawrence Tech on Saturday.

Bring Petition to Ottawa, Present To Diefenbaker

The University of Toronto petition calling for a halt in the testing and production of nuclear weapons will be presented to the Canadian prime minister by a U of T delegation Monday.

A five or six-man group headed by philosophy professor David Gauthier, chairman of the 14-man Committee on Nuclear Disarmament which drew up the petition, will travel to Ottawa to give Prime Minister John Diefenbaker the document at a 9 a.m. meeting.

Bogden Kipling, a graduate student and the only non-faculty member of the Committee, last night said 643 faculty members and more than 2,000 students have signed the petition so far.

Word was received from the prime minister's office yesterday confirming the appointment. The committee had written the Government Dec. 3 asking for the meeting, Kipling said.

Kipling said last night that the petition is now circulating among the faculty of McGill University, Montreal. Letters expressing interest have also been received from faculty members of the bilingual Catholic-run University of Ottawa, he said.

The petition, originated in late November, calls for the Canadian government to press in international negotiation for an end to the testing and production of nuclear weapons.

It also requests that the spread of nuclear weapons to

Keenleyside Cleared In Gunshot Incident

Victoria College student David Keenleyside had his name cleared by police yesterday.

His .22 calibre rifle was taken by police last Friday following a shooting incident, but their investigation showed that the rifle had not been fired.

Original reports in the Toronto papers said the police were searching the Bay-Bloor-Wellesley area for "a mad gunman", after a .22 calibre bullet passed through the window of the Rawlinson furniture store on Yonge St. early Tuesday afternoon.

After searching all the Vic men's residence, police took Keenleyside's rifle to see if it had been fired recently. The Don of Grate House took full responsibility for giving the police the rifle. Keenleyside was not there at the time, but was questioned later.

Keenleyside is to phone the detective-sergeant today to arrange for return of the rifle. He said it was impossible to fire a bullet into the window from the residence. Not only are there trees in the way, but it is "two good city blocks away".

countries not already possessing them be prevented.

The petition says such limited measures would reduce the danger of world war.

It says the measures would be a step towards disarmament. "The only hope of survival in a nuclear age."

Sponsors of the petition include U of T President Claude T. Bissell and Chancellor F. C. A. Jeanneret

DIG THIS. A group of students trying to beat Queen's Park traffic the hard way? Guess again. Plans for the new subway under the park are making it necessary to undermine the war memorial monument and move it 30 feet to the east. Superintendent of the operation, John VanGent, said excavation for the subway will begin as soon as the monument is moved. The subway will run down the centre of Queen's Park. Since three lanes around the area have to be left open to traffic, digging operations will be done one half at a time.

Panel Finds Advertising Corrupts Canadian Arts

By STAN BARRON

A University of Toronto professor last night charged advertising with the deliberate corruption of Canadian taste.

At a panel discussion on "The Arts in Canada" in Annesley Hall, Victoria College, Professor Douglas Grant, Editor of the U of T Quarterly, said advertising caused the greatest waste of Canadian artistic talent.

He said advertising technique would not allow any group or concept to be off-ended. This is contrary to all educational or true artistic tradition, he said.

The panel which included Jay Macpherson, noted Canadian poetess, and Professors Hugo MacPherson of Toronto, and Frank Scott of McGill University, agreed Canadian Art was changing in character.

The former "purpose" of the Arts in Canada was to make Canada famous, said Prof. MacPherson.

The concept of "art for art's sake" is becoming more prevalent, the panel agreed. In the past ten years, the Arts have become more professional as more Canadian artists have taken them seriously.

Miss Macpherson pointed out the Arts in Canada have suffered because of their "thin past with no imaginative history". She said Canadian poetry should define Canada's relation with her cultural past.

In spite of this Canadian artists, according to the panel, are rapidly losing their national characteristics. This does not apply to the fundamental differences between English and French Canada, the panel felt. Miss Macpherson said there was more cultural exchange between England and France than between Quebec and Ontario.

"The issue of nationalism is either totally dead or enshrined in the sanctum of the Canadian Authors' Association", concluded Prof. Scott.

The panel claimed there is a wide difference between academic critics and reviewers, and those of the mass media in Canada today. It said some Toronto and Montreal newspapers had good critics, but on the whole the state of criticism in Canada was very low.

The function of good criticism is to improve the public, said Miss Macpherson.

Prof. Scott claimed there was not one good art critic in Canada. Those who are qualified to criticise art are attached to galleries and museums and therefore hesitate to do so.

The role of sponsorship of the Arts evoked mixed reactions from the panel.

Prof. Grant said support should be extended to the education of the artist. He did not advocate patronage after the education of the artist was complete.

Miss Macpherson claimed the role of sponsorship was to create a market for the work of the artist. This would help him to regard himself as a useful member of the community, she said.

"You want to feel you work for what you get", said Miss Macpherson.

"On this basis I am against handouts," she said.

Socialist Resigns Over Communist Member

Fearing he would be associated with the University of Toronto Communist Club, the secretary of the U of T Socialist Forum resigned last night.

Donald Roebuck (II UC), said the Forum was intended to be non-partisan, "serving as a platform for speakers of various socialist persuasions."

Daniel Goldstick (II UC), is president of the Communist Party on campus. He is also the treasurer of the Socialist Forum.

Roebuck said "I believe the presence in the executive of the Forum of the President of the Communist Club has seriously weakened, and perhaps destroyed the Forum's impartiality."

He said a motion was passed in the Forum requesting Goldstick to resign.

"He refused to resign", Roebuck added.

Roebuck explained the Forum was definitely not a political party, but termed it a "political club".

COMMUNIST Club president Dan Goldstick (II UC) is interviewed on CBC about his new campus club. Goldstick's move has caused a resignation from the campus Socialist Forum.

National Assembly Plans For Only 350 Delegates

Planners for the first National Assembly of the National Federation of Canadian University Students have revised the size of the Assembly downwards to 350 from original proposals of 1,000.

NA Committee Chairman Ed Roberts (III Vic) said last night the revision had been made, "after investigations made it clear that a 1000-student NA was not feasible at this time".

"There were two reasons for this rather drastic cut", Roberts said, "the cost of staging such a large conference and more importantly the realization that the advantages to be gained were not that much greater than those of a smaller Assembly".

He continued: "We feel that over a certain figure, say 350, the law of diminishing returns sets in and the results just would not justify the immense extra effort required".

"Another way of putting it is that once a conference gets larger than a certain point it becomes a rally and not a conference", he said.

Toronto will send 80 students to the NA, Roberts said.

The National Assembly Committee was set up two weeks ago to investigate the feasibility of holding the first NA during the Christmas holidays in 1960.

The Committee will submit its report to the NfCUS National Executive at its semi-annual meeting later this month, and at that time the final decision regarding the holding of the NA will be made.

"If the National Executive gives us the go-ahead then we will commence the actual planning for the NA", Roberts said. "But until that time we are an investigating committee and not an actual planning committee".

Other committee members are John McGoe (I SMC), Judy Harman (IV Nursing), George Hume (IV Arch), Elizabeth Addison (III Vic) and Joyce Anderson (III Nursing).

Surprise Move Puts Directory Out Early

In a surprise move Wednesday both the staff and student directories appeared in the University of Toronto bookstore.

Although Registrar Robin Ross had announced the student portion was being issued separately to speed up the process, both volumes hit the stands at the same time.

The student part is grey, as was the entire directory last year. The staff portion is in blue.

Price for each directory is 50 cents.

You are now reading the second last issue of The Varsity, 1959. Our colossal 16-page Christmas edition appears on campus Tuesday, Dec. 15. Ads and announcements must be submitted to the Varsity office by Monday.

In case you miss the Christmas issue, merry Christmas.

New Lights To Make Walk Safe For Walk

Philosophers' Walk can no longer harbor 'peculiar people'.

Twelve glaring new lights were installed along the walk by the University of Toronto Department of Buildings and Grounds yesterday. They replace six antique, 9 ft. lamps.

The light-weight steel columns are 18 feet six inches high and rust-red in color. The light fixtures are stainless steel. Their technical name is "Canadian Line Material Post Top Unit". The light range is about 50 feet.

A representative of the department said the lights were installed for safety purposes. "The old ones were very old and gave very little light. Why, there were robbers and thieves, etc. A person couldn't walk in safety", he said.

For years, students in Trinity and Wycliffe colleges have complained of sexually perverted activity on the walk. The area is patrolled nightly by motorcycle policemen.

SMC Council Passes Disciplinary Motion

A special ad hoc committee of the St. Michael's College Student Administrative Council decided last night in Brennan Hall the council should be granted disciplinary powers.

The committee passed a motion 8-1 recommending SMC-SAC make explicit in its constitution a clause giving the SAC power to maintain discipline among students.

The committee report will be presented at the regular meeting of the council next Tuesday night.

The council will vote on the issue early in January.

The new clause would put SAC in a position to censure any student in the college it felt had "engaged in an act that dishonored the reputation of the student body at St. Michael's."

After council votes on the issue, SMC students will decide themselves by a referendum.

Council president Jordan Sullivan said last night the idea of a disciplinary clause was brought up this year because it is the first time the whole college, staff and students have been solidly behind it.

At the moment Father Paupore, council moderator can veto any act the council passes. So far the veto has never been used.

In past years it was felt by council members if the amendment recommending a disciplinary body was introduced it would be blocked by a veto.

But this year, Father Madden, head of the Basilian Council, which supervises ecclesiastical affairs in the college, has come out in favor of the recommendation.

If the amendment goes through, the council would have power to recommend to the Basilian Council the expulsion of some student if the case arose.

Sullivan said last night "the encouraging aspect of the student judiciary responsibility is firmly supported by the college administration."

"They want us to take responsibility upon ourselves", he added.

No Presents This Year At HH Christmas Tree

One of the most popular and enduring Christmas traditions at the University of Toronto will take place Dec. 17.

The Christmas Tree, the annual evening of carol singing, skits and entertainment, will be held in the Great Hall, Hart House.

Admittance is by ticket only. Tickets are free but the number is limited. They will be available at the SAC office from 12:30-1:30 p.m. Monday. Two tickets only will be given per ATL card.

This year's program includes acts featuring Julian Porter and Miss Varsity Marjorie Chapman. The Hart House Glee Club under the direction of Roland Pack will sing Christmas selections. Audience carol singing will be led by Ross Workman accompanied by Paul Walker on the piano.

Warden McCully is scheduled to read a Christmas message and U of T President Claude T. Bissell will give the traditional reading of the Christmas story from the Bible.

One familiar custom will be missing from the 1959 edition of the Christmas Tree. The interfaculty presentation of gifts has been dropped from the program because officials feel that the gift-giving was "more fun for the performers than the audience".

Students planning on attending the Christmas Tree are urged to bring rugs and blankets since the audience will be seated on the floor.

Scott Calls For Reappraisal

New Socialism Essential

Frank Scott, Montreal poet and McGill law professor, yesterday called for a rethinking of socialist theory in the light of today's capitalism.

Speaking to a CCF-sponsored meeting, the socialist professor said the present free enterprise system is not the same as the one that existed when the idea of socialism originated.

"But," the crusading lawyer said, "instead there exists a late state capitalism. The prime motive of this system still remains profit," he said.

"The socialists," he said, "must put the spotlight on society's present values, and select those which should be prominent in our society. Economics is not society's primary concern."

"Profit is an undesirable guide for a democracy," he said. "It creates hierarchies and privileged groups such as corporations."

Mr. Scott said, "The trade unions are model democratic institutions. They have fought the people more democratic processes than any other institution in our society," he said.

"We are not producing as much as we should," he said. "And, we are not using all our productive resources."

"The free enterprise system fears the future. There is an inherent fear in the system that Russian planned production will prove more effective," he said.

"The Russians," the professor said "have a more rational outlook on education than the western world." He described the West's approach as "dis-mal".

He said the West is a place where "old ideas survive in a very ancient manner."

The socialist poet-professor-lawyer said: "We must welcome Russia's competition in the economic sphere. This places more products in the international market, which will be partly channelled to undeveloped countries," he said.

Finishing on an ironic note, he said, "Some of the people Mr. Scott suggested planning as the answer to society's inefficiencies.

toyland

The other day we were in a large downtown department store talking to the man who is in charge of the toy department.

He told us that space toys are not a big item. It seems that there has been a lot of noise about them in the States but there have been very few sales.

And in Canada there are no sales at all. Indeed the only space toy we could find was a model rocket of the very very old school.

You had to make it yourself.

The most popular items are dolls. And of course doll accessories.

We were impressed.

After all the publicity about outer space it seemed only logical that the kids would be buying outer space toys. We thought to find them entranced by ray guns and satellites and outer space rockets.

But they weren't. All they wanted Santa to bring them was dolls.

Maybe we could send one of those kids to the United Nations. dls

Dandy Moliere

Last night the Cercle Francais of University College presented Moliere's George Dandin, ou Le Mari Confondu. This is not one of Moliere's best-known plays, and is often passed over in favour of Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme and Le Malade Imaginaire, but last night's performance proved that if Moliere wrote it, it has to be good.

The plot is not as complex as some of his other comedies; the play revolves around a single situation, that of a deceived husband trying — and constantly failing — to convict his wife, Georges Dandin, a peasant who has married a rich wife, Angelique, is despised by her, and she starts an amour with the handsome and sophisticated Clitandre. Dandin finds out, and spends the rest of the play in a series of attempts to prove her guilt to her parents. M. and Mme. Sotenville have obviously always thought that Angelique made a bad match, and are reluctant to believe him. But the real reason for Dandin's failure is Angelique's cunning and ingenuity, with which she manages to convert even the most apparently blatant situations into proofs of her innocence and Dandin's guilt.

The whole action therefore revolves around Angelique. Daina Mercs in this role rose brilliantly to the occasion, and for me at any rate she stole the show. Her charm, vivacity, and personality drew both cast and audience to her side. From start to finish she was a pleasure to watch and listen to. Bart Poesiat, as Dandin, was also good in his character, of the peasant who thinks that fine clothes will make him a gentleman, but who continually betrays his plebeian origin. He also did well when finding himself, time after time, innocent but accused. He could, however, have played a little more lightly — he frequently exaggerated in both tone and gesture.

The minor characters were generally good. Irene Gryndahl as Claudine, Angelique's maid, and Ian Turnbull, Clitandre's servant, acted with gaiety and speed, and played the occasional slapstick scenes to the hilt. Joan Prochowski and Guy Dudar did very well as Angelique's dotting parents, but one criticism of the latter might be made. Is it necessary, to portray age, for a character to be bent over constantly at an angle of forty-five degrees? Clitandre, played by Robert Jeaumond, was suitably smooth and debonair, and it is probably the fault of the playwright that he seemed a bit of a stuffed shirt. All in all, the cast did an excellent job.

It's difficult for an Anglo-Saxon to judge the quality of the French used in the play, but to me it seemed generally very clear. Diana Mercs here again excelled, in contrast to the others who occasionally slurred a phrase or spoke with faces turned away from the audience. The set, an extremely simple one, was nevertheless effective, especially in the window scene in the last act. The lighting was also successful, and the costuming was really excellent. Under the direction of Prof. Curtis of UC's French department, the play as a whole moved with sustained verve, crispness, and gaiety. The "Cercle Francais" deserves congratulations for giving us a most entertaining evening with Moliere.

The Dark Is Light Enough

a Varsity profile
by Terry Bourke

Courage is a strange thing. It comes in different shapes, forms and sizes. You find it in many places.

Sometimes it happens to the soldier in flaming, raw, action somewhere on a stretch of battle ground racked with the cry of gunfire and the scream of shells.

Or maybe courage is a headline on the front page. A headline about a shy little man next door, who rarely speaks, merely smiles, nods, and is on his way.

The little man who climbed seven flights of stairs through blinding smoke and scorching fire to rescue a very frightened five year old girl.

Other times courage is the story of the scientist and his laboratory. It is a story of long hours, a thousand frustrations, patches of sleep; but one of dedication and stamina that pays off in new hope and progress for man.

But there is another kind of courage. One few people know. It is a quiet courage lived every working moment of the day.

This courage is a way of life for the crippled, the invalid, the sick, and others for whom the odds of recovery are too big to worry about, too big for thoughts.

Many people live with 'quiet' courage.

This is the story of one of them.

Graham Stoodley is twenty years old. This is his second year at the University of Toronto.

He has thick, blond wavy hair, deep set eyes, and a mouth etched with small smile wrinkles, like soft creases in velvet. His tall slim frame is offset by strong, solid Nordic facial features.

Graham Stoodley is a campus "unique." He has never used any U of T library. He has never read a book. He has never seen any of his professors. More, he has never seen the campus or any of its students.

Sound strange? To top it all last year in second General Arts Graham parlayed his learning into a set of straight A's.

At one time or another you have probably seen Graham Stoodley, dressed in grey slacks and a beige jacket, making his way slowly and cautiously, along the campus paths and routes students criss-cross each day in a flurry on their way to classes.

In one hand he clutches a small leather covered cane. In the other he carries a small oak cane, holding it with his finger tips, swinging it lightly up and down.

The case is a small recording machine. He uses it to tape lectures and tutorials.

The cane is white.

Graham Stoodley is blind.

At the beginning the world never gave Graham much of a chance. He has no memories of ever seeing anything. It happened a long time ago — thirteen months after he was born.

There was a disease of the optic nerve. The doctors talked about it. They knew there was no cure. Medical science did not have the answer.

It boiled down to saving the sight at the risk of harming the brain or vice versa.

He was born in Dundas County, just outside of Ottawa. The first five years of his life were blank. Later he attended the Brampton School for the Blind. The going was tough. Learning braille took time and was frustrating. But it paid off.

Two years ago Graham made one of the best decisions in his life. He enrolled at the University of Toronto in the general arts course.

When the results came out in June, it was a grand day for Graham. The mailman served him with a shining exam platter of grade A marks.

There was one exception — a C in Sociology. "This involved reading a laborious 700 page text by Kingsley Davis, a very eminent gentleman whom I have come to respect in the recent years having never met him, which is probably a good reason," he said.

Graham Stoodley's world is far from dark. Physically what he sees inside is not darkness, not an absence of color, not a predominance of color. "It is nothing but a pure and absolute existence of anything in the optic nerve," he says.

On the intellectual side Graham sees better than most students. Talking with him is like carrying on a conversation with a humanistic univac. His interest range is an encyclopedia's gauntlet of topics.

And always, he speaks in a soft, clear, confident and unhesitant voice, interspersed with flashes of wit and verbal clowning that would make Jack Paar blush.

He views women in an ideal fashion — all the romantics. "But," says he, "they seldom live up to the high ideals traced for them by poets."

This is OK he adds, because anyone who tries to live up to an exaggerated ideal is lost in a "dream world."

"It marriage in your future plans?"

"Sure, why not? What is it Mr. Stoodley? The institution is the combining of the maximum opportunity with the . . . but don't mistake I don't view it with such scepticism."

Snow is a number one enemy for the blind person. Graham is no exception. He hates it, fears it.

Snow covers up the edge of the sidewalk making it hard and sometimes impossible for him to orient himself by tapping the concrete with the cane.

"During winter, I find it very difficult indeed I'm not accustomed at all to shoving myself into that all pervasive love of snow people continually talk and jabber about."

"Snow is a horrifying blanket of heat white fog," he said.

In a sense Graham has many eyes that look out for him. There is always a student ready to help him find that unfamiliar door, or a new path.

Strindberg's Miss Julie

U.C. Players Guild opened last night U.C. Players Guild closes tonight. Presenting Miss Julie by August Strindberg, the company has a few good moments. Unfortunately the majority of the time the audience was unable to see the players: either the lights were burning out or the technician got carried away with his responsibility. One of the most dramatic moments of the night was an interpretive ballet sequence expertly danced by Robiñ Barron and Brenda Leake but again their facial expressions were obliterated by the lack of light.

On the whole the play dragged. This was mainly the fault of the playwright and it can be asked why U.C. produced a play of this nature. Miss Julie claims that she hates the entire male sex and yet she is seduced by one of them and then laments for pages on end. None of the players ever realized the fullness of their roles and the whole production was underplayed. Edward Semenuk had a few moments of intense feeling but this reviewer felt that even he did not realize just what his character was in the play. His style became monotonous and it is hoped that he will settle more clearly his true character before the one act festival in January. As the servant and the product of poverty he is rightously indignant but his physical attitude become distracting and never varied throughout the many intricate varyings in his character and subtle devices of seduction that he portrayed. It is a part rich in contrasts and has great moments of feeling but never did Mr. Semenuk reach the fullness of these moments. Eleanor Heis acted stiffly and seemed to have trouble deciding just what to do with her hands, an amateurish dilemma. Judith Orban made an attractive Miss Julie but again her character was shallow and undecided. These will be straightened out by January no doubt.

Under the direction of Ralph Thomas, the play progressed slowly but showed signs of artistic staging. Many moves however were forced and irrelevant and his interpretation of the characters was faulty. The music by Paul Robinson was extremely effective and perhaps that scene of the dance sequence was the best of the evening.

The production was not up to the standard of previous U.C. Players Guild's shows but with more work it could become most interesting and effective theatre.

This will be the U.C. entry in the One Act Festival of the U.T.D.C. in January. At this time it will be adjudicated by Robertson Davies, writer, and editor of the Peterborough Examiner. Also on the program, will be plays from Trinity, St. Michael's, School of Nursing, and Victoria. Dawn Egan

Prof. Slams "Idiots" Nutritionally Ignorant

Dr. E. W. McHenry of the School of Hygiene Monday called university graduates the "most gullible bunch of stupid idiots possible" in the field of nutrition.

Addressing a meeting of the Food Chemistry Club, he said, "Everybody thinks they know more about nutrition than those that teach it."

He said people still rely on old folk lore for a good deal of their ideas on nutrition.

People tell him they can not eat cheese because it is constipating, or old people should not eat oranges because the citric acid content induces rheumatism, he said.

One of the most common fallacies Dr. McHenry has encountered is the notion you should not eat milk products such as ice cream with seafood, he said.

He warned against these attitudes saying they stop people from eating many essential nutritious foods.

Dr. McHenry said many people are fooled by advertisements, namely "Kellogg's K cereal." He said two graphs show the amino acid content of K exactly supplements that of milk to give complete nutrition.

It is known milk is almost complete in itself and it is not "almost completely useless without Kellogg's K," as indicated in the advertisement," he said.

He said in a few short months K out sold many other cereals on the market "although its flavor is completely insipid and it does not give away space ships or marbles".

He noted some improvement in advertising -- for instance "Fleishman's Corn Oil Margarine" was forced to remove from its label the completely unverified statement that the product "lured blood cholesterol and prevented heart disease".

DONALD A. HURLEY

"One of the great perpetrators of the latest advertising fads is Gaylord Hauser," he said. Hauser advocated the use of blackstrap molasses and cottage cheese to enjoy a long life.

Later the man was found guilty of fraud in the United States and was imprisoned.

One man, a Mr. Cordell, has been found guilty six times in the U.S. for fraudulent misrepresentation.

He said a study should be made of the reason for the success of food faddists and apply it to the advancement of proper dieting for real health.

Food faddists should not be taken lightly he said. "It keeps people from proper foods, leads to incorrect self diagnosis and keeps those needing help from qualified doctors.

The major problem leading to food fads and poor nutrition in Canada, Dr. McHenry said, is indifference.

Two University of Toronto students working on their PhD degrees, have been awarded post-graduate research fellowships.

Donald Hurley is working towards his degree in experimental biology and Herbert Barton is doing research on sublimation mass transfer across compressible boundary layers under supersonic air flow. The awards are open to graduates of Canadian universities who have shown ability in conducting original research.

SPS Win Twice Lead Group One Hockey League

Sr. SPS won the Victoria Staff Cup for major Intramural volleyball competition as they downed UC 15-9, 15-12, 7-15, 15-11, to take the best of five game final by a wide margin.

In minor league volleyball playoffs, Pre-Meds II edged SPS "H" 8-15, 15-11, 15-7, Dents III eliminated Meds III 15-13, 9-15, 15-2. Other games saw Emmanuel whip Forestry B 15-1, 15-13, and UC Jeanneret win over SMC VI 11-15, 15-13, 15-8.

Two wins in two days have boosted Sr. SPS to the top of the scrambled Group One hockey ladder. Starting with a 2-0 blanking of Victoria they followed this up Thursday with a 3-1 defeat of SMC. Jack Way and Ken Taylor scored in the win over Vic and the same two plus Ev Rush tallied in the victory over the Irish. Auchingloss scored for St. Mike's.

In the other Group One game, UC tied Trinity 0-0.

Other results were: Trinity B 4—Dents B 4; UC IV 4—SPS VII 4; SPS VI 6—Meds II 0.

Squash games saw Trinity D defeat Vic IV 2-1 and UC I whip Dents A 3-0. Law defeated SPS III 2-1. Vic IV edged Dents F 2-1.

Pharmacy won the Group Two lacrosse championship, defeating Knox 7-4 in a hard fought game to win the title. John Thompson fired four goals for the pharmacists, while Branch, Scott, and Carter also tallied. Armistage (2), Baldson, and Armstrong were the Knox goalgetters.

Basketball Blues Play Lawrence Tech In 1st Of Athletic Nights

Tomorrow night at 8.30 the U of T Basketball Blues will play at the Hart House gym for their first home game this year as they take on highly rated Lawrence Tech. from Michigan.

Height will be the major factor in the game. The Blues who are fielding a relatively small team, Jim MacGuire at six foot-five being the "giant" of the team, will be dwarfed by the visitors, ten of whom are over six foot two.

The Blues have one other factor working against them, and that is inexperience.

In spite of this the fact that they are on their own court is in their favour.

In the last meeting between these two teams the Blues registered a 24 point victory over the Blue Devils but height plus the burden of inexperience is expected to make the score very close.

Regardless of their own troubles the Blues have to contend with the abilities of the Blues Devils too, and judging from the reports from Michigan they are a crack team.

The Blues dropped three games on their American tour but made a creditable showing against the Americans. Danny Norman and Maguire were rated as the best players on the trip. With the outside shooting terrible the team had to rely on them for most of their points.

The Blues, however, are beginning to show the makings of a good team, and if they can be consistent in their shooting they have a good chance to win.

Regardless of who wins the game, it should prove very interesting as it will be the only home game the team has before tackling Western in the New Year.

JUST NOTES . . . A preliminary match will be played before the "big" game . . . North Toronto and West Hill Collegiates will play and both are favourites in their respective high school leagues . . . This is not the only thing at Hart House on Saturday Night — it is Athletic Night and a full schedule of events is planned.

UC Defeat Skule 10-7 Win Lacrosse Series In Consecutive Games

UC edged Sr. Skule 10-7 to win the W. A. Dafoe Trophy, symbol of Intramural Lacrosse supremacy in two straight games. UC won the first game 12-4 on Monday.

Hero of the win was one of the unsung players on the UC squad, Stan Fraser. He fired six goals, and along with Bert Naylor who had four, tallied all the Redmen's goals.

As in the first game, the score was tied 2-2 at the end of the first quarter, but then UC steadily pulled away, and led 10-4 going into the last quarter.

SPS rallied strongly in the last eight minutes and nearly pulled the game out. Goal scorers were John Lawrence (2), Bob Dawson (2), Ken Galbraith, Don Wallis and Bill McCrindle.

The sweep of the two game series gives UC a perfect record on the year with 12 wins and no defeats. During this string, they outscored their opponents 166-26. By far the outstanding player for the team was Bert Naylor who scored 52 goals, including 25 in the four playoff games.

With the exception of George Howard Spanetz Jr. almost every player on the team reached 17 goals. George only scored five goals during the year, but was the policeman of the team.

Evidence of this was seen during the most recent game with SPS as George picked up three penalties, and watched as the opposition scored each time. "Ah well," said George, "I do all the work, Naylor and the others score the goals, but I soften up the opposition for them. Nobody appreciates me."

Also deserving of a bouquet is Hartley Nathan, UC goalie, whose fine play in the final series was of great value to his team.

Hockey Blues Play Carabins

Varsity Blues tangle tonight with University of Montreal Carabins in a league game at the Arena. Game time is 8.00 p.m. Blues will be without Captain John Macdonald who is out for a month or more with a shoulder separation. Jim Brooks, a member of last year's team, has come out of retirement just in time to take Macdonald's place at right wing. The game will be the Carabins first in league play this year.

christmas edition*THE SECOND COMING

Turning and turning in the widening gyre
 The falcon cannot hear the falconer;
 Things fall apart; the centre cannot hold;
 Mere anarchy is loosed upon the world,
 The blood-dimmed tide is loosed, and everywhere
 The ceremony of innocence is drowned;

The best lack all conviction, whilst the worst
 Are full of passionate intensity.

Surely some revelation is at hand;
 Surely the Second Coming is at hand.
 The Second Coming! Hardly are those words out
 When a vast image out of Spiritus Mundi
 Troubles my sight: somewhere in sands of the desert
 A shape with lion body and the head of a man
 A gaze blank and pitiless as the sun,
 Is moving its slow thighs, while all about it
 Reel shadows of the indignant desert birds.
 The darkness drops again; but now I know
 That twenty centuries of stony sleep
 Were vexed to nightmare by a rocking cradle,
 And what rough beast, its hour come round at last,
 Slouches towards Bethlehem to be born?

Agreement Worth $8,059,000

Quebec To Take Grants Duplessis Turned Down

QUEBEC CITY, Dec. 11 (CUP) — Provincial budget estimates tabled in the Quebec legislature Thursday night showed provincial grants to universities in the fiscal year beginning April 1 have been raised to $8,059,000 from last year's $1,119,700.

The move follows an agreement between the Quebec and Federal governments, officially confirmed to all provinces Thursday by Prime Minister Diefenbaker, raising Quebec's corporation tax to 10 from nine per cent and deducting the Quebec raise from Federal corporation tax.

The tax shift, which would be adjusted to give the province exactly the $1.50 a head of provincial population previously allotted to the province under the previous federal university grants scheme, would replace the federal grants.

Quebec universities had refused federal grants at the provincial government's request since 1951-52.

The deadlock-breaking tax shift leaves unsolved the problem of $25,000,000 of federal funds accumulated since 1951-52 now lying in trust for Quebec universities with the National Conference of Canadian Universities.

In making the official announcement last night, the Canadian prime minister stressed that the total amount paid to universities of a province will not be affected by whether the tax shift plan — open to any province — is accepted or rejected by that province.

The $8,059,000 sum apparently exceeds the amounts which would have been allotted. Quebec's universities in federal grants under the old scheme.

McGill University, will get an increased share of the expanded provincial grants — $3,235,000 compared with $262,000 last year.

Grants to other Quebec universities (this year's sums are shown in brackets) will be: Laval University $2,305,000 ($317,000), University of Montreal $2,190,000 ($500,000), University of Sherbrooke $194,000 (nil), University of Bishop's College $94,000 ($40,000), Sir George

U. S. Students Balk At Act Loyalty Oath

Minneapolis, Minn. (CUP) — The University of Minnesota is considering withdrawing from the money-providing National Defense Education Act because it requires applicants for loans to sign a loyalty oath.

Three eastern colleges have already withdrawn from the act because of the oath that says applicants will defend the United States "against all its enemies, foreign and domestic."

Applicants must also swear they do not believe in or are members of my organization "that believes in or teaches the overthrow of the United States government by force or violence or by an illegal or unconstitutional methods."

Gary Laturne, a member of the U of M committee looking into the matter said the oath "sets out to control what a student can and cannot believe and violates the basic principle of liberty that every university in a democratic society must have if that nation can truly be called free."

In response to a poll held at the U of M, slightly more than half of those answering the said they were opposed to the oath-affidavit.

Col. R. K. Kauffman, United States Army and a professor of military science and tactics at the U of M, said "I have read this oath, and I see nothing contrary to my thinking. The money for the loans belongs to the taxpayers, and it is not illogical to protect this money."

Leaders Brush In JCR

Campus Reds Hit In Bogus Magazine

Daniel Goldstick, leader of the campus Communist club, last night disowned a circular called "The Communist Viewpoint" which appeared on campus yesterday.

The circular, similar to two previous editions of the Viewpoint, which Goldstick acknowledges to have been published by his club, said it was published by the Auxiliary Campus Club of the Communist Party.

The edition — apparently facetious—expresses distrust of the Canadian working classes and calls for a major economic depression and the Soviet army to help liberate Canada.

It also supports unilateral disarmament by the West as conducive to "the friendly help of the invincible Soviet army".

Donald Roebuck, who recently resigned as head of the Socialist Youth Forum because Goldstick was on its executive, was distributing copies of the circular yesterday. But he denied having anything to do with its publication.

"I found copies of it in the Economics Building," he said. "It's the funniest thing that's been printed all year and I thought it should be spread around."

Goldstick and Roebuck locked horns in the University College Junior Common Room yesterday afternoon while Roebuck was handing out the circulars.

After a brief struggle, Goldstick got hold of a batch of the copies and began to crumple them and drop them on the floor. Roebuck picked up the crumpled sheets and continued distributing them.

The bogus Viewpoint was full of typing, spelling and grammar errors.

"We're delighted to see someone taking such an interest but they have gravely misinterpreted our position," Goldstick said.

"If they're really interested we can recommend some reading which will set forth our views clearly. The only thing is, they didn't leave their names so we can't do it."

Stephen Lewis of the campus CCF club last night said the club has no connection with the phony Viewpoint.

Profs See P.M.: To Write Brief

OTTAWA, Dec. 14—Prime Minister John Diefenbaker has requested a detailed brief from the 14-man committee which drew up a petition presented to him this morning calling for a halt in the testing and production of nuclear weapons.

A delegation of four University of Toronto teachers and one graduate student presented him with the petition, signed by about 640 U of T faculty members and 2,500 students, in a 1½-hour meeting with the prime minister beginning at 9 a.m.

The delegation was led by philosophy lecturer David P.

Gauthier and included Hart House Chaplain James Cunningham, geography professor George Tatham, assistant chemistry professor John Polanyi and graduate student Bogden Kipling.

The prime minister, Mr. Gauthier said, expressed interest in a more detailed brief from the committee after asking the delegation for specific proposals.

The delegation, Mr. Gauthier said, did not wish to go farther than the petition in making recommendations because of the large number of staff and students the delegates represented.

The brief will not be for public signing, he said. It will represent, essentially, the views of the original 14-man committee.

Delegation member Kipling tonight denied reports that Mr. Gauthier had told reporters the committee was divided on the question of whether Canada should obtain nuclear warheads from the United States.

What Mr. Gauthier had explained, Kipling said, was that on this issue it would have been impossible for the delegation to take a stand representative of all those who signed the petition.

Mr. Diefenbaker said: "I took that part of the petition to mean they don't want indiscriminately around the nuclear weapons made available world."

Kipling said the prime minister had "over and over again" expressed his pleasure at the committee's action.

Library Petition Nulled By Bogus Signatures

A petition calling for the reform of the main library's Wallace Room and circulation desk has been declared technically null and void by its founder because of false names on the scroll.

Bois Freeman (II UC) said the petition, which has collected about 900 names since it was hung in the library Dec. 4, is void because of the false signatures added by "added donkeys".

"Morally, however, it is far from dead," he said. "It still shows the administration that a

Katy Daring Chris To Contests In KCR

The company of "Katy Cruel", University College's musical show last night hurled a challenge at the staff of the All-Varsity Revue "Christopher Jones."

The challenge, to contests of tiddly-winks and chess reads as follows:

"We, the people of Katy Cruel, being of sound mind and body, do hereby challenge the sound people of Christopher Jones to a public match of tiddly-winks and chess, the sound of mind and chess, and the sound of body to play tiddly-winks."

"The place is to be King Cole Room at the hour of 11 p.m. on Tuesday the fifteenth day of December."

"The rules of chess will be those as originally established by the Chinese, while the rules of tiddly-winks will be based on the precedents created in Cambridge University versus the Duke of Edinburgh, represented by the Goons."

Christopher Jones state in their reply, "We, the people of Christopher Jones, being of sound mind and a broader constitution, accept this challenge from the people of Katy Cruel, provided that it is understood that we also use King Cole Room for its original purpose."

January Elections For U of T Model Parliament

University of Toronto students will return from Christmas holidays to find the air full of international issues.

Elections for the campus Model Parliament will be held on Friday, Jan. 8, and all three parties running are planning, stressing more important national and world issues. In the past elections, platform planks have emphasized campus and minor national problems.

Plans for election week include a tri-party discussion of platforms during the Wednesday noon hour. J. Pickersgill, former minister of immigration will be a featured speaker for the Liberal Club. Other speakers will be announced during election week.

The parliament sits from Jan. 20-22.

Daniel Goldstick (II UC) leader of the newly formed U of T Communist Club said last night his party will not run in Model Parliament elections "in lieu of Cabinet approval."

The Caput, which must sanction the participation of all parties in elections, does not convene until after election week.

Murray Corlett (III Vici) will lead the Progressive Conservatives in the election. Victoria last year, the PCs are confident of forming the government again.

"We believe we have a sound platform with something to say about all areas of major interest, rather than the usual restricted campus issues," Corlett said last night.

"We shall also make clear our stand on disarmament during the elections," he said.

"Obviously we're going to win, and I have proof," said Jerry Caplan (IV, UC) CCF parliamentary leader last night.

"We have never had such interest shown in our activities," he said. "This year our platform is hitting two areas."

"One is obviously national affairs. We refuse to let Canada possess any nuclear arms," he said.

"The other parties do not seem fully aware of our national problems, such as automation, conformity and the influence of mass media," Caplan said.

Dick Hamilton (III Tini) will lead the Liberals in parliament. Only certain aspects of their platform are formulated as yet.

The Liberals plan to take a stand for more intensive and extensive capital aid for underdeveloped countries by Canada in the United Nations.

They will also call for a select parliamentary committee on defense to be set up, and ask for increased student exchanges between the western and Iron Curtain countries.

"We are confident of forming a model parliament government," Hamilton said last night. "We have increased membership and interest in all faculties this year."

Rebellion, Expansion, Victory, Defeat:

behind a barrage of public relations work, appraisals and plans, the face of a new university emerged while some students went to parties others flocked to watch a team that almost won,

For better or for worse, the University of Toronto produced more news during the first term of the 1959-60 academic year than ever before in its history.

Last year only one word was needed to describe the biggest news story of the year as students heeded the advice of their new President and became angular.

This year five catch-words were on everybody's lips as 14,402 students jammed into ever corner of the largest university in the British Commonwealth.

Expansion, discrimination, petitions, Memorial Day and charges of irresponsibility — They all made big headlines, some in the Toronto press, some in the national student press and some in the national press.

Biggest news-maker was the expansion program which swung into its first year of the five year plan which will see the U of T enlarge its enrolment to 23,000 full-time students.

The expansion program — the $52,400,000 five-year plan which will see the U of T become a home to 23,000 students — made the first headlines of the year as returning students at two of the University's four Arts College moved into two huge new residences.

Victoria College opened its new Margaret Addison Hall, which accommodates 200 Vic co-eds, and Loretto College, one of Saint Michael's Colleges' two girls residences, also moved its 194 students into a spanking new residence.

Professional students were not overlooked. Dentistry moved into its new building and the Institute of Aerophysics expanded to fill its new quarters.

And the more than 4,000 co-eds on campus won a 40-year-old fight when the new Women's Athletic Building — billed as the answer to Hart House — was opened in early November.

Other expansion-plan activities saw construction get underway on a new Engineering Building and a new building designed to house 5,000 Arts students and the administrative personnel necessary to run the Faculty.

The building is to be named Sydney Smith Hall, in honor of the late Sydney Smith, President of the U of T from 1945 to 1957 and after that Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Side by side with the ever-expanding expansion program went the installation of three new men to help run the U of T and a massive fund-drive to raise the money to pay for it.

Retiring Principal F. C. A. Jeanneret of University College was installed as Chancellor of the University of Toronto, succeeding Dr. Samuel Beatty, and Dean of Arts Moffat, St. Andrew Woodside was installed as Principal of UC.

Victoria College also installed a new administrative head as world-renowned scholar Northrop Frye succeeded Dr. Harold Bennett as principal.

Other changes in the University's top posts saw Political Science professor Vincent Bladen appointed Dean of Arts and Prof. Donald Creighton resign as head of the History Department. Dr. Creighton, who resigned to devote more time to research and writing, was succeeded by Prof. J. M. S. Careless.

The National Fund for the University of Toronto pushed itself to the fore during November — officially designated University of Toronto Month by the City of Toronto — as it set out to raise $12,600,000 as the public's share of the cost of the expansion program. At month's end over $9,000,000 had been raised and officials were optimistic about the chances of the Fund's reaching its goal.

Students got in on the act on

Nov. 30 as 2,400 undergraduates raised $50,000 during a three hour blitz of the northern and western areas of the metropolitan area.

But while the expansion program was the biggest source of news during the term, it was often pushed off the front pages by the students themselves.

First of the student controversies was touched off as term began when the Students' Administrative Council suspended Blue and White Chairman Ian Garratt (II Music) from his portfolio.

A motion of non-confidence passed unanimously charged Garratt with "irresponsibility and conduct unbecoming an SAC member".

Highlights of the ensuing controversy, which raged for weeks: —after a special investigating committee had made its report the SAC went into closed session and voted to permanently remove Garratt from his portfolio;

—a special committee of the Faculty of Music, whom Garratt represents on the SAC, then carried out its own investigation and recommended that Garratt be recalled from the SAC;

—a general vote of the students of the Faculty then gave Garratt a vote of confidence as they turned down the Committee's recommendation;

—the SAC then appointed Garratt chairman of its Music Committee.

The SAC was also in the storm centre of the other big student-based controversy in the term as it fielded the latest development in the fraternity issue.

The rumpus was touched off when Barbara Arrington (II SMC) told The Varsity that a woman's fraternity had turned down her application for membership because she was a Negro.

Publication of the story revived the perennial question of relationship between the University and the fraternities, and here the SAC took action when it voted to withhold special privileges from any fraternity which practised racial discrimination.

the news of an explosive term in review . . .

We'll bet you're wondering what these pictures have to do with one another. We can't help you. They have about as much to do with each other as the things that happen at a university in the course of a year have. Somehow, though, they come together to form more than a composite, because somehow each means more in the context of the others, than it does alone. Below the pictures, Varsity News Editor Ed Roberts describes in words the doings of a busy term.

Bobbi Arrington

Danny Goldstick

The action — which will affect only those fraternities who limit membership on basis of race — came after SAC members had voted down a resolution which would have had it recommend to the Caput that any student belonging to an organization with discriminatory policies be expelled.

Next controversy on campus came in November when The Varsity published a front-page editorial on the occasion of Remembrance Day.

The article, entitled A Manual For Death, was written by Editor-in-Chief Sam Ajzenstat. In it he came out strongly against the methods which had been used to train troops during the Second World War, and said they were made into murderers by this process.

"These then are the men whom we are exhorted to take as our examples — poor bewildered beasts deluded into committing first murder and then suicide", Ajzenstat said.

The article resulted in a flood of protests from angry veteran's groups and students who were not in agreement with its conclusions, but a rumored movement to censure Ajzenstat for his stand never became reality. Petitions were the other major event on the U of T campus this fall, and as the term ended no less than three major petitions had been circulated.

First of the petitions was begun early in the fall when Hungarian students at the University of British Columbia received reports from friends still behind the Iron Curtain saying that students were being executed for the parts they played in the 1956 rebellion.

The reports said that the students had been held in custody until they reached the age of 18 (which by Hungarian law is the minimum age for capital punishment) and were now being executed.

The Hungarian government immediately denied the reports but universities throughout Canada circulated a petition calling for an end to the rumored executions.

Over 3,000 U of T students signed the petition, which was then forwarded to Russian Premier Khrushchev and Prime Minister Diefenbaker.

The Canadian government then brought the matter before the General Assembly of the United Nations, which recently requested the Hungarian government to permit a UN investigating team to enter the country.

The second petition of the term was gotten up by a committee of students and faculty members.

President Bissell and Chancellor Jeanneret were among the signers of the term's second petition, which called upon the Canadian government to press for the cessation of nuclear tests.

The petition, circulated by a committee of faculty members and students, was signed by almost half the faculty of the University and several thousand students.

Third petition of the fall was an entirely student effort aimed at bringing about a reform in the main University library.

The students behind the petition claim that the newly-introduced closed-shelf system at the Wallace Room is making it next to impossible to obtain books.

They say they intend to present the petition to Chief Librarian R. L. Blackburn as soon as 5,000 students have signed it. At term's end, however, the petition was still being circulated and no date had been set for its presentation. No estimate as to the number of signatures was available.

The more normal type of student pranks and uproars also forced themselves into the public eye during the term.

Several members of UC's Sir Daniel Wilson residence spent the night in jail after an attempt to paint a quotation from Milton on the fence around the site of the new Arts Building was halted by City Police.

And St. Mike's went through a minor crisis in student government as its Students' Administrative Council president Jordan Sullivan, resigned because of what he termed "the SAC's lack of confidence in its own executive".

Council members refused to accept his resignation, however, and Sullivan agreed to continue as president.

Politics made the front pages on two other occasions, first when two vice-presidents of the Progressive Conservative Club resigned, and near the end of term when the formation of a campus Communist Club was announced.

Main news event on an annually quiet national university scene was the ending of the long battle over financial subsidies between the Quebec and federal governments.

The battle began in 1952 when the late Maurice Duplessis, Premier of Quebec at the time, refused to let the province's universities accept federal grants on the grounds that education was a provincial responsibility.

Quebec students protested loudly for years that the universities needed the grants to stay alive, but Duplessis refused to let them accepted.

Nothing is known about Premier Sauve's formula for setting down these figures. He is expected to make an announcement soon.

He has said university grants would be regular and sufficient to meet needs, but has not explained how this will be worked out.

He is known to feel the $150-a-head-of-population scheme used by Ottawa to allot federal grants is unfair to Quebec, since that province has fewer head of population for each student than Ontario.

Mr. Sauve Thursday said the provincial cabinet will soon consider the $25,000,000 already lying in trust for Quebec universities.

He indicated the Quebec-Ottawa tax-shifting solution leaves a few questions unanswered but did not specify them.

Dr. F. Cyril James, McGill president and vice-chancellor Thursday said he is happy McGill will be receiving grants at least as generous as universities in other provinces.

He suggested the increased grants will enable McGill to pay its professors as generously as universities elsewhere in Canada already do.

But he said he had not studied the plan and could not make any final judgment on it.

The founding of the University of Toronto Automobile Club was termed Saturday night as indicative of a forward trend in interest in motor sport.

Speaking to a party sponsored by founder of the club Abner Steinberg for about 70 members, Major Gerald P. Lewis-Wood outlined the development of racing from 1930 to the present.

Steinberg explained at the party that the UTAC "does not cater to the die-hard enthusiast. The die-hard is a fool".

"The club was founded for men and women who are not blinded by the attraction of motor sport but who also want to experience and enjoy other really interesting facets of life".

This statement drew an outburst from J. R. White, president of the British Empire Motor Club, who said, "Abner has his collar on backwards".

"As the founders of the UTAC," said Steinberg, "Mr. Martin (the co-host) and we will continue to hold these banquets year after year, as long as we are out of debt, out of jail and out of our minds".

Georgian Editor Out, Second Loss In Term

MONTREAL, Dec. 13 (Staff)—Ian Moore, editor of the Sir George Williams University newspaper The Georgian, Saturday said he intends to resign following Tuesday's issue of the paper.

He will be the second Georgian editor to resign this year. Ben Zimet resigned Oct. 4 complaining of interference, mainly from members of the student body.

Moore said he was resigning for "various reasons". He did not elaborate.

However, Moore has also complained of criticism from students.

Jack Nissenson, now editorial associate, is expected to assume the editor's post.

SANTA CLAUS

by david lewis stein

So I says to this elf . . .

the kids love toyland . . .

even the very young ones . . .

Being Santa Claus in a department store is no easy job. After one two-hour shift in "Santa's Throne" Stan Neal, Eaton's Santa Claus is wringing wet.

"Some run up and throw their arms around you," he says, "and others shy away, but you treat them all as children. They have a great faith in Santa Claus and you can't do anything to shake that faith."

Mr. Neal has been playing Santa Claus for ten years. A regular employee of Eaton's, he stepped into the job when the previous Santa became ill. He has been at it ever since. In addition to his "throne" at Eaton's, he reigns at several corporation Christmas parties.

The chief requirement for a good Santa Claus, according to Mr. Neal, is "patience."

When the little children are suffered to come unto him, some are reluctant to talk and hang back crying. If they are girls, Mr. Neal asks them if they would like "Santy" to bring them a nice doll, and if they are boys he asks them if they would like a choo-choo train.

This usually works, but Mr. Neal does not have a set line for handling children. He ad libs most of his replies and is constantly alert not to damage any child's faith.

When children want to know if he is the real Santa Claus, he assures them that he is. Sometimes they want to have one of his elves for a Christmas present.

"But," he tells them, "what would I do without my elves?"

Sometimes they are angry with him because he did not bring them the bicycle he promised them the year before. If they are really upset about this, he reminds them that perhaps they were not very good little boys and girls the year before.

"At Christmas though," he says, "you never find any bad children."

"When they want to know why he hasn't answered their letters, he tells them that 'Santy' has been busy and that he will answer them as quickly as he can. Eaton's has a regular printed letter which they mail out to any child who writes to Santa Claus in care of the firm. Letters and pictures of Mr. Neal as Santa Claus have been sent as far away as Australia and New Zealand.

about children when you read those letters," an official assured us. "They're enough to break your heart. Some of them are so unselfish."

Santa Claus is a major production for the seven weeks he "reigns" at Eaton's. Extra staff are taken on to handle the rush and on a busy Saturday, Santa has been known to speak to more than ten thousand children.

Eaton's hires two Santa Clauses for the season and they alternate in two hour shifts. They are chosen for their appearance, patience and ability to handle children.

"We have to be careful," an official said. "There's no telling how much damage a bad Santa Claus could do before we caught up to him."

On his off-hours, Mr. Neal and his alternate Santa Claus relax in a carefully hidden cubby hole on the sixth floor. They have their own little hot plate where they can brew a cup of tea between "audiences."

The Santa Claus uniform was specially made by the store's costume department and is unique. It consists of a satin coat, velvet trousers, patent leather gaiters, and a salesman in the sports-wear department.

All children are appealing to Mr. Neal. He feels that Santa Claus is better for them than a lot of modern psychology.

"Santa can cure all sorts of things," Mr. Neal said, "Thumb-sucking, bed-wetting and things like that."

He takes great delight in preserving children's faith in Santa Claus. Sometimes a visit to Mr. Neal will keep a child who has been losing faith believing in Santa Claus for another year.

One little girl from Streetsville has been coming to see Mr. Neal for years at a company party. This year her father ran into Mr. Neal and told him that the family had grown since his last visit to town. Mr. Neal sent his little fan a note that he had added her baby brother's name to his Christmas list.

It's thoughtful acts like this that keep children believing in Santa Claus.

Although Mr. Neal has many stories to tell about his experiences over the years as Santa Claus his favorite concerns a boy who came to him one Saturday and told him that he didn't want any fur-trimmed toque. The famous "belly" is achieved with foam rubber padding.

The beard was designed by Mr. Neal to fit his facial contours. It is made of Yacca hair and has to be washed every few days.

The children who try to verify the beard by giving it a reassuring tug, Mr. Neal handles with "a twist of the wrist."

When Mr. Neal removes his costume he is a short, closely shaven man with nothing to suggest his role except a friendly and kindly face. In the off-season he is presents for Christmas but his mother was in the hospital and he wanted her to be home for the holiday.

"I told him to go home," Mr. Neal said, "and to say his prayers."

The Saturday before Christmas the boy came back. He had gone home and done as Santa Claus had told him. And his mother was going to be home for Christmas.

"It's a good thing I was in the chair when he came," Mr. Neal said. "The other fellow didn't know anything about it."

In recent years we have heard a number of ministers emphasize one theme consistently and repeatedly in their sermons.

"It is only a children's fairy story", they explain, "to think of Jesus as meek and mild."

Presumably according to these interpretations he was not meek and mild at all. He was fierce, lusty, virile, "No lily-livered milksop, Jesus Christ."

These sermons, and this train of thought running through a part of present day Christianity bears witness to the inability of the average modern Christian to understand the ethical part of Jesus' answer to the problem of human existence and conduct.

To begin with, the meek and mild Jesus cannot be removed from the gospels. He is an unequivocal part of the Christian tradition, and a vital one.

The problem was, on the ethical level, a simple one. How can man avoid evil acts? His answer was equally simple: man can avoid evil acts only by refusing to commit them.

Jesus expressed this basic rule in a number of ways, all arising from the same beginning. Perhaps the most unequivocal expression of it was the injunction to return good for evil.

Generally speaking of course the modern Christian clergy not to mention laity are all to willing to admit that these rules are simply impossible to live by.

They have been consigned to an ethical limbo along with almost the whole of the Sermon of the Mount and the rest of the ethic of Jesus. About all that remains is, the cryptic — to most Christians not cryptic enough — driving of the money changers from the temple, and these days they are willing to see almost anyone as a money changer to be exorcised.

We here, though not Christian, think that Jesus was serious when he delivered the Sermon on the Mount. We think it is a workable ethic. We are even inclined to think that it is the only workable ethic.

That is why it disturbs us to see the great mass of the Christian society unable to conceive of the man who turns his other cheek today as anything but a coward or a fool.

(In Limited Numbers)

From 1945 on Walter Thompson sailed on the merchant ships of no less than 15 countries. But not one of these states would accept the responsibility for issuing him a travel document or granting him permanent residence.

Eventually he appealed to an agency of the United Nations and after considerable effort in all directions they informed him that Colombia would open its doors to him. But by that time it didn't matter very much. Walter Thompson had died in the interval.

Walter Thompson was a "refugee." Since the end of World War Two an estimated forty million men, women and children have become refugees.

A refugee has been defined as a person "outside his own country who has lost its protection and can not or will not, return to it because of a well-founded fear that he will be persecuted for his race, religion or political views."

He is truly a man without a country. And without papers or passport, there is little chance of him finding one.

In December 1958, the United Nations proclaimed WORLD REFUGEE YEAR which is to run from June 1959.

The aims of WRY are (1) to focus interest on the refugee problems. (2) to encourage additional financial contributions from governments, voluntary agencies and the general public and

By

(3) to encourage additional opportunities for permanent refugee solutions through voluntary repatriation, resettlement or integration on purely a humanitarian basis.

The program of the WRY is to encourage national efforts to help solve the refugee problem. It is hoped that member nations will aid the refugee program by contributing financially to recognized agencies or extending a satisfactory legal status to refugees in their territory or by settling refugees in new homes in their country.

The United Nations will in no sense run the program of the World Refugee Year. Its services will be available through the High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees, and the United Nations Office of Public Relations.

But the responsibility for alleviating the plight of the world's refugees still remains with the member nations of the UN.

In Canada a "Canadian Committee for World Refugee Year" has been established with forty-five sponsoring organizations, who will attempt through their various services to aid in solving the refugee problem.

The Toronto Committee for World Refugee Year, has opened its campaign to raise funds by sponsoring the world premier of the motion picture "On the Beach."

The Toronto committee has set a 325,000 dollar objective to aid refugees in Camp Oerel in Germany, Hong Kong and the Middle East.

The refugees are scattered across the world, existing at subsistence level in teeming slums and overcrowded camps in Europe and Hong Kong.

In Europe there are thirty thousand refugees in camps in Austria, Greece and Italy. Many of them are Hungarians who fled from their country during revolutions. Nineteen thousand of these are in camps.

Demand Stop Slaughter

BETHLEHEM, Dec. 15, (UPI) Reports of mass butchery in this small town five miles south of Jerusalem reached the outside world today, following the birth of a child said to be divine.

Herod, king of Judea, is reported to have ordered the execution of all children under the age of two years after he was "mocked" by three diplomatic envoys who were for a short period in his service.

Accounts of the incident are trickling slowly out of the isolated town, and one source, S. Matthew, said Mary of Nazareth, 20, gave birth to the child.

Matthew said further the child, a male, was named Jesus.

The situation is complicated by divorce proceedings. The father said he intended to file against his wife shortly before the birth.

The man said he was visited by a representative of the authority over him who told him the child was conceived in her by that authority.

This, he said, caused him to change his mind.

The townsfolk believe the child is divine and he has been called a savior.

The birth took place in a stable, near Bethlehem's only hotel.

Joseph, a carpenter, said he and his wife had come to Bethlehem to pay their taxes, and that the birth had occurred unexpectedly.

A Vatican committee investigating the possibility that a miracle might have taken place issued a statement saying it could find no natural cause for the incident.

Almost immediately after the birth was made public, reliable sources in Herod's court said the king was extremely angry that he had not been informed earlier.

A statement issued by palace officials said he had sent three representatives to Bethlehem disguised as shepherds to check into the reports. They took gifts of surplus produce with them.

envoys said they had been led to the place of birth by a bright star which rose in the East. He termed the child "King of the Jews."

The man also said he had been warned in a dream that he should not return to Herod with the information the king requested, and so that he returned to his home by another route.

Officials at the University of Palestine's astronomy department said late last night they had observed a gleaming white saucer-shaped object moving across the eastern sky at about the time the three ambassadors said the birth had taken place.

These reports were substantiated by similar observations across the continent.

Matthew reported that another representative of the authority over Joseph suggested he take his wife and the alleged savior to Egypt. The representative said he had heard Herod intended to have the child executed.

Latest reports said Joseph was preparing for such a journey, although he delayed to settle where he was going.

Students at the University of Palestine have begun to circulate petitions "demanding the slaughter of the young people."

University of Toronto students have begun to circulate petitions "demanding the slaughter of the young people." U of P. he planned no action here "until more details are available."

"We would push N.F.C. to investigate the reports," he said, "and action might be taken if the situation is still relevant after Christmas."

On Thursday evening, December 17, at 8.30 p.m. at the Odeon Carlton Theatre, the Toronto Committee for World Refugee Year will sponsor the world premiere of the Stanley Kramer movie "On The Beach".

The movie is based on the book by Nevil Shute and deal with the last survivors of an atomic war. Radiation is gradually destroying all life and the movie details the reaction of the last survivors in Australia as they await the inevitable end.

The movie stars Ava Gardner, Gregory Peck and Fred Astaire, who for the first time takes on a straight dramatic role. It has received outstanding notices from critics who have attended advance previews.

Proceeds from the premiere on Thursday night will go toward helping refugees in Camp Oerel in Germany. The camp is midway between Hamburg and Hanover and has been in existence since the end of World War Two.

Its inhabitants 324 men, women and children in 118 households. A former ammunition dump, the camp is made up of 21 wooden barracks and 2 stone buildings, all of which are in bad condition. Work for the camp inhabitants in the surrounding rural area is very rare.

Ellington Et Al

The Duke Ellington orchestra played an excellent concert at Massey Hall last Friday night.

The well-balanced program contained old favorites associated with the Ellington orchestra, selections from recent compositional work, the ever-present Ellington medley, and various unclassifiable, but highly entertaining numbers. Among the latter belonged the song and dance and satire routines by Ray Nance.

The band sounded fresh and vigorous, with the full impact of Duke's musical genius emitting from almost every selection, whether slow moody ballads, guttural swingers or polished innovations. The jazz feeling was there, the musical perfection was there, utilizing the orchestra to create the framework and backdrop for a number of outstanding soloists. Among them were such talented musicians as Johnny Hodges, Ray Nance, Harry Carney and Paul Gonsalves, all of whom have been featured with Duke Ellington for many years.

Some highlights from this thoroughly enjoyable evening were supplied by the two vocalists: Ozzie Bailey and Lil Greenwood. In particular Mr. Bailey's strong, full-ranged voice proved to be pleasant. What Miss Greenwood lacked in voice colour, was compensated for by her verve and blues feeling.

We hope that Duke Ellington will return again to Toronto soon, and that other jazz concerts may be equally well presented in the meantime.

RECORDS
Charlie Mingus. MINGUS AH UM (Columbia). This is the record for any jazz fan who wants to refresh jaded ears in this collection of nine experimental selections. Charlie Mingus has not dwelt on repetitious modern jazz, but instead indicated several healthy directions in which it will surely develop.

A preaching gospel-themed complete with shouts and a con-funky beat called "Better Git It In Your Soul" explores blues roots. Other tunes are soft or swinging, but always original. Rhythmic inventions and new voicings enhance the old, muted horns delineate pretty melodies.

Creative musicianship, an interest in the future of jazz, a knowledge of its past and present form, plus a great deal of humour, i.e. the wonderful take-off on the Charleston era on "Jelly Roll", or the tributes to Parker on "Bird Calls", and Ellington on "Open Letter to Duke", make this one of the most interesting and different LP's of the year.

Count BASIE. CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD (Roulette). The unmistakable Basie sound, beat, and direct happy music is here arranged by several Basie sidemen. The results are as good as the earlier collection of Neal Hefti arrangements on Roulette. On "The Deacon" some more modern voicings are used, solos are played with thought throughout, and some particularly inspired blowing is heard on "Half Moon Street".

The pure jazz of the Basie band swings true and simple on every track of this record. The result is a satisfying collection of (Continued on Page 10)

Thelonius Monk Quintet. 5 by MONK by 5 (Riverside). Thelonius Monk is another strong individual in the modern jazz genre. Here he is accompanied by his regular working quartet plus Thad Jones on cornet, and the results are shown by the cohesiveness of the music. His very personal style and bending of the off-key note is here fully supported by his sidemen. (Not like the unsuccessful attempts to record him with people unfamiliar or uneasy with his subtleties, such as "Mulligan Meets Monk" or "Monk and The Jazz Messengers"). An old Monk favorite "Straight No Chaser" is rendered here in a full exotic sound, while swinging like crazy. Another outstanding track is "Ask Me Now", a beautiful ten-minute ballad sensitively played and developed. If you are not yet familiar with Monk's work this album will be well worth trying, and if you know Monk, you'll already have it.

Horace Silver. BLOWIN' THE BLUES AWAY (Blue Note). One of the leaders in the funky hard-bop idiom, Horace is here fronting a quintet and trio. He has consistently produced a high quality of music, and this album is no exception. In this jazz idiom it is easy to devote whole tracks to mere thoughtless blowing, which may swing, but in the end are mere shord exercises. Silver has here again proved his talent, each selection is an evolving structure stating a single worked-out theme.

A slowly moving trio number, aptly titled "Melancholy Mood", varies the pace, set by such waiters as "Sister Sadie" and a cooking "Break City." In the latter Louis Hayes on drums supports the fire of the group by pushing the soloists along at breakneck speed. The soloists are not outstanding individually, but are capable executioners of Silver's music. Both Blue Mitchell on trumpet, and Junior Cook on tenor, will certainly develop more individualism with time.

Miles Davis. JAZZ TRACK (Columbia). One side of this album is devoted to the soundtrack of another French film employing jazz, the other side to three tunes by the regular Davis sextet. The film music to "L'Ascenseur pour l'échafaud" is composed by Miles and played by him together with four French musicians. If you enjoyed the side of Miles where he has played orchestral jazz (Miles Ahead, Somethin' Else, Porgy and Bess), you'll find this a rewarding companion piece. Here is a variety of moods dictated by the principal scenes in the film, and excellent jazz explorations, reminiscent of the above album.

A more familiar setting is on the remaining sextet tunes. Especially the Davis-Coltrane rapport in the continuation of previously stated ideas. A Miles collector's must.

Miles Davis. KIND OF BLUE (Columbia). The personnel of the Miles Davis organization has here changed considerably since the famous "Round About Midnight" and "Relaxing with Miles" albums. Bill Evans has replaced Red Garland on piano, James Cobb is on drums in the place of "Philly Joe" Jones, and of course there is the additional voice of Julian Adderly on alto. There isn't the same simple unity which resulted from the interplay of the former group, instead there is a newer richness of voicings.

All the selections are appropriately blue, new original material, searchingly improvised at the recording-session. They seem to lack some of the earlier directness, but have added a new dimension of musical lyricism.

CODA. For a complete coverage for the Toronto jazz scene, as well as lists of clubs, radio programs, and concerts in the area, you can refer to Coda, the Canadian jazz magazine, published here in Toronto by John Norris, and available at every jazz club for a mere 15 cents.

Lover

A student in his graduating year at McMaster University has crammed Polish into his schedule so that he will be able to write to the girl in the Toronto Star that he fell in love with.

Bob Hunter, 21, of Elliott Lake, said Friday night he fell in love with a Polish girl whose picture appeared in the paper as part of a story concerning the shortage of men in Poland.

The girl, Halina Borecka, 19, is a final-year engineering student in a trades school near Warsaw.

They have already written frequently to each other, and Hunter has found an uncle of Miss Borecka lives in Hamilton.

The uncle translates the letters from Poland, and Hunter is attempting to write his replies in Polish.

That handsome piece of art work immediately above you is called, in the newspaper racket, a standing head, because it stands at the head of the column (hatch) and is used every time the column appears.

Unfortunately there wasn't room for his name, but the deed was done by Peeter Sepp. And very nicely, too. Thanks.

santa bardot

According to a Dutch psychologist, Brigitte Bardot may be replaced by Santa Claus as a sex symbol. A. D. DeGreet says Santa Claus has always been "the patron of the whole reproductive process, from petting to courtship to marriage, sexual life, fertility and fertilization, pregnancy, birth up to and including family life."

The writer says studies of Santa Claus legends show that apart from his interest in children, he had something to do with sexuality and fertility.

Now let's see, how can we re-arrange things from there.

If Santa replaces Bardot, Bardot might take over Santa's current role as Christ's representative around the end of December.

Or Bardot might be crowded out like Christ, and they might team up. It would be a smash at the box-office.

comics

The psychology of the comic-strip character will be examined on a CBC radio show this Thursday at 8 p.m. If you have ever wondered if Mary Worth suffers guilt-feelings of a transferred father-fixation, this is the show for you.

Entitled "Blondie on the Couch", the program will attempt to analyze and assess the characters in strips ranging from Pogo to Dick Tracy.

For instance, is Dick Tracy a homicidal sadist? Listen and learn. L'il Abner and Pogo come under the category of social criticism. The American myth will of course be connected with dear old motherly busybodying Mary Worth, Orphan Annie (aged 83), Blondie and Bringing Up Father. This last strip has always had an unpleasant connotation for us, connected in some subconscious way with cannibalism.

Among questions to be discussed are "Does Terry follow — or formulate — U.S. foreign policy?"

pinching

Pinching is spreading. The idea of a Pincher's Club started at the University of Saskatchewan and has gradually and mysteriously moved across Canada until it reached the University of Toronto.

Officially, members must be males, must be between the ages of 12 and 120, must have ingrown toenails, one white hair and lots of nerve.

There is no cost involved in joining the club. You become a member automatically when you make your first pinch.

Members are expected to be active at all times, in line-ups for Wallace Room books especially.

Although to pinch means to squeeze between the ends of the finger and thumb or between the jaws of some instrument, pinchers or pliers are not allowed.

Because of health risks, teeth are also outlawed.

Meanwhile among the female students of U of T, reports say an anti-pinchers club is rapidly forming. This organization will take no active measures, it is said, but will concern itself with issuing advice, such as "when a gentleman comes up behind you, do not smile, but sit down fast."

fortunecookies

Have you heard the latest prisoner joke? This man was locked in a telephone receiver.

Trying to reach a fellow newspaper to plan the next hate campaign, we got nothing but a busy signal. After a few tries, we got bored and stood listening to the busy signal.

After a few seconds, we could distinguish voices beneath the buzzing.

The first voice belonged to what sounded like a young boy, yelling at the top of his lungs.

"Call me! Call me!" he yelled, "Don't you want to call me?"

"What's your number?" asked an older voice.

And the child gave it.

We called the number and got a sweet old lady who denied knowing anything about it.

An hour later we called our fellow hate-monger again. He was still busy, and the child was still yelling. This time he gave another number.

deathrisk

A Varsity copy-runner, one of those heaven-protected people who stooge valiant exhibitions of driving skill up to the North Toronto Herald Press every night, explained his recent injuries in this way.

"I was making my usual Paul Revere run, worrying about nothing, because I have eyes in the back of my head. Unfortunately I was in need of a haircut, and my vision was somewhat obscured."

A gorgeous blond at the scene said the car went by her "at a terrific fabulous speed, like it was cutting out from a fire."

She said she had been fixing her leotards which had slipped at the time.

by god

The funniest lines we've heard this year are culled from transactions in the bookstore, usually between customers and one particular clerk.

This was the latest. A student wandered in and asked for a book of Job which for some unknown reason is on the list of a general English course.

"Who is the author?" she asked blankly. "That's the only way we find the book, you know."

The student thought. Finally he said "by God".

She went away and checked. Then she came back and asked for the initials.

There are far too many moments of beauty here to mention them all, but I will cite some of my favorites: bars 80 following in the second subject (second main theme) bars 198 following in the development, bars 428 following in the recapitulation, the horn solo in the same section (bars 469-476), and in the Coda the rather grotesque effect of bars 513-526.

The second movement, Scherzo, is full of jokes and surprises. The drum, for example, is, to quote Vaughan Williams again, "the enfant terrible of this movement, always butting in where it is not wanted". A tympanist really has to have guts to play this drum part boldly and well. He has to hammer out the motif idea at the oddest places, and in one spot particularly comes in on what we think is the wrong bar: but he does it less obviously (the volume drops), and we can perceive Beethoven's sly grin between the lines.

Let's hope that at bar 93 Kurtz plays it as written. At this spot the whole body of strings gallops along on the motif alone, while the poor woodwinds (only eight of them!) have to blow as furiously as possible to get their jolly little melody heard. But if the strings are toned down a bit it will come off well: no need to use the added horn and, later, trumpet parts supplied by Richard Wagner; they take out the mischief and add a grand triumphal air, but I'd rather have the mischief.

The Trio of the second movement, by the way, has some of the most beautiful counterpoint in all Beethoven. It is balanced by a later passage of solid chords (the first real work the trombones do in this symphony, although they do open the Trio with a grand high D fortissimo that should curl your hair), that give a most solid conclusion to the section. The Scherzo is then repeated, and a surprise Coda concludes the movement.

I've already mentioned the few artificialities of the third movement (slow). Let's talk about its fine points now. You will probably feel that you have never heard such ethereal music before, and you are probably right. The sounds flow smoothly, beautifully, quietly, as deep as a winter's

11. Prælude to the Festival

I've been thinking for some time that I'd like to tie this series of essays definitely into the season's musical life. The goal was missed a few weeks ago with our ninth article that had something to do with Beethoven's Eroica; it was performed live two weeks earlier, although the essay was written last September. This time I'm anticipating. I'd like to record some thoughts of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, the Great Number Nine, Efreim Kurtz, perhaps the greatest living conductor of ballet, will be performing it in Massey Hall next Sunday, December 20, with the CBC Symphony Orchestra and four of Canada's leading vocalists, as well as the home-grown Mendelssohn Choir. But I shall not here prognosticate on the performance next Sunday: anything can happen! We'll just mull over the music a bit beforehand in preparation. Undoubtedly those of us who enjoyed Heinz Unger's performance of it last May will have a head-start.

In this symphony Beethoven proves yet again that the arts need the genius who can, after his period of apprenticeship, move forward by himself and make the real contribution: masterpieces that, although they may be only weakly greeted at first, will in time provide for a change in outlook, and influence other artists in later years to an extent almost beyond comprehension. Long before this work was written (1817-1824), Beethoven had started the tortuous evolution from creation by precept to creation by ingenuity. In this last symphony he has left precept almost completely behind: ingenuity (in its pure sense, if you please) now overshadows it magnificently. As is the nature of things, Beethoven's ingenuity has made his music distinctive, influential, and important, and has in its turn become precept.

Now, we must be honest with ourselves and with Beethoven (and, by the way, with the poor souls who will have to perform the work next week); there are imperfections in this work and we must recognize them. But we can also find solace in the fact that they are few and far between. As a whole the symphony presents so many passages of such tremendous emotional impact and beauty that the faults, if we don't dwell upon them, glide away quickly.

Some of the passages that don't quite fit are these.

In the Finale, a set of Variations on Schiller's Ode to Joy, we have what Vaughan Williams calls "one of the greatest melodies of the world". Anyone who won't go along with that has yet to leave the simian period of evolution. But time after time this melody wears a rather obvious tail-piece (see bars 29-32 of page 251 and passim in the Penguin edition of the score, bars 264-267 overall); it really is quite mundane, and shows Beethoven falling back for a moment into the grip of precept. Only for a moment, though.

Another example (and I in the second theme of the 3rd movement. It is not one of Beethoven's "better" tunes, although it certainly does sing. But when it goes into its second variation (bar 99 and following) it takes the form of some rather tedious arabesque-work in the first violins. If it were a really good theme to start with the results might have been more representative; as it is this is only Grade-C Beethoven.

Both these examples share one characteristic: they are embellishments of themes that really don't need any embellishment at all. The grandeur of the originals seems a bit tainted with rococo flourish. The ornamentation is mechanical rather than what musicologists for some embarrassing reason like to call seminal.

Perhaps the most practical shortcoming of the work, though, is the persistent "tessitura" for the higher voices in the choral finale. The best example is in bars 717-731 (Penguin pages 329-332), over thirteen of which the sopranos hold A, collectively! Then there is what I consider one of music's most dreaded moments: pages 348-350 in the Penguin score, bars 833-843, all four soloists in a completely exposed, highly floreated, sustained ("poco adagio") tapestry of sound that taxes even the Schwartzkopfs and Fischer-Dieskaus. No soloist comes out of this with the feeling that Beethoven really played fair.

But on the other hand, how much more of this symphony is, to be bold, perfect! Let's start from the beginning and pick out the odd section which I think you might especially look for.

The noteworthy fact about the beginning of the first movement is that, for sixteen bars or so, you can't tell what key it's written in. Unless of course you have peeked at the programme note; it will say D minor, but try to get the effect for yourself of a constantly shifting tonality throughout the whole movement, and hence an emotional uncertainty. This is an interesting conflict, for in spite of this underlying uncertainty the form and lines of the music seem to hammer away in a most positive manner. But you will get the impression, I think, that here Beethoven is expressing doubt of the most

UTDC

The University of Toronto Drama Festival will be held at Hart House on January 8 and 9. The eminent Canadian playwright and editor, Robertson Davies has been invited to adjudicate the six one-act productions from various colleges and faculties.

The School of Nursing production of A Maid Goes Forth To War by Stokes McCune of the tragic realist school will be the Festival's curtain-raiser on January 8. Pulitzer prize winner George Kelly's The Flattering Word, the Victoria College offering and Lady Gregory's The Rising of the Moon, SMC's entry will also be seen the first night.

The unknown Lady Gregory was one of the key figures in the Irish Renaissance Movement which attempted to arouse a consciousness of cultural unity in the Irish people. Along with W. B. Yeats, she founded and managed the famous Abbey Theatre, which has had a great effect on modern American drama.

The fantasy and experimental techniques of Thornton Wilder will be explored by the Ontario College of Education in their production of The Happy Journey. The second evening will also feature Josephina Niggl's Mexican melange, Sunday Costs Five Pesos by the Trinity College Dramatic Society.

The U.C. Player's Guild fascinating study of August Strindberg's pessimistic realism in their production of Miss Julie, closes the festival. The U.C. production also includes a dance sequence and avant-garde incidental music composed especially for this production by Paul Robinson of the Varsity staff.

night and as warm as a lover's hand. Don't let the intricacies of the texture bother you; leave that to the musicians, they can count well enough! Just sit and steep yourself in the glories of this music. If you do, I think that you will not be tired by its sixteen minutes' length; the trumpet fanfares at the end will be welcome as contrast and relief, but you won't be glad to have this music over with.

What new can one say about the finale? It is certainly dramatic, and without a doubt had as much influence by itself on all Romantic music as all other works before its time put together. Listen to its beginning; or rather, try not to, I dare you! Such a chord! dissonance hammering at you from all directions at once. But then something close to a miracle happens. Listen to the cellos and basses ("Selon le caractère d'un recitativo, mais in tempo"): these instruments are actually on the edge of human speech! As a bass player I find this almost unbelievable even yet, but it's still there. You could come closer to actual speech only by calling upon the human voice, and believe it or not (remember you are in 1824 Vienna!) that is exactly what Beethoven does. But before he does he has made the instruments speak to you so passionately that your spine will tingle. They hunt for a melody that will express their joy, and reject those of the preceding movements one by one: "Is this the answer? . . . Will humour do? . . . No! . . . The third movement? . . . Well, perhaps (they aren't convinced) . . . But what is this? (the oboes somehow have come up with the grandest idea yet) Yes! That is it! Listen! Hear us! Isn't this wonderful! God! how beautiful and true" And so it goes. By now everyone cries to join in. If this doesn't draw tears to your eyes nothing will.

The baritone vocalist then introduces words: as we have said, the ode An die Freude by Schiller, a friend of Beethoven's, and Germany's greatest lyric poet. All sorts of moods and emotions pervade the score now. You'll hear a funny little march section, then a huge chorale of deeply religious nature ("Brothers, o'er yon starry sphere surely dwells a loving Father!"), then a blend of "mirth and rapture," and drunken ("feuertrunken") shouts, and mysterious whispers, and rollicking dances, and then, at the end, a truly joyful ballad: "No Sunday School about this, no angel choirs, but real rowdy human beings. The drums thump, the cymbals crash, the trumpets blare, the chorus sing an atrociously vulgar tune which, nevertheless, or perhaps therefore, is one of the great inspirations of the symphony. But Beethoven has one more act of daring up his sleeve. The climax to all this rowdiness is a sudden chorale-like paean in praise of Joy, the daughter of Elysium. Then once more the drums beat, the cymbals clash, the trumpets blare and in twenty quick bars the Symphony is over."

Enjoy it, whatever you do! And if we don't catch sight of you in the crowd at Massey Hall next Sunday, have a Merry Christmas.

futile fertility

Daffydil Dubious Delight

A lively but rather uneven admixture of singing, dancing, medical humor and science fiction is being offered this week in Hart House Theatre in the name of Daffydil, the Medical Society's annual extravaganza. To some extent, however, it is somewhat too medical and not quite as extravagant as it might be.

The story deals with a Russian attempt to populate the moon; Lynne Fredericks as Tania, the Russian discus-throwing embodiment of fertility, is at all times delightful, and Roger White as Tiger Jones, her male counterpart, bounces about the stage with gay abandon. When the plot is forgotten, they are there to amuse.

Mike Shaw, Bob Ginsberg and Garry Prince are three N.K.V.D. men their acting is not exactly mature but their song is farce in the best Daffydil tradition.

Dave Preston and Director Peter Peter Adam milk some of the best slapstick from the oral examination scene, although the skit is a little long. John Hanbley as the famous Dr. Adolph Tiler brings a good many laughs, and Bill Harvey as the hair-lipped medical student who is also good—if one can convince oneself that a hairlip is a legitimate object of comedy. The "Jamilton Jam" scene is funny if a little tedious; cues are picked up slowly, but a song by some English detectives relieves the monotony. Joy Armstrong's song is pleasant.

Jim MacDougall opens the second act with a monologue about the trials of an incontinent Italian singer, and he is easily the most talented performer to grace the stage. Unfortunately, what follows fails to maintain that standard; Mel Ball, Roy Shoichet and Joey Starr have an only mildly funny lyric to work on—and they work it too hard. Much of the spice in this number is submerged in an endless succession of old, old jokes; one of these is directed at the physical appearance of Madame Khushchov, and it is in exquisitely bad taste. The meeting of the Russian Academy offers some good impersonations of Toronto medical professors, but once again the pace is almost painfully slow.

By far the most brilliant aspect of the show is Syd Vouden's choreography. The opening Russian number has the orchestra standing on its head, it is as near to Moiseyev as any college show might be expected to get. An interpretive sequence later in the First Act is completely professional, and the moon dance is almost as good. The singing of the chorus is less impressive; it has been traditional for Daffydil glee clubs to sacrifice good articulation, cohesion and at times pitch for a measure of enthusiasm, but in the Russian and Procreation numbers the sacrifice was in vain. The music itself carries these songs and in the Russian number Vouden's choreography makes up for any number of vocal errors. Nevertheless, the finale is attacked with much enthusiasm as the chorus delivers the annual Daffydil rousers from just behind the footlights.

Music for the show is the work of Martin Jerry, Mel Ball, Roy Shoichet and Joey Starr, and it is melodic and spirited. Chairman Manfred Harth and a dozen others wrote the book; the basic idea is original, some of the lines are hilarious, but not infrequently comedy gives way to crudity. The sets are not particularly imaginative, and the lighting does little to improve them; undoubtedly the lighting does little to improve them; undoubtedly many of the technical flaws will be corrected during the week.

For all its faults, however, it is still Daffydil, and it is on the whole a delightful evening's entertainment.

Peter Brawley.

30 Athens-Bound For Conference

Over 30 University of Toronto students will journey to Athens, Ohio, the day after Christmas to take part in the 18th Ecumenical Student Conference on the Christian World Mission.

The conference, sponsored by the United Student Christian Council, is held once every four years. It lasts a week.

Theme of the conference this year is "Inquiry and Involvement on Strategic Frontiers." Publicity Director of the U of T Student Christian Movement John Hayes said last night the topic will "deal with the changing mission of the church in a changing world."

"Thinking students in the Christian community are dissatisfied with the failure of the church in a changing world."

"Thinking students in the Christian community are dissatisfied with the failure of the church to make any appreciable contribution to the alleviation of tensions within society and on the international scene," he added.

Some of the other conference topics are "Racial Tensions, Modern Secularism, Communism, and The Responsibility for Statesmanship."

About 200 university students from every province will take part in the conference. Besides this over 3,500 students from American universities will be present.

The United Students' Christian Council is a federation of the major Christian intercollegiate student agencies on the North American continent.

The federation will devote its energies in the next several years to a program entitled "The Life and Mission of the Church."

Aim of the program is to re-think responsibility of the church in the present world situation and to train students for the new tasks which confront the church today.

At the conference this year three international leaders will give addresses—Martin Luther King, a key leader in the south, Bishop Leslie Newbigin of the United Church of South India, and Dr. D. T. Niles a Ceylon Churchman.

Students will hold daily discussion groups on the conference topics. But it will not be all work and no play. A well-rounded list of social activities will fill in the rest of the bill.

On boxing day U of T students will meet their cousins from other Canadian universities at the Toronto Bus Terminal.

Then they leave for Athens.

... and in this corner by pam hill

It's in the air that there is an M. E. Parkes trophy for women which is comparable to the T. H. Reed trophy for men. It basically being awarded on the same basis, although a committee is working on the details now. It will essentially be presented on the basis of participation, and number of able participants within a faculty.

This is a terrific thing to be starting the same year as the Women's Athletic Building is opening, but neither of these seem exactly definite at the moment. The Building is having its troubles, as is probably inevitable, but it almost seems that it might have been wiser to not open it at all this year. However, it is a thrill to be using the courts, etc. But it's also depressing to not be able to swim in the long-promised and -awaited swimming pool, etc.

Anyhow, let's have a brief run-down on how results might go for this M. E. Parkes trophy.

To date, Victoria has placed second in the baseball (due mainly to Lauranne VanValkenburg, Mary Ellen Anglin and Donnie Lewis) and may also do the same in swimming (particularly with Joanne Tait, Joy Sinclair and Gill Fisher). They will assuredly (?) retain their years-old Hockey Championship with Mary Ellen again, as well as retain the Skins Trophy with Helen Weider. They may even place in the badminton and volleyball.

P&HE have taken first place in the base-ball and basket-ball, due to Judy Smith, Joy Mahood and Barb Black in both fields. (They also took second and third place in the basket-ball!) The volleyball will probably be the same with Viin Canep and Signy Paulson, both of whom are responsible for Phys. Ed's first and third in the Interfac. Archery, with five intercollegiate swimmers in the faculty (Val Lewis, Sally Bambridge, Sandy McMullen, Lynn Philpott, Liz Hunt), it hardly seems worth trying against them in the interfac. swim meet in February at Hart House!

And St. Hilda's isn't really completely out of the picture. They won the tennis in the fall with Margot Nunns and Sylvia Binkley, and also the golf with Leslie Bull and Mary Selby. Their bid to retain the swimming championship might be a far call, but a second may be in store — as well as a possible second in hockey if they can beat out Phys. Ed. And with Dorothy Vernon still an undergrad, the badminton should again stay with the Saints.

And then there are various threatening odds and ends scattered about campus. POTS have Shirley German, Ann Edwards, Liz Bell and Ann Ferguson-Russell and Lee Morley in the swimming. UC has Lowell Pelton and Ann McCullagh in the swimming. Pharmacy has already scheduled a hockey practice, and that may be significant (but I doubt it, Sharon!) Meds has a terrific diver in Lil Bobson.

So, you add it up. It seems that unanimously P&HE have won this trophy already. But you can't really mind because they've stuff in classes, and then they turn out at the Interfac, and intercoll. practices. And with 'sports' like Judy Smith, Sandy McMullen, Judy Cansfield, Millie Hutt, and Betty Gallagher, among many, many others, you can't lose. Granted, you also have Lil Bobson in Meds, Mary Sellars in Nursing, Marg White in POTS.

Janet Medland at Trinity and Sue Pierce from Vic, but these are all scattered. It seems to me that these gals in P&HE all have something in common—above and beyond their ability—that leads them into this profession. They do deserve the trophy, but ... gee whiz, Ma, I wanna turn too!

1959: A REVIEW

comment by mike chykaliuk

"Time please, gentlemen, halt time!" shouted Santa as he blew the whistle on the University of Toronto Athletic program for 1959. The multitudes rose to stretch. Some cheered, some booed, some threw empty beer bottles, but most of them just stretched as the tired athletes ambled slowly off the field.

First off was Dah White, top college coach in the country, with his sometimes mighty, sometimes humble Football Blues. At the fore were captains Chisholm and Eyton leading the Devers, the Thoburns, the Dadds and the rest of these gallant lads who played their hearts out each Saturday afternoon. All seemed rather tired from battering their bodies on mud splattered gridirons to post a won six, lost one record.

Next off the field was Jack Kennedy, on his silver blades just gleaming, leading the newest version of the Puck Chasers. What could have been the worst Toronto season in many years because of graduation losses is now rapidly becoming another banner year.

After two losses, trainer Howie Ringham remarked: "The hardest thing they (Blues) have hit was the bottle in the King Cole Room."

However, good coaching and a lot of drive, hard work and spirit have prevailed to transform them into a growing pack of tiger Blues, built around a nucleus of veterans like Neale, Roth, Munro and Sullivan, and surrounded by a host of hustling youngsters showed shades of last season's savagery in subduing Montreal Carabins 8-0 on Saturday. Hard work, desire and youth are beginning to pay off for Kennedy's crew.

Following Jack off the field was John (we got murdered) McManus, commanding his basketball brigade. With a well-tanned frown on his well-tanned forehead John was still somewhat puzzled about Blues' 91-90 loss to Lawrence Tech. "We had them by five points with a minute left to play in the game, but blew the whole issue in the last few seconds." With experienced sharp shooters like Menezel, Norman, Ecclestone, Maguire and Potter you can bet Blues will not be blowing many more (if any) games in the New Year.

Here again many good young players back up the five mentioned, should make the second half of the year a rough one for the opposition.

John Sopinka, coach of the Intermediate Blues, next stomped off the field with his burly cubs, including Wright, King and Bates who had just finished sharpening their claws and teeth for important battles to come.

Proudly strutting off came Tony Canzano surrounded by a multitude of ready, but yet untried boxers. Behind him was it with Tony came Jack Amos and his two man wrestling team consisting of Bill Polito and Kenny Brown.

Next disappearing beneath the ramp were the fencers, the Champion soccer teams, the rugger team, the swimmers, inter-faculty Champions Victoria Red and Gold inspired by Tubby Milne, and a host of others.

As the hush settled over the scene, somewhere in a far off corner the bugle sounded the Charge of the Light Brigade (bless that bugle). This tune of ecstasy was followed by a mellow rumble that seemed to express sweet, sentimental wishes to all present, especially the ones who carried the beloved colors and to the ones who cheered them on. MERRY CHRISTMAS.

IF EVER a word symbolizes the 1959 Football season for the Varsity Blues it is "frustration." If ever a picture portrays this sentiment it is this one. Why all the frustration? Four weekends of mud, mud, mud, and more mud.

Phys-Ed Femmes Flying First

By SHARON MILGRAM

Gleaming back over an all too quickly passed fall term, I see one faculty particularly outstanding in "gothetics" — PHE!

Starting way back with the first interfaculty sport, softball, there was PHE defeating a favored Vic I team in two straight games for the title. Led by the pitching and hitting of Barb Black, the PHE femmes rolled up a very lopsided score in the first game and went on to a close 6-5 victory for the second game in the championship.

Next interfaculty team sport—basketball. Here it was all PHE with a powerful PHE III team taking the title by defeating their "little sisters", PHE II in a hard played sudden death final.

The game, which could have been considered as an intercollegiate practice, began rather slowly but picked up speed as the half approached.

Led by the intercollegiate center Judy Smith, who scored 27 points, the PHE III girls were never headed. They led 4-3 at the end of the first quarter, 21-15 at the half and 46-35 as the final whistle blew.

Top forwards for the PHE II team were Barb Black, their leading scorer with a dozen points, another intercollegiate player Joy Mahood with 11 points and until she was injured early in the second half, Vilu Kanep with 10 points.

The only thing that marred an otherwise exciting game was the surprisingly large number of fouls. There were 60 fouls called in the game with 31 being called against the III team and 29 against the II team.

Led by Helen Hassard with 19 points and Bev Bonnell with 9, the first year PHE girls ran up their total.

Leaving the interfaculty sports for a while, and turning to the girls intercollegiate teams, I see not so bright a picture.

Very early in the year, an archery team, made up of Vilu Kanep, Signi Paulson, Jean Hayward and Marg Merritt, finished a sorry fourth in the five-team intercollegiate outdoor archery tournament.

Also finishing fourth out of a five-team intercollegiate tournament was the U of T girls' swim team.

The following girls placed in the tourney:

First: Val Lewis in the fifty yard Butterfly;

Seconds: Joan Tails in the synchronized solo; Val Lewis, Sandy McMullen, Pat Armstrong and Pam Hill in the 200 yard medley; Elizabeth Bell and Ann Russell in the synchronized duet and Lois Pelton in the fifty yard free style.

Glisky Gloats On Varsity Success In '59...

By GENE GLISKY, Varsity Sports Enthusiast

To the echoing roars of Velut Arbor Aeo and Go Blues Go, mighty University of Toronto, 14,000 strong, took to the sporting battlefields and won three out of a possible nine Intercollegiate championships. In the first half of the 59-60 sportademic year.

We had a football team.

The dependable Varsity Soccer Blues just went and won themselves their eighth consecutive Intercollegiate soccer championship. Two of them to be exact. Varsity won the Western division league, again frustrating the OAC-VC Redmen (which means Ontario Agricultural... oh the hell with it) in their bid to come close to the coveted title, and captured the Blackwood Trophy. Varsity also defeated McGill in a two game total series for the Eastern honors. McGill handed the Blues their only loss 1-0, in the first game, but buckled 5-1 in the second, thus giving Blue the Toronto and District Football Association cup.

Blues, drawing cheering mobs of five to ten enthusiastic supporters to all their home games, provided a thrilling brand of soccer for the campus. Roger Peretz, Cobby Green, Paul (Smvth) Avis and all the jolly socceros deserve a hofs-off.

The rugged champs won the Gilbert Turner Trophy for the first time since 1949, defeating their arch-rivals McGill 8-6 in a two game total point series. The final game of the series played on a rainy, muddy back campus was one of the hardest fought, most stirring athletic contests seen this year.

University of Toronto sailors won the Colonel Grant Trophy, emblematic of Intercollegiate yachting supremacy, for the third year in a row. Al Rae and Charles Grant defeated their nearest rivals, Queen's by 12 points in a shifty light breeze (which is better than no breeze at all) at the Queen City Yacht Club. Grant also captured individual honors for the event.

The intercollegiate football Blues, although unfortunately competing in an organized league this year, unveiled a powerhouse. Losing 14-13 to Western Colts in the first exhibition game of the season, Rinkies went on to trounce defending champions Revels, twice and then walloped Colts 32-0 in the return encounter. Western officially were this season's league champs.

Varsity track men took second place in the Intercollegiate track meet at Hamilton. A much improved Varsity contingent came within three points of upsetting defending champions McGill.

In the Harrier championships at Montreal (bad place to have races), Toronto placed third behind McGill and champions OAC-VC (same outfit as above).

Toronto lost the Golf championship they captured last year, buckling to the champs from Western and finishing in third place.

In tennis it was the same story. In rain and more rain, at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club, University of Montreal presented a heavy cast to win the Crown. Toronto finished in fifth place.

If Varsity follows the same pattern as last year, the lion's share of the Intercollegiate glory should fall to the Blue and White in the second half of competition. With badminton, skiing, boxing, fencing, gymnastics, squash, wrestling, swimming, hockey and basketball coming up in more or less that order, Varsity can't reign as queen (?) of the Intercollegiate sports world.

And so Merry Christmas to all the brawny and brawny competitors in the weird and wonderful world of true blue amateur sports. Merry Christmas to all the eager managers, tape twirlers, equipment hangers, ticket rippers, zamboni pilots, P. A. numblers, statistics adders, uppers, information givers, outers, cartwheelers, horn tooters, backslappers, and all members of the sports writing fraternity (nost word).

Merry Christmas to all the hard working and wonderful coaches of the immense U of T staff and to all the directors of sports activities on this campus. Here's wishes for bigger and better muscles in 1960.

Campaigns In Full Swing While a New Year Begins

Campaigning for the University of Toronto's annual Model Parliament elections swung into high gear yesterday as all three campus parties issued platforms and clearly sketched their battle lines for the campaign.

No sooner were the platforms published than spokesman for two parties—the Liberals and the CCF—issued statements concerning their opponents' platforms.

Liberal Parliamentary Leader Dick Hamilton (III Trin) said the CCF platform "contains radical and dangerous policies that could stifle private investment with chaotic effects on the Canadian economy".

Hamilton said the CCF platform contained "a long list of good things a government should do for an individual".

"The Liberals support these wholeheartedly — since they were first introduced by the Liberal party", he said.

With respect to the platform of the campus Conservative party, Hamilton said that "the PC magazine — curiously enough called by the same name as is the publication of the campus Communist Club — states blandly 'the facts are our platform'".

Meanwhile the CCF also issued a statement about the platforms of its opponents last night.

Prominent CCF'er Steve

Platforms on page three

Lewis (IV UC) said that "both the Liberal and Conservative platforms are remarkably similar."

"Both parties refuse to come to grips with any major national or international problems," he said.

He continued: "They both passively accept nuclear weapons on Canadian soil; both skirt the problem of conventional defence and both waffle on the problem of recognition of China."

Campus Progressive Conservatives could not be reached for comment last night.

Active campaigning will continue throughout the entire week until Friday, which is polling day.

The polling booths—located in faculties and colleges throughout the university—will be open from 10 a.m. to two p.m. next Friday, and any registered student of the U of T is eligible to vote.

Won't Endorse Mickities Check

The president of the St. Michael's Student Administrative Council faces a possible impeachment, first in the history of University of Toronto student government, when his council meets tonight.

The council drew up the notice of impeachment before the Christmas holidays after Jordon Sullivan refused to sign a check allotting money to Mickities, the college musical.

The show tagged "Short Engagement" opens tonight in the Hart House Theatre.

Before the check, which cuts into the SMC SAC budget, can be cashed, it requires the signature on the controversial check because the money will be used to finance the production of a script that was not written by a St. Mike's student.

The whole issue was launched last fall when Matthew Corrigan, the musical's director, said he could not work with the original script by SMC's Phil Nicholas's.

Corrigan then decided to give it to an outsider, CBC writer Geoffrey Smith, to "tighten it up."

Corrigan did not have the permission of Tom Sutherland the Mickities director, Nicholas, or even the council to have the script worked over.

Nevertheless, when the script came back Nicholas repudiated Corrigan's action, saying the script was rewritten so much it no longer was his own. As a result he refused to sign it, claiming it as his handiwork.

A stalemate arrived and the problem thickened when Corrigan refused to use Nicholas' first script in the show.

During the next few days the SMC SAC was reeked by a session of stormy debates as an all out effort was made to come to grips with the problem.

In one of the sessions an executive motion was introduced to the council asking it to disassociate itself from the show but allow it to go on independent of the college. However this was defeated, and the funds were passed.

The council then presented Sullivan with the check. He told them flatly that it was morally impossible in his capacity as president to sign. "I find it impossible to condone a financial allotment after the students interests have been so flagrantly disregarded."

JORDAN SULLIVAN

After a hushed session, SMC SAC retaliated by presenting Sullivan with an ultimatum that he either sign the check or suffer the possible consequences of impeachment.

Council Secretary Jim Beingsner said last night if the check is not OKed SAC will have to either change its constitution or impeach the president.

"And it is highly improbable that the constitution will be altered over the issue. So that leaves only one out," he added.

"The council is not out to get Jordon or to hurt him. We need him. If we lose him it will be a blow to the council. More than that we will have a hard time filling his shoes," the secretary said.

Meanwhile Hawken blamed the hot issue on Sullivan. "Jordon has put the council in a position where he is just asking for trouble. The whole thing is childish," he said.

"This is the first time anything like this has happened in Mickities history. It's tough that it has to come up now and cast a bad name on the musical," he added.

Sullivan said he feels he has a prior responsibility to the SMC student body to protect their interests. He stressed "in conscience" he could not sign.

"I still feel firmly enough in my position and my principles to face whatever SAC action might be brought to bear against me," he said.

"I have always tried to act in good faith and to accept my responsibilities to the students. My job means a great deal to me, but my responsibility to the students who elected me means a great deal more."

Mickities has been under fire all year by SMC SAC. In one fiery meeting last term Sullivan resigned over the Mickities issue. Later he was reinstated.

For the impeachment to become effective two thirds of a council majority is needed.

Sullivan said last night he was looking for a settlement before impeachment became a necessity.

Campus Ideas Unique

Two of the University of Toronto's three campus political clubs last night said their campaign platforms contained ideas not included in their party's national platforms.

The Liberal and the CCF parties both said their platforms prominently featured original proposals.

Liberal Model Parliament Leader Dick Hamilton (III Trin) said "The Liberal's proposal for a world-Wide Student Conference is the most important, the most significant and the most worthwhile proposal ever to be put forward by any campus political club."

The proposal, published yesterday in the Liberal party election platform, called upon the Canadian government "to sponsor and pay the entire cost of the conference, to be held next year on a Canadian university campus."

The Liberal plan would see each nation invited to send two students to discuss the principles of international relations."

The Liberal plan as outlined in the party's platform says that "although observers would be welcome at this conference, no prominent politicians will be invited to address the assembly."

"To do so would make it into nothing but an occasion for propaganda — and this would defeat its original purpose," Hamilton said.

Liberal Club President Phil Goulston (II UC) pointed to another section of the party's platform—a proposal for student exchanges between Canada and Russia—as "another means of working for the attainment of peace."

"Students can make a special contribution to bringing about a greater understanding between East and West," he said. "They are more open-minded than politicians, with their responsibilities to specific governments."

Meanwhile CCF party spokesman Steve Lewis (IV UC) enumerated the original points contained in his party's platform.

"The CCF platform places new emphasis on the problems of the individual in the focus of a mass society", he said.

"It calls upon government to assume responsibility for educating the labouring man in some of the technical and social implications of his work", Lewis said.

He continued: "We — also advocate independently led discussions of political issues from the viewpoint of the worker, as well as active participation in management by labour."

CCF Model Parliament Leader Jerry Caplan (IV UC) said that the party's efforts are directed at "making civilization more democratic".

"The individual must not lose his initiative to corporate domination", Caplan said.

New CUP Charter Hopes To Gain Press Freedom

Delegates from 24 university newspapers across Canada returned from a Quebec City conference last week with a new charter, plans for a national magazine and a fresh outlook on the ideals and purposes of a campus newspaper.

The charter was created and passed by the 22nd annual conference of the Canadian University Press to clarify the freedoms and responsibilities of the student press.

The French-language newspapers were particularly interested in the charter, which was passed unanimously by the delegates.

The charter says student papers should be free from editorial influence by outside bodies, including students' councils.

NATIONAL MAGAZINE

The conference mandated the CUP president to continue negotiations with the National Conference of Canadian University Students with a view to founding a bilingual national university magazine.

The conference confirmed the establishment of a paid, full-time CUP president and re-elected CUP president Douglas Parkinson. He will hold office until December, 1961.

Alan Walker, Varsity CUP editor and columnist, was mandated to look into establishment of a cross-Canada column.

A new registration fee scale for member papers was established. Under it, The Varsity will pay a $215 membership fee. Last year, The Varsity paid $675.

CUP welcomed two new members: Toronto's Ryersonian and Montreal's Loyola News.

The Western Gazette, London, was awarded the Southam Trophy for the best paper in the twice-weekly-or-more class to which The Varsity belongs.

Jean Carriere, editor of Ottawa University's La Ronde, was elected CUP Ontario regional president.

The conference was marred by the critical injury of Bill Fitzgerald, delegate from the Xaverian Weekly of St. Xavier University in Nova Scotia, in a bus-taxi collision in Quebec City.

Fitzgerald was in critical condition when the conference ended. His taxi driver had been killed instantly.

Who Owns the Beatnik

By ALAN WALKER

Some of the mystery behind the University of Toronto's "beatnik for hire" was cleared up last night when Ladd Vornitg, whose name has been linked with the pretty co-ed, denied any part in the scheme.

"After I started the Group of Five last year, I have been blamed for everything," Vornitg said.

After Vornitg's statement, the real man behind Rles Karvanaque came forward to claim his fame. He is Gellelynn Ignatzio (III UC).

Ignatzio said he placed the small advertisement in The Varsity which started the whole campaign. After the ad appeared, the Toronto Telegram published pictures of Miss Karvanaque (admittedly an alias) on the front page.

"Then everybody tried to get into the act," Ignatzio said.

Next to bite was Toronto radio station CHUM. They interviewed the $5-beatnik by telephone, and tapes of the interview were used on three newscasts.

The Canadian Press picked up the story, and it went to New York by teletype where Associated Press carried it on its wires.

Almost immediately, the National Broadcasting Company contacted Ignatzio.

"By that time, it was too late to do anything else," Ignatzio said last night, "so Rles and I went into business."

"It was wild," Ignatzio said. "From the time we arrived in New York until the Garroway show was taped that afternoon, the big rush never let up."

Final arrangements for the pair to go to New York made at 1 a.m. Thursday, Dec. 17. Miss Karvanaque and Ig-natzio were on the 5:45 a.m. plane.

He said what had impressed him most about NBC was the man whose job it is to trot around the executive offices making sure everyone takes his pills on time.

"That day I was bothered with a slight case of my old trouble which crops up every time I have to appear publicly," Ignatzio said.

"I had two Dramamines. They're great for first-degree fear."

The Party Platforms

Progressive Conservatives

A responsible financial policy to ensure a stable foundation for the development of the Canadian economy, and to promote full employment and a sound dollar.

—the enactment of a National Anti-inflationary Act to recognize the importance of a sound dollar to our economic growth and prosperity, and provide for a continuing study of this problem.

—a policy of full employment to prevent and alleviate the anxiety, degradation, and hardships which unemployment entails.

—the appointment of a Royal Commission on tax reform.

A trade policy to expand and diversify Canadian trade on a genuinely multilateral basis.

—economic cooperation among the nations of the North Atlantic Community, to include—

a) a concerted program of foreign aid

b) gradual reduction of trade barriers

c) a NATO food bank

—negotiations with the Communist countries to establish an equitable basis for world trade.

—the maintenance of Canadian prices at a competitive level —short-term credit to foreign importers of Canadian goods.

—Canadian trade exhibits in other world markets.

A foreign policy to promote world peace, international security, and the economies of the underdeveloped nations.

—an end to nuclear testing —support of all realistic efforts to achieve disarmament, and a secure and just international peace

—extension of the Colombo Plan to include Africa

—increased special aid to the West Indies Federation

—"Coming of age" presents to the new members of the Commonwealth, to include commodities and long-term credits

—a Canadian advisory board to assist the governments of the emerging nations with administrative and organizational problems

A defence policy which recognizes the incontestable right of a nation to act in its own self-defence

—fulfillment of our commitments to NATO and NORAD

—specialization of Canada's armed forces —provision of the best available, modern equipment for Canada's defence forces

—a Senate Committee to study Canada's defence expenditures.

A national policy to promote the development of Education, the Arts, and Sciences, in Canada

—a Ministry of Arts and Sciences to

a) act for the promotion of the arts and sciences

b) co-ordinate the work of scientific research agencies

—increased Canada Council Grants

—ease the income tax burdens on students

An immigration policy to help reduce the world refugee problem, and meet the growth needs of the Canadian economy.

—establishment of an Immigration Appeal Board

A national development program to provide a framework of essential public facilities within which private enterprise can operate most effectively; and to promote self-sufficiency, and equality of opportunity, in all areas of Canada.

The Progressive Conservative Party unites Canadians of all the provinces and territories; of all races and creeds, of every station in life.

Campaign Calendar

Liberal Events

Thursday, 4 p.m.—The Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Lib. Bonavista Twillingate) will speak at an open meeting of the Liberal Club. The former Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is considered one of the liveliest critics of Mr. Diefenbaker.

Wednesday, 7:15 p.m.—Four Liberals will speak at Addison Hall Recreation Room on the Liberal stand in the campaign.

CCF Events

1. David Lewis, National President of the C.C.F. (Rhodes scholar and prominent labour lawyer) will speak on "The Meaning of Socialism", Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 6, 4:15 p.m., University Chambers.

2. Andrew Brewin, National Treasurer of the C.C.F., will speak on "The Need For A New Party", at the U of T Law School, Wednesday, Jan. 6, 1:00 p.m.

3. Eight Student Speakers will address "coffee chat" discussion groups tonight (Tuesday, Jan. 5, 7 p.m.) at various women's residences across campus.

University College, Whitney Hall — Mulock House — Fred Zemans, Jerry Caplan. Coey House — Giles Endicott, Ken Wyman.

Faulkner House — Stephen Lewis, Jerry Izenberg. Victoria College, Addison Hall — Michael Cross, Harry Arthurs

Trinity College, St. Hilda's — Alex Havrilt, Terry Grier.

4. The C.C.F. is presenting a noon-hour sing-song—"Songs of Social Protest", led by Miss Susan Kastner (plus guitar) in the University College J.C.R. on Thursday 1:15 p.m.

P.C. Events

Tuesday, 1 p.m.—Frank McGee, MP, Woodlawn Music Room will give a general outline of party policy.

Wednesday, 4 p.m.—Egan Chambers, MP (St. Antoine-Westmount), Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Defence will speak on problems of defence and disarmament.

Thursday, 1 p.m.—Dr. Kucherepa, MP, will speak on Canadian trade and foreign policy.

Thursday, 4 p.m.—Arthur Maloney, MP, will speak at Carr Hall, St. Michael's College on why he joined the P.C. party.

Thursday, 8 p.m.—John Pallett, MP, Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce will speak on International affairs.

Liberals

External Affairs: Liberals point to the need for continued disarmament negotiation, a workable solution to nuclear armaments control, and an end to nuclear testing. Through the United Nations a constructive approach must be offered to China's position in power diplomacy, to the problem of the Arab refugee, to the promotion of capital development and stability in the countries of S.E. Asia, South America and Africa. As a middle power Canada can provide much in leading international discussion in the setting up of international control forces, and in suggesting new avenues for promoting the cause of the widest possible human understanding and happiness.

We Propose: 1. Negotiations for student exchange between the USSR and Canada.

2. A Canada sponsored world student peace conference.

On Domestic Issues We Propose:

Unemployment: Establishment of trades instruction facilities for insured workers unemployed seasonally or through automation, within the terms of reference of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Electoral Reform:

1. Provide for an independent commission to re-draw constituency boundaries every 10 years.

2. Forbid the publication of public opinion polls during election campaigns.

Finance:

1. Increase basic income tax exemption of married couples to $3,000 per year earnings.

2. Removal of statutory ceiling on interest rates.

3. Require that every loan contract state specifically the interest-rate being charged.

Labour: Automatic yearly adjustment of Civil Service and Government employees wages and salaries according to the Consumer-Price Index.

Defence: A Joint Parliamentary Committee to inquire into the whole Defence structure and programme.

Justice: A Consumers' Affairs branch of the Department to take action on unfair market practices.

Abolish hanging.

State: Establish a federal Department of Provincial Relations.

Students: 1. Income tax exemption to have effect for earnings up to $500 per year; likewise parental claims for student dependents earning up to $1500 annually.

2. Student exemption from Unemployment Insurance contributions.

Culture: Make the C.B.C. more representative of the great variety in Canadian culture.

The Liberals will publish their campaign expenses in detail at the end of this campaign, and state emphatically that they are distributing no "outside" literature.

Our platform is a list of specific proposals that we will introduce in the Model Parliament if we become the Government.

It is neither an attempt to explain and clarify the policy of our national counterpart nor is it intended to be a reckless adoption of the manifesto. Many of the proposals in the other platform require extensive study by economists, and could not possibly be debated meaningfully in the Model Parliament. As students, we are stressing policies that concern students, and these policies we intend to carry to the National Liberal Party.

CCF

We have entered another decade born of crisis. Every effort should be directed to the goal of human survival and human betterment.

We must abandon the old political shams, shibboleths and claptrap. There is no time for flags, anthems, tight-money hair-splitting, clichés, verbiage and metaphysical "visions." It is rather a time of profound challenge, a challenge which the U of T CCF Club has attempted to meet in its Model Parliament program.

That program has been widely circulated. We hope it will be widely read. We shall not try to condense it here, but, instead, deal with its basic premises.

In international affairs, the CCF vigorously opposes the spread of nuclear weapons. We think it flagrantly inconsistent, indeed immoral, that Canada condemn France for nuclear testing on one hand, and then permit nuclear weapons on our soil. The CCF rejects such a policy. We would ban nuclear weapons from Canada, and use the money thus saved for massive economic aid to underdeveloped countries. Surely that is the greatest contribution to "defence" that Canada can make.

In so doing, we would begin to divest Canadian foreign policy of its tragically insensitive attitude towards newly independent and colonial nations. Nothing is quite so callous as self-righteous espousals of "social injustice" while millions starve. Nothing is quite so hypocritical as ringing declarations about a Bill of Rights, simultaneous with Canada's refusal in the United Nations to condemn South African racial policies. "Human freedom" is rendered meaningless by mere verbal commitments. The CCF believes that individual dignity must be respected and defended on every front.

In the domestic field the great challenge lies in what this "Model Society" to eradicate existing inequalities and ensure that development for the people is the paramount objective. Canada stands indicted for the absence of a National Health Plan and insufficient social security. Our entire educational system is riddled with glaring inadequacies. It receives vital shots of financial adrenalin — free tuition, an end to absurd teacher-student riots, and Board of Governors representative of academics rather than corporate financiers.

A similar new appraisal applies elsewhere. Our immigration regulations must be shorn of their infamous discrimination on the basis of race and colour. A moral attitude towards tubercular, and other refugees, must replace the present inhumanity. In the crucial sphere of economic enterprise, careful government planning and direction can end irresponsible investment, curtail the abuse of power by vast aggregations of wealth, and concentrate unreservedly on the development of socially desirable projects, from hospitals to the Canada Council.

But, in fact, the CCF strives for much more. We aim at nothing less than a basic change in the values that govern our society. At present, an obsessive drive for material gain infuses almost all endeavour. The profit motive is sacrosanct. The corporation with its concomitant—the organization man—is the institutional cornerstone. Human activity is more and more enslaved to machines. The mass media, subservient to advertising control, exercise an insidious, and increasingly pernicious influence over man's wills, activities, knowledge, and interests. We have, in sum, all the evils attendant on mass man in today's mass society.

The CCF believes, however, that human nature is dynamic and capable of higher motives. Given a fundamental re-organization of our social and economic structure, an environment can be created which would evoke the best, rather than the worst motives, and enthrone a new and higher set of social values.

Such an ideal may be distant. But it is a philosophy to which every socialist is passionately dedicated. For if it involves, as one's goal, a determination to provide every individual—be he Canadian, African or Asian—with equal economic security, meaningful human dignity, and the opportunity to develop his individual creative capacities to the fullest possible extent.

"discretionary time"

A recent issue of LIFE magazine is subtitled "The Good Life".

The purpose of this issue is to tell Americans how they are using the abundance produced by their economy.

The magazine includes gorgeous color photographs of Americans doing everything from skin diving to parking in a convertible. There is an article telling "playful fathers" how to play with their children and another article which assures us that although Americans may spend forty billion dollars "just for fun" this is a good thing because without it the economy would be in trouble.

Perhaps the ultimate in this kind of "LIFEman-ship" is a section entitled "Love the elixir of The Good Life." The editors tell us that for this section they gave their photographers carte blanche.

In the resultant lush fruit-salad only one of the couples appears to be over twenty-five and all the men are handsome and all of the women uniformly beautiful.

When we read it over, we kept looking for the copy telling us what tooth paste they used.

The purpose of all this bad taste is to tell Americans how they are using their leisure. Only leisure has now become "discretionary time."

LIFE is thoroughly convinced that "the good life" is not only here but that it is wonderful. We couldn't quite find the place where they said so, but we are sure that we are supposed to break into spontaneous rejoicing.

Leisure, (pardon us) "discretionary time" is the key to civilization. No civilization, LIFE is positive, was ever built by a "bootstrap operation."

The more leisure time a civilization produces for its members, the more the members will produce. LIFE even has visions, although they are careful to qualify them with a future tense, of people using their discretionary time to explore "in joy and freedom the neglected unknown within themselves."

We can see it coming.

The next Bertrand Russell will write the Principia Mathematica while waiting for the water to warm up for a little pleasant skin-diving.

And the next T. S. Eliot will compose the Wasteland, between the minutes and treasurer's report of a Rotary Meeting while Henry Ford will build an industrial empire between the hours of nine and five, five days a week with two coffee breaks a day.

Somehow we just can't seem to get too enthusiastic about this view of LIFE.

But whether we are enthusiasts or not, our fate is bound to the fate of the people who are portrayed having such a good time between the pages of this magazine.

Their unspeakable wealth dominates our quarter of this earth and we have no choice but to take our place alongside them.

They are the people to whom we are forced, by geography and history, to look for leadership.

It is good to know that with this heavy responsibility hanging over them that they are leading a "good life."

It is comforting to know that they are enjoying themselves. dls a column and, all that

by Elmo Ciprietti
Varsity AM&D Editor

● Credo in unam urbem, civitas omnipotentem, Novum Eboricum . . .

I had a lousy Christmas vacation in New York. It's a ghastly place to visit, but ah! to live there. The outlander should try to relate, as the psalmologist would say, to the city. I was prepared to curry to the needs of the city, to make it more itself and it would do the same for me. To wit, I took a $2.49 white nylon scarf from Syd Silver's which looks very much like a twelve dollar and fifty cents including tax English silk monogram from Brooks' Brothers, and a black turtle-neck sweater.

With the beat-neck sweater I helped the villagers parade their ideas. The great scarf of small price made New York public servants stand on their sense of decorum. A wave of a white fringe brings a taxi in a flash. Public women in all the better bars always give precedence to white neckwear.

Learn to relate! You must not take a camera if you want to relate. A camera will capture a static city which is never there. The city becomes less itself whenever a picture is taken. It's a crime.

● It is ironic that the Metropolitan Opera's two best productions in recent seasons have been operas by a composer which Mr. Bing considers poor box-office. Mozart's Don Giovanni in the New Met production has been sold out weeks in advance of each performance. The Met finds itself in the enviable position of having several principals in its roster whose greatest fame has come from their excellent Mozart style, Cesare Siepi, Lisa della Casa, Fernando Corena, Cesare Valetti.

The two-year-old production of Marriage of Figaro which I witnessed from a distance when the company brought it to the hockey rink here, turned out to be a far greater triumph in its natural setting. Although I had the cheapest seat in the house the difference was so striking that for a while a thought this Mozart too burlesque. The buffa aspect was emphasized throughout and while some may have found this distasteful, it explains the excellent box-office response, which Mozart does not often get.

Erich Leinsdorf conducted a delightful orchestra but gave over the show to the principals who rose to the occasion. Lisa della Casa's recital in Toronto last year which was heavy on leide—anything but her forte made us want to see her personality and voice at better advantage. As the Countess she is perhaps unrivaled today, Elizabeth Schwartzkopf accounting for the perhaps. Siepi's Figaro left nothing unfulfilled considering his powerful voice and familiarity with the role.

● Payola is the word in New York. The old favorite sections of jukebox now have "Roll out the Pork Barrel", and in some racially sensitive areas this has already been replaced by "Roll out the All-Beef Barrel". Wall St. parties started at 4:30 on every business day of the holiday with much exchange and consumption of potable payola.

A Renaissance friend who invited me to one such affair poured out some Bell's 12 year old Scotch and proceeded to demonstrate a $12,000 electronic brained IBM paper cutter which at the time seemed choked by a cult complex. Apparently it had ripped some of the papers entrusted to it. It would only cut paper which had already been perforated, my friend added, it was clearly neurotic. I later learned that this machine was payola from the manufacturer in consideration or anticipation of services.

● The Threepenny Opera in its second long run at the intimate Theatre de Lys in Greenwich Village has not let up in its standee houses and is not likely to for a long time. When it first came to the Theatre de Lys in 1954 it stayed 12 sold-out weeks and was forced out for political reasons, mainly due to the fact that Brecht chose to return to East Germany with a salvo of imprecations from McCarthy.

The Threepenny Opera has suffered much at the hands of political despots and this is one of the reasons for its perennial favour. During Hitler's hey-day it occupied a whole room in his Museum of Degenerate Art, where its music was constantly played. Hitler soon discovered that people were coming not to scoff but to listen, to the music of their past pre-Nazi "decadence".

The connection between the Threepenny Opera and Bertolt Brecht, called Bert in the program, lies in the musical's ability to recreate and distill a shabby and slightly ominous decade. Brecht does this in the Threepenny Novel, an acid portrait which describes and had its origin in the disillusioned and defeated Germany of the 1920's, despite its Soho background and English names. This atmosphere, best described as lying in bed, drinking Pernod, is empathetic with the beatnik cause. The important distinction is that any "beatness" arising from this musical must come from one viewer and must not be imputed to Brecht as "le premier bitnique".

Only a trace of Brecht's theatrical innovations filter through this awkward re-working and translation. I was particularly impressed by the group's ability to effect Polly Peachum's winning and losing of a husband in such a short time without involving the audience in the intricacies of the relation. Although I was expecting to hear and understand a little more of Brecht, the performance stressed the popularity of the songs and superficialities. Not that the music is superficial—in its tawdriness it captures Brecht's spirit—but other things could have been stressed.

During its eventful run it has provoked the spectators to a number of extremes. Members of the audience have yelled out their opinions, leaped onto stage etc. Its prevalent mood can have a disarming effect; the driver in our party, a native New Yorker delivering us to the "Bizarre" after the performance, landed us in the middle of Brooklyn before recovering. You can still lose yourself in Brecht.

● After the most confused delirium ever to cloud a campus show it seems that SMC's Mickities '60 will get under way tonight at Hart House. The unsung heroes of the production are Tom Sutherland, the distraught producer, impeached, condemned, ignored, and the author of the original script, Philip Nicholas whose efforts were trampled.

Rehearsals got under way in earnest just after New Year's so the results should be exciting for attempts at some kind of integration. Although we haven't heard the last word on impeachments and abuses, the SMC SAC should by the end of the week have impeached St. Michael, for not have blessed them sufficiently in the proceedings. If art comes from quiet and tranquillity this show doesn't stand a chance. In any event, let's go see what the fuss is about, tonight, tomorrow and Thursday at Hart House. Students $1.25, plenty of seats.

● The aims of this column and the significance of its name will be explained, when I write again and if I am still at this university. It seems I have a few essays to do.

At Hart House Theatre This Week

Hart House Theatre will be resounding tonight to the tunes of an original musical from St. Michael's College. "Short Engagement" is the title of this cryptic activity which demands to be heard.

The last official communication received by The Varsity regarding its content was something about a student theatre group which is presenting Cyrano de Bergerac at a posh New England tourist haunt and get slightly carried away.

The cast includes Mona Kelly, John Shields, Patricia Doyle, Ken Weber and Claudette St. Denis.

Most of the songs have been written by Dentman Mike Lococo and arranged by Jack Nevins. Sheila Geoghan, Ray Maher, Joe Marsynuk and Tom Sutherland have each contributed one number.

Performances tonight, Wednesday and Thursday begin at 8:30 p.m. Excellent seats are still available for all nights, $1.25 at the Theatre box-office.

The University of Toronto Drama Festival will occupy the Hart House Theatre Friday and Saturday nights this week, with three one-act plays scheduled for each evening. On the principle that every act of man begs judgment, the UTDC has asked Canadian playwright, novelist and newspaperman Robertson Davies to adjudicate, and if we can rely on past performances, adjudicate he certainly will.

Mr. Davies is a member of the Board of Governors of the Stratford Festival, and he has collaborated with Tyrone Guthrie and Grant Macdonald in the writing of the "Stratford books". We have his own words as evidence that he is "an informed lover of the theatre".

The Friday night plays are: A Maid Goes Forth To War, The Flattering World, and The Rising of the Moon. On Saturday night Mr. Davies will be exposed to The Happy Journey, Sunday Costs Five Pesos and Miss Julie.

degree for vanier . . .

Canada's Governor-General becomes an honorary graduate of the University of Toronto at a special convocation Feb. 8, President Claude Bissell said yesterday.

Major-General Georges P. Vanier who assumed the vice-regal post last September will receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. He will speak after the ceremony.

Major-General Vanier is the eleventh Governor-General to receive a U of T honorary degree. The first to be so honored was the Earl of Minto, in 1894.

brief coming . . .

The University of Toronto Disarmament Committee expects to present a detailed brief of petition calling for a halt in the testing and producing of nuclear weapons to Prime Minister Diefenbaker within the next few weeks.

The 14-man committee has met twice since presenting the petition in Ottawa last month and is working on recommendations the Prime Minister made, Borden Kipling said last night.

Kipling is the lone student on the committee.

Kipling said the brief will represent only the views of the 14-man committee.

The committee will be unable to disclose anything in the brief until it has been sent to the Prime Minister who will then release it.

He said the problem of disarmament and world peace is a tremendous one because all sides are in a diplomatic battle with each other.

Kipling added the committee regretted the recent decision of the United States to discontinue her nuclear test ban with the east.

The delegation that presented the petition to the Prime Minister consisted of Kipling and our U of T teachers.

investment corporation . . .

University of Toronto students have the chance to make a fortune—or go broke overnight.

Abner Joseph Henry Solomon Steinberg has started a "mutual investment corporation".

Shares are going for $5 each, with no limits. Shareholders will have voting power in the corporation.

A board of four directors, chaired by Steinberg, will "carry on research and attempt to discover profitable fields of investment".

"We have some definite concrete ideas," Steinberg said last night, "but we would rather not divulge them at this stage, for obvious reasons."

Steinberg said interested parties should contact him, to discuss "possible projects".

"Before we can get started, we need at least $14,000," Steinberg said.

The shares will be printed on bonded stock by Steinberg's own press, hidden in central Toronto.

The U of T impresario can be reached at LE 5-4739 or through his agent Gellellyn Ignatzio, at The Varsity office.

CHUM'S Academic Announcer

By FRED HOST

Neil Thomas, CHUM announcer and part-time University of Toronto student, is a man with strong opinions on almost everything.

Only 22, Thomas has worked around the radio business for five years and has been attending U of T lectures irregularly for three years. He plans to write his fourth year exams without ever having paid any fees.

He is majoring in Psychology.

"Ask me questions on anything," he said. "I have strong views on everything. They may not be right but they are mine and I stick by them."

We asked him how he felt about university. "University education is highly overrated," he said.

"There are certain professions for which a great deal of training is necessary but in most lines, practical experience is more invaluable than theory," he said.

As for producing a well-rounded individual, Neil Thomas agrees with President Bissell. "This may be true but anyone with a spirit of adventure and an inquiring mind will be equally well-rounded."

"Beatniks!" he said, when we questioned him about his recent interview with U of T disaffiliate, Risa Karvaneque. "are a group of unwashed pseudo-intellectuals, or more succinctly, intellectual bums." He doesn't believe in being a defeatist.

Why does Neil Thomas wear a beard?

Not for affection or for non-conformity but, he claims, for purely objective reasons.

"It lengthens my face," he said.

We wondered why Neil Thomas is in the radio business.

"I am a ham," he said. "I love it. I wouldn't do anything else."

Thomas likes the immediacy of radio news writing.

"I like putting the news on seconds after it happens." This isn't a CHUM-type plug. Neil is serious about his job.

His ambition is someday to own his own radio station.

Thomas is a strong advocate of the radio's position as a medium to serve the interests of the public and to provide them with any kind of entertainment they want.

When asked how he likes the current rock and roll trend he replied, "It's what the people want and it's what they should get."

Thomas loves and follows jazz. He has had formal training in classical piano and does some arranging for small jazz groups.

School-day memories are vivid in Neil's mind.

"I'm the only kid in Toronto that was ever kicked out of class for answering too many questions."

"The history teacher gave us a book to study. I took it home and read it like a novel. In class I answered every question until the teacher became fed up and told me to leave."

He rambled on about his youth. "The old lady across the street," he said, "used to complain about us walking across her lawn. We drove a Volkswagen over it but we never walked on it."

Thomas' training is all practical.

Writing And Breathing

The Eskimo race is dying out. From hundreds of thousands, the Eskimo people have shrunk to less than 30,000. They are a people with a living tradition. A new book edited by Prof. E. S. Carpenter, formerly of the University of Toronto, will help guard that valuable tradition.

Anerca (Dent: $2.75 or $2 paperback) is a volume of Eskimo poetry compiled and, in part, translated, by Prof. Carpenter. In the collection, he has gathered short writings from Eskimo groups separated by vast amounts of time and space. Yet these poems are based on a common language and common experiences.

In Eskimo the word "anerca" means "soul". The words to describe the writing of poetry and the physical function of breathing are derived from the same word. Thus the title.

The book is illustrated by simple but effective drawings by the Eskimo artist Enooeswetok. His humble hunters and frightened caribou race across the winter-grey pages among the verses.

The Eskimo's life is not often happy. The poems are full of the never-ending cold and ice and famine. But there are no bitter complaints.

The poets show a remarkable sensitivity often absent in the works of "civilized" poets. The Eskimo writers live surrounded by nothing but nature. That is what they write.

They sing for the pleasure of it. They sing because they feel they have to tell others what they are thinking, or suffering, or enjoying.

A wonderful occupation Making songs!
 But all too often they

This is an intensely personal poetry. These people have nowhere to turn but to themselves. They speak of their hunting and the dangers that go with it; they speak of the everlasting struggle for existence.

They cling to life. But they know that after death they will be happier.

Glorious was life
 On the sea ice.
 But did that bring me joy?
 Ever was I anxious
 For no salmon wished to bite . . .
 Tell me, now, was life so good on earth?

Here joy fills me
 When daylight breaks
 And the sun
 Glides gently forward.

One poem, the simplest in the collection, expresses best what life means to the Eskimo. After a death in the village, on the third day the hunters take up their harpoons again and set forth in their kayaks. This is what they sing:

Poor it is: this land,
 Poor it is: this ice,
 Poor it is: this air,
 Poor it is: this sea,
 Poor it is.

He started his career as a printer's devil after he graduated from high school. A teacher supervising a drama club advised him to go into radio after he had finished a Hamlet scene. He didn't know whether it was an insult or a compliment but he tried radio anyway.

He started with a radio station in Galt, then came to Toronto's CKFH. Cobourg was his next stop before coming to CHUM, where he has been writing and announcing news for the last two years.

At CKFH he also worked for Music World Magazine and became associate editor.

Thomas' advice to budding young writers is — "Quit and work in a bank! Anyone that wants to write for a living is out of his head."

How does Neil Thomas feel about accepting brides for plugging records? "Sure, why not? Most records are just about the same so if you can make some money playing a certain one—why not?"

This is what he feels theoretically, but he says he has never been presented with the opportunity of making graft in the radio business.

"A radio announcer," he said, "has to have certain ethics on which to build a successful reputation."

As for participating in hoaxes for the purpose of producing news, Thomas feels it is "cricket" providing no one is hurt physically, mentally, or spiritually by a malicious story, and providing it is revealed before it goes too far.

"Sensationalizing, on the other hand, is building up an existing news story out of proportion and I would never agree to it," he said in reply to a similar question on distortion.

"All you have to do is glance through the pages of one particular daily paper and you will find lots of sensationalizing."

"In Toronto," he said, "there is an unofficial agreement between news agencies preventing them from revealing stories of a personal nature and moral stories against mental deviates."

It has often been pointed out to us that people in radio appear unstable and shiftless.

"In my business," Thomas said, "where people are so sensitive to emotions there is a lot of movement. This is so in any phase of the entertainment field."

beatnik cont'd...

viewed on the show "Today" and made an instant hit.

"I indoctrinated her with Zen on the way to New York," Ignazio said, "but she didn't get a chance to use any of it."

The master-stroke of the plan was Ries' own. She brought a new poet into prominence as a representative of the beat philosophy.

Miss Karvanaque faced the cameras and solemnly read to the audience from A. A. Milne, creator of "Winnie-The-Pooh."

Larry Pickard, an NBC writer, told Ignazio it was the only time he could remember when there was absolute silence in the control room during an interview.

Miss Karvanaque was only intended to do a five-minute interview, but she proved such a success that she was worked right into the show.

Nancy Kovac, a top American fashion model, and a real square, was also on the show. The producers decided to have the two girls face each other.

Are there any cold-hearted newsmen in the radio business?

"Definitely not!" he said. "Neither newsmen nor disc jockeys are cold-hearted. Everyone in this radio station has cried on the air at least once!"

During his four year contact with university students Neil Thomas has come to one outstanding conclusion. "The thing about society which I cry out against most is the recently tribal fetish for conservatism, security and conformity. People are afraid to emulate Einstein and let their own views come through."

"So there they were," Ignazio said. "Miss Kovac had a three-hour hairdo and an expensive white dress. The makeup had been neatly patted on for the occasion. Ries wore a black sweater and skirt, and no makeup. It was hate at first sight."

"Of course there's nothing new with your thinking, but I don't mean that as an offence to you, dear," Miss Kovac patronized.

Garroway asked the two girls if the were antagonistic towards each other.

"I LIKE her," screamed Miss Kovac. Everybody turned to Ries.

"I'm feeling friendly," she said haltingly, "but I got up in a good mood this morning."

You could tell what Garroway thought about the comparison after the show, when he said, in what was almost beat vernacular, "there is nothing more disheartening than a pretty face, period. You know?"

marriage mills

"Come one come all to the Poopa-Cotta Pettie sorority!" yells the brochure, "Find the mate of our choice."

Now that University of Toronto sororities cannot bring their names into the clear white light of modern advertising, thanks to a recent indiscretion by one house, students are prevented from seeing the tremendous advantages of such organizations. But suppose sororities competed openly for members. A spiel might sound something like this:

"Why risk yourself among the riff-raff of the University of Toronto's male population? Pledge Poopa Cotta Pettie and be assured of meeting the right man as soon as possible. For only a small yearly cost, you can have all your prospective male acquaintances pre-weeded for you by those who know better than yourself."

"Have you ever considered what might happen if you allowed your pure white body to be approached by just anybody on campus? You might meet all sorts of undesirable types."

"Poopa Cotta Pettie guarantees you will not be allowed to meet any Jews, Negroes or Asiatics. Furthermore, only red-blooded Canadian makes will be granted the pleasure of your company. They will be selected from only the best fraternities and you can be sure of getting somebody with a good financial career in front of them."

folk songs

Here's a prediction that should make music-lovers a little happier. Rock and roll is on the way out.

The quiet folk songs, sung usually by one person with guitar accompaniment, are replacing the raucous male quartets and shrill saxophones.

It was inevitable. A reaction against noise has been a long time coming, and what could be more natural than lovers of rock and roll, as they grow older, should turn to folk songs.

Folk songs are usually as simple as rock and roll. They are as repetitious. They're suggestive (Oscar Brand). What more could a simple-minded, repetitious suggestive person want?

Incidentally, we apologize to any women who may have been offended at our remarks about the sexual symbolism of the Kingston Trio. We saw a man go through the same gyrations recently to the deep rich bass voice of Odette, female blues singer.

sacrilege

We've been waiting for a convenient time to print this, and now is the time—between Christmas and Easter.

The suggestion comes from one of the other editors on this paper.

He suggests, "Why don't we have a crucifix with a little kid on it?"

We asked him why.

"We could combine Christmas and Easter," he said. Real sick.

free love

Le Carabin, host newspaper for the Canadian University Press Conference, needed girls to accompany the 60-odd delegates in Quebec City last week. They had no trouble finding them in that amazing Gallic community.

Somebody pointed out there were about 50 male delegates and only a dozen or so women. Le Carabin wasn't worried. At 5.45 last Monday evening, an appeal was broadcast over station CJLR. In less than two hours, five dozen shivering women were standing at a bus stop in the middle of Quebec City, ready to go out with foreign newspapermen from all over Canada.

They had come from hospitals, private schools and homes all across the city. Some had heard the broadcast and had gathered their friends by word-of-mouth messages. Few of them spoke any English.

The delegates were astounded. We quickly got over the shock, however, and started in with our clumsy "bonjour mamzels". Pretty soon we were all paired up, and for the next few hours we talked French and drank happily with our new friends.

The next day one of the female journalists was commenting on the party.

"You know," she said, "I didn't enjoy the party very much. It's not a great deal of fun sitting back and watching."

This started us thinking. Sure enough, even the delegates from papers who had brought female assistants dropped them when les jeunes filles arrived. These French girls may not have spoken English, and maybe they weren't particularly intelligent, compared with the CUP newshens from parts unknown, but they had a big edge when it came to just being nice people.

Paul Fortin, of Le Carabin, later told us what he thought of the women the delegates had brought.

"They are so bold," he said, in disgust.

Non-French women seem to have a knack for making their men feel inferior. Newspaperwomen (a horrible term) particularly, seem to make it their business to put themselves on the same level as men as quickly as they can.

French girls are the equal of men. But they don't rub it in.

satisfaction

Leaving a theatre a few days ago, we were surprised to see a friend toss his ticket stub into the collection box. We asked him why he did it.

"It's convenient to toss it in there," he said.

We suggested it might foul up the count at the end of the day. He chuckled quietly.

"Always glad to bring a little darkness and fear into someone's life," he said.

So you see, you never know.

SULLIVAN OUT

Millionaire Bequeaths Fortune

A $1,500,000 bequest to the University of Toronto in the will of millionaire bridge contractor Reginald Arthur Blyth was revealed this week.

The bachelor millionaire, of Andrews Gardens, Ont., died Nov. 8 in New York at the age of 58. He left the greater portion of his $2,110,958 estate to the university in his will, probated this week.

GREATEST GOOD

Most of the bequest will go to the Mathematics and Physics Department.

Professor Douglas DeLury, chairman of the Mathematics department and a friend of the late Mr. Blyth for the past 32 years said the donor wanted to do the greatest good for the greatest number of students.

U of T President Claude T. Bissell said part of the grant might be used to bring in outside professors to teach maths.

JORDAN SULLIVAN, ex president of the St. Michael's College Students' Administrative Council, gloomily contemplates an apolitical future after his resignation Tuesday night.

Sudden Resignation Stops Impeachment

By Terry Bourke

In a flash move Tuesday night the President of the St. Michael's Student Administrative Council resigned his post over the controversial Mickities issue, at a meeting in Brennan Hall.

The council unanimously and immediately accepted Jordan Sullivan's resignation and opened nominations to fill the vacant presidential slot.

Sullivan told the council in a long statement that the SMC student government "has allowed a CBC employee's script to replace a student script, when that replacement was achieved behind the back of the writer and of the producer."

IMPEACHMENT

Earlier the council served Sullivan with a notice of impeachment after he refused to sign a check allotting funds to Mickities, the college musical now playing in Hart House.

The former president claimed the original script by Phil Nicholas had been rewritten so completely by CBC writer Geoffrey Smith, that it could no longer be considered a student effort.

"I cannot as the president of the many and the one," Sullivan told council members, "be responsible in any way for allotting money to these people."

Sullivan said he "has placed himself, and the council has placed itself, in rock hard juxtaposition. Therefore I have no choice but to resign."

"I maintained a manifest in justice had been condoned by the council—for what can be perpetrated against one can be perpetrated against all."

Last night the former president said he was sorry to resign because he "wanted the job but could not perform one of the duties of his office, namely signing the check. He added it would not have been fair to Nicholas."

The move was completely unexpected by the council. When Sullivan announced his intention council members were shocked and silent.

After reading his statement Sullivan rose and strode from the chamber.

Last term Sullivan tendered his resignation over the same issue but it was not accepted by the council.

Reaction over the Sullivan issue was varied. Council Vice President Peter Dembski said he admired Sullivan for placing conviction above his position.

"I feel however," Dembski said, "that the council could not take any other action. Sullivan placed himself above the constitution and to permit him to continue to act in this manner would mean approval of arbitrary government."

Sullivan was a president of great ability and courage but the constitution must come before any individual member of the council no matter how great his capabilities may be," he said.

VARIOUS COMMENTS

Council Treasurer Bill Hawken said it was a clear cut case of impeachment or resignation. "I think that Sullivan took the honorable way out."

Meanwhile several SMC students taking part in Mickities were asked what they thought of Sullivan's action backstage last night before opening curtain.

The show's director Tom Sutherland said he was a "great president" but added his duty to the office should have compelled him to sign the check.

Chorus member Hugh Marks, said Sullivan had not been forced to resign. "He brought it on himself by refusing to follow a mandate of the student body expressed through the student council."

Massey Donates Graduate College

A family which has already given the University of Toronto two of its largest buildings last week announced it will donate the money for an entire new college.

A letter from former Governor-General Vincent Massey said the Massey Foundation—his family's philanthropic agent—would pick up the $1,500,000 tab for a graduate students' college.

And as is the case with another of the Massey's donations—Hart House—the building is for men only.

The family's other previous gift to the U of T, however, is primarily for the University's co-eds. It's the Household Science building.

The new college, to be known as Massey College, will provide ultra-modern living quarters, a dining room, common rooms and reading room and library facilities for 90 graduate students.

The college will be built at the northwest corner of Devonshire Place and Hoskin Ave., site of the soon-to-be-demolished Physical and Occupational Therapy huts, and will also provide facilities for non-resident graduate students, professors, visiting students and teachers and other university guests.

U of T President Claude T. Bissell hailed the gift of the new residence-college as "a benefaction which ranks in significance with the gift of Hart House 50 years ago."

The president said the graduate residence would be a great stimulant "in enriching the university community at the senior level."

"Mr. Massey's gift could not come at a more opportune time," he said.

BEST MEN

Mr. Massey said in the letter the graduate residence will select the best men available, striking a balance between the liberal arts and sciences.

Intellectual attainment will form the only basis for graduate selection to the residence.

"With this end in mind," the letter said, "it is hoped that the residence would be turned into a distinguished college community."

COMMON PURPOSE

"The decision to donate the building was prompted by a desire to give the growing graduate body of the university a sense of common purpose and the responsibilities which, by reason of their advanced work will rest on them," the letter said.

Mr. Massey wished the college to be related to U of T in the same way as the federated colleges, closely allied to the university and collaborating with it.

The residence is another feature of the massive University of Toronto expansion program. So far, the new residence for women at Victoria and St. Michael's Colleges, a huge women's athletic building, an untramodern music building, and a new arts building have been completed or are in the process of construction. The program is scheduled for completion in 1965.

VERTICAL parking facilities on the campus? No. A new music building, University of Toronto music students will be able to display their talents in style when the faculty moves into their sparkling new $3,000,000 building next year. Featuring an 800 seat theatre, a concert hall, and two rehearsal halls, the building will be constructed somewhere south of the museum. University of Toronto President Claude T. Bissell has stated that the new building could well become the musical centre of Canada.

CCF officials last night charged their advertising campaign material has been plundered by unidentified persons.

"Signs and posters have been stolen from bill boards and from closed lockers. About 20 signs were stolen before we had a chance to put them up and a locker was opened and 150 pamphlets were taken," said Jerry Caplan (IV UC) Model Parliament leader.

CUP Supports Algerian Student Aid Campaign

Canadian University Press conference delegates last week decided to support an appeal by an Algerian Student Union president calling for financial assistance to educate 600 refugee students.

Ait Chaalal, president of the Algerian Moslem Student's Union, said these students are living in "horrible conditions" in his own country, and in Morocco, France, and Switzerland.

"There are no political implications in what we are doing," said Jacques Gerin, National Federation of Canadian University Students President, who spoke for the appeal.

"We are truly interested in helping students all over the world," he added.

Two UofT Students Get Industry Awards

A pair of University of Toronto students have been awarded fellowships by two different organizations.

Ann M. Goerk of Malton, Ontario, received a Rotary Foundation Fellowship for study abroad during the coming year. She was selected as one of 121 top graduate students from 27 different countries.

Meanwhile, William M. Strachan of Fort William, Ontario, has been granted a Canadian Industries Limited Fellowship for advanced chemical research.

Miss Goerk, graduate from McMaster University with a Bachelor of Arts Degree in 1958. She enrolled this year at U of T. She will use the fellowship to study psychology at a major European university.

She is a member of the Ontario, Canadian, and American Psychological Association. She was the first undergraduate to present her thesis to the American Psychology Association.

Mr. Strachan is one of 17 students seeking advanced degrees under the C.I.L. program. C.I.L. offers the fellowships annually.

Prof Says Delinquents Lack Conscience, Guilt

A University of Toronto professor has suggested children from good homes drift into juvenile delinquency because of lack of conscience.

Dr. Richard Walters of the U of T psychology department wrote the report in conjunction with Dr. Albert Bandura of Sanford University.

According to the study, the conscience factor was the key between a group of "good boys and bad boys".

The report, published in "Adolescent Aggression", says bad children submerge their tendencies because of fear of the law. They seldom feel guilty, the report says.

The study was carried out over a period of three years. It shows good children are prevented from committing crimes because of their conscience. If they totter off the path of righteousness, they have guilt feelings.

Slash Winter Carnival To One-Night Frolics

Blue and White Society officials last night announced plans for a complete revamping of the University of Toronto's annual mid-winter frolics.

Committee Chairman Sue Hamilton (IUUC) said this year's show will be a one-night Ice Frolics, instead of a three-day Winter Carnival as in past years. "It's going to be a complete change from last year," she said, "in fact the only thing we're retaining is the idea of campus-wide participation."

"Highlight of the show, to be held in Varsity Arena, will be the U of T's annual sports classic—the hockey game between The Varsity and the Students' Administrative Council," she said.

"But the show will also feature figure skating, comedy acts and an 18-giri chorus line—provided no one breaks a leg," Miss Hamilton added.

Decision to scrap the Winter Carnival was taken by last year's SAC after bad weather and transportation difficulties had combined to make the event a failure.

"We think we've got both problems licked," Miss Hamilton said.

"Weather conditions can't affect a show to be held in Varsity Arena—and we'll let the Toronto Transit Commission worry about the transportation problem," she said.

Admission to the Ice Frolics, to be held on Friday, Feb. 5, is 50 cents.

UBC Students Will Study Students Finances

OTTAWA, Jan. 4, (CUP)—A Student at the University of British Columbia is preparing a brief on the financial problems of university students to be presented to the federal government early next fall.

The executive of the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) announced that the federation's committee of UBC in co-operation with the administration, and the faculty of the university is now working on the year-long study.

Areas of study include: scholarships, bursaries, loans, and tax exemptions.

A spokesman of the executive said, "On the basis of the latest reports it is evident that higher education is becoming a luxury for a majority of families with an average income."

He pointed out that the executive, "does not believe families must be forced to sacrifice unduly their standard of living because of the extremely high cost of helping their children attend university."

According to figures published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in 1957, the average student is able to save only $443 from summer and part-time employment. The cost of one year at university is, on the average, $1,212.

Applications Open For Israeli Seminar

Three University of Toronto students will be chosen soon to spend over six weeks in Israel. The students will be participating in this year's World University Service Summer Seminar.

Applications for the seminar must be in the WUS National Office, 22 Wilcocks St. by Jan. 20.

Students will be chosen early in February as representatives for the Israeli trip. Professors will accompany these students, and the whole group will join delegates from universities round the world.

This year the theme of the seminar will be "Israel: Drama of Return and Reconstruction", emphasizing the problems Israel faces today in combining her various races and languages into one compact, homogenous group. Various aspects of Israeli life will be examined to give the students insight into Israel's problems. Field trips and work camps will permit the participants to pursue their own specialized areas of study. The programme will last 46 days.

Each delegate will provide $250 out of the total cost of $1000, and the Local Committee of WUS will provide the additional $750. This amount covers travel, board and lodging costs.

The competition is open to undergraduates and graduates of any Canadian university or college. Candidates must be Canadian citizens and must combine academic ability with maturity and leadership.

Application forms are available from the SAC Office or from the WUS National Office.

A preview of Israeli life will be given to prospective delegates at an "Israel Night" presented by the External Affairs Committee Jan. 12.

A Voter's G

The Model Parliament

Plato calls Art "the imitation of an imitation." The things we see around us, he says are themselves in a sense illusions, or imitations of a higher reality, so that art which imitates nature, is imitating something that is itself an imitation.

The relation this bears to the Model Parliament must be obvious. As an imitation of the national government of Canada, it has more often than not been the imitation of an imitation. Most of the shortcomings of our "real" government are compounded in the Model Parliament. The blindness, ignorance, irrationality of our legislators in Ottawa, become, in the Model Parliament theatrical representation of blindness, ignorance, and irrationality. True statesmanship of course, occasionally appears in one as it does in the other, but even more diluted than usual.

Some of the same things might be said about the campus voter. So often his decision as to which party to support is a parody of the already farcical "average voter."

These three opening paragraphs constitute to some extent the position of an extreme non-politician. But I would be the first to admit that in our overwhelmingly politically oriented world, even the disdainful position of the non-politician becomes a bit ridiculous. To refuse to participate simply means that I have no way of affecting world affairs (although exercising my franchise amounts to the same thing) and my withholding of my vote is not usually even accepted as a movement of protest.

So I give in. At Model Parliament time I vote. But it isn't easy.

It isn't easy mainly because it has not been decided for me beforehand which party to vote for. Apart from a sentimental affection for people I have almost no political presuppositions. Nor can I trust the actual accomplishments of the various parties. Who can tell how many of a party's achievements are its own work, how many it has been pressured into by other parties, how many are sheer accidents?

For these reasons I find that the most reliable guide to a party is its campaign promises. I simply assume that these promises represent the height of their parties' political, economic, social, and maybe even moral, thinking, and vote accordingly. I almost never give a thought as to whether these promises will or can be fulfilled. I'm a sucker for good intentions, even hypocritical ones.

That means that in this Model Parliament I have nothing to go on, but the party platforms that are being circulated on campus this week. Two party platforms, those of the Liberals and P.C.'s were printed in this paper. The CCF platform, since it is 20 pages long, was not printed, but we did carry a brief summary.

In this column I want to talk about these party platforms. I will not say which is the best party in the election. I will confine myself to the impression that the party platforms made on me, fully understanding that a party may not necessarily be poor, ridiculous, or fascist, just because its party platform happens to be so.

The Liberal party platform appeals strongly to my sense of tragedy. I am told that the Liberal party was once a great party. If it ever was then the platform of its campus club is enough to make us all reflect on the vanity of human greatness.

The whole of what the Liberals have to say about External Affairs is contained in two proposals 1. a proposal for negotiations for student exchange between the USSR and Canada, and 2. for a Canada-sponsored world student peace conference.

Now, in a time when there are pressing problems of trade, nuclear weapons, NATO, foreign aid, and many more, what could have possessed the Liberals to confine themselves to these proposals? They explain in a paragraph of their platform that did not appear in The Varsity that politicians among others are biased, and that students are less biased than politicians. But they go on to state that these students grow up to be politicians, and they do not quite explain the transition from non-biased students to biased politicians. Nor do they account for the phenomenon of the student politician. I don't think I have to linger long over the notion that the solution to international problems consists of gathering large numbers of students together. For one thing even the leaders of the Liberal party admitted to me that this kind of Carabin Weekend diplomacy was not for a moment suggested as a solution to international problems. Evidently they put it into the platform because they thought it might appeal to the students. By their own admission it was something of a political gamble. Did it pay off?

My own opinion is that it didn't. In that it miscalculated the wideness of student interests and concerns, it was patronizing. In that it was directed to the voters rather than to solving the international situation, it was cynical.

A friend of mine who is deep in Canada tells me, that this hurts him most about the party.

Most of the rest of the watered-down domestic recommendations? Well, take labor for instance. The platform contains two recommendations: Servants and Government employment, that, as far as

There is also a sentence about campaign expenses in detail at the end of this sentence is a well engaged in underhandedly

Finally there is a section that the Liberals were convinced they did not succeed in getting however is not entirely true, to make sense. The second half of opinion polls during election that a political party has not frustrating. But so can election without somewhat altering the

All of this forced me to register only two parties to choose between the CCF. What delights I for tomorrow, election day.

Love Was Never Like This

With all the problems that have beset the producer and directors of Mickities 1960, you might reasonably expect that the result would be a fairly poor college musical comedy. If you thought that, you would be wrong. In fact, the St. Michael's group has managed to include in a mercifully short 100 minutes representative examples of most of the bad musical comedies ever produced, and that, for what it is worth, is their most notable accomplishment.

To begin with, producer Tom Sutherland has chosen, or perhaps has had foisted on him a theme which is romantic in the very narrowest sense of the word, and a script which is at best uninspired, and often awkward to the point of embarrassment. Whether the revised version is better or worse than the original, I can sympathize with Philip Nicholas in his wish not to be associated with the book; it has neither good humour nor good romance to recommend it. There is one word for it — bad.

Of course there is a temptation to look upon a college musical as a sort of oversized children's party in which the cast has a good time on stage and friends and relatives sit politely in the audience comforting themselves with pride, charity and the prospect of intermission. This would be all right, mind you, except that the directorate of Short Engagement has seen fit to lease a legitimate theatre for the show, and further has regarded the material so seriously that at one point the President of St. Michael's SAC stood a good chance of being impeached over something he either did or did not do in relation to the show — a problem he thought could best be solved by resigning. If St. Michael's is going to take the show this seriously, then in fairness so must I.

"Let's Get the Show on the Road," sings the chorus as the curtain goes up, but this is one wish which will only have fulfilment in the director's dreams. For some reason which eludes me, the opener is set on a rhythm which most closely approximates a Mozart minuet played in march time; try singing to a Mozart minuet sometime. Of the next five songs, four are rather similar romances sung by the principals; Gene Valeriotte gives his ditty a pleasant rendition, but Ken Weber has not been blessed with the best of voices and his song is correspondingly shaky. Mona Kelly and John Shields as the romantic leads bring good lyrical tone to their ballads. It is Pat Boyle, however, who brings the show closest to good musical comedy with the song "So What!" She alone amongst the cast shows some appreciation of what being on stage is all about, although Mona Kelly's grace and charm are often endearing. A quartet sings something called "Autumn on the Campus" with what appears to have been a touch of chillblains. The program insists that "High Society" is sung by a "full chorus", but they leave some doubt as to whether they are really all there.

The second act is not much different from the first. A drinking song by the male chorus somehow gave me the impression that not many of them knew whereof they sang. Pete Carson gives "Bad Reports" a pleasant treatment, and two more love ballads by the leads are charming even if closely related to their earlier songs. The finale is a rephrasing of the opener; they manage to approach enthusiasm with two or three isolated shouts, but it is still tame.

It is difficult to talk about pacing in this show, for the elementary reason that pacing presupposes movement, and movement is here a missing ingredient. The music has been composed by Mike Lococo, with assists from Sheila Gagen, Joe Marsenick, Jack Nevins, Producer Sutherland and Ray Maher; it provides the show's best moments, but these are largely isolated by a disjointed and discontinuous dialogue. It would be asking a lot of anyone to make something of this script; certainly the cast is not up to it.

The choreography — what there is of it — is sketchy and slow. It is all very well to keep a show "in the college", so to speak, but a semi-professional choreographer would have given Mickities a great lift. The costuming and sets are appropriate but they fall far short of the standards set by other college shows which have graced the Hart House stage — especially Skule Nite and Daffydil; in fact, that is true of about every aspect of Short Engagement.

Mickities, St. Michael's annual contribution to U. of T. musical comedy, closes tonight in Hart House Theatre. Here, Mona Kelly (far left) turns her bewitching eyes on the profile of Ken Weber, who has Claudette St. Denis and Patricia Boyle to amuse him. Tickets at the HH Theatre Box Office.

Pianists Arthur Gold and Robert Fizdale are the featured guests in Friday's concert at the Royal Conservatory's Concert Hall. The program they have chosen reflects their artistry in the "classical" idiom, and consists of works by J. S. Bach, J. C. Bach, Mozart, as well as recent composers Poulenc and Milhaud. J. S. Bach is represented by the Scilienne, originally from one of the flute sonatas, but arranged for two pianos by Maier.

The second work on the program is J. S. Bach's Sonata in F, one of three duet sonatas each in two movements.

Report Additional Thefts On New Open Shelves

A plan to relax the campaign against open shelves in the Wallace Room is backfiring, library officials said yesterday.

Last September the Wallace

Room was converted into closed shelves. During the second week in December, authorities decided to place 200 books, to be used only in the Wallace Room, on open shelves. Nine books are now missing.

Mr. R. H. Blackburn, chief librarian, said, "If the stealing continues at this rate, at the end of the school year our open shelves will be practically depleted. It is discouraging and disheartening to see the books melt away," he continued.

The library looks upon theft of books as "a serious matter". Any student caught stealing them will be brought before the Caput, U of T's disciplinary body. Mr. Blackburn added he "expected the Caput to expel the student."

Before the volumes were discovered missing, 500 books were ordered for the open shelves. Mr. Blackburn said if any more books were found missing when a new check is made, the open shelf system would be discontinued.

Mr. Blackburn said he was thinking about installing a checking system at library exits.

UWO Authorities Ban Issue Of US Magazine

LONDON, ONT., Jan. 4, (CUP)—Authorities at the University of Western Ontario have stepped in to prevent the sale of a bi-monthly periodical by the university bookstore.

Following complaints by individual students and The Western Gazette—the university student newspaper—copies of the "The Realist" were removed from stands in the bookstore and the university's Dean of Men issued an apology to students who were "offended".

The journal, published in New York by the Realist Association, which is described as "a non-profit-making corporation", had a limited sale on the UWO campus—only 16 copies were distributed.

The majority of the articles and news stories in the banned issue, October, deal with religion and sex. Underlying theme of most of the pieces is the stand taken by the Roman Catholic Church on various matters, including birth control.

The language used in the periodical was termed "lewd" and the ideas it contained were said to have been expressed "crudely".

Chambers Underscores PC's Desires For Peace

Egan Chambers, parliamentary secretary to the National Defence Secretary, yesterday told students Canada's defence policy is one of defence—not offence. Addressing a campus Progressive Conservative rally, he said Canada's first and most important defence effort is to work to avoid war.

He said the government's first line of defence is to "go to any lengths and to any reasonable expense to promote a just peace and to achieve universal disarmament, as long as it is universal and as long as adequate guarantees are provided."

Communism, he continued, is a force which is intent on making over the world in its own image.

To prevent atomic attack, he said, Canada must use "every effort to make the international agencies, such as the United Nations, work to preserve peace." The only other way is to show any potential enemy if he attacks the Alliance he will be "to all intents and purposes obliterated," he said.

Charges of spending too much money on advertising were brought against campus Liberals at a Conservative meeting yesterday.

Ted Rogers, president of the Canadian Conservative Student Federation, charged the Liberals with distributing expensive advertising material printed by a professional advertising agency.

Phil Goulston, president of the Liberal club last night denied the charges.

He said cost of the pamphlets was only a fraction of the PC club's material.

To Man's Exploitation Lewis Demands End

In a packed University College lecture room CCF national president David Lewis yesterday called for an end to the exploitation of man, group and nation.

About 240 students jammed a campus CCF club rally to hear Mr. Lewis demand freedom for the individual in a speech entitled "The Meaning of Socialism."

"The socialist," he said, "desires to bring about public ownership and government control so that the power of private monopoly can be curbed and brought under government control."

"The CCF party has always refused to accept contributions from corporations," he said, "you can't walk in the mud and come out clean."

"A number of challenges are facing the world," he said, "nuclear weapons should be kept off Canadian soil to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons throughout the world." He called for planned, directed economies of totalitarian countries to be countered by democratic, economic planning in Canada. "The problem of automation must be met by planning to preserve the opportunity for individual initiative," he continued.

"The socialist," he concluded, "will continue to fight as long as injustices in the social and economic system exist."

LIBERAL CLUB president Phil Goulston (III UC) and CCF leader Jerry Caplan (IV UC) make their points during yesterday's tri-party debate. Other speakers included Conservative Model Parliament leader Murray Corlett (III Vic), Liberal parliament leader Dick Hamilton (III Trin), CCFer Steve Lewis (IV UC) and PC president Dave Crane (II Vic). —VSP Horban

Western, Varsity Divide Basketball Doublehead.

Haaaap-py New Year!—to all of us from all-of you. Hmmm. Oh well... here we go again!

First intercollegiate activity in the new Western's Athletic Building took place here Tuesday night. University of Western Ontario brought down three teams—two basketball and a volleyball—to compete with U of T.

The occasion was actually a return match of a similar tournament played at Western just before Christmas. In the earlier games, Western won the volleyball, tied the Senior basketball, and lost the Intermediate basketball. This meet was little different, although the discrepancy was commendably less.

Volleyball's club president, captain and star, Viliu Canep, was notable indeed. Although she was cheering from the sidelines, the team just seemed to have less and less spirit all through the game. They made an enthusiastic start, but without many points or high-scorers to spur them on, they just wilted.

The final score was 26-10 for Western, which was certainly considerably better than before, but the coach, Mrs. Vernon, threatens a REAL practice this afternoon. Let's hope these gals can pull up their boots before the Intercollegiate Meet at McGill.

The basketball had far more spirit. The two games were played by halves, first the Inter-medes, then the Seniors. At the end of the first half, Toronto's Intermediates had pulled up to meet Western's strong lead, and the score was tied at fourteen apiece.

The first half of the Senior game saw Toronto almost consistently in the lead. At half time it was 26-18 for Varsity.

The Intermediate game finished with Toronto just barely squeaking in a two-point margin. Shirley Quan, a new-comer to the team, had played on the Senior team down at Western, and hooped some beautiful shots for the Blue and White. Agile little Mary Russell was the stabilizing factor of the first line and being a member of last year's team, she played nearly full time. A third outstanding player in the forward line was Judy Skene, who almost reaches up to the basket without even trying. It's a great help in some of those tight squeezes!

The defense, on the whole for both teams, was not particularly outstanding or good. The lines seemed to lack organization. Sandy McMullen's absence was certainly not unnoticed on the Senior team.

Outstanding on Western's Inter-medes, forward lines were Kathy McBrien (of swimming fame), Ann McClatchie and Barb Houston (who seems to function like dynamite—on nervous energy!). With both of the Western teams, their passing and jumping was terrific!

The final Intermed score? 33-31 for Varsity.

The Senior game was more exciting yet. Marg-Ann White and Judy Smith were the stars, as usual—not to mention Joy Mahood—but for some unknown reason, they didn't seem to really co-ordinate.

Sue Bonnell, a new-comer both to basketball and the Senior team, proved her might in shooting and scored several baskets in rapid succession at the beginning of the third quarter.

Most outstanding for Western's Seniors were Heather Allison, Yvette, Walton and Marietta Campbell, all forwards, and all very fast.

With a minute and a half remaining, the score was 31-34 for Western. Mickey called time out, substituted and drove the team on. About three free shots were missed, but Judy Smith got one. 32-34. Marg White and Judy both got several shots, but they missed. In the dying seconds, interception of a Western pass was pretty nerve-wrecking, but the shot missed, Western regained the ball, and time was out.

The Senior game was certainly the most exciting, and some really good girls' basketball was to be seen. A lot of fouls were called, but I understand that's good, fast, clean and close. And there was ample room on the centre court of the Large Gym. But the painted lines were a bit confusing at first. Oh well, that's the price of glory these days.

Several University of Toronto students waged a battle Royal in a darkened corner of the King Cole Room before Christmas.

The battlefield was a tiddly-wink board and a chess board, and the combatants were members of the University College production of "Katy Cruel" and the AVR show "Christopher Jones".

Both sides finally acknowledged tiddly-winks could not be mastered, although the cardboard box said "a game for children from six to 10".

Bill Davis, director of "Katy Cruel", managed to defeat Paul Robinson, orchestra leader of "Christopher Jones" as chess.

Commented Robinson later: "It wasn't fair. I was at a disadvantage. I couldn't see."

Each Party Expects To Win In Parliament Voting Today

By ED ROBERTS

Today is the big day. Today is the day when the three campus political parties learn which of them has the support of the electorate—and which of them will be given the mandate to form the government in the U of T's 1960 Model Parliament.

Model Parliament leaders for all three parties—the men who will become Prime Minister if their party wins—all appeared confident of victory last night.

CCF leader Jerry Caplan (IV UC) said, "If all our supporters come out we'll win—but it will be close."

Liberal leader Dick Hamilton (III Trin) said, "I believe the students of the University are convinced that the Liberals are the party which can best express their wishes—and they will vote accordingly."

Pickersgill Argues Tories Are Not Tory Any More

A former Liberal federal cabinet minister told University of Toronto students the present Progressive Conservative party no longer stands for traditional Conservative policies.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill said: "Today the Conservatives have cast aside their old standards and are parading in Liberal clothes."

"In the past there was never any doubt as to what each party stood for: the Tories were understood to stand for a high tariff, Empire and special interests while the Liberals were for free trade, the Commonwealth and the general interest," he said.

Mr. Pickersgill continued: "But now they have cast this aside, and whereas in the past the Conservatives were strong on sentiments and traditions today they have forgotten tradition and their sentiment is an abysmal type of sentimentality."

He suggested that the only strong policy Conservatives may have is that "in a broad way, perhaps, they are against sin and for peace."

Mr. Pickersgill, Citizenship and Immigration Minister in the last Liberal cabinet, said the PC party has been taken over by merchandisers who consider politics another form of selling.

"Politicking is like running a family," the father of four said. "You can't always give your children what they want."

Mr. Pickersgill said the Conservatives "grass roots" election-time policy seems to have been "well buried in the ground."

"I challenge anyone here today to think of one new thing that has been brought up by the Conservatives and carried through," he said. "All they have done is make some extensions to things the Liberals had already done or contemplated."

Mr. Pickersgill said the Conservatives are threatening the three basic principles of Liberalism: freedom, equality and reason.

He argued that the Conservatives are protectionists even if "Bennett was bold and Fleming is furtive."

The member of parliament from Bonaville-Twillingate, a Newfoundland constituency, cited lack of action on the threat to Newfoundland cod fisheries as an example of a Conservative tendency to support groups which are politically strong and can command votes.

In contrast, he said, western farmers—a large voting group—got the help they needed last year when threatened by an early winter.

The Conservatives neglect reason, he said. "When problems arrive we are treated to a diversion or a distortion."

"The Liberals have a bias for freedom," he said. "If they ever cease to have that, they will cease to be a party."

. . . and belief

PETER DEMBSKI (III SMC) last night announced the end of his support of the Liberal party, a year to the day after he left the CCF to join the Liberals. Dembski says he will now return to the CCF.

"I remain as I have always remained—a true liberal," said Dembski.

"I have left the Liberal party because I believe that such liberal principles can no longer be expressed effectively through the Liberal party on campus," he continued.

"Although I do not believe in all the policies supported by the CCF party, I do think that it presents the only legitimate outlet for the Liberal mind," he added. (Varsity Staff Photo by Roberge)

Real Cool Driving A Crackup, Like

By ALAN WALKER

Ries Karvanaque, University of Toronto's disaffiliator for hire, and Gellellyn Ignatzio, her "contact with the outside world," narrowly escaped injury last night when their car crashed into a ditch on the way to a television show, where Miss Karvanaque was to spread the gospel of disaffiliation.

The brush with death came a few miles south of Barrie, when the small car skidded across four lanes of highway 400, jumped a wooden barrier, turned around once in the wrong lane and came to rest on top of a snowbank.

"The car came within a hair of turning over," Miss Karvanaque said later.

"It could have been a lot worse," Ignatzio said. "If there had been cars in the other lane, we would have both joined the Big Disaffiliator in the sky."

Miss Karvanaque said the road took an unexpected turn to the right, into a detour. The road was icy, she said, and she slammed on the brakes. The car skidded out of control for several seconds, before stopping on the snowbank.

Ignatzio said he was half asleep when Miss Karvanaque threw the car into the skid, and said he remembers her saying something like: "I don't dig this square gig, and I can't go through with it."

Miss Karvanaque admitted she may have said "something to that effect".

A CKBB announcer hustled

the two U of T students to the radio station, where Miss Karvanaque was interviewed. She missed the planned television show because of the accident, but station officials said the show may be done at a future date.

Miss Karvanaque's shaking-up didn't stop her from throwing the interviewer into temporary confusion when he asked about lady beatniks and leotards.

"I see 'You aren't wearing them, today at least,' Dave Compton said.

"As a matter of fact," Miss Karvanaque said, "I am wearing them, but I'm glad to see your attention is rivetted in the right place."

Compton suggested beatniks might take a more active stand instead of just passively objecting to society. "Rejection is the most appropriate form of protest," Miss Karvanaque commented. "Disaffiliators would rather be creative."

Compton asked her how she felt about normal people, i.e. squares.

"I feel a bit of pity for you," she said. "You, collectively I mean, are rather a sorry lot."

Blind Coed's Plea for Aid Ignored By Classmates

An appeal for help by a blind University of Toronto student has not been answered.

Dorothy Marham, First Year General Arts student, placed an advertisement in The Varsity Thursday for a set of logic notes which she wants to borrow long enough to have them transferred into braille.

Dorothy is still waiting.

Professor Marcus Long advised Dorothy to put her plea in The Varsity. The ad appeared in Thursday's paper.

Dorothy said last night, "The ad has only been in one day. I'm sure someone will offer notes." She is still hopeful that one out of about 400 U of T students taking the philosophy course will show some interest in her predicament.

Dorothy decided on the spur of the moment to come to college this fall and consequently she made no pre-school preparations, she said.

WUS Talks Series To Give Travel Tips

In view of the large number of students expected to travel to Europe this summer, the World University Service will offer a series of discussions to provide information on travel abroad, officials said this week.

Called "Orientation for Europe", the series starts Jan. 12 and runs for the next four consecutive Tuesdays, ending Feb. 9.

The series will be opened by UC Dean Ian MacDonald who will give a general talk on ways and means of profitable travel.

The remaining speakers are experienced tourists, students who have lived abroad or travelled extensively in Europe.

The European's view of tourists will be described in the second lecture by Roger Kirkpatrick (II Trin.) who has lived in England and Germany. He will also provide comprehensive information about the Continent.

George Butterfield (III Trin.) and Byron Hyde (II Meds) will give personal views on life in Europe in the two following discussions.

The series will be concluded with a brief resume of travel in Spain, North Africa, Greece and Yugoslavia by Angela Smart (IV Trin.). Miss Smart lived and studied in France for a year and made excursions through Britain and the Continent.

Discussions will be held in Room 11 UC, starting at 1 p.m.

Chaalal Has Charged French Interference

An Algerian student leader has accused the French Embassy of interfering with his quest for scholarships for Algerians.

Messaoud Ait Chaalal said pressure from the Embassy has forced several Canadian universities to withdraw offers of scholarships for Algerian students.

Chaalal's scholarship mission has been backed by the National Federation of Canadian University Students and the Canadian University Press.

The French Embassy categorically denied Chaalal's accusation. An Embassy spokesman termed the charges "stupid".

Chaalal said an expansion of scholarships from Western nations was imperative if Algerian youth are to be lured from education in Communist countries.

Almost 2,000 copies of the 1959-60 edition of the University of Toronto year book, Torontonensis, have been ordered to date at a $2 bargain rate.

An increased grant to Nemesis has made possible a $2 reduced rate for the first 2,000 copies. The rest of the year books will go at the regular $4.50 price.

He said at present three-fifths of the scholarships available to Algerian students are offered by Communist nations.

"We don't favor education in Communist countries, but we prefer it to no education at all," Chaalal said.

He said the educational situation in Algeria today is "critical".

Voter's Guide To A Model Parliament

Yesterday in this column I was rather nasty to the Liberal Club on campus. Elsewhere in today's paper they are given an opportunity to rebut. As is probably fitting they turn for their rebuttal to Lester Pearson. I can't say I am convinced, however. If nothing else a Model Parliament should be illuminating. It should provide wide-open debates that go right to the heart of problems. What I mean is that in a Model Parliament discussion should be based not on the logic of liberalism, the logic of conservatism, or the logic of socialism, but on the logic that the events in question dictate. The party platforms should not be measured either against each other as theory, or against the traditions of the national parties. They should be measured against the world. Measured against the world, the Liberal platform seemed to me to promise a dull, unenlightening, and for those reasons worthless Model Parliament, whether as the platform of the government or the opposition.

And I must say that was also the impression I got from the Progressive-Conservative Platform. It is a rather slippery document, but one of undoubted piety. The usual pattern of such publications is a statement of principles that the party subscribes to. The question then remains how these principles are to be implemented. The P.C. platform, however, is different. It makes it unequivocally clear that the P.C.'s have principles, but it says almost nothing about just what these principles are. This, of course, is a canny political move; for one thing it makes discussion of implementation impossible. The P.C. platform is full of such words and phrases as "responsible", "sound", "realistic", and the old reliable "best", without any further attempt to define these terms. The party says it will "act for the promotion of 'various things and thereby absolve itself from the no doubt galling task of telling us just what action would constitute an 'act for the promotion' of so-and-so. Algebraically speaking such phrases are independent variables for which any values can be substituted.

Starting at the top we have, "a responsible financial policy to ensure a stable foundation for the development of the Canadian economy, and to promote full employment and a sound dollar." Now, the very question that presumably distinguishes the P.C.'s from the other two parties, or at least from the CCF is this: exactly what is "a responsible financial policy"? Does the Conservative club advocate, say, nationalization of Canadian industry? I'm inclined to think not. But, then what is a "responsible financial policy"? No more than an X into which practically anything can be inserted.

Dozens of similar examples appear since the P.C. platform is a strongly consistent piece of work. For instance, just what would be contained in a "National Anti-Inflationary Act"? Perhaps certain spells the recitation of which will drive away inflation? Of course you will say, the P.C.'s have something much more serious in mind. But what? And then what is "a policy of full employment"? And just where is the national P.C. party's policy of full employment? I am certainly not trying to suggest with all these questions that the P.C.'s do not take specific stands, but when they do these stands seem to be diametrically opposed to each other. For instance at the same time as they suggest "an end to nuclear testing", and "support of all realistic efforts to achieve disarmament, and a secure and just international peace", they also want "provision of the best available, modern equipment for Canada's defence forces". Could this mean snowshoes? Or does it mean that any "realistic" disarmament must encompass nuclear arms for Canadian soldiers? This seems to be the policy in Ottawa.

To be entirely fair to the Conservatives, I hardly need add that they do not regard this position as inconsistent. Their position briefly stated is the simple truism, perhaps too simple, that you have to remain armed until such time as you can safely become disarmed. In another publication of theirs they take a position toward disarmament which may be debatable, but is at least worthy of consideration. They boil the present nuclear situation down to the horrible and familiar alternative of "becoming 'brain-washed' ciphers in a world-wide totalitarian state" or resisting and possibly causing the destruction of all civilization." This alternative, total enslavement or total destruction, can I think fairly be said to be felt by all parties. The Conservatives, however, think they see a way out of it, the only way in fact; that is, the continued effort to institute bilateral disarmament based on a system of inspection. The trouble is that even with a system of inspection there would appear to be a chance, however slight, that a nation could still make nuclear weapons. If there is such a chance, then there is a chance that the alternative of enslavement or annihilation of the world cannot be avoided. If there is such a chance, it would seem to me that a sane man would be forced to risk total enslavement rather than total destruction. This risk is what unilateral disarmament involves.

Inspection schemes may work. But that word "may" is all-important when the survival of the human race is concerned. It takes courage to risk enslavement and espouse unilateral disarmament. But I cannot deny that it may take courage, albeit of a rather perverse sort to play around with highly fallible inspection schemes where total annihilation is concerned.

It might also be mentioned, in passing that the P.C.'s suggest a Royal Commission on tax reform. This is commendable. Royal Commissions are always a good thing whatever they are investigating.

That just about sums up the P.C. platform. I may have a few more things to say about it while I am considering the CCF program. What disappoints me about the P.C. program is its overall failure to make specific proposals. It would seem to offer the prospect of a rather rapid week of debates that would fail to come to grips with any real issues.

Failure to make specific proposals is one thing that cannot be charged against the CCF party platform. In fact, some members of other parties have suggested that the CCF proposals are too specific. I don't quite know what they mean. And when they say "we are realistic, but the CCF is idealistic" I can't quite figure out whether this is supposed to be praise or blame.

In any case the CCF platform is so specific that it takes up 20 pages. All of it, though, is interesting reading. If for no other reason than that it is so long, it is going to be difficult for me to do it justice, but if you're at all conscientious you shouldn't vote without taking a close look at it.

It begins with international affairs. The CCF proposal on nuclear arms is roughly a combination of unilateral nuclear disarmament for Canada and the urging of steps towards bilateral nuclear disarmament based on inspection schemes for the rest of the world. What this means is that the CCF nuclear proposal is similar to that of the P.C.'s but with the addition in the CCF plan that Canada would get out of the nuclear arms race completely even to the extent of refusing to sell uranium for the production of nuclear arms. This would seem to give Canada an improved moral and political position from which to urge bilateral disarmament in the United Nations, in addition to which it would divert nuclear arms money into domestic areas.

rebuttal of part 1

An Unpaid Advertisement

Dear Sir:

I am writing this letter in reference to the editorial entitled "A voter's guide to the model parliament." I agree with the first comments of the editor that "most of the shortcomings of our real government are compounded in the Model Parliament." To a very great extent, this election and past elections are ridiculous competitions to gain votes by writing more literature, posting of more platforms, and making more speeches than other clubs. I think most students would agree that this is deplorable. What are the aims of the Model Parliament? There is, of course, the aim of helping students to understand through actual participation the workings of a Parliament and the machinery of elections. I think, however, that the most important aim is to permit students to express their ideas on current political problems. Throughout the year, I would like to see the clubs hold intelligent discussions on current problems, suggest answers to these problems, and put forward well-thought out proposals for the consideration of the rest of the campus at the time of the model parliament. It is a very secondary objective "to explain and clarify" the stand of the Federal counterpart, and the Liberal club is not doing so. I would like to see more student ideas. It would be desirable, for instance, if there were more opinions from students in economics courses. The P.C. club is going into this model parliament election on the basis of the Diefenbaker government with few proposals of their own. This is of little value. The C.C.F. have some good proposals and they are doing a great deal of campaigning. I wish they would separate their good liberal proposals from the mass of moral and ethical declarations which make their pamphlets so ponderous. However, there is one thing to which I object much more strongly. In a letter to students at Victoria College, they say of their platform: "One need not agree with it in total. Indeed we do not necessarily subscribe to every proposal it contains." They are trying to appeal to "liberally-minded" students. But I, as a liberal, am repelled by the most pervasive and radical changes advocated in their booklet — the economic proposals. This is why I would like to see more opinion from students of economics.

Concerning our foreign policy, with few exceptions the solutions presented by the other clubs to the "pressing foreign problems" are proposals advocated by the Hon. L. B. Pearson many times in the past. I am asking the Varsity to publish an article I have written concerning Mr. Pearson's new book Diplomacy in the Nuclear Age. Thinking that students were aware of Mr. Pearson's proposals, we restricted our proposals on foreign policy to two contributions which we believe students can make towards establishing better relations between the East and the West. The editor has distorted statements taken from our platform. We never said that the student Peace Conference was not suggested to help settle international problems. If two sectors have conflicting ideas there must be agreements between the areas permitting them to co-exist with a minimum of friction. The solution is not an Iron Curtain but discussion by both sides, not just at governmental levels, but at all levels. We believe that students should take part as well as businessmen, newsmen, and others. It is a total misrepresentation of our statements to call them cynical. We did not write page after page of pious declarations but gave what we believe to be constructive proposals. For this we have been called cynical.

I shall not elaborate on the rest of the editorial. But, if our proposals are "watered-down", surely this does not invalidate them. The very reason we object to the C.C.F.'s big proposals is that we think that they will do more harm than good.

Concerning our publishing campaign expenses, and not distributing outside literature: on Wednesday a prominent Conservative accused us of distributing pamphlets published by an advertising firm. This is untrue. In the model parliament committee, the Liberals, with the support of the C.C.F. proposed that campaign expenditures be limited to $50.00 and that no outside literature be distributed. The P.C.'s refused. However, we are distributing no outside literature and our expenses for this campaign are less than $8.00.

Pearson On Nuclear Diplomacy

By Dick Hamilton

In one volume entitled, "Diplomacy in the Nuclear Age," the Hon. Lester B. Pearson has assembled a series of four lectures given at Taft University in 1958 and his speech in acceptance of the Nobel Peace Prize at Oslo, Norway.

This book gives a remarkable insight into the thoughts and ideals of this very modern statesman.

The unique problem facing mankind at the present time is the possibility of total destruction by nuclear war. The issue is simple—peace or oblivion—but the solution is not so simple.

Diplomacy today relies heavily on the nuclear deterrent, but peace cannot properly be defended on the basis of the nuclear deterrent. What diplomacy can face the possibility of an accidental war starting in one of the trouble spots of the world? Surely the nuclear deterrent has no application here. "Total power may be necessary as a deterrent against large scale aggression, but it has no other political security or value." Diplomacy, then, requires some other base than just the nuclear deterrent, a base in which all other countries, including Canada, can participate, and not just with nuclear arms. First of all, are we clear and confident about our objectives? Russian objectives are clear; in case of an attack they would clearly be to destroy Western capacity to retaliate.

However, "one of the difficulties that the free world has had in dealing with the Soviet bloc is that we have been clearer about what we oppose than about what we stand for."

Mr. Pearson asserts that our objectives must be "peace and the easing of tension; co-operation for all good purposes between all countries; freedom for all peoples with security and responsibility."

What are the means at our disposal to implement these ends? In arms the nuclear deterrent is inadequate for small accidental wars. UNEF, quickly set up to meet the Suez crisis, has proven a healthy experiment, and Mr. Pearson advocates that a permanent force be set up to meet future emergencies.

An economic base, important as a base for military power has great use of its own which is weakened if too much reliance is placed on the military aspect. "Without strong and expanding international trade and investment, the materially undeveloped countries, now on the march politically, will never establish such a base. Yet it is vital that they do so, if international conflict is to be avoided and their increasing populations are not to result in social collapse. "Aid and trade without political strings are important. The Russians have a definite purpose here as stated by Mr. Khrushchov. "We value trade least for economic purposes and most for political purposes."

There are few signs of the necessary co-operation and solidarity on the Western economic front. While Communist countries, under orders from Moscow, are co-operating in a highly efficient international division of labor, Western countries are damaging their unity by maintaining trade barriers. America should be concerned with the development of the European Common Market and the more loosely knit outer seven.

Failure of these developments would weaken and destroy NATO. Success might split NATO's European and American members. This is especially significant for Canada, which stands in danger of greater dependence on the United States. "Is it not time to begin to think in terms of an economic interdependence that would bridge the Atlantic that would at least break down the barriers between dollar and non-dollar countries which, second only to the Iron Curtain, has hitherto mostly sharply divided our post war world?"

The greatest source of strength is "the strength that comes from a freedom which is combined with discipline and responsibility." If this strength is used wisely, there will be a power and steadiness behind our policy and diplomacy which no despotism can ever hope to achieve."

But "strength without skilled diplomatic direction may lead you straight against a stone wall." The theme that runs through this book is that "sound policy and astute diplomacy are themselves as much a source of strength as military power." To achieve our objectives our diplomacy must display imagination and constructive purpose.

Mr. Pearson discusses some of the problems of modern diplomacy. Two notable features of diplomacy in the Nuclear Age are (i) the growing tendency to confuse policy and diplomacy as policymakers increasingly are becoming their own diplomatic agents and (ii) foreign policy and diplomacy are today more subject to the control and vagaries of a public opinion which is now the target of an organized battering by all the media of mass communication which enlighten and confine us. There are obvious dangers in this trend. Before, when a diplomat failed in his negotiations he might have been relieved of his job, or head, but today whole governments are more closely involved.

Mr. Pearson wishes that negotiations should be carried on confidentially. "What I plead for is no spectacular meeting of a Big Two or a Big Three or a Big Four at the summit, where the footing is precarious and the winds blow hard, but for frank, serious and complete exchange of views—especially between Moscow and Washington—through diplomatic and political channels." However, politics which govern and guide negotiations should be publicly decided and publicly explained. There should be no secret commitments of nations to anything significant affecting the citizens. Also there are certain international situations concerning which negotiations which can usefully be preceded by open conferences conducted even with a maximum of publicity so that international opinion can be mobilized and brought to bear on a particular development with maximum impact. "Two such developments of grave significance that should be brought before the U.N. are the control of nuclear arms and the control of outer space. There is danger of abuse. "In the abuse of the U.N. for unworthy publicity and propaganda purposes lies one of the greatest dangers for the future of the world organization." This danger must be faced.

"The purpose of all diplomatic negotiation is to reach agreement. This normally requires some adjustment of position on both sides. Such adjustment, however, is not made easier and may become impossible when every alteration of position, however slight, becomes headlined within the hour as appeasement of morality and abandonment of principle."

The West's objective is co-operative co-existence. "In present circumstances no higher level of agreement can be reached on the basis of mutual self-interest, either that of friendly co-operation or of any common purpose. But it will do, until we can reach a higher and better level, that of good will."

Model Parliament

And Progressive Conservative leader Murray Corlett (M.P. Vict. "We have made what we feel to be a realistic appeal to the students of this university and we are confident of their response to such a program."

Polls for the Model Parliament open at 10 this morning, and will remain open until 2 p.m. They are located in every main college and faculty on campus.

Any registered student of the U of T may vote in the election. All he has to do is to show his ATL card to the returning officer and then mark his ballot.

Meanwhile all three leaders issued final press statements last night as the frenzied week of campaigning drew to a close. CCF'er Caplan described his party's campaign as "the most intensive, the best organized and the most educational it has ever had."

"Whatever the results of today's election, we are satisfied that more people have learned what the CCF is in the past four days than in the entire rest of the year," he added.

Caplan continued: "We also think that the amount of interest our party has provoked this week augurs well for a successful election day for the CCF."

"We are especially pleased, of course, with the response to our major programmatic pamphlet, as compared to the scattered sheets put out during the week by the two other parties, and to our main pamphlet, which seems to have caught the imagination of a great many students," Caplan said.

The CCF leader concluded. "There is a spirit and enthusiasm amongst CCF'ers this week that has rarely been true over the past years that I have been on campus. We have a pretty good notion that this feeling and optimism will make itself felt in no uncertain terms in today's election results."

Liberal leader Dick Hamilton said, "We have conducted a very low-key campaign, without the noise and empty promises which have characterized the other two parties."

"But this was done purposefully as we believe political proposals are best considered in the light of reason, and not amidst the heat of fervid oratory," he continued.

He went on, "We believe that the Liberal platform is the only one which will stand up to such a reasoned approach despite the fact that some people have tried to ridicule it by considering it as a statement of everything in which the Liberal party believes, and not just a statement of the points we believe should be brought up in the Model Parliament."

"Elsewhere in today's Varsity there is a letter which explains our stand in this matter," the Liberal leader said.

"We believe that after careful consideration the students of the university will vote Liberal—as our platform, based on the great Liberal principles, is the only reasonable approach to the great problems which confront every Canadian," Hamilton concluded.

Progressive Conservative leader Murray Corlett said, "We have been tremendously encouraged by the enthusiastic response to our platform and speakers in all part of the campus."

He continued: "Recent PC successes at all three Montreal Universities and at the University of Western Ontario indicate the popularity which our party enjoys on 'Canadian campuses.'"

"The CCF platform stresses the problems of which we are all aware, but it fails to offer a program of realistic proposals for the solution of these problems."

"The Liberal platform," he continued, "is narrow and limited and does not offer a definite approach to the world and domestic problems which confront us."

Corlett concluded his statement: "We ask for your support today on the basis of a proven record of achievement and a realistic and constructive platform."

In Lebanon, Jordan, the Gazi Strip, and the Syrian region of the United Arab Republic 1,000,000 Arab refugees have lived 11 or more years in exile.

Capital Gains Tax and higher corporation taxes. Specifically stated industries to be nationalized are coal, iron and steel.

The generally used argument against socialism is that it supposedly makes the individual subservient to the state. The last four pages of the pamphlet are devoted to this problem. The section begins with the statement that "our society is producing a mass man . . . incapable of choice, incapable of spontaneous self-directed activities". Blaming this largely on the emphasis on the profit motive it goes on to state, "our aim is, and always has been, essentially a moral one—to make man the end, and never allow him to become the means. This cannot be achieved until man is free from exploitation by man, and subordination to machines."

Presumably referring to this section the writer of the Liberal rebuttal, printed on this page says of the CCF, "I wish they would separate their good liberal proposals from the mass of moral and ethical declarations which make their pamphlets so ponderous".

Now, there may very well be grounds for taking exception to socialism. But to suggest that a politician has no business making moral and ethical statements is, an example of the kind of thinking that has emasculated the Liberal party, or to use the terminology of the Liberals and P.C.'s has made them more "realistic".

The issues between socialism and capitalism are not settled. Far from it. One of the most important needs in Canadian politics today is a full-fledged debate on these issues. I for one would look on the Model Parliament with tremendous interest if it furnished such a debate. I want to hear the CCF forced to defend itself on such questions as the state vs the individual party because I think it might well be able to.

In addition, I would not mind hearing the occasional moral and ethical statement mixed in with all the politics and economics.

For these reasons and others I would like to see a CCF government in the Model Parliament. Their party platform gives me cause to hope that I would hear some lively debating if they were the government, nor do I expect that all the liveliness, under these circumstances, would be provided by the CCF.

I do not think either that a vote for the CCF need signify any total commitment to their cause. That is the difference between the Model Parliament and the "real" Parliament. In a national election a vote signifies a prior commitment of some sort. In the Model Parliament, on the other hand, a vote can, or at least should be a preparatory step towards finding a commitment. If the Model Parliament has any function at all, surely it is to act as a laboratory where controlled experiments can be performed.

I should even think, that for the sake of their national parties, the P.C.'s and the Liberals should welcome a CCF government in the Model Parliament. It would presumably be a chance to show the campus as a whole whether that party is as mistaken as they think it is. The CCF would also welcome being elected, but presumably for different reasons.

All the party platforms as printed raise questions. The question, or one of the questions raised by the Liberal platform is "what are these people doing in politics, campus or otherwise?" The question raised by the P.C. program is "what is their program?" The CCF raises the whole question of the future of socialism. And this latter is the question that I would like to hear debated at this year's Model Assembly. That's why the CCF will be getting my vote today.

Varsity Blues hockey team are enjoying a two week layoff before re-entering the wars on a tour of Quebec next weekend. During the holidays Blues played six games three in a tournament in Boston, and three exhibition games.

First on the list were two games with Michigan and both were lost. The scores were 4-2, 6-1. In the tournament, however, Blues swept through undefeated and topped off the heroics with a 5-4 decision New Year's Day over Boston College.

Blues were praised in fulsome terms for their gentlemanly play during the tournament. Obviously, the onlookers had never seen a Toronto-Laval were blood runs like champagne on a wedding day.

While unwilling to single out any one of two players for special mention, coach Jack Kennedy did mention in passing such stalwarts as George Hicken, Bob Giroux, Ian Sinclair as well as the established threesome of Roth-Murchie-Gatten and Harry Neale.

comment

by mike chykaliuk

Lately the sports world has been rocked by reports of unchecked brutality and foul conduct in its ranks. Hockey was branded as a deadly contest when Andy Bathgate said that the sticks are used as spears to inflict injuries. Professional football and boxing have had the usual number of "fixes" and consequent investigations, and basketball players were again accused of "point shaving."

Here in the Intercollegiate league we have been fortunate to have level headed directors and coaches to steer athletics clear of this foul mire.

There is no subsidization, no pressure to win, no underhanded dealing and as a result there is no corruption of any kind. Sports are still played for the joy of participation.

As an illustration, College boxing has adopted larger gloves and headgear to curb brain injuries. Also thanks to men like coach Tony Canzano, the duration of the rounds has been decreased to prevent excessive fatigue. Competent coaches concerned with the well-being of the athlete can prevent many injuries by halting the contest before too much damage is done. For just this reason a round in an exhibition match recently was stopped earlier than the allotted time.

Though some of the Blues boxers have lost by kayo (two last year) none in recent years have suffered any permanent impairment. It is commendable that so few knockouts are scored against Canzano's team. Tony would rather not contest a division than hurt one of his inexperienced fighters.

Another almost unnoticed feature of safety is the presence of competent officials at the contests. All the attending judges and referees are sanctioned by the Ontario Boxing Commission. Even the announcer is imported from Maple Leaf Gardens to ensure that no boxer's pride is hurt by a mispronounced name.

Despite these precautions, or is it because of them, Tony Canzano's Blues have won the Intercollegiate Boxing crown for the past two seasons.

* * *

Tonight at eight at the Hart House Athletic night the simon pure scrappers will again display their prowess (some of which is newly learned) in a ten bout exhibition tournament.

If the previous one staged before Christmas is any criteria this should be another swinging, fuming, crowd-pleasing brawl. Spectators are reminded, for their own safety, to stay well clear of the ring.

Varsity Oppose Western Feature Athletic Night

The 1959-60 Varsity Basketball team will get their first league test tonight as they play host at Hart House to the visiting Western Mustangs in the first Athletic Night of the New Year.

It will not only be the first game but a very important one as the results will most likely indicate the success of the team in the league this year.

Western as in the past is highly considered team as they not only have last year's two top scorers back but have the added advantage, and one which Toronto unfortunately lacks, of height.

Two members of the squad, Ed Bardos, because of ineligibility, and Walter Lipke because of medical reasons will be unable to play. Bardos was outstanding at the Lawrence Tech game and Lipke was top scorer in the league two years ago.

This places the onus on Jim McGuire and Boris Wolchuk the team's "tall men". At the guard spots Peter Potter, Mike Muir and Mel Cohen will alternate.

Last year when the two teams played they split their games by a one point and a two point margin. However most people feel that Western is a much improved team especially Coach John McManus who naturally disappointed about losing two good men feels that his team "will have to hustle and play heads up ball all the way if they hope to beat Western."

Western has former Queens star Greg Stone as an addition to their already strong line-up including Ross May, Bill Lawson and Ron Hodgins.

Judging from the past performances made by the two teams this year they are quite evenly matched. Western in overtime managed to edge out Lawrence Tech and Toronto had the misfortune to drop one to them by one point.

In addition to this game a full night of athletics is promised. The second in a series of exhibition boxing bouts will also be run off in preparation for the upcoming intercollegiate finals. Also there will be a fencing contest when The Varsity Team takes on some sabre specialists from the Ontario Fencing Association.

Just notes . . . the team has been "cold" all holidays—the first time they practised since their game on December 12th was Monday . . . Peter Potter was named Captain of the team last night . . . Malvern and Sir Winston Churchill Collegiates will pair off in the exhibition contest which precedes the big game . . . first game starts at 7:00 sharp and the second one should start about 8:30 . . . its hoped that a good and enthusiastic a crowd turns up as The Blues get their first chance for a strike back at Western since football . . .

Meds Take Slim Lead For Reed

Medicine has taken a small lead in the First Division of the T. A. Reed Trophy race at the half way mark. Their total of 5037.5 points gives them a lead of only four over runnerup St. Michael's.

In Division Two its a case of the first shall be last and the last shall be first. Knox College, firmly mired in the cellar during 1958-59, have opened up a big margin. They lead their nearest competitor, Forestry, by 645 points. As Forestry is 1647 points ahead of the third place faculty it has been narrowed down to a two team race.

Last year's winners, Wycliffe, are in last place, nearly 3,700 points behind the winners.

Party's Chief Reveals Government Program

When the University of Toronto Model Parliament swings into action next week items highlighting government legislation will be recognition of Red China, increased federal grants to universities, and nationalization of utilities.

CCF leader Jerry Caplan parliament prime minister said last night the Red China issue has been a "sore in the side of international affairs for too many years."

Caplan said his government will try to pass a motion recognizing Communist China "because it is absurd to think a world council like the United Nations should not have a representative from the largest country in the world."

The CCF is also calling for establishment of a permanent UN force to police the international scene and eventually supplant all national armaments, both nuclear and conventional.

At the same time Caplan's party will ask the UN to sharply censure South Africa for present racial policies there.

A bill concerning aid to underdeveloped countries will be introduced. "It will ask for a grant of one per cent of Canadian produce or $3,400,000 to destitute countries through the UN."

On the domestic front the CCF will call for nationalization of pipelines, the Canadian

Students Give Victors Forty Per Cent Vote

In an upset victory, the CCF party swept to victory Friday afternoon in campus elections for the University of Toronto Model Parliament.

Gaining 40 per cent of the vote, they had a comfortable margin over both the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals.

The returns gave the following count: CCF 750; PCs 601; Libs 580.

While voting was generally light, heavy increases were recorded in Victoria and University College and the large CCF vote there accounted for their margin of victory.

Victoria, traditionally a Conservative stronghold, had a 100 per cent increase in ballots cast and the CCF took this vital college by a 137-112 count. Last year, they got only 50 votes there.

At UC, a well organized and intensive campaign enabled the socialists to outscore their opponents by 3-1 margins and the 342 CCF votes gained in these two colleges represented almost half their total.

WIDE SUPPORT

While the CCFers owed much of their victory to the heavy turnout in UC and Vic, they actually had a majority of the votes in eight of the 14 colleges and faculties where voting was held, thus indicating widespread support for their platform.

Colleges that remained untouched by the trend were Trinity, which was strongly Conservative and St. Michael's where the Liberals won again. A low turnout at SMC cost the Liberals the chance to be the official opposition.

Leader of the CCF Party, Jerry Caplan (IV UC), was pleased with the result and said he felt the voters had expressed confidence in the program put forward by his party. "The voters were impressed and felt it was the only one to come to grips with the basic problems confronting Canada today," he said.

Caplan said he thought the result of the election showed an endorsement of the CCF stand on foreign affairs in general and his party's stand on nuclear weapons and their testing in particular.

When questioned on the heavy turnout at UC and Victoria, Caplan attributed this to well organized year-long campaigns in both instances.

OTHER LEADERS

Murray Corlett (III Vic), leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, said, "We are surprised at losing, but we extend congratulations to the CCF on their triumph."

He attributed the upset to the long reign of the PC party and the inevitable reaction to this, coupled with a widespread feeling that the CCF should be given a chance to show what they could do in the Model Parliament.

Dick Hamilton (III Trin), leader of the Liberal Party, said, "The CCF have finally won the opportunity to show the campus what the socialists can do when elected to the government. We hope that they will introduce as bills the socialistic ideas they believe in and if they do so, it will be the most interesting Model Parliament in years. . . we trust that the defeat of the Liberals was not a repudiation of our proposals for a World Student Conference and for student exchanges with Russia. . . we intend to press for the adoption of these by the National Liberal Party."

Hamilton said further that he felt the defeat of the PCs was largely because they confined their platform to that of the Diefenbaker government.

Both opposition leaders felt that this year's Model Parliament will be the most interesting in years and promise a top-class opposition.

Easy To Steal Books In University Library

Says ALAN WALKER

I was a thief and forger for The Varsity last Friday.

In one trip into the stacks of the University library, I walked in with someone else's pass, forged his name on two call slips, and smuggled six stack copies out under my coat.

The second time through, I was more confident. I jammed a huge folio of Shakespeare under my jacket. It was a cinch.

The thefts were to prove a point—if you are so inclined, it is not difficult to steal books from the U of T library.

But in the near future, things will be different. When the stolen books were returned to Chief Librarian R. H. Blackburn, he said "the supervision of the exits will be tightened up".

REASONABLE PRECAUTIONS

Mr. Blackburn said every reasonable precaution is taken to minimize the risk of thefts.

"And," he added, "they are thefts. Many students look on it as a game to take books out of the library illegally. It's forgery and thievery."

I had all the breaks on my excursion into the field of crime. Getting in was no problem. The stack pass consists of a rubber stamp with red ink. They are difficult to see on a pink third-year admit-to-lectures card. So the librarian had no time to look at the name. Even if she had, it is doubtful she knew me or the owner of the card.

Once inside the stacks, it was easy to slip the books into various coat pockets. There is a great deal of privacy in the stacks for doing it.

I didn't cheat, I took average sized books. Then I took a couple of books to sign out in the regular way, and waddled upstairs, trying not to let the books drop out.

CAREFUL FORGERY

I forged the name of the owner of the card as carefully as I could, under the circumstances. Then I walked to the check-out desk.

COVERS A MULTITUDE is what Varsity writer Alan Walker's coat does here. Under it is a folio volume of Shakespeare's plays. Above is Walker's total take for two forays into the University of Toronto library stacks. They are all stack copies. They are all stolen. The librarian has been rendered mercifully anonymous.

The librarian was reading. She put down her book, and processed the two books I had in view.

She didn't ask to see my pass. If she had compared the signatures, I would have been stopped, in all probability.

She didn't look up at me. She handed me my books, and returned to her own book. I walked carefully and slowly away.

An hour later I was back for a second try. More confident (the same librarian was on duty), I shoved the folio Shakespeare under my belt and tottered towards her. I also had another forged call slip ready for her. Once again, she didn't bother me.

A few minutes later, when I piled the books on Mr. Blackburn's desk, he explained the situation.

"In the first place," he said, "she was supposed to examine your card on the way out."

BLACKBURN EXPLAINS

This was the major loophole in the system, as far as using other people's passes is concerned, and it will be plugged.

As for the actual thefts, Mr. Blackburn explained, "the only way to stop it completely is to close the stacks. There are advantages to the open stacks which justify a certain risk, but we have to depend on the goodwill of the senior students having stack privileges.

"I hope we never have to close the stacks," he continued, "because most of the students are honest."

But for the few thieves, security precautions will be increased.

Separatism Dabated

The question of whether or not French Canadians have created "real Canadianism" through their separatism will be discussed at a Victoria College Union debate next Tuesday night.

The debate deals with historical elements regarding the influence of French Canadian separatism on Canadian cultural and social developments.

Mike Cross (IV Vic) and Fred Johnston (III Vic) will defend the resolution, "French-Canadian separatism has crippled Canadian progress."

Diane Jackman (III Vic) and John Wood (II Vic) fill the opposition slot.

Donna Youngblut (III Vic), who is organizing the debate, said the topic was chosen because of recent developments in Quebec government.

"Main argument for the affirmative will be that real Canadianism has been prevented through influence of separatism in French Canada," said Mike Cross.

"The opposition will argue French Canadianism is true Canadianism," said John Wood.

"We feel the French attitude is the last bulwark against American influence in Canada. The aim of French Canadians is to achieve a Canadian nationalism that is bicultural."

Socialism The Winner At Acadia U As Well

WOLFVILLE, N.S., Jan. 9 (CUP) — The traditional pattern of campus politics was broken Thursday as the Democratic Socialist party swept into power at Acadia University.

The Socialists, led by Hughes Gibson, second year Arts student from the West Indies, climaxed their campaign with an 11-hour drive which netted them 19 out of 40 seats in their first victory.

In the election, which saw 75 per cent of the student population go to the polls, the Socialists took over 48 per cent of the popular vote.

The Conservatives and the Liberals began to lose supporters when the Democratic Socialists termed the present Model Parliament farcical and asked for a serious assembly.

The victory was generally attributed to the desire of the students for something new, and to the intensive personal campaign put on by Gibson.

Hockey Farce Feature Of Annual Ice Frolics

Partial plans for the program of the Blue and White Ice Frolics, an ice show scheduled to replace the university of Toronto Winter Carnival, were announced by officials last night.

The show will be highlighted by the traditional hockey clash between members of the Students' Administrative Council and The Varsity staff, frolics director Sue Hamilton, said last night.

Further comic relief will be provided by novelty races between members of college and faculty executives, while the "poetry in motion" aspect usually featured in ice shows will be provided by seven figure-skating acts, she added.

Hockey as it should be played will be demonstrated in a 20-minute game between the Victoria Girls' Firsts and St. Hilda's Girls' Firsts.

Miss Varsity will present cups to the winners of the various competitions, races and games.

The annual Winter Carnival was cut from a three-day open-air spree involving chariot races, ice sculpture and snow queens to the two hour indoor ice show in an effort to slash financial losses caused by bad weather and transportation difficulties.

The Blue and White Ice Frolics will be held in Varsity Arena, February 5. Tickets cost 50 cents each and go on sale this week.

Box office location will be announced later.

make or break

After many long years in the political wilderness, socialists at long last have attracted the attentions of a majority of the University of Toronto electorate. Last Friday, for the first time in many years, students voted to give the CCF party the mandate to form the government in the University's annual Model Parliament.

The significance of the election of a socialist party by a campus normally considered among the most conservative in Canada will doubtless occupy the attention of student politicians for some time to come, and we don't propose to enter that debate at this point. But nonetheless we feel impelled to say that we like the results. We are glad that the CCF won the election.

We welcome the socialist victory because it may help to end, once and for all, the confusion which colors the political thinking of every student at the University of Toronto: is socialism preferable to capitalism as a philosophy of government?

This debate has raged for a long time now, and it has attracted a great deal of the efforts of all three political parties. We don't think it has attracted a disproportionate amount of effort, because the outcome may well have a great bearing upon the political future of Canada, as today's students graduate and permeate society, exercising their influence at every level and upon every decision. But we do welcome the chance that the matter may now be settled, because further debate can do nothing but becloud a clear cut issue which even now is in danger of becoming indistinct.

Whenever the question has been raised in past years, the debate has ended inevitably in a state of flux. For the CCF said, quite simply, "you talk about socialism, but you won't give us the chance to put it into effect." And there was no reply. But now they have been given the chance. Will they use it? This, to us, is the crux of the issue.

The CCF today has a moral obligation to each and every one of the 754 students who supported it last Friday — and indeed it has an equally strong obligation to the more than 1,100 students who voted for the Liberal and PC parties. It has to justify its victory in terms of the socialism versus capitalism debate. It has to show the students of the University of Toronto that its policies are indeed those which will most benefit Canada and Canadians.

That is why we say, and say as strongly as we can, that unless the CCF party both introduces legislation embodying the socialist philosophy and permits a far-ranging and comprehensive debate on such legislation to take place, it will have failed. Such legislation, in our view, should be designed to implement some of the economic concepts of socialism, as these constitute what we understand to be the basic differences between socialism and capitalism as political philosophies. We would suggest a bill nationalizing Canadian coal and steel industries, as this was one of the CCF party's more important planks in the recent campaign. But the actual choice is up to Caplan and his colleagues. We are supporting a principle, and not a particular.

The forthcoming Model Parliament may well be the most important ever staged at the University of Toronto. If the CCF use the Model Parliament for nothing more than a debate on the already tired issue of recognition of Red China, or only for the introduction of a bill embodying principles of nuclear disarmament, with which the three parties differ only on questions of degree, they will have failed. If they produce a bill to implement their economic policies, they will have justified their victory. er

"So The War Bro"

No Algerian has studied in Algerian universities since 1957, according to the president of the Algerian national student union now banned by the French government.

Messaoud Ait Chaalal, president of the National Union of Algerian Moslem Students in exile (UGEMA), said last week that there were two alternatives.

Many students leave the country, others remain, and many join the resistance movement Front de Liberation Nationale (FLN).

"They cannot study, so they fight," M. Chaalal said.

He was visiting Canada, and the United States seeking bursaries, and scholarships for students now living in Tunisia, or Morocco, many of them in refugee camps.

He attended the annual conference of the Canadian University Press held in Quebec, and explained the situation to the student editors from across Canada.

Following his visit the CUP passed a motion of "support in principle," for the scholarship campaign being undertaken by NFCUS, for Algerian students.

Later M. Chaalal pointed out what he believed were some of the problems facing Algerian students:

- The average annual revenue of all citizens, including the French is $40 a year,
- the average ration is 1,100 calories a day, much less than the minimum required by basal metabolism,
- one thousand students, 750 in Tunisia, and 250 in Morocco, live at subsistence level in refugee camps or hold jobs sporadically.

"That explains the war," M. Chaalal said, "there is a limit to what human beings can stand."

Since 1957, M. Chaalal has been the leading flying Dutchman for a nation of flying Dutchmen, students without a university, banned from their homeland, and from their studies.

Since his arrival in Canada December 24, M. Chaalal has spoken to officials of Montreal, Laval, Ottawa, and Carleton universities, asking for bursaries and scholarships.

NFCUS will soon start a national campaign for funds to establish as many scholarships, and bursaries as possible. It will be conducted through the students' councils across Canada.

Jacques Gerin, president of NFCUS, said that the methods of distributing the funds have not yet been decided, but that probably instead of each university offering one or two scholarships individually, the money would be collected by the national organization for distribution.

This plan was followed in the United States, where the United States National Students' Association (USNSA) offered 23 scholarships, including travelling expenses, room and board, tuition fees, and $70 a month spending money.

Seventeen of these scholarships have already been taken up, and the students have been studying in the US this fall. Mr. Chaalal said he expected the other six to begin classes early in the new year.

During his six weeks extensive tour of the US, he talked to university personnel, labor union officials, and politicians, gaining support for the students of UGEMA.

Speaking of the possibility of a solution to the Algerian problem through de Gaulle's recent offers, M. Chaalal said that both UGEMA, and the FLN were more optimistic than they had been in the last five years.

However, he said, there are still many differences to be ironed out through "pour parlers", (informal negotiations, since the FLN's provisional government in Cairo is not officially recognized by France). He added that even if they are successful in a year or two, the situation, of university students will still be far from satisfactory for some time to come.

Those who are successful in winning scholarships to study in other countries will definitely return to Algeria to set up an educated governing elite when the countries will have gained its desired goals from France.

"I'm not working to get these scholarships in order to feed industries in other countries," M. Chaalal said. "Algeria needs educated people, and the West needs an educated Algeria."

Many of the students have left Algeria to study in sister North African states, and some study in France, Belgium, and Switzerland.

For those who go to France, life is bearable, because at least they are permitted to study on the same financial basis as the French. However, all North Africans are said to be under constant surveillance in France.

The Guggenheim Colosseum

If you should some day find yourself in New York with nothing but a wish to spend a distracting afternoon, get a Fifth Avenue bus and let it take you to the Guggenheim Museum of art at 89th St. The gallery was Frank Lloyd Wright's last design, and one of his most controversial buildings.

The building is solid concrete, and credit for sheer virtuosity must be given to the contractor who undertook to build it; seven before him had declined the challenge. The section which houses the main gallery is round, and in five tiers reflects the layout inside. The walls slope about 19 degrees inward—from top to bottom, that is. Administrative and other offices are located in a series of cylinders and boxes arranged about the main building. The concrete exterior gives the building an appearance of massive solidity, although this is marred somewhat by the fact that it has been painted a sort of yellow-beige colour.

Wright is supposed to have said that should an atom bomb fall on New York, every building in the city would be leveled except his. After seeing the building, that's entirely believable. The outside of the museum suggests a fortress—or perhaps a nuclear plant; one thing it most certainly does not suggest is an art gallery. Wright seems to have wanted to disguise that fact.

Surprisingly, there is very little landscaping around the building; a few evergreens border the sunken walk, and the rest of the space is taken up with building, building and building. Despite all, the museum is an impressive and commanding edifice.

But it is inside the building that Wright has his greatest moments. The gallery is circular; a continuous ramp spirals around the walls from the top of the building to the bottom. Paintings on the walls can be viewed only by starting at the top of the ramp and walking down—a distance of a third of a mile. Of course you could start at the bottom, but you might create a rather dangerous traffic problem. The roof is an immense glass skylight; underneath, the centre of the building is empty space, except for the floor.

Wright had every element inside the building under perfect control. At first glance, one has the impression that the ramp itself is rotating, but this soon gives way to a sense that it is really the space itself that is moving, and if that seems too incredible, go and see it for yourself.

In addition to being a genius: Wright was something of a cantankerous old man, and one is forced to the rather sad conclusion that the paintings hung in his building have no business being there at all. They show to the worst possible advantage. The spirit of Wright pervades all, and the paintings impress one that they are an intrusion on the living architecture all around them. His original plans for the paintings were, however, even more severe. He wanted no artificial lighting, relying entirely on the skylight and on tiny slits in the walls. (I never quite succeeded in finding one of these slits, but they must be there.) The inside of the building was to be painted the same indescribable color as the outside, and the paintings were to be hung flush with those slanting walls, presenting patrons with the added deterrent of having to look at the pictures on a slope.

Wright never tolerated interference with his designs, but after his death museum officials set out to salvage as much as possible. The paintings are now suspended vertically on rods protruding from the walls, and some reactionary has installed diffused lighting. Despite the efforts of the officials, however, the museum still incorporates the worst features of many older art galleries. The gallery itself is in fact one long (that is, a third of a mile long) corridor, so that for example if you want to take a second look at a painting, you have to take the top and start all over again. You try to step back to look at distance, there will be a stream of New Yorkers, and the painting, and a little further, you will be falling through that.

On the main floor, an auxiliary gallery, which is really good, except that it is the only one big enough to accommodate a way by Miro and Archa.

And if you have not the afternoon had circles, you can still lecture theatre in the is not only circular in also derives light from windows.

added, "Democracy is curiously under attack in France."

Germany and Switzerland are the only two European countries which have offered nothing to help students a substantial relief. "And that does not help us, where else can we go to the East, even though we hate the East doctrine?"

some time after the beginning of the war, UGEMA, as the official organization of the students, refused all offers of aid from the United States.

However, Western countries were slow to respond to the plea for help from the expatriate students, UGEMA was forced to yield to the pressure for the sake of intellectual subsidies. The angels refuse me help, and the devil must take it," he said.

present there are 130 scholarships provided by the East German government.

Algerians rebelled against France Nov. 1, 1954, after 125 years of colonial rule. When the French took over in 1830, they began to exploit the country for France. In 1954, the French constitute one-tenth of the population and two thirds of the land.

Algeria is rich in natural resources, especially oil, gas and phosphate. Local exploitation of these resources would have made the country rich. The French removed these resources and sent them back to France for production and then sold them back to Algeria. Only a small percent of the working force of Algeria is permanently unemployed except for the time, M. Chahal said, but the French prevent private enterprise from establishing an industry in the country for fear of the proletariat which lives above the subsistence level, and eventually evolving to the point where it is able to organize.

After expropriating the Arab's land, the French, after their conquest declared Arabic as the official language.

UTDF Choices Disappoint Davies

Robertson Davies, in his adjudication speech after the first three productions of the University of Toronto Drama Festival, stated his intention to deal not with the acting, lighting or production of the play, but with the plays themselves and their worthiness to be chosen for production by a University group. He lambasted the students in a very polite and kind manner for choosing middle-aged plays (the most contemporary play was written in 1937) of which only two or three have eternal youth. The remainder should have been left in their peaceful graves where they belonged. He was particularly disappointed at the absence of an avant-garde play which he had really hoped to see.

The first play, "A Maid Goes Forth To War", was produced by the School of Nursing. It was written in 1932. Robertson Davies spoke very sharply of this play. (It was a very kind compliment to even call it a play.) He emphasized that this was the kind of play that should never be produced at a university. It was the type taken from the part of the Samuel French catalogue which reads "For Women Only". He advised the nurses to use their charm and entice some men into action with them.

The play itself was written in a Frenchified English employing twisted sentences and fancy words to produce the effect. What made this pitiful wheeze even more abhorrent was the remorseless Ontario accent which mispronounced such words as Saint and Marie.

To make the Pig French speeches even worse, they were put in the context of a ghastly play. It possessed neither the necessary conflict nor a situation which produced a tremendous evocation of emotion to replace the absent conflict. The theme interpreted saintliness in the character of Saint Joan as sentimental mush. The writer obviously knew nothing of the strength, resourcefulness, and indomitable spirit of true saintliness.

Commenting briefly on the production, Robertson Davies complimented the effective setting and the splendid modern dress costumes. He gently chastized the girls for faint speech and a rushed and uneasy effect produced by too hurriedly picking up cues and not trusting in their ability to hold the audience. If I may be permitted to sum up Robertson Davies' kind words, the School of Nursing chose a rotten play(?) and gave it a rotten production. Considering the play, the fault lay largely with the poor choice rather than with the acting.

The Victoria College production, "The Flattering Word", was written in 1918. It should have been done as a period piece and wasn't. The bigoted attitude of the church to the theatre is outdated, and is no longer relevant.

North Carolina Students Attend Toronto Weekend

Twenty-two University of North Carolina students will get a taste of Canadian life later this month when they return a visit made last November by University of Toronto students.

Arriving the last weekend of January, the southerners will participate in a full program of parties, discussions and dinners.

said Virginia Lomax, Students' Administrative Council week-ends chairman last night.

Miss Lomax said she advised the U of N.C. students to wear their long underwear and winter clothes.

"They said they wanted to learn about Canada so we will try to teach them," said Miss Lomax. Highlighting the program will be a trip to the Caledon Hills farm.

The student government president and the dean of the U of N.C. will be among the weekenders.

A discussion about Canadian and American foreign policy regarding underdeveloped countries is planned for Friday night.

"The discrimination issue was well worked over during the U of T visit to North Carolina," said Miss Lomax. "There is no formal discussion on the this subject planned."

U of T officials hope the exchange weekend will become an annual affair.

World Refugee Year developed from an idea of four Englishmen—the former four-minute miler Chris Chataway and three friends, Colin Jones, Trevor Philpott and Timothy Raison.

a foreign language, and henceforth taught the native tongue in the schools on the same basis as English — two hours a week.

For this reason 94.6 per cent of the Moslem population of Algeria is illiterate. Of the 2.3 million children in the country between the ages of six and 14, only 300,000 attend school — because they are not allowed to use their own language.

"The pressurés, the blindness of colonialism refused us all material and cultural progress," M. Chacal summed up. "So the war broke out."

interesting. To unbury this old vaudeville sketch, the group had to make up in the skill of presentation the vacuity of the text. They didn't.

The costumes in the roles of Mr. Rigley, the bigoted, fickle (I know it's a contradiction) minister, and of Eugene Tesh, the haughty, airy, snooty bad actor were simply terrible and ignored completely the instructions of the text. The minister's costume associated him with the large churches of Rome or England, rather than the obscure fundamentalist group intended. The apparel of Mr. Tesh lacked the fineness and dignified quality that was so necessary.

The acting was similarly inadequate. Stu MacDonald failed to provide the dash, verve, and exaggeration necessary to satirize Mr. Tesh's bad acting. It was much too close to bad acting to bring out the satire inherent in the part. The play ended with a sickening sermon. A very appropriate comment by Robertson Davies warned that bigotry on the part of the theatre stinks as bad as bigotry in the church.

The St. Michael's College production of "The Rising of the Moon" was written in 1903. Happily, it was one of Lady Gregory's eternally youthful plays in which the dialogue had a notable Irish flavour and each speech had a warm, honest taste. Feeling more secure with a very good production, Robertson Davies became honestly critical in very kind and encouraging words.

The songs were the heart of the play and the singer, played by Peter Lydon, failed to charm us with the necessary but absent warmth, richness and experience. John Pierce, in the difficult role of the sergeant, failed to bring out the inner conflict of the man, largely because the comedy got out of hand. This lone good production of the evening lacked the mystery and magic necessary to make it perfect. However, it was the only performance that provided an experience which, if not artistically complete, was one to be remembered with gratitude.

Take heed, amateurs. Choose a worthwhile play. Howard Adelman.

Mustangs Too Good For Varsity Squad

By NOEL BATES

The Varsity Blue Basketball team sent about 1,000 fans home disappointed on Friday night from Hart House after they dropped the first intercollegiate basketball game to the Western Mustangs by a score of 70-54.

The game was a dreary one for Varsity supporters with only the excellent and consistent playing of captain Peter Potter keeping the Blues alive. Only occasionally did any of the other players show signs of the way they are capable of playing.

POOR NIGHT

Suffice it to say that it was an off game for the whole team with the exception of Potter.

Western on the other hand did not play like a team that is supposedly bound for a championship.

Toronto went foul crazy for the whole game and a good example of this was Jim McGuire. Usually he can be counted on for at least 15 points but he was forced to sit on the bench for most of the game having committed four fouls in the first eight minutes.

Western took the lead just after the ten minute mark of the first half and never lost it again. Mike Muir and Bob Miner combined with Potter to cut their lead down to four points at the end of the half.

INCREASED LEAD

Western in the second half really took advantage of the poor ball handling and shooting of Varsity to stretch their lead to eleven points and remain unchallenged for the rest of the game.

Ross May and Greg Stone, the ex-Queen's star were the men mainly responsible for the complete control which Western maintained over the boards. Bill Lawson and Ron Hodgins were top scorers for the Mustangs with 19 and 18 points respectively.

Both teams stayed on a man-to-man defense for the whole game and Western was the far superior team in this department. Mel Cohen along with Potter was checking well. The Blues went into a full-court press with three minutes left but by that time the game was too late.

Final score was 70-54. Blues' top scorer was Potter with 15 followed closely behind by Wolchuk with 11 and Muir with nine.

UPSET COACH

An interesting point to notice is while the visitors were consistent dividing their points evenly the Blues produced only 23 points in the second half as opposed to 31 in the first.

Coach John McManus summed up the team's play pretty well when he said "We were awful."

This game was important to Varsity but this reporter feels there are nine left and if Western has the makings of a championship team then so does Varsity.

JUST NOTES... Malvern walked all over Winston Churchill in the preliminary contest, beating them 55-37... Next big athletic night is on the 22nd when McGill are the visitors. Toronto takes to the road next week playing against Buffalo on the 13th and in Hamilton against McMaster on the 16th... George Spanetz was the top trainer for the Blues.

Mustangs Win Again

Kingston, January 10th — Western Mustangs today played the Queens Gaels in opening game for Queens in the Intercollegiate League and beat them 73-54.

It was the second victory in as many nights for the visitors who defeated Toronto Varsity on Friday night.

There was no real contest as the Mustangs took a lead and never lost it. Similar to their victory over Toronto they lead only by five points at the half but stretched it to 19 by the end of the game.

FIRST GAME

It was the first game for the Gaels and their inexperience was evident. Their top scorers were Bob Laughton with sixteen points and Jim Pando with nine.

Western, gaining this victory, also took over first place in the league. There was sweet revenge for Greg Stone the former Queens player who scored 16 points against his old school. Bill Lawson was top man with 25 points. He was deadly from both inside and outside the key.

Queens will next meet McGill.

PETER POTTER, captain of the Blue basketball team played well in vain as his team went down to a 16 point loss to Western. He amazed the capacity crowd all night with his excellent playmaking and shooting as he led the scoring with 15 points.

Boxers Bash In Pleasing Exhibition

By MIKE CHYKALIUK

Friday night at the Hart House Gymnasium, prospective U of T boxers staged the second exhibition tournament of the young season.

Though no decisions were awarded, the slam bang contests were hard fought all the way through.

Bernie Cataford and El Fuchette put on a crowd pleasing fight. Other scraps to draw loud ovations were between Val Spring and Ozzie Hutchinson and Emmett Neary vs. Hugh Wood.

HARD HITTING

Jim McManus, Emmett Neary and Bernie Cataford were perhaps the best fighters of the night, and all look like shoo-ins for positions on the Blues' boxing team. Coach Canzano was very pleased with the way his team was rounding into shape. "They are hitting and moving very well, considering this is only the second fight for most of them," said Tony.

Earlier in the week it was hoped that light-heavy weight Tom Codwin would be able to participate. However, the hand he broke in a sparring session earlier this year has not responded to treatment and may perhaps sideline him for the year. Izak Bouwer and Fred Johnstone are now the likely candidates for the light-heavy weight honours. Canzano is still seeking a boxer to fill the heavyweight division.

CONTESTANTS

The following is an innumeration of the boxers who participated in the exhibition.

TONY COPPING (Vic) vs KEN CHASSE (UC)
ANDY CATAFORD (St. M) vs ALLEN ANDERSON (Dents)
ADDY VANDENBELD (St. M) vs MIKE WILSON
BERNIE CATAFORD (St. M) vs EL FUCHETTE (S.P.S.)
PAUL WILTON (S.P.S.) vs ART VACHON (Dents)
VAL SPRING (Grad Stud) vs OZZIE HUTCHINSON (Dents)
EMMETT NEARY (St. M) vs HUGH WOOD (Arch.)
JIM MCMANUS (S.P.S.) vs ROBERT TURNER (U.C.)
PAT WOOTEN (Thia.) vs IZAK BOUWER (Grad Stud)
FRED JOHNSTONE (Vic) vs BOB DODDS (S.P.S.)

Assumption Plaster MacMaster

Defending Senior Intercollegiate basketball champions, Assumption University of Windsor, got off to an impressive start in the 1960 season as they walloped an inferior MacMaster team 88-64 in Hamilton Friday night.

Assumption's impressive offense was paced by the shot making of stocky Leo Innocente who totalled 10 field goals and three foul shots to be high scorer of the game.

He received plenty of support from Gene Rizak, Dick Szeman, and Leo Girard. This trio popped in 43 points between them. Assumption led 42-28 at half time and were never headed.

STRONG DEFENCE

While mustering this strong offense, Assumption still played careful attention to defence and actually held the MacMaster team off the scoresheet for the first six minutes of the game.

High scorer for the Macmen was Doug Marshall who dropped in 21 points, most of them in the second half when MacMaster put up a better fight.

Assumption are heavily favoured to win the title for the second year in a row as they have added several tall players to their already capable roster.

Less U.S. Scholarships For Canadian Athletes

NEW YORK (Special) — Canadians who use their athletic ability to gain scholarships at U.S. Colleges might find their rosy educational picture dimmed after today.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association meeting here will vote today on a rule cutting down the number of foreign athletes imported by U.S. universities.

Track, swimming, tennis and hockey will be the sports most affected if the rule is passed.

Canadian student hockey players have been in great demand in the U.S. to the point where the University of Michigan has only one American on its roster.

Track is another sport where Canadians have used their talents to further their education at major U.S. schools. Included in this list are: Rich Ferguson, Iowa; Joe Foreman, Notre Dame; Henry and Crawford Kennedy, Michigan State; and Gord Dickson, University of Michigan.

Under the proposed rule, an alien will have to complete his inter-collegiate athletic career within 10 semesters from the time he first registers in an American college.

He will also be prevented from competing in collegiate events for more than two years after he reaches his 21st birthday.

The same rule would prevent foreign athletes from competing in NCAA championship events until they have completed two years of study in the U.S.

A new major football bowl game will be approved today by the NCAA.

The NCAA council refused to go into any details about the new bowl game before it was certified by the membership.

It was learned, however, a New York group is considering staging a game to rival the Liberty Bowl in Philadelphia.

For West Indians

Two of the best innings ever seen at the Kensington Oval in Bridgetown, Barbados, have pulled the West Indies out of danger in the first cricket Test Match between England and the West Indies.

Garfield Sobers and Frank Worrell put on 150 runs in an unbroken stand lasting 212 minutes and took the score to 261-3 when rain halted play on the fourth day of the game.

DRAWN GAME

The close of the day saw the score raised to 279 for three in reply to England's first innings totals of 492. Worrell was 91 not out while Sobers had totalled 103.

The game is expected to end in a draw as there is not enough time left to force a decision barring a sudden collapse by either side. Star bowler for the West Indians was Sonny Ramdin who took 3-121 of 57 overs.

a charter...

I. WHEREAS the Canadian student press believes in the following principles:

1) That freedom of expression, and debate by means of a free and vigorous press is essential to the effectiveness of an educational community in a democratic society;

2) a. That while the student press is a function of the student government or of the university administration this should in no way be allowed to impair the freedom of the student press;

b. That the student press should be free from all forms of external interference;

3) a. That it is essential to a free student press that it be responsible for the views and opinions it expresses; and

b. That the basic duties of such a free student press are to present the varied opinions of the students it represents, to present news fairly and without bias, and to interpret local, national and international events and issues of interest and import to students to the best of its ability.

II. AND WHEREAS freedom of the student press has been abridged in the following ways:

1) Confiscation of issues of student newspapers due to the publication of material which faculty or administrative authorities considered detrimental to the reputation and the welfare of the institution or some department of the institution;

2) Suspension, expulsion, or threats of similar action against student editors, or suspension or threatened suspension of publications because of the publishing, or the proposed publishing, of matters which faculty or administrative authorities considered detrimental to the reputation and the welfare of the institution, or some department of the institution;

3) Control of the content of a student newspaper through censorship by faculty, administrative authorities, or the student government, so that the student newspaper tended to become a public relations organ of the institution or an instrument of the student government;

4) Financial pressure used to limit or retaliate against editorial policy;

5) By censorship of articles and/or editorial comment, by civil and academic authorities; and

6) By inordinate and excessive social pressure used to prevent publication of particular issues or opinions.

III. THEREFORE the Canadian student press affirms its belief that it should be free from all the abuses listed under Article II and declares the following fundamental rights, duties, and responsibilities necessary for the effective implementation of the principles of Article I:

1) That the Canadian student press should be free from pressure by student governments, university authorities, or any external agencies;

2) That within the restrictions of the laws of libel, and within the scope of their responsibilities and duties as outlined in Article I, the Canadian student press should be autonomous; and

3) That the Canadian student press should be free to develop so that it can continue to fulfill its role in the academic community.

U of O Editor Under Fire

OTTAWA, Jan. 12, (CUP)—After lying dormant for nearly a year the contentious issue of freedom of the student press at the University of Ottawa has exploded once again.

In a move reminiscent of the dramatic sessions of former years, the bi-lingual University's students' council Sunday came close to censuring one of the editors of its French-language newspaper, La Rotonde.

Michel Beaubien, associate editor of La Rotonde, faced a motion of censure because he had demanded the drafting of a Charter of the Student Press in Canada by the Canadian University Press Quebec last December. The charter was passed by a unanimous vote of all 24 member papers.

Council member Pierre Joannis, in proposing the motion of censure, claimed Beaubien did not speak for the Council when he asked the CUP to pass the Charter.

Baubien told delegates to the conference that such a charter was essential because of "certain influences that oblige French-language papers to adopt certain attitudes for fear of reprisals."

La Rotonde Editor-in-Chief Jean Carriers, who is also CUP Ontario regional president, defended his associate's actions at the Quebec Conference.

"Baubien did not speak for himself alone", Carriers said. "He spoke for the delegation from La Rotonde."

"If you are going to censure anyone, it should be La Rotonde and not Beaubien", he said.

"Furthermore, I would ask that if a vote is going to be taken, you change the motion of censure to one of non-confidence which entails my resignation".

At that point Council President Andre Ouellet told council it would be unwise to add to the publicity that the University of Ottawa has already gained by its past actions against La Rotonde.

Joannis then withdrew his motion.

Council passed a motion stating that it considered Beaubien's statement as a personal opinion, and that it did not reflect those of the Council.

The attempted censure is the latest in a long series of donnybrooks between the Council and La Rotonde, which have resulted in five student editors being fired within the past two years.

The dismissals, which repeatedly made headlines in the student press across Canada, came in two batches — May 1958 when two editors were expelled and in September of the same year when three new editors were summarily cut adrift by order of the University administration.

Reason given for the firings was that the editors had published material "detrimental" to the University of Ottawa.

The material in question charged that the U of O administration was "paternalistic".

Menace On The Roads Strikes Again

By FRED HOST

Syndicated disaffiliates, Ries Karvanague, had a second brush with death yesterday evening on her way from her third television appearance in Barrie.

The near tragic accident on the way to the Barrie radio-TV station last week almost repeated itself yesterday in a freezing rainstorm when she failed to notice an ice-observed "DO NOT ENTER" sign and drove into the wrong two lanes on highway 400.

"There are some conventions you have to conform to," she said to Gellellyn Ignazio when she told him about it at the Varsity office later.

"To show the sheep-like, follow-the-leader attitude of most people," she said, "another car followed me."

On both interviews she explained again the significance of books by A. A. Milne, author of Winnie the Pooh.

McGill SEC Approves Free Press In Principle

Montreal, Jan. 12 (CUP)—The Students' Executive Council of McGill University last night approved "in principle" the charter of the student press in Canada, but balked at incorporating a guarantee of press freedom into its constitution.

This was the first such action taken by a students' council following the adoption by the Canadian University Press of the charter at last December's conference.

However, when an attempt was made to insert even a limited guarantee of press freedom into the students' society constitution, the council defeated the move overwhelmingly.

The council was considering a revised constitution for the students' society which must be approved by a general meeting of the student body, and by the university authorities.

The clause presently covering the student newspaper, the McGill Daily, reads as follows:

"The students' executive council shall be responsible for the management, and the control of the McGill Daily through the editor-in-chief."

The proposed change would have added, "In the editorial columns the McGill Daily shall be free to express whatever opinion it holds save that no editorial shall treat of a religious question in a partisan way, attack any political party per se, or express or imply any but a neutral attitude in discussing any student election."

In proposing the change, editor-in-chief Roger Phillips said this would not alter necessarily the status quo, as already guaranteed by the newspaper's own constitution.

However, this is apparently contrary to the students' society constitution from which the McGill Daily constitution draws its authority.

In effect, he said, the students' society constitution completely nullifies the newspaper's freedom since the council is free to change the McGill Daily constitution when it wishes.

In a statement released after the meeting Phillips pointed out that this may not be the end. He termed council's failure to assert editorial freedom in the student society constitution as "rather incongruous."

"If the council approved the student press charter in principle," and asserted editorial freedom in the newspaper's constitution, why was it loathe to guarantee such freedom in the supreme student constitution?" he said.

A constitutional change may be brought up from the floor of a student body meeting, he said, so the door is not closed on the final adoption of the proposed change.

New Chief Signs Mickities Cheque

A three-month-long crisis at St. Michael's College ended last night with the election of a new President for the SMC Students' Administrative Council.

The new chief, Paul Foley, was chosen by council after a tense, 1½ hour closed meeting. He defeated Bill Markle (III Gen), only other contender for the position. Foley immediately resigned his position as editor of the SMC newspaper, The Mike.

Foley replaces ex-president Jordan Sullivan, who resigned once last term over alleged lack of council confidence. His resignation was refused.

In December, Sullivan refused to sign cheque for the college show, Mickities, after its producer revealed the script had been revised without his knowledge.

Sullivan said he could not in conscience release council funds for the show, and Council then threatened to impeach him over his stand.

Sullivan resigned last week to avoid further clashes with Council.

Foley is a close friend of Sullivan's and threw the weight of The Mike behind him when Sullivan resigned earlier last term.

He said last night he did not think his friendship with Sullivan was considered by Council. He signed the Mickities cheque shortly after his election.

Foley said he respected Sullivan's decision not to sign the cheque, but "I look upon it as an official act of office."

Foley said legislation concerning Mickities will be considered during the term.

... and a bill

EDITOR'S NOTE: Printed immediately below is a portion of one of the bills which the CCF government plans to introduce into the Motel Parliament. We have published only a portion of the bill because that is all that was contained on the carbon we discovered lying around The Varsity's office last night. We have been assured that it is correct, however, and that it is indeed one of the three bills which the CCF proposes to introduce. The bills will be officially released later today.

AN ACT TO ESTABLISH PUBLIC CONTROL OF THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TITLE I

1. The following Canadian industries and utilities are hereby brought under direct public ownership:

- a) The Trans Canada Pipeline Company;
- b) The Bell Telephone Company of Canada;
- c) The Canadian Pacific Railway Company and its subsidiary companies;
- d) The primary steel industry of Canada;
- e) The coal industry of Canada.

TITLE II

1. The Economic Planning Board is hereby established, responsible to the Parliament of Canada through the Minister of Economic Planning. This Board shall be composed of 20 members drawn from representatives of the social sciences, industry, agriculture and labor together with other personnel to be appointed at the discretion of the Minister.

2. The Economic Planning Board shall have the following functions:

- a) to immediately investigate the most practical feasible and efficient method of extending social ownership of industry into the corporate examples aforementioned, and to report its recommendations within the limitations of approval in principle to this House within a period not to exceed one fiscal year from the passage of this Bill;
- b) to analyse the long-run economic effects of departmental programs now in existence, and to project possible future departmental activities, that a measure of co-ordination may be achieved between the departments concerned, and that the public interest may best be served by the most efficient administration;
- c) to recommend to the Minister of Economic Planning large scale government investment in socially desirable areas and projects, monies for said investment to be authorized by the Appropriations Act of the Parliament of Canada.

Nfcus Committee Pleads For Emergency Billets

Officials of the National Federation of Canadian University Students at the University of Toronto last night issued an appeal for 20 extra beds.

The beds are needed to billet delegates to the annual conference of the Ontario region of Nfcus, to be held at the U of T this Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

"We're desperate," said conference planning chairman Mary Percival (IV UC). "We had planned for only 70 delegates to the Conference, and now we're told that 90 will be attending."

Miss Percival requested any fraternity or residence student who will be off-campus this weekend and who would be willing to loan the Nfcus committee their rooms to get in touch with Committee officials.

They may be reached at the Students' Administrative Council office (WA 3-6221) from 9 to 5 each day, or students wishing to volunteer beds may get in touch with Don Armistage at WA 2-1569.

Delegates from every university in Ontario will be attending the conference, Miss Percival said.

Highlight of the conference is expected to be a symposium to be held in Trinity College's Convocation Hall at 2.30 p.m. Saturday.

The symposium will see Education Minister Hon. J. B. Roberts, Opposition leader John Wintermeyer, CCF MPP Goven Marle and Nfcus National President Jacques Gerin discuss "Queen's Park and the University: The government's responsibility to the university and to the student."

Other highlights will see delegates attend banquets hosted by the U of T, the City of Toronto, and the Province of Ontario, as well as a cocktail party to be given by Hart House Warden Joe McCulley.

"They're also expected to do some work during the three days," Miss Percival said.

University Astronomy Dept. Faces New Space Problems

Space in the astronomy department of the University of Toronto isn't expanding with increased student interest in the space age.

The number of students in the astronomy courses offered at the U of T grows every year — this year there are 200 students compared with 151 last year. University officials expect the trend to continue as more and more young people seek knowledge of the world of space.

Like many other university departments, the astronomy department no longer has enough room for either its students or its staff, nor are facilities for adequate teaching available.

"We're just about at the end of our rope for teaching," Dr. John F. Heard, head of the department and of the David Dunlop Observatory, said recently.

The observatory on the university campus which was once available to the department of astronomy now houses the Students' Administrative Council offices and The Varsity.

All these deficiencies will be remedied as a result of the university's expansion program.

Of $52,000,000 to be spent during five years, $5,780,000 has been allotted for a new physics building.

Besides laboratories and offices and class rooms, the buildings will have a roof-top observatory whose equipment will include a 10-inch or 12-inch telescope as well as a number of smaller ones.

Challenging Engineering Opportunities

Canadian Pratt & Whitney Aircraft is a company with a continuous and successful record for over 30 years. A number of engineers is required for design and development work in the gas turbine field, and for our manufacturing, helicopter and electronic activities.

The company's facilities are located in Montreal. Because of its affiliation with the United Aircraft Corporation, the company is able to carry on its design work against an outstanding technical background created by the Pratt & Whitney, Sikorsky, Hamilton Standard and Norden Divisions of United Aircraft Corporation.

The gas turbine engineering staff is sufficiently large to undertake major projects, but not so large as to limit the breadth of assignments available to individual engineers. There are ample opportunities for professional progress in all areas.

Applications are invited from graduates whose interests lie in any of the following fields:

Design and Development
Quality Control
Production Engineering
Electronics Systems
Instrumentation
Sales and Service

A recruiting team will visit the campus on JANUARY 21 and 22

Poet Reaney Turns Playwright

A first play by a Canadian writer already well known as a poet is to be the next production of the University Alumnae Dramatic Club at the Coach House Theatre, 200 Bedford Road. "The Killdeer", by James Reaney has its premier performance on Wednesday, January 13 and will run to January 17, and again from January 20 to 24. For reservations, call or write Miss Mary Smart, 71 Howland Avenue, WA. 2-6896.

James Reaney, who is on the staff of the English Department of the University of Manitoba, won the Governor-General's award for poetry last year with his long poem, "A Suit of Nettles". "The Killdeer" is his first play, though he has also written the libretto of an opera, "Night-Blooming Cereus", with music by John Beckwith, which was performed on CBC Wednesday Night last spring. Mr. Reaney came to Toronto for a few days after Christmas to see rehearsals of his play and is reported to be pleased with Pamela Terry's production. Miss Terry will be remembered as the director of the University Alumnae's prize-winning play, "Waiting for Godot" two years ago and for the very successful production of "The Alchemist", which the Club presented last spring.

Heading the cast of "The Killdeer" are Muriel Cuttill, Jayne Ford, Frances Halpenny, Don Eryn, Robert Huber and Ivor Jackson. The Club urges people to make their reservations early as many people were turned away from their last play, "Endgame".

The Varsity will shortly be carrying a feature article on

today

Rowland Pack, noted Toronto cellist, will be the guest artist at today's Wednesday afternoon concert, at 5:00 p.m. in the Music Room, Hart House. Mr. Pack is well known around the University as the director of the Hart House Glee Club; students may not be equally aware that he has been for many years one of the outstanding cellists in Canada.

sunday

The chance to hear him perform in the informal atmosphere of the Music Room is certainly a opportunity that should not be missed. Unfortunately, we do not have details of the program that he has selected, but the fact that there is much rich musical literature for the cello, most of which has been unexplored in Toronto, assures an interesting program.

This Sunday evening, January 17, at 9:00 p.m., the Hart House Orchestra, under Dr. Boyd Neel's direction, presents its fourth concert of the current season. All the selections to be played, including the popular Holberg

comment

...gazing up at the dark sky, spangled with its signs and stars; for the first time, the first, I laid my heart open to the benign indifference of the universe. To feel it so like myself, indeed, so brotherly, made me realize that I'd been happy, and that I was happy still.

The lines at the head of this editorial are from the last page of The Stranger, the first novel of French Nobel Prize winner Albert Camus.

No better proof of the indifference of the universe of which he speaks can be found than Camus' own death last week at the age of 46 in an automobile accident.

Better than any other modern European perhaps, Camus represented (and suffered through) the spiritual travail in which European thought having lost its values in the bloody nihilism of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, tried to find its way back. The way back led through the Marquis de Sade and Nietzsche, through decadence, nihilism, nazism, communism. It involved self-consciousness at a time when the European self seemed too awful to be conscious of.

The problem simply stated was the indifference of the universe. The philosophy of the previous century had to some extent undermined the notion that the universe contained an absolute authority for a moral law and initiated a new phase of man's attempt to legislate for himself in the face of cosmic indifference.

This was part of the essence of what French philosophers came to call the Absurd. Man attempting to be his own source of law in an indifferent universe was like Sisyphus, who in the famous Greek myth, is condemned eternally to roll a huge rock up a steep hill only to have it roll down again when he got it to the top.

Camus' novel The Stranger was published in 1942. In its deeply disturbing evocation of the indifference of man and the indifference of the universe it was the first step of Camus' struggle toward a solution. Two of the most important milestones in the struggle were his philosophical essays The Myth of Sisyphus, and The Rebel. The second of these almost found the solution he was seeking. It examines the history of rebellion in Europe from the French Revolution on. It shows rebellion, man's refusal to pass beyond certain limits, constantly being turned into revolution, man's total negation of limits.

It traces this pattern through the thinkers of the eighteenth century such as Sade who embraced an ethical theory of "everything goes", through the deification of murder and impulse by nineteenth century romantics, the attempts in the midst of this on the part of thinkers such as Nietzsche and Marx to a way through to salvation and the final absurdity in which their thought was twisted in nazism and communism.

Camus' solution at that time (1951) was the uniquely Gallic one of moderation. Rebellion must remain true to its origins by insisting on limits to everything against the totalitarianism that demands all or nothing.

In any case the hold of the Absurd was broken. Or perhaps it was only accepted. The universe was indifferent, yes. But man was not. And that was the only hope. The hero of The Stranger had found the indifference of the universe pleasing because it was so like his own indifference. But Camus himself was far from indifferent. In this world of victims and victimizers, he once said, the artist must be on the side of the victim.

To some extent he managed to transcend the Absurd. Perhaps to some extent, though, it got him in the end.

opens tonight

KATY

KATY CRUEL, the long awaited University College "musical tragedy" opens tonight in Hart House.

A musical tragedy is defined by director William Davis as an art form "that attempts to bring the separate arts of drama, dance and music together in the expression of basic tragic idea".

Differing radically from the standard repertory musical productions found in the American and Canadian stage, Katy Cruel has already generated much excitement on the campus.

The show stars Nan Ackerman in the lead role of Katy Cruel. Dan is played by Don Sutherland and the "black sailorman" is played by Vernon Slater.

The choreography has been done by Bianca Rogge. Miss Rogge enjoyed a brilliant career as an interpretive dancer in Germany before coming to Canada five years ago and she has been the subject of a Varsity "Profile".

The story revolves around a wandering outcast, Katy Cruel, who shows up one day in a small east coast fishing village. The villagers have long been ruled by omens which appear to tell them when trouble is brewing or when good fortune is coming. They accept their fate without question.

Katy falls in love with Dan, the leader of the village, and the villagers are immediately suspicious of the intruder. Their suspicions are confirmed when a mysterious burning ship appears in the harbour and Dan, instead of accepting the omen leads the men out fishing.

While he is away, the mysterious "black sailorman" appears. He is a wanderer too, and Katy finds herself irresistibly drawn to him. The "black sailorman" seduces Katy.

The ships, meanwhile, are long overdue and the villagers become even more hostile to Katy whose infidelity they consider to be the cause of a violent storm.

David Helwig, the author of book and lyrics for Katy Cruel calls his show "something different for the standard repertory of any Canadian theatre and most American theatres". He feels that it is the responsibility of the university drama to serve as a training ground for the professionals of the future.

Mr. Helwig is in fourth year English language and literature and has been writing since he was seventeen. He has received a total of four "Epstein Creative Writing Awards" and has had work published by the Canadian Forum and the CBC, and written a film script for the National Film Board.

Michael Rasminsky who wrote the lyrics for the show and is directing the music for the performance based much of his score on folk music.

"However," he says, "there are hints of jazz-like melodies and harmonies, a choral fugue and at the other end of the musical spectrum, a hymn of Thanks-giving sung by the fishermen and their women after the return of the men from the ocean.

A Symphony of Modern Dance

On Monday night, Hart House Theatre was the scene of an exciting new form of dance. Curiosity was well satisfied and imagination stimulated by the purity, freshness, and compelling choreography of Erick Hawkins' Here and Now With Watchers.

This successful evening was the result of the close co-operation of five people only. The two dancers, Mr. Hawkins and his charming partner, Barbara Tucker, are to be praised especially for their completely original sense of perspective and interpretation of the dance. The choreography was composed in silence and the musical score then built around it, yet as a completely independent musical work.

Lucia Dlugoszewski, who provided a fascinating accompaniment on the piano, had as physically gruelling a part in making the evening successful as the dancers themselves. In addition to the conventional use of the keyboard, she plucked the strings like a guitar, hit them with percussion instruments, and even made sharp raps on the frame of the piano. The effects were very striking, and indeed showed that instrument to be a means of even greater variety than previously demonstrated. Composer Dlugoszewski calls this method, which extends the barrier of sound possibility, her "curtain of timbre." The dance and music thus become two theatres which perform continuously side by side, each as a complement to the other.

The modern dance technique of composing the choreography in silence allows Mr. Hawkins to create his revolutionary discovery of the purest time awareness which stems from movement alone. Thus the human body exists for the purpose of movement for its own sake unimpeded by musical superimposition. In Here and Now, the series of eight principal dances form a pattern of solos and duets which allow for a constantly changing flow of costumes, and for an hour and a half of uninterrupted "kinesthetic exploration." Thus a symphonic effect is created, each dance flowing into the other, connected by solo interludes.

This in itself is an admirable and highly original attempt. However, one felt at times that the effect on the whole was too unrelieved. A short intermission would, no doubt, have been welcomed by the artists, and the audience, having been granted the luxury of reflection, would have returned to their places with a renewed sense of anticipation and appreciation.

Each dance seems to concentrate upon a particular aspect of human emotion. Mr. Hawkins and Miss Tucker, as soloists, dance with an easy control which is refreshing and which establishes both simple and complex relationships between one part of the body and another.

When dancing in duet, the two weave intricate patterns or move in a series of rapid, repetitive and echoing gestures. The movements in which these two artists worked together were superb, and their anticipation of each other's movements, perfectly timed. One was disappointed that these interludes were not longer, as the tempo of excitement and intensity was lowered when a part of the complement was missing.

The first six dances are built on the strength of their movement alone. The audience is allowed to read into the actions connotations from their own experience. Even in the seventh dance, wherein Mr. Hawkins offers a more realistic conception of a clown, the emphasis is not upon "meaning" but upon the formal aspects of motion. On Monday, this dance was the most popular, (judging by the audience's reaction), not because it was the best, but because it offered an excuse for the relief of tension which had been accumulating during the preceding six more serious and intense dances.

The final duet is a tender expression of the love between man and woman. Here motion is seen, enhanced and modified by feeling. Colours were stripped down to the essentials of white, with significant black touches. Again, one was struck with the purity, simplicity, and easy discipline which these two dancers revealed in their technique. They do not attempt to dance like supernaturals, but frequently make poetry out of the everyday exercises of the gymnasium.

Also contributing to the overall effect of sculpture and painting were the costumes, designed by Ralph Dorazio, and the lighting, handled by Nicola Bernovich. The changing colours on the unsullied plane of the backdrop created an emotion of their own and the costumes in their simplicity kept one's attention on the great wonder of the human form in action.

in which wkr writes and wrots

sicksicksick

So-called "sick" comedians are joining fortunes from their routines and records. They have all been attacked because they "make a profit from people's misfortunes". But actually these men have all attained a new level of humor.

Their humor is not simple. It is based on the deep contrasts of life itself, or as Stephen Leacock phrased it, the contrasts "between our aspirations and our achievements". All their humor is horribly true. Sometimes they step over the line and say things which are cruel, without being funny. But on the whole, their humor is unattackable.

shelley berman

Shelley Berman is the most popular of the big three, particularly in record sales. His act is carefully thought out in advance, and he gets more laughs to the minute than either of the other two major sickniks. His most famous routine, heard by practically everyone, concerns his flying adventures. In his whole sketch, he suggests death and injury, but no one is actually hurt.

He tells of ominous gestures such as reading the instructions on the little white bag, and strapping yourself into the seat in case

Cap-de-la-Madeleine, P.Q.

The Company which has branches throughout Canada has several openings for sales trainees who after a period of training may have an opportunity to advance to the position of Branch Sales Manager or other positions of responsibility.

The three years training courses is divided as follows:

- 1) Approximately 18 months in the plant at Cap-de-la-Madeleine, Québec.
- 2) Approximately 18 months in the Sales Service Department.

A Company Representative will be at the University of Toronto on January 19, 1960, to meet graduating students in Arts or Commerce who are interested in the above offer.

the plane comes to a sudden stop—like against a mountain."

"The congested sensation is one of stark terror," he says. And we're sure that practically everyone has felt a slight twinge of fear when he has looked out a cabin window and noticed flames belching from the motors. And the little white bag isn't much fun either. Naturally Berman exaggerates for effect, but the truth is there.

There is some rather questionable material in Berman's act, but usually it comes off with laughs, and that is his idea. People can be offended and amused at the same time.

Talking about nostalgia, Berman says it gives a feeling of warmth and security "like returning to the womb, and let's face it, we all want to go back. After all, how many of us sleep in a fetal position . . . anyway I want to get off the subject because it is rather disgusting."

Often Berman plays on smaller faults and misuses. He describes the sensation of embarrassment which comes over you when "the cigarette sticks to your lips and your fingers slide down and grab the flame." This is harmless, but has sufficient cruelty and caveman style humor in it to make it screamingly funny when Berman combines injury with psychology.

lenny bruce

Lenny Bruce is a lot sicker. A comparison with Berman is helped immeasurably by the fact that they both do an airline sketch. But in Bruce's, there is death described in detail.

"I talk about a John Graham who blew up a plane with 40 people and his mother," Bruce says, "and for this the state sent him to the gas chamber, proving once and for all that Americans are losing their sense of humor."

Intramural Summary . . .

Basketball, both Minor and Major predominated the Intramural Athletic scene in the first week of competition.

In Major League play, giving the scores in chronological rather than alphabetical order as it comes pouring in on our private teletype wires, UC III defeated St. Mike's C 37-30. Fraser and Quance led the Redmen attack with 10 and nine points respectively, while Puccini hooped eight for the Irish.

Dent walloped St. Mike's D 38-17 behind a 10 point effort of Mandel. Vic III, meanwhile took the measure of Denis IV 44-16. Richardson was top man for the Scarlet and Gold with 15 points.

St. Mike's B defeated Vic II 44-34, while Sr. SPS edged Vic I 58-54. Jaworski proved the big gun for Engineers with a 15 point spree while Pashkewich hooped 10. West and Condin paced Vic with 10 points each.

MORE MAJORS

In further Major league play, SPS V squeezed past UC IV by a 30-27 margin. Schaeffer with nine points and Chisholm with six led the Skulemen while Knight and Cooke provided nine and seven points respectively in the Artsmen cause.

Pre-Med edged Trinity A 25-23, while Knox beat Wycliffe 27-23. UC II defeated Dent A 41-38 in another close one.

The game of the week saw two old rivals provide a classic. St. Mike's A defeated defending champions UC I 55-53 in a double overtime game. UC led 30-26 at half time, but the fighting Irish tied it up and went on to win in overtime. Ed Bardos sparked St. Mike's with 15 points, while Freedman was tops for Redmen with 14 points.

MINOR LEAGUES

In Minor League play, where enthusiasm and weird and wonderful team names go hand in hand, UC Beta Sigs defeated St. Mike's Nugent 49-36. St. Mike's Barfers walloped Pre-Dent A 43-10, while St. Mike's Elmsley Hall beat UC Hutton 58-21.

Med IV Year A defeated Dent III Year 30-15, and St. Mike's

Rockets defeated UC Sammls 36-21.

SPS Luniks edged Pre-Med I 24-23, while IV Electrical beat IV Metallurgical 37-22.

HOCKEY

In hockey action where play is resuming after the welcome holidays, Vic I edged Trinity A 4-3. Lumas, Graham, Bull and Doucette scored for Vic, while Eby, De Penier and Farr were the Trinity marksmen.

Jr SPS shutout Vic II 4-0. And that, thank heaven, is thirty from the huge Intramural scene.

Wrestlers Suffer Disaster

Last night the depleted ranks of Jack Amos' wrestling team were dealt another blow when last year's 147-pound Intercollegiate champion Bill Polito dislocated his left elbow. Polito was injured in a workout with teammate Roger Donner.

DOUBTFUL

A cast will have to be worn for at least two weeks. It is doubtful whether Bill will be in good enough physical condition to participate in the Intercollegiate meet to be held the third week in February at Kingston.

CCF Completes Parliament Plans

The CCF government in the Model Parliament will introduce legislation to establish public control of the Canadian economy, to assist education and the arts in Canada and to abolish nuclear weapons on Canadian soil, Prime Minister Jerry Caplan (IV UC) announced last night.

The economics bill, portions of which were printed in Wednesday's Varsity, would nationalize basic Canadian industries such as steel and coal producers.

An Economic Planning Board would "recommend to the Minister of Economic Planning large scale government investment in socially desirable areas and projects."

It would also investigate means by which the proposed nationalization of industries will be brought about.

The Arts and Education Bill calls for fewer radio and television commercials and also provides for the advancement of the national ballet, opera and theatre.

The Bill provides that funds be made available to the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. so that it will be free from advertising pressures in program selection.

It also calls for federal grants of up to $500 a student to be paid to universities which grant the student free tuition.

Another provision of the Arts and Education Bill establishes a $10,000,000 fund to provide direct scholarships and bursaries to Canadian undergraduates.

The foreign policy and defence resolution prohibits the development and storage of any nuclear weapons in Canada, abolishes any nuclear bases presently maintained in Canada and prevents the spread of nuclear weapons to countries not at present possessing them.

The resolution also calls for: —a reappraisal of Canada's justification for membership in NATO and NORAD on the grounds that any reasons for such a power force are questionable;

—the allocation of $347,000,000 by the Canadian government to the Special United Nations Fund for Economic Development of underdeveloped countries.

The foreign policy and defence resolution will be debated on the last night of the Parliament, as is provided for in the Standing Orders.

Culture Vulture Sutures Future Culture Stature

Careful distinction by Dr. A. W. T. Trueman, director of the Canada Council, led to an inclusion of both animal husbandry and cultivation of the mind in last night's Hart House debate.

Certainly, he said, both come under the definition of the word culture in the resolution: Canadian Culture Is Not Worth Preserving. However, he preferred another.

"True culture consists in an awareness of the entire world outside and inside, without it causing too much turmoil," he said.

Dr. Trueman spoke on the side of the Noes who carried the resolution 38 to 27. The speakers were: J. D. Smart (III SMC), D. L. Stein (IV UC); the Noes: W. C. Graham (III Trin), and S. Ajzenstat (IV UC).

"All those who are dissatisfied with their heritage ought to support our measure," Smart said. "Our artists are too few, their mistakes too many, and the critic too impudent."

"Even the president of this university, in an essay of two years ago, could only point out 30 important titles, going as far back as Louis Hemon, author of Maria Chapdelaine."

S. Ajzenstat, for the noes, called culture both "consumptive and productive in nature."

Far from casting aside the old masters he said, "we should accept as ours all which stimulates our future production... We cannot demand some abstractable form which we can label as Canadian."

Art or anything "which helps us see our significance as Canadians IS Canadian. We can use anyone's symbols to organize our experience."

"Not only is culture worth preserving, some students think it is worth stealing," countered D. L. Stein, IV UC. He pointed out, "We have produced a native Canadian criticism without giving them something to criticize."

"It is better to throw the potential artist to the wolves than keep him sterile in a cage on three meals a day."

Replying to criticism of a dull historical heritage, Graham said, "Books of revolt, fights and artistic battles with Chianti bottles in Montreal flats hardly seems dull to me!"

"If Canada is to continue, we must vote with the Noes, for preservation of culture is preservation of the nation itself."

"Kate" Great

David Helwig and Michael Rasminsky, with their "musical tragedy" Katy Cruel which opened in Hart House Wednesday under the direction of Bill Davis, have brought to the stage a thing of great beauty, brilliance of production, and, in short, a work of art.

Katy Cruel, let it be said, before this review turns into a eulogy and runs away into an undiscriminating limbo of superlatives, is a wonderful fusing of music drama, dance and poetry, visual and auditory effects.

If there is any possible parallel, it is (as the writers pointed out in some discreet ballyhoo in University College's paper, the Gargoyle, the day before the show opened to West Side Story, another beautiful amalgam of music, dance and drama.

But this is not really the point. What is important is that the presentation of Katy Cruel very likely represents a turning point in the history of musical production at the University of Toronto — and perhaps in Canada.

It might have been said a week ago that to try to produce a piece for the stage combining music, dance, poetry, and drama and devoid of topical appeal and humor of any kind at the University of Toronto was a fool's game. But it is not. Katy Cruel works.

Katy Cruel tells the story of a small east-coast fishing village, into which comes one day a girl wanderer, a kind of vagabond temptress, a rebel but uneasy in herself and seeking something she fears, hates and instinctively rejects. This is Katy.

Katy falls in love with one of the leading men of the God-fearing, rigidly-organized little community. When one of the fishermen sees on the ocean a "fore-runner" of ill omen, Katy exhorts her lover Dan to defy the omen, to defy, really, the narrowness of the life to which the superstitious and frightened village binds him, and lead the men to the sea. Dan does.

We have already been told of how the people hear "God in the wind" and Dan's hubris brings the expected vengeance. The fishing fleet is wiped out at sea.

Katy, the interloper and destroyer of their values, is blamed by the villagers when the fishing boats fail to return. Finally, Katy allows herself to be seduced by the leader of a band of rum-running sailors who seek shelter in the village during the storm. This seals her fate with the villagers who now utterly reject her. When Dan

Big Crowd Coming for Long Nfcus Weekend

Over 100 student delegates from 10 universities throughout Ontario, will descend on the U of T Campus this weekend for the largest regional conference of the National Federation of University Students yet held.

Mary Percival, IV UC, the conference planning chairman said that conference is "interested mainly in the students, how much education will cost and what the government will do for the students."

The purpose of the conference is to allow junior members of the NFCUS committees to attend. Previously, only students in their graduating years have attended NFCUS conferences. The regional conference will assure some continuity at next year's full-scale meeting.

The highlight of the conference will be a symposium on "Queens Park and the University: The governments responsibility to university and to the students."

Panelists for the symposium include: John Roberts, the new minister of Education for Ontario; John J. Wintermeyer, leader of the liberal opposition; Mr. Gower representing Donald Macdonald of the CCF party and NFCUS President, Jacques Gerin.

The opening plenary session of the conference will be held in the Debates Room of Hart House, Friday at 9 p.m. Jacques Gerin (U of M), NFCUS National President and Denis Halliwell will address the first meeting.

Model UN Will Debate China

Canadian and American university students will have a chance to express their opinions on the question of China's admission to the United Nations at the second University Model United Nations to be held in Montreal Feb. 3-6.

Forty-five universities have been invited to attend the meeting. UMUN officials announced last night. Among those represented will be: McGill, Loyola, West Point, Lafayette and the University of California. The University of Toronto will send eight delegates.

Cost of food accommodation and train fare for U of T delegates will be $5. SAC and the United Nations Association pay the remainder of expenses, officials said.

Application are available in the SAC office, and must be returned there by 11 a.m. Jan. 20.

Council Hears Of WUS' Work

The newly-appointed General Secretary of the World University Service of Canada Wednesday night issued a strong appeal for support of WUS by University of Toronto students.

Douglas Mayer told the Students' Administrative Council that "WUS is the one way in which Canadian students can effectively help their fellow students in foreign lands".

"And the SHARE campaign is by far the most significant feature of WUS," he added.

"We're trying to combat situations such as presently exist in India—where thousands of students have no place to sleep other than the streets, and in Japan where over ten percent of university students suffer from tuberculosis," he said.

He continued: "WUS can't even attempt to deal with such prominent evils as these. All our present budget will permit is an attack upon the most significant problems."

"If we were to implement every major project that's needed we would have an annual expenditure of $800,000 instead of the $150,000 which our present resources permit," Mayer said.

"Canada's share of the $150,000 SHARE budget for 1960 is $15,000 dollars, which is not too much to ask," he said.

"In some years this figure has been surpassed," he said, "but last year the SHARE campaign in Canada raised only $11,000—a disappointing result at best."

Mayer said that the University of Toronto is being asked to raise $3,500 this year, and asked every member of the SAC to work in achieving the 30-cent-per-student target.

The Company which has branches throughout Canada has several openings for sales trainees who after a period of training may have an opportunity to advance to the position of Branch Sales Manager or other positions of responsibility.

The three years training courses is divided as follows:

1) Approximately 18 months in the plant at Cap-de-la-Madeleine, Quebec.

2) Approximately 18 months in the Sales Service Department.

A Company Representative will be at the University of Toronto on January 19, 1960, to meet graduating students in Arts or Commerce who are interested in the above offer.

For further information, please contact the Placement Service, or Mr. R. Gaulin, Personnel Manager, Reynolds Aluminum Company of Canada Ltd., Cap-de-la-Madeleine, Quebec.

sac at a glance

Besides hearing speeches, the SAC, Wednesday night:

- heard a letter from Igor Pirukov, vice-president of the USSR student council, suggesting an exchange of information on students;
- named the week of Feb. 1-7 as International Student Week on the university campus, after a request from Friendly Relations with Overseas Students;
- elected Barbara Leamen to investigate a one-day academic symposium between staff, students and administration, which would include "something more profound" than relations between the three groups, although Miss Leamen didn't say what;
- learned the total take from the University Expansion blitz will probably be more than $50,000;
- officially named Varsity Executive Editor Mark Nichols as editor of Jargon;
- heard that the $23-cost of sending a Varsity editor to the regional CUP conference has been withheld from Varsity Editor-in-chief Sam Aizenstat's pay;
- suggested CUP isn't much use to the U of T anyway and called on Varsity editors Harvey Shepherd and Alan Walker to explain CUP and themselves to the Finance Commission;
- accepted UTDU Chairman Peter Dembski's report only after the words "at last justice triumphed in an Ontario election" had been stricken from the Model Parliament section;
- informed Music rep Ian Garratt that outside participation was permitted in the AVR "because it makes for a better show";
- accepted a Library Committee recommendation that the closed-shelf system be retained in the Wallace Room "as this system prevents thefts and keeps track of the books";
- and adjourned at 10:30 p.m. to a chorus of sighs from weary members.

Vindicate Quebec-Vic

Victoria College students decided last Tuesday night that French-Canadian separatism has not crippled Canadian progress. Actual voting in the debate was 22-19 in favor of the Opposition.

Government speaker, Mike Cross said: "The Government deplores the political separatism of Quebec—its refusal to integrate itself within the nation, becoming instead a nation within a nation, and making it impossible for the Government to make a truly national policy."

Opposition speaker John Wood, recommended separation for the other nine provinces.

"The French have contributed most to the progress of Canada in their closer achievement of a true Canadian nation—a bi-cultural unity," he said.

Other speakers were Diane Jackman (Government) and Fred Johnston (Opposition).

Challenging Engineering Opportunities

Canadian Pratt & Whitney Aircraft is a company with a continuous and successful record for over 30 years. A number of engineers is required for design and development work in the gas turbine field, and for our manufacturing, helicopter and electronic activities.

The company's facilities are located in Montreal. Because of its affiliation with the United Aircraft Corporation, the company is able to carry on its design work against an outstanding technical background created by the Pratt & Whitney, Sikorsky, Hamilton Standard and Norden Divisions of United Aircraft Corporation.

The gas turbine engineering staff is sufficiently large to undertake major projects, but not so large as to limit the breadth of assignments available to individual engineers. There are ample opportunities for professional progress in all areas.

Applications are invited from graduates whose interests lie in any of the following fields:

Design and Development
Quality Control
Production Engineering
Electronics Systems
Instrumentation
Sales and Service

A recruiting team will visit the campus on JANUARY 21 and 22

the charter martyr

The other day we printed a charter asserting the freedom of the student press. The charter was passed at the annual Canadian University Press conference largely on the recommendation of Quebec papers, who feel there is much to attack in the administrations of their universities and are generally not allowed to print such attacks.

On the one hand we are totally in sympathy with our Quebec colleagues. On the other hand we find it difficult to support them to the extent of simply affirming rights that just don't exist.

The second term of the charter states that the freedom of the student press has been abridged on a number of occasions, for instance, when material was published "which faculty or administrative authorities considered detrimental to the reputation and the welfare of the institution or some department of the institution."

We tend to think this is a perfectly good reason to suppress or abridge the freedom of the student press. The faculty or administrative authorities are in as good a position as anyone to decide what is detrimental to the institution and if they make that decision about anything in the student newspaper they are completely within their rights in suppressing it.

In a great many cases of this sort we would regard such action as over-cautious, irresponsible, and completely lacking either in intelligence or integrity. All these things we could charge. But we could not charge that the officials who took such action were not within their rights.

If the authorities abridge your freedom there are two things you can do about it; you can appeal to the intelligence of the authorities (it sometimes exists), or you can apply concrete pressure (e.g., strikes, boycotts, etc.) against those officials. If neither way works there is not much point yelling about your freedom.

And if you decide to rebel against the authorities it is not always realistic to expect those authorities to acknowledge your right to do so.

Rebels who cannot accept the consequences of rebellion would be well advised not to rebel.

returns, the lone survivor of the tempest, he fights the Black Sailor (Katy's Seducer), both are killed, and the tragedy is complete. Katy sadly makes ready to begin her wandering again.

This alone is a sturdy enough plot. It becomes a work of art through its interpretation in music and dance beautifully tied together to elucidate a full range of simple, strong emotions.

If any single performances are to be pointed to as outstanding, they are those by Anne Schofield, probably the most forceful personality on stage, and Vernon Slater, the Black Sailor.

Anne Schofield, who was almost too forceful in the first act, plays a kind of prophet of doom, a chorus figure in the shape of a hardened, bitter old woman who shouts her indictments from a little hut (the major part of the set).

As we find out later, she is an old and hardened version of Katy, in a sense, Katy's future. Vernon Slater as the Black Sailor is beautifully diabolical, sneeringly cynical, but for all this, able to give an impression of aloneness he is meant to share with Katy.

Nan Ackerman, a first-year student, plays Katy. A little weak dramatically, she sings well, especially in the sad theme, "Oh, that I were where I would be," a wanderer's song that parallels the Black Sailor's lovely "There will be no home for my pilgrim bones."

MAUREEN FORRESTER, contralto, will give an all-French recital including works by Schumann, Debussy, Poulenc, Barber, and a group of French Canadian folk songs, at the Conservatory Concert Hall this Saturday.

An Evening With The Bird

The Kildeer by James Reaney, now being produced at the Coach House Theatre, is a new Canadian play about birds. The kilderer itself is a bird and it is the central symbol of the play; it is surrounded by hummingbirds, hawks, falcons, crows, nightingales and swarms of other sweet and sinister representatives of the feather set. With this host of wings, the play never gets off the ground.

The program tells us that the play is a comedy, but the sparsely distributed humour is mostly buried under an avalanche of verbal imagery with streams of words appealing to the eyes, the ears and the nose. In attempting to poeticize, the poet-playwright forgot to tickle our skins and make us laugh. The characters are gross exaggerations of psychotics who lack any peculiar idiosyncrasies of speech or behaviour to make them comical. The stale satire of the hypocritical, gossip-hunting churchgoer, which is effective in the first part of the play, is quickly abandoned, which averts boredom, but unfortunately nothing takes its place. An infrequent witty line provides the odd chuckle.

The scene in which the hangman walks out in the middle of the trial after foreseeing that he will be unable to satisfy his sadistic craving with a victim of Canadian justice, provides a rare combination of social satire and humour of situation. Otherwise, the funniest incident of the evening occurred when Nathan Cohen abandoned the magazine he was reading during the last act, and impolitely bent over to groan silently into the palms of his hands.

As drama, the play lacks a central focus in either character, situation or theme. This disunity in the rambling plot is further emphasized by a lack of any conflict. The ever-present evil in the form of sadism, homosexuality, gruesome murder and vicious gossip manifested in the majority of characters never really clashes with the innocence of youth. Rebecca, the symbol of saccharine goodness, ends the play dancing in a circle with the epitomy of evil, Madam Fay, the promiscuous mother who has been the indirect cause of four deaths, one insanity, and a puerile, blighted son. Good and evil dance

Opposite Katy, Don Samuels as her lover does his finest work in the third act when he gives a powerful account of the storm, a half-spoken, half-sung.

Diana Ede dances with her usual skill part as one of the village wives. In her parts she is cleanly vivid and honest, one of the best of the secondary parts.

Harvey L. Shepherd, splendidly bearded, heartily attired in the rough sailors' clothes so becomes him, gives a delightful impression of a paranoid sailor who can't decide what to do about the unwed mother of his child and is fighting strong inclination to gamble his way out. He perishes at sea.

David Helwig, a fourth-year honours student at University College and Michalinsky, a graduate, who works now for the Canadian Cancer Institute, cooked up the music for Katy Cruel last summer. Helwig, the book and Rasminsky the music. Plans a meeting, along the lines of West Side Story, music, drama and dance.

With only a few faults, this is just what was needed. Bill Davies's direction gives the play a tight, clear integration. There is never a moment of dramatic propriety when spoken lines are cut into song or when the chorus takes up some dramatic scene. Above all, a lyrical quality pervades side by side with dramatic force and artistic power of the show easily overpowers attempts that might be made to find fault with it, or, more simply, a moral in the play.

Musically, the genre of Katy Cruel, as described as that of the folk song. Sea moods of American and English folk music with a hint of jazz in some of the orchestration and operatic music for some of the love scenes.

Opening night, Hart House was a little less than half full. Last night the house was better, but Katy Cruel deserves considerably more than the enthusiasm that brought authors on stage opening night.

The creators of Katy Cruel have the courage to make for the stage something that is nothing more or less than art. It has no appeal and little humor. And there is no reason to believe that Katy Cruel could be performed fully in communities across Canada as was University's My Fur Lady.

It is true, too, that Katy Cruel badly needs a larger stage for some of the scenes, particularly the dancing scenes and the exciting fight scenes. Larger orchestral accompaniment and a bigger cast would also help to do justice to the show.

But as it stands Katy Cruel mightily to be seen. We sincerely hope that enough will see it between now and Saturday to encourage the producers to extend the show, perhaps encourage outside interests to take the show off the campus into the larger Canadian theater where Katy Cruel is badly needed.

theatre

Hart House Theatre—Katy Cruel—The University College Literary Society production which has drawn plaudits from the dailies and a fairly ecstatic review from our own Mr. Nichols, who insists that anyone who misses it has missed the best college musical this university has seen in a long time, and he's right. Music by Michael Rasminsky, book and lyrics by David Helwig. Starring Nan Ackerman as Katy, supported by Don Sutherland as Dan and Vernon Slater as the black sailorman. Choreography by Bianca Rogge, directed by William Davis. Nightly to Saturday, 8:30 p.m.

York Community Theatre—The Sun in My Eyes—The premier performance of Jack Kruper's first full-length stage play. It concerns the wartime tribulations of a Jewish family beset by the Nazi occupation, stars Ronald Halliday, Stella Chadwick and Jerry Rosen. Opens Saturday, Jan. 15th, and continues to Saturday the 23rd, 8:30 p.m. nightly. The theatre is located at 49 La Plante Avenue.

Coach House Theatre—The Killdeer—Another first by Canadian poet James Reaney, in verse, in which he seems to have proven that a poet can write a better poem than he can a play. Muriel Cuttill, Frances Halpenny, Eleanor Beecroft and Ivor Jackson star. Directed by Pamela Terry. They're all members of the University Alumnae Dramatic Club, who are the producers. Wednesday to Sunday this week and next at 8:30 p.m., 200 Bedford Road.

Lansdowne Theatre—The Tunnel of Love—A Broadway-style comedy set in Suburbia, U.S.A., written by Joseph Fields and Peter de Vries, and starring Austin Willis and Jack Creley. Opened last night and continues six nights weekly at 8:30 p.m.

art

Toronto Public Library (Central)—Le Corbusier—An exhibition of drawings and models of Corbusier's excursions into architecture, town planning and anything else that caught his fancy. A grant from the Canada Council has brought this exhibit to the aesthetic hinterland of Toronto; anyone interested in art, or architecture, or planning, or sociology, or a host of other things, will enjoy the show. Until January 24th.

Hart House Gallery—An exhibition by Roly Fenwick and Hugh MacKenzie until the 18th of January. Of particular interest are the searching and sometimes troubled works of Fenwick, who is obviously gifted. Women invited Wednesday and Sunday afternoon.

Art Gallery of Toronto—Our city gallery, in an endeavour to show us what has been happening to art in Paris in the past two decades has assembled a kaleidoscope of art entitled, fittingly enough, Fifteen Painters from Paris. Continues to February 6th.

Victoria College Alumni Hall—Paintings by Jules Lebow, a resident of Hamilton; it is his first one-man show in Toronto. On view until February 5th.

music

Conservatory Concert Hall—Maureen Forrester, the brilliant young Canadian soprano, in recital on January 16. Miss Forrester is possessed of a haunting, beautiful voice and superb musicianship and this promises to be a most exciting evening.

Connaught Buys Farm For Research Animals

The Connaught Medical Research Laboratories have purchased a 300-acre farm about a mile north of Bolton.

Dr. J. K. W. Ferguson, Director of the Laboratories said the farm would be used to raise disease-free animals for use in the production and testing of vaccines, serums and other biological products for human and veterinary use. The farm has been owned by W. J. Rutherford. Purchase price was approximately $80,000.

Dr. Ferguson said existing buildings would be renovated and some barns and stables added. Livestock to be raised include horses, cattle, swine, sheep, guinea pigs and chickens.

The farm will be operated by a staff of six or seven people and will be managed by the Veterinary Department, of the Connaught Laboratories.

The purchase adds to the University of Toronto's off-campus property: the 172-acre University Survey Camp used as a training ground in surveying for engineering students; the block-long Dental Building in central Toronto; the 17,000-acre U of T Forest which provides a headquarters for field work by students in forestry, surveying and architecture; and the 179-acre David Dunlap Observatory used for advanced training and research.

Advise Tight Lips for Trips In Middle East

University of Toronto students intending to visit the Middle East were warned Tuesday night to carry two passports and keep their mouths shut.

Arthur Scace (IV Trin.) presented this advice at an E.A.C. meeting in connection with the upcoming World University Service Summer Seminar in Israel.

The meeting in the Hart House Debates Room was also addressed by U of T Professor Nathan Keyfitz formerly of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Scace, who travelled extensively through the Middle East last summer, spoke of his encounters with Arab secret police and of his detention in two Arab jails.

He warned travellers in the Arab countries not to mention their intent to visit Israel, and to carry two passports, only one with an Israeli visa.

Both Prof. Keyfitz and Scace stressed the role of the "kibbutz"—the communal agricultural farm—in modern Israeli life. The "kibbutzim" enable the immigrants to return to the land, and teach them how to do it, they said.

Prof. Keyfitz spoke of the young native-born Israelis, whom he described as "brisk, with a rough exterior, a military bearing, and a non-intellectual attitude".

"They are the product of the military mind," he said.

Three U of T students will be selected to participate in this year's WUS Summer Seminar in Israel. Applications, due by January 20th, are available at the Students' Administrative Council office.

Garratt Pledge Prompts New SAC Money Policy

Former Blue and White Chairman Ian Garratt (II Music) is unhappy again.

Buried deep in a long report by the Finance Commission at Wednesday's Students' Administrative Council meeting was a recommendation arising out of a financial commitment Garratt was alleged to have made while he was still Blue and White Chairman.

The report told of a Finance Commission meeting at which Blue and White Band Director George Arnold was present.

At a previous meeting Mr. Arnold requested honorariums of $50 each be paid to three assistant directors. Mr. Arnold said he had spoken to Garratt earlier in the year, and that Garratt had told him the honorariums were quite in order and that they would be paid by the council.

The Finance Commission recommended that "if any appropriation of Council funds are made without authorization or by an unauthorized person, that person will be held responsible for the payments".

The Finance Commission decided to pay the honorariums, but made it clear it was not setting a precedent.

Garratt said, "I don't recall promising, and I never put it down in writing anyway."

Present Blue and White Chairman Dave Tavender (IV Trn) said, "we must assume a certain amount of integrity rests in the Finance Commission".

The recommendation to hold unauthorized persons responsible for debts they may incur in the name of the SAC was carried, with no opposition and only one abstention—Ian Garratt.

Blues On Road

Play Laval And McGill

Varsity Blues embark on the first road trip of the 1960 season minus two of their veteran players. Captain John Macdonald and defenceman and vice-captain Neil Munro will not be making the trip with the team.

Macdonald was informed by a doctor that he will not be able to play for at least another three weeks, as his shoulder separation has not healed yet. He was injured in the game against Montreal, won by Blues 7-0.

SCHOOLWORK

Munro has not been practicing with the team since before Xmas, and while the reason for his absence has not been clearly stated, it is apparently due to pressure of studies. Munro has not yet said when he will return to the team.

To fill the gap left by the absence of Munro, coach Jack Kennedy has paired rookies Ian Sinclair with Harry Neale, while Jim Simpson is playing with Gord Epp.

FORWARD LINES

The forward lines remain unchanged, and Kennedy is looking to the trio of George Hicken, Dan Cherepecka, and Frank Sullivan to provide some scoring punch in support of the Roth-Murchie-Gatten line.

McGill are not expected to be too strong, their one bright spot of last year, goal, has evidently not been filled as well as last season.

INDOOR TRACK

The indoor track season got underway last night, with a heavy turnout in all the events.

The most interesting race of the meet was the senior 1000 yds, and Peter Watson (VIC-OCE) beat Jim Snider to the tape in 2:24.0, 2 seconds off the record. George Rhoden (II MEDS) and Bill Crothers (I PHARM.) followed.

Individual results were as follows:

Juniors: 50 yds: 1. O. Ashby (II MEDS), 2. B. Bestolin (I SMC), 3. Bingsance (III SMC), 4. Czoneradi (IV SPS). Time: 5.8 sec.
1000 yds: 1. Mike Turk (I PHE), 2. Ed Lathay (I UC), 3. Peter Bing (II UC), 4. J. Stewart (I VIC). Time: 2:32.0 min.
Seniors: 50 yds: 1. B. Matheson (II TRIN), 2. Beireton (I VIC), 3. Bill Crothers (I PHARM.), 4. J. Repo (II MEDS). Time: 57 sec.
1000 yds: 1. Peter Watson (VIC-OCE), 2. Jim Snider (II VIC), 3. George Rhoden (II MEDS), 4. Bill Crothers (I PHARM.). Time: 2:24.0.
Team standings: VIC: 12, U.C. 10, Meds: 8 1/2, Trinity: 5, SMC: 4 1/2.

ACTION at Hart House as UC II play SPS Jrs. SPS won 41-23 as McElroy scored 23 points. MacKenzie scored 13 for the UC Redmen.

Hoopsters Play At MacMaster

The University of Toronto Blues will play in Hamilton against McMaster University on Saturday night in their second game of the young intercollegiate basketball season.

The Blues dropped their first game to the Western Mustangs last Friday night at Hart House.

Assumption was the first competition that McMaster ran up against and they were easily brushed aside by the defending champions 88-64. On Wednesday night the Hamilton team lost their second game to Western by a score of 81-60.

The big gun returning for Mac is Doug Marshall a four year veteran who not only has the height (6' 4") but also the scoring knack (last year he broke Russ Jackson's scoring of 453 points).

Bob Raphael is the other tall man for their team and at guard Mike Schertzer is the most dangerous.

FULL STRENGTH

An ex-Varsity player Bill Huyke, well known in Toronto basketball circles is the coach of the Marauders.

The Blues will be almost at full strength in Hamilton with only the medical eligibility of Walt Lipke a question. The team returned from Buffalo yesterday having been handed a 82-52 loss by the University of Buffalo.

Jim McGuire, Peter Potter, the captain, and Mike Muir are all expected to do well for Toronto.

An interesting aspect of the league this year is the way in which the league is set up.

ODD SCHEDULE

McGill is the only team which is not playing the full 10 games of the schedule. They are playing an abbreviated one in which they meet only Queens, Toronto and McMaster. If their percentage record of wins and losses is equal to either the first or second place teams in the final standing then they have the right to play off with the second place team, unless one of these two teams is one which they have already met. If this is the case then they lose their playoff right.

Just Notes . . . One of the most important things bothering the Blues right now is whether or not the services of George Howard Spanetz Junior, their ace trainer, will be able to get free of previous commitments to go to the game . . . the other factor is whether there is room for him to go down with the team . . .

comment

by gene glisky

Columns are a magnificent piece of equipment. They are the ultimate, the end, of every aspiring young writer. They are the end for perspiring old writers.

For the majority of the myriad of topics that columns cover, their writers have little or no work to do. There is no news for the newsgod (or is it newsgod) to dig up, and if you happen to be the short on muscle, long on knowledge sports-writer type of columnist, no statistics or individual performance to tabulate. Grab a coach in the corner after the game, harry a tired athlete in the dressing room, or even take a quick peek at the actual contest through the bottom of a rum bottle and whoopee!, you've got yourself a column.

Then, if you happen to be an intellectually inclined expounder of profound truths, there is always platonic love, horny records (with lots of trumpets), leotards, lynchings, sex (of the three letters and a million symbols), chastity vs socialism, religion vs socialism, everybody vs socialism and many other similar devastatingly topical subjects.

Think of the fun in choosing a cut-line. How about these: NUTS, SCREWS AND BOLTS, or IN WHICH GSKY GUSHES, or L'AMOUR dans la SEWER, by GeeGee, or even PRAVDA IS THE TRUTH — says Eugenie Petrovitch. Like class man, enough to send one palpitating.

To be absolutely frank however, we (we being me) have always secretly wished to obtain a column in the DAMN page (that means Drama, Art, Music, and Nothing, madame). Think of the power one wields. Imagine being able to make or break performers like Elvis Presley or Brigitte Bardot (break Elvis, make Brigitte, like).

Of course, since the time we (same fella) traded our (it was all mine actually) violin in on a broken hockey stick and an autographed picture of Syl Apps, we haven't set foot on a stage, but then surely Blues won't mind if we practice on them for a while.

Under pain of being called a square, one must remember never to show appreciation for the show. The opening gambit should read something like this.

"The opening cadenza was a flop. The trio of Jim Murchie, John Gatten, and Li'l Bar Roth left much to be desired. Supported by the entire chorus of the Michigan Wolverines, it turned out to be a howl. We feel that Murchie's solo could have been improved if he had worn his teeth."

Then one must go on immediately to show that the costumes can't fool you.

"The costumes designed by Howie Ringham rather drab. The kick line of Harry Neale and Neil Munro gave a pleasant treatment to rather mild choreography, but we distinctly saw black tape wrapped about Harry's pads while Munro's skate laces did not match.

Hiring an inexperienced choreographer like Jack Kennedy proved a mistake. It is feared that at least once, all the lines crossed the blue-line out of step. At any rate, producer Warren Stevens may have given my uncle and his twelve relations better complimentary tickets.

And next week, gentle readers, we have an exciting book review for you. It is an autobiography entitled, "Don't give the Hockey Stick to Grandma—She's too Old to Score." It is the heartrending story of a young girl who turned pro at sixteen and was never reinstated to amateur standing by the CAHA until she turned 65.

Who says it's easy to write to write a column.

Girls Hockey Gets Started

Winter has officially arrived! The girls' hockey teams have hit the ice (in more ways than one) and the following are the results:

In the top league Vic I still seems to be the team to beat, although they didn't seem as impressive as in former years in their 4-0 victory over POT I.

POT I bounced back from that defeat to take a 1-0 win over St. Hilda I. The dark horse in the league are the PHE girls who have yet to play a game.

FIRST GOAL

The team which has shown to best advantage in League II is that representing St. Mike I. These girls shut out the Vic II team 2-0. Scorers were Kathy Bourke and Lynn Murray.

In another League II game, Nursing tied UC 1-1. The goal for UC which was their first in two years was scored by Wendy Hunt. The Florence Nightingale who put the puck in the net for the nurses was Ellie Phipps.

OTHER LEAGUES

Down in the depths of League III, the dark horse seems to have seen the light. It looked as if the pill pushers from Pharmacy had swallowed a bottle of their own vitamins as they white-washed St. Mike's B 3-0, after being held to a 0-0 tie with Meds in their opening game.

The three goals scored by the future Pharmacists in their game against St. Mike's, tripled their total output of last season. The scorers were Pat Stutt (2) and Ann Drimie.

In other League III games, Meds repeated their 0-0 draw. This time their opponents were St. Hilda II. Finally, there was the highest scoring game of the season. In it, St. Mike's II defeated POT II 4-3. Betty Lou Upton, Mary Curran, Ruth Kukta and Pat Mallon scored for the winners while the leading scorer for the losers was Susan Batty with two goals.

Prof Here Heads Prairie University

A University of Toronto professor has been appointed the first principal of the new University of Alberta in Calgary.

Dr. Walter H. Johns, president of the University of Alberta, announced last night that Dr. Malcolm G. Taylor, associate professor of political economy, will leave the University of Toronto April 1 to take up his new position.

Dr. Taylor will also have the status of vice-president of the parent University of Alberta in Edmonton.

The Calgary campus was formerly a part of the Edmonton University but has now become a separate university.

University of Toronto President, Dr. Claude Bissell last night said he was "sorry to lose such a distinguished scholar and associate."

"We take pride, however, in Dr. Taylor's election to this high office," Dr. Bissell said. "He is the second member of our staff to become the head, during this academic year, of a Canadian institution of higher education."

"This is a vivid illustration of the way in which the University of Toronto is contributing to the development of higher education in Canada," he added. Dr. Bissell was referring to the appointment of Dr. Murray G. Ross as president of York University.

Dean Vincent W. Bladen of the Faculty of Arts said, "Malcolm Taylor has been for nine years a most valuable member of the Department of Political Economy, particularly for his work in Public Administration."

Dr. Bladen added, "We lose much in Professor Taylor's move to Calgary; but Alberta, and indeed Canada, will gain more than we lose."

Dr. Taylor received a BA in Political Science in 1942 and his MA a year later at the University of California.

After working in industrial relations for two years, Dr. Taylor returned to the University of California with fellowships in political science. He was awarded a PhD in International Relations and Public Administration in 1949.

Dr. Taylor has served with the Health Services Planning Commission of Saskatchewan and was director of the Saskatchewan Health Survey. He has played an important part in the development of provincial hospital insurance plans in Ontario, Manitoba, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Dr. Taylor came to the University of Toronto in 1951 and received a leave of absence in 1952 to study health insurance throughout Canada on a Rockefeller award.

Ontario Politicians Address Regional Nfcus Conference

Student delegates from campuses across Ontario flocked to the University of Toronto this weekend for the annual regional conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

Highlight of the three-day-long session was a symposium staged in Trinity Convocation Hall Saturday afternoon.

Speakers at the symposium on "Queen's Park and the University," were the new Ontario Minister of Education, Honorable John Robarts, Ontario Liberal Leader John Wintermeyer, Mr. Gower Markle representing CCF leader Donald Macdonald, and Jacques Gerin, Nfcus National President.

Mr. Gerin said at the moment universities in Canada have never had it so good and "yet they are facing a crisis."

"Only 8.2 per cent of our population is in university. The country is moving toward intellectual bankruptcy," he said.

"Much of the potential university talent in the ten provinces is going to waste. Education is the privilege of the wealthy, not the gifted," he added.

Mr. Markle told the delegates he was "very glad to be at U of T since the CCF has taken over." Two weeks ago U of T students voted the campus CCF party into power for the Model Parliament which swings into action this week.

He said the education policy of the Ontario government has been rather "weak and timid in the past," but added "now that the province has a new minister in the education slot we can hope for better things."

One delegate asked Wintermeyer if a loan from the Ontario government was in the planning to help students pay their income tax.

The Liberal leader jokingly suggested students approach the Federal government in Ottawa and ask or petition for abolition of income tax.

Mr. Wintermeyer said legislation should be enacted to lower university fees and keep them on a level with the earning power of the student during his summer holidays.

Mr. Robarts said at the present the Ontario government is "paying 26 per cent of the cost of university education."

"And I don't think any province in Canada can match that figure," he added.

Most of the delegates hit Toronto by train late Friday afternoon and were hustled to U of T where they checked in at Hart House.

That night the first plenary session of the conference was launched and the visiting delegates were officially welcomed.

Assumption University representatives were greeted at their first regional conference. They joined Nfcus last year.

At the same plenary session delegates also sent telegram to Murray Ross, President of the proposed York University. Purpose of the message was official Nfcus recognition of U of T's sister university.

Saturday morning the conference split into committees to discuss Nfcus national, international and financial affairs. Here delegates thrashed out problems concerning Canadian university life. Committee suggestions and ideas were later submitted to the final plenary session on Sunday.

One of the committees accepted a U of O suggestion that an information service be set up by each Nfcus university committee to explain the purpose of Nfcus.

SHARE Program With Difference

By KAY McCOOK

A share campaign with a difference will run on campus next week, Jan. 25-29.

The "difference" is that the emphasis of the 1960 drive is on education as well as money. The University of Toronto is scheduled to give $3,500 to the World University Service for material aid to students in eight foreign countries.

Share campaign Chairman Doug Ward (III Trin) said last night: "We would like to think that students will find out what WUS is instead of giving blindly and disregarding the campaign."

In an effort to inform U of T students of the needs of their fellows in underprivileged countries, the U of T WUS Committee has distributed 7,000 pamphlets explaining the aims and projects of the world-wide organization. In keeping with this year's policy of stressing education, there will be few gimmicks to publicize the campaign, Ward said. However, during the week of the drive, Trinity College will hold its traditional money-raising auction in the Buttery, and SMC may present a fashion show sometime after the campaign ends.

Most of the drive will be conducted on a personal basis. Day students will be contacted by phone, and residence students will be canvassed door-to-door by college and faculty canvassers, Ward said.

SPS made more than $700 in a combined United Appeal-SHARE charity appeal in November. This sum was used immediately to aid victims of floods in the Far East.

Contributions from Canadian universities are expected to add up to about $15,000. The total needed to adequately finance projects in the eight countries listed to benefit from Canadian funds is $25,000. A dollar from every student on this campus would assure the campaign of meeting its second goal.

. . . Recovery

AGE-OLD TALMUDIC traditions and the secular forces of 20th-century technology present unique problems and challenges to the young state of Israel. Delegates to the World University Service Summer Seminar this year will examine this conflict during a 43-day stay in and around Jerusalem. Three University of Toronto students will participate in the Seminar. Applications are available in the SAC office, and must be returned to the WUS National Office, 22 Willcocks Street, by January 20th. Theme of the Seminar will be "Israel — Drama of Return and Reconstruction."

Nfcus Moving To Help Algerians To University

The National Federation of Canadian University Students has set in motion a campaign to raise money for scholarships in Canada for Algerian university students unable to study in their homeland because of political strife there.

Nfcus president Jaques Gerin last week said there are no political implications in supporting the students. "It is an act of solidarity among students."

"The Federation hopes that Canadian students' councils will raise as many scholarships as possible to allow Algerian students to study in Canada," he said.

Among supporters of the campaign is the Canadian University Press who passed a motion of support at a Quebec City conference.

Scholarships will be awarded by the General Union of Algerian Moslem Students. The money raised by the president of the Algerian Union, Messaoud Ait Chalaal will pay for both transportation from North Africa and tuition fees.

Nfcus inaugurated the campaign to raise scholarships at an Ottawa conference early this year. The campaign is part of an official one conducted by the International Student Conference, of which Nfcus is a member.

"It is simply a case of one student union helping another," Gerin said.

Accommodation is a major problem of the plan and a committee of university students has been formed to investigate it.

A member of the faculty at the University of Ottawa has indicated that he is interested in offering accommodation for one student.

A motion was passed at the last Nfcus conference to set up a "symbolic scholarship" for one Algerian student. Plans for the campaign followed this motion.

Mr. Chalaal said there are 250 students in Morocco, and 750 in Tunisia studying in refugee camps. Another 500 are scattered in universities throughout Europe.

About 130 scholarships have been granted by the East German government for study in Eastern European countries. The United States has granted 23 scholarships, 17 of which are from the United States National Student Association. Some students have already commenced studies there.

Feature Champ At Ice Frolics

Former Canadian Senior Men's Skating Champion, Charles Snelling (II Meds) will headline the Blue and White Ice Frolics, the ice show which replaces the University of Toronto Winter carnival, Frolics officials said last night.

Chuck Weir (III Vic) star of the 1959 edition of Skule Nite will be master of ceremonies for the one-night show on Feb. 5, in Varsity Arena.

The traditional Varsity Students' Administration Council game will be another feature of the Frolics.

Other attractions will be the 18-girl chorus line, a dance number, comedy and novelty races, and the University of Toronto cheerleaders—who will be skating in the opening number.

U of T's Miss Varsity, Marjorie Chapman (III Vic) will present cups to the winning teams in the competitive races.

Tickets will be on sale until Feb. 5 in the SAC office, or can be obtained from Blue and White faculty members for 50 cents.

Temporalist Philosopher Will Address UN Club

Professor Bruno Morawetz who left the University of Toronto last fall for a farm near Peterborough to contemplate and propagate his "temporalist" political theories will return to the U of T campus to deliver a lecture Jan. 20.

He was invited to deliver the talk by the campus United Nations Club.

In a letter to UN Club president Bill Ede, Prof. Morawetz last week said his lecture would be entitled "David and Goliath". He said he would urge youth—David—to "use original weapons in combatting overgrown concepts that exist"—Goliath.

Last year, after announcing his intention to leave the university, Prof. Morawetz made a number of speeches and published a booklet expounding his political system, "Temporalism".

The system, Prof. Morawetz said, was designed to do away with national boundaries which he believed were responsible for many of the world's conflicts and hardships.

A feature of the system is that, for purposes of government, the world's population would be divided up, not by geographical boundaries as is now the case, but according to date of birth.

WUS Is Planning Annual Weekend

The role of the university in international affairs will be the topic of the annual World University Service Caledon Weekend, Feb. 5-7, WUS officials announced last night.

Entitled "The Meeting of East and West", the conference will examine the value of exchange and technical assistance programs, as well as philosophical, social, political and economic aspects of university participation in international affairs.

Dr. John Hastings, a Public Health official, Dr. Morton Smith of the Dept. of East Asiatic Studies, and Robin Ross, U of T registrar, will lead the discussions. Mr. Ross replaces Prof. Ron Cohen, previously scheduled to speak at the conference who is unable to attend because of illness.

Jane Watson (III Trin), chairman of the WUS seminar, said, "Up to now, three times more overseas students have applied than Canadian students". Applications will be accepted up to Jan. 25, and "we would prefer to have 20 overseas and 20 Canadian students at the Conference," she said.

Nothing Like A Hot Ol' Constitutional Battle

EDMONTON, Jan. 7 (CUP) — Questioning of the authority of the University of Alberta student-faculty committee has led the students' council to present the university with a draft for the committee's first constitution since its inauguration in 1911.

The committee must ratify changes in student bylaws, and approve major student undertakings. Prior to this year, there was little complaint about the actions of the committee, which meets once in the fall, and once in the spring.

However, during the last session, a question arose as to the authority of certain rulings handed down by A. A. Ryan university provost and committee secretary. One of these rulings—which the secretary finally reversed—said, the student paper, The Gateway, should not be allowed to give a full report of committee proceedings.

Another contentious ruling concerned the committee's area of jurisdiction.

Two of the features of the draft constitution are a provision guaranteeing full newspaper coverage and an outline of the committee's jurisdictional sphere.

The draft constitution asks no major changes in the committee membership which is evenly split between student and administrative personnel. Nor does it materially reduce or expand the duties which the committee now performs.

There has been no indication what reception the draft constitution will receive from the university administration.

If you die this afternoon, you will probably be embalmed before burial. Few people know what is involved in embalming, and I feel if more were aware of exactly what happens when a human body is prepared for burial, there would be more serious thought given to other kinds of burial preparation such as cremation.

In ancient times the idea behind embalming was to keep the body preserved in a life-like state so it could enjoy fully the benefits of the after-life. Today this lingering desire, often subconscious, still remains. So A. O. Spriggs says, in his textbook on embalming, "the fixing of the features is one of the most important parts of the preparation."

Frequently it is necessary to fill out the cheeks. This is done with cotton or plastic surgery wax. The wax is placed in the cheeks in the form of small rolls, and then pressure from outside permits the wax to assume any desired shape.

The mouth is usually closed by tying the upper teeth to the lower ones. If the dead person, because of age, has no teeth, the mouth can be kept closed by tying thread through the lower jaw and the septum of the nose. This latter operation is carried out with a "large, strong half-curved needle." Or a bone drill can be used to make holes in the lower and upper jaws. Instead of drilling holes, a metal tack with a wire attached can be driven into the bone by a "needle injector."

In any case, the jaws get closed by one forcible method or another. Then come the lips. They are cross-stitched and padded with wax. Cotton is placed under the eyelids to help them stay shut. Massage cream is applied which will hold the lids together "until chemical reaction is sufficient to do so, and it will also tend to prevent drying and browning the edges of the eyelids." Finally the whole face is covered with a layer of massage cream which will "keep the skin velvety and form a splendid base for cosmetic applications."

The actual embalming is accomplished by opening one main artery and one main vein. Embalming solution, containing formaldehyde, salts, dyes, glycerine and preservative solution, is pumped into the artery. It penetrates almost every tissue cell in the body, and the blood it replaces flows out the vein. Any main blood vessels can be used, but the neck arteries and veins usually being preferred. Draining tubes are placed in the open ends of the vessels. For a normal adult, about four gallons of embalming solution are required.

There is one problem I have not mentioned. When the body dies, the bacilli in the intestines do not die. The embalming fluid doesn't kill them when it is injected through the circulatory system. A large hollow needle called a "trocar" is used to inject a powerful and penetrating disinfectant into the trunk cavity and organs. If this were not done, the living organisms within the dead body would continue to form enzymes which would eventually result in the usual signs of decomposition. Without cavity treatment, the body would not give out any disagreeable odors for a couple of days, but the Spriggs text tells us embalmers have a moral obligation to the "people we serve" to carry out the cavity treatment. So you can be fairly sure your body will go underground with at least half a dozen trocar holes in it, sewn up with thread.

There is a fascinating section on the posing of the children's bodies in the coffin which I quote: "One of the most effective lay-outs that I have ever seen was that of the body of a six-year-old child lying on the right side with the right hand under the cheek, and the left elbow bent so that the left forearm lay across the front of the body. It was a natural posture of a tired child in natural restful slumber. Children's funerals offer the finest possibilities for excellent work and nothing should be left undone in the work of preparation."

Another writer gives this as a reason for complete embalming of children, even though it is not necessary or even if the parents cannot afford it: "this practice will furnish the progressive funeral director an excellent opportunity to increase his prestige among his clientele. Numerous cases are recalled where this treatment has earned the gratitude of the bereaved families, and this is particularly true in cases where the mother survived but a few days. It made it possible to place the baby's body in the mother's arms in the casket."

Always the stress is placed on the naturalness of the embalmed body. Embalmers strive above all for the comments of those present in the funeral home in which they say, "my, doesn't he look life-like," or "he's just as he was in life" (a horrible idea, actually,) or the worst of all, "he looks as if he could stand up and speak to me." As long as the embalmers help relatives delude themselves, people will still be embalmed. But the first reason for treatment of a dead body is a sanitary one. Until society has learned to break its ties with the ancient religions which stressed that the soul, after passing through various stages, would return and inhabit the body, we shall continue to have embalming.

No matter how scientific or advanced embalming is, it is still a brutal business. Eventually perhaps society will accept cremation to destroy its corpses, as they must be destroyed. The only good reason for embalming a corpse is to satisfy relatives' wish to have a mental image of their dear departed one before he is placed beneath the ground to rot in peace. Unfortunately in our world there isn't room for such sentimentality.

Agnostic Weekend

An Agnostic Weekend sponsored by the Student Christian Movement will have Mavor Moore as speaker, officials announced last night.

A noted theatre personality and Toronto columnist, Mr. Moore will present the case for the agnostic. Dr. Gordon Watson, assistant professor of religious knowledge at Trinity College will take the side of the Christian in a panel discussion.

The meeting will be held Jan. 22-24 in the Presbyterian church farm in the Caledon Hills.

Mr. Moore and Dr. Watson will present their views, and then there will be discussion and free time.

Twenty-four applications will be accepted.

The music of Katy Cruel, the smash hit presented last week by University College in Hart House, will soon be available on a long-playing record.

Application forms for the $4 recording will be available in the University College rotunda Tuesday

preamble

The editorial directly below this one contradicts another editorial that appeared in this column on Friday last week.

We hope it does not offend those who expect editorial consistency from this paper.

Since The Varsity represents or should represent no vested interests there is room for disagreement even in this column which is open to any member of The Varsity masthead.

Uninitialed editorials are written by the editor. Other masthead members initial their editorials.

We may be confusing but you can't say we're not democratic.

... document

The delegates who drew up the Canadian University Press charter last month were not simply asking for uncalled-for freedoms for themselves.

Judging by the editorial in Friday's Varsity, they did not completely succeed in making this clear.

In making some attempt to clarify the document, one might do well to begin with the section Friday's editorial picked out to criticize—the second article, enumerating some of the ways student freedom has been abridged.

It is not an attempt to censure anybody for anything. The delegates did not enumerate specific incidents where specific groups have, in the past, abridged press freedoms in these ways; they are not particularly interested.

But "abridgement of freedom" is a vague term. They did feel it necessary to set down clearly the forms this abridgment usually takes.

The fact that these things have happened were, to the delegates, significant only because of the necessary implication that they could happen again.

They hoped not; they are not looking for a fight.

They only wanted to make very clear to everyone what they wanted.

They felt that if they did that, and if they made it clear why they want it and under what conditions, fights would not be necessary.

The why is because of the student press's responsibility—responsibility here meaning role or mission.

"Freedom of expression, and debate by means of a free and vigorous press is essential to the effectiveness of an educational community in a democratic society," the charter said. The delegates believed that.

The conditions under which they expect freedoms are also those of responsibility—using the word in the another sense.

Throughout the list of abridgments of freedom, the charter speaks of the suppression of "matters" (not matter), "issues", "opinions" and similar terms. The delegates did not, in other words, ask the freedom to print insincerity and smut.

The only place the utterly general term "material" is used, the reference is to confiscation of papers—a tactic which deprives the editor of responsibility for what he prints in a way that other tactics do not.

The charter does not yell about freedoms, it—as Friday's editorial put it—appeals to the intelligence of the authorities. It tries to say why the delegates believed that it is essential in an academic community that a responsible press should be free. HLS.

Ten years ago James Reaney was a young graduate student at the University of Toronto. Today he is one of Canada's leading poets and perhaps her most prolific literary figure. He is the only Canadian to receive two Governor-General's Awards for his first two books. He is a man of surprises and no one is ever certain exactly what to expect next from Reaney.

Mr. Reaney is thirty-four but he hardly shows his age. His closely-cropped hair and his red cookie-duster moustache give the impression that you are seeing a young British military commander, but his clear blue eyes and ready smile quickly dispell the comparison.

Interviewing Reaney is an easy and pleasant task. Before meeting him I made a quick list of his many activities on the Canadian literary scene during the last half year. This list disregarded the fact that he was an Assistant Professor of English at the University of Manitoba and the father of a family of three.

Reaney has written a number of interesting poetry reviews for The Canadian Forum; he has had two poems published in the prestigious Poetry (Chicago), along with a longish article on the tone of contemporary Canadian poetry; he has appeared, with one poem, in the recent The Varsity Chapbook; he is represented with a poem in Recent Canadian Verse, edited for the Queen's Quarterly by Trinity's Milton Wilson; he is the author of a libretto for "Night-Blooming Cereus", an opera scored by John Beckwith which has been previewed by CBC Wednesday Night and The Canadian Forum; in addition he has published a long and original article on the symbolism of Isabella Valancey Crawford in the latest series of Our Living Tradition.

Reaney is presently handsetting the first issue of his own literary magazine, Alphabet, which will contain fifty pages of prose and poetry. Finally he has just completed a play, The Killdeer, which was premiered by The Coach House Theatre last week.

James Reaney was born on September 1, 1926, on a farm three miles outside of Stratford, near the town of Shakespeare. I hardly need add that his home town was Stratford, Ontario, not Stratford, England. His one grandmother was of German descent, but the name and nature of the Reaney family is more closely related to their Protestant North Irish ancestors.

Farm life stimulated the imagination of young Reaney. In a recent essay he tells how he used to imagine that the promised land of the Bible was just over the next hill. His first book of poems is full of this barnyard world of grandmothers, animals and relatives, plus Shakespeare, of course.

When I attended Waterloo College in 1955, I was surprised to discover that there were a lot of legends and rumours circulating about this young homebody who had become a Canadian celebrity. The only one which Reaney will admit to be true is the tradition that his high school marks, when he attended the Stratford Collegiate Institute, were extremely erratic. "I did all right in English and the languages," he explained, "but in Chemistry and Physics I didn't have a clue, and still don't."

In any case Reaney managed to graduate, and at the adventurous age of eighteen he headed for the big city of Toronto. He immediately enrolled in University College but to this day he is not quite certain why it was not Victoria College. "It would have caused less friction at home," he said, "but University College was well-known for its fine English instructors." The course he chose was English Language and Literature. "At that time I did not realize what a fine course Eng. Lang. & Lit. was, but now I see it was the right choice."

At University College he met Colleen Thibaudeau, whom he was later to marry. Around UC at the time, some of them living in the men's residence at 73 St. George Street, were a number of young writers, just entering or leaving university, who were later to become influential. These included Hugh Kenner, the American critic; Robert Weaver, the short-story editor and CBC producer; Michael Hornyansky, the undisputed genius of the group, who still brushes shoulders with literature in Montreal; and Paul Arthur who, along with his wife, would shortly edit a short-lived literary magazine and then turn to a typographical career in Ottawa.

In those days The Undergrad and The Varsity were publishing literature, and they were alive with literary competitions. Reaney recalls that he was, until his third year, not "professional" enough to appear between their covers or to win their awards. Up to this time he had written only a few poems and these had never been published. He did not see himself as a future literary figure mostly because he had not as yet seen any future for himself.

During his first summer vacation he served a compulsory stint with the C.O.T.C. — he winces to this day at the psychological scars — and in his second year he briefly registered in the Department of Classics. Professor Norwood of the Department convinced him after two weeks that he should register back into English, which he did, but "only because Wuthering Heights and Creative Writing were options in the course."

Most of his second year was spent in "aimless writing and dreaming." He had discovered, however, the work of John Sutherland, the Montreal poet and editor of Northern Review and First Statement. This comprised his first contact with the Canadian literary scene. Later he met Raymond Souster who edited Contact and Louis Dudek of CIV'n fame. He never did meet Allan Crowley, the blind editor of Contemporary Verse, although some of his poems were to appear in Crowley's magazine.

In a sense, the young clique of writers at University College was to form the only link between the Canadian James Reaney's first play "The Killdeer" which was premiered last Wednesday at the Coach House Theatre, 200 Bedford Road, will continue from January 20 to 24.

Reaney, who is on the English staff at the University of Manitoba, has twice won the Governor-General's award for poetry, last for his long poem, A Suit of Nettles. He has also collaborated on an opera for CBC with composer John Beckwith, who has written incidental music for this production of The Killdeer.

Pamela Terry directs the University of Manitoba Club production; heading the cast are Muriel Cuttall, Jayne Ford, Frances Hays, Don Bryn, Robert Huber and Ivor Jackson. The club urges people to make their reservations in advance since the seating capacity is limited. For reservations call or write Mary Smart, 71 Howland Ave., WA 2-6111.

poetry of the early forties — social minded to that of forsaking Eliot for Pound — and the new poetry of the middle fifties. With the folding of Contact Verse and Northern Review the only representative academic writers were publishing under the name of Contact Press and in Souster's new magazine, Northern. The academics had to await the form of Tamarack Review by Robert Weaver and others.

Regardless of the literary ferment of the forties, Reaney complains that his college days were a lack of direction is still a problem which we, although now only indirectly. He saw a number of contemporaries extend the aimlessness of their years into their adult life, with disastrous results. Studies did not greatly suffer as a result, although he claims that his random and "intuitive" poetic sensibility "leading them to pot." Fame, or notoriety, however, was just around the corner.

Up to his third year Reaney considered himself anything, a prose writer and not a poet. His first story was published in The Undergrad and later in Liberty Magazine. The repercussions of The Undergrad are still being heard and they elicit chuckles to this day. His highly coloured story describes a picnic where all the young couples invited bring along a picnic food. One young lady presents her beau with a born foetus.

Reaney had moved out of residence at the end of his second year. "The atmosphere at 73 St. George Street was too stifling to endure any longer," so he moved to 70 Grenville Street, which was then the office of the British-Israel Press. "It was an arty-art special establishment," he said. "Paul and Colleen lived in the basement and they had plans to start a magazine from there. The proprietor operated from the main floor, and two psychic old ladies lived on the second floor were forever trying to get us into their rooms. I had a small room on the floor which had no lock on the door. A day lived on the top floor and was continually being used by my room for his in the wee hours of the night. The atmosphere was altogether fantastic — for words."

This was Reaney's return address for the next year. He was busy sending his rapidly accumulating verse to the Canadian Forum and The Canadian Poetry Magazine, which, in those days, was in better hands. The editors at University College he found to be most helpful, but as an undergraduate it was in Professor Norwood's long rambling lectures, in particular, that something "mysterious", something "akin to magic" influenced his early writing.

At about the time of Reaney's graduation

Antichrist As A Child

by John Robert Colombo

the most exciting event since the publication of Among the Millet appeared on the Canadian literary scene. Here and Now, the first magazine to stress typography as well as literature, rolled off the presses. Edited by Paul and Cathy Arthur, Here and Now was a large, fantastically-lush, expensively-produced, two-colour "little magazine" which featured just about everybody who was anybody at the time.

Reaney was a frequent contributor to Here and Now, and he appears about six times in its five issues, before it was plunged into debt. It was here that Reaney published the opening chapters of his fantastically-conceived autobiography. The rest of the work, although reportedly completed, was never published because in the same year Truman Capote published his Other Voices, Other Rooms.

The subject of Reaney's M.A. thesis in 1949 was Ivy Compton-Burnett whose prose style had always intrigued him. Before the appearance of his first book of collected poems, he accepted a position as lecturer in the Department of English at Manitoba and, as one notice reads, he was to teach there "English and Creative Writing." I asked him how successfully he could teach creative writing. His reply was characteristic: "The creative writing arrangement was just a lure; actually all it amounted to was an additional course. There was hardly anyone to work with at Manitoba anyway."

After moving to Manitoba, Reaney's first book The Red Heart appeared. It is a collection of 42 poems, original both in form and content. They are undeniably marked with Reaney's stamp of almost hysterically overwrought imagination. In one poem a child finds a dead crow's body with two little doors which do not lead to a kitchen but to an epiphany. In another, Antichrist as a Child, the poet wonders why his feet are becoming hooves and why he dreams of eclipses and upside-down churches.

There is also irony and social criticism in The Red Heart. The visit of the king and queen to Stratford is a chance to remember to the poet's "dying day" the image of the train engineer who did not even slow down. The Orphanage and Grand Bend and Dream within Dream are other vivid poems revolving around similar themes. Five hundred copies of this book were sold out quickly by McClelland & Stewart. Today it is rumoured that a copy will bring twenty dollars on the used book mart.

Robert Weaver tells the story that when he used to type out Reaney's manuscripts, he once noted an earlier version of a recent poem. He thought the earlier one was better than the recent one, so he typed that out too and returned them both to the poet. Reaney is said to have replied: "If you think the earlier one is better, which of these do you think is best?" And with that he threw down five previous versions of the same poem!

I asked Reaney if there was any truth in this. "It sounds so good," he replied, "why don't you say we accept it!" Actually Weaver did have a point. A number of the earlier versions were preserved in The Undergrad. The important poem Antichrist as a Child is written in the first-person in the university publication but third-person in The Red Heart, with a noticeable lessening of the effect. In editing The Red Heart Reaney wished for nothing less than complete clarity. "I wanted my friends in Stratford to understand it. Now I don't give a damn."

In 1952 Reaney married Colleen Thibodeau and, by saving his dimes and quarters, he was able in 1957 to return to the Graduate School at Toronto. All the while he was at Manitoba he realized that he had graduated from the University of Toronto but that in the process he had missed something vitally important. He had studied with the "historical boys" at University College — and he still shudders at the name A. S. P. Woodhouse — but he had not met Professor Northrop Frye. In 1947 Frye's Fearful Symmetry had appeared and it was followed by numerous influential articles. These culminated in 1957 with the publication of Anatomy of Criticism.

Without going into any more detail, it is safe to say that Reaney saw in this new "archetypal" criticism a stimulus to the imagination which had only been suggested by previous literary theories, including Eliot's. Consequently when Reaney worked under Frye on his thesis, The Influence of Spencer on Yeats, he gained more than a degree.

I asked Reaney why he felt it was necessary to pursue a PhD degree. His reasons were clearly defined; he had thought about it a great deal. "What you are going to do for a living has always been an important question as far as I am concerned. When you teach at a university without a doctorate you are always forced to question yourself: what am I doing here? Am I actually giving enough to my classes? With a PhD you are relieved of a certain amount of this uncertainty and self-doubt. A doctorate made a world of difference to me, but I have no doubt that in the teaching profession it has as much value as does, say, a plumber's licence or a banker's credentials."

Armed with his degree the Reaney family returned to Manitoba where he is presently an Assistant Professor. In 1960, however, the Reaneys will move to London, Ontario, where, at the University of Western Ontario, he has been offered a better position. Closer to Toronto and Stratford, the Reaney family will feel, perhaps, that they are closer to home. The Reaney family, by the way, includes Reaney's father, Colleen Reaney and their three children: James seven, John five, and eight-months-old Susan.

In 1958 Reaney again received the Governor-General's Award, this time for A Suit of Nettles. The Red Heart received the first award and "Nettles", published by Macmillan's, was an obvious award for the best book of Canadian poetry in 1957. It is a highly imaginative and sophisticated amusement, being a journey through an entire Ontario year in a barnyard world of geese. It is a successful satire on Canadian history, Ontario customs and Canadian poets, in Spenserian stanzas, running prose, galloping prose and fascinating footnotes. Most of the passages are lyrical:

Sing to us for the frost
Is closing the pond,
The elms their leaves have lost
And the singing birds have gone, but "Nettles" is too closely written to quote from for review purposes.

Kildare Dobbs of Macmillan's had Reaney write an explanatory introduction to the poem but Reaney still feels that his introduction should be "soft-peddled" because it suggests that the poem has to be approached scholarly to be enjoyed. Reaney claims that he planned the volume for five years in his head before writing it. "It is not a collection of poems," he said, "but a book of poems. Now that Jay Macpherson has shown Canadians how to write a book of lyrics, the day will come when no one will dare to publish a handful of lyrics in no special order or sequence."

Reaney has strong views on this point and he is the first to point out that many of them were originally Frye's. Frye taught him structure and his PhD work taught him how to study and work in the center "of a hub of a large family." About the second point, Reaney works regularly from eight in the evening to eleven, and he scribbles into large notebooks in a disorderly fashion. Many of his poems however are complete in one draft and need only to be typed out directly without changes from his scrapbooks.

"I have come to the point now," he said, "where I can write at will and I do not have to wait for random inspiration. Poetry should be an exercise of will and with the archetypal criticism that now confronts us, we should be able to see in one glance which way we are to head and what we are to do." Many people have criticized this concept of direction in art and one in particular, Raymond Souster, has stated that he would have wished Reaney had continued to write more short

It is with pleasure that The Varsity is able to present to its readers an original unpublished poem by James Reaney. The poem is copyright, 1960, by the author.

The Thunderstorm

By James Reaney

A cloud and a cloud and a cloudy
Came into the blue afternoon room
A cloud and a cloud and a cloud

A cloud

MacLeod

A cloud

And a cloud and a cloudy.

Down down down came the cloudy

With a windowpane shudder

A distance for the distance

And a rat for the shutters

And a word for the cistern

Dark as a parlour.

A cloud and a cloud and a cloudy

Came out of the yellow garage

Joseph MacLeod in a many coloured vest

Danced to the music dying in the West.

snappy poems, like those in The Red Heart, rather than the involved semi-epic A Suit of Nettles.

Reaney is presently toying with two ideas. Although he has often stated he would like to write a book on Henry James, he is more likely to continue to collect his scattered lyrics which were written in the decade between his two books. He would like to collect them and fit them into a forty-eight piece collection based, in structure at least, on the themes and variations of Bach's Well-Tempered Clavier. Another possibility is the executing of an emblem book, although this would entail commissioning the services of an artist.

His opera, Night-Blooming Cereus, which was produced on CBC Wednesday Night, and printed in part in The Canadian Forum, will take the boards courtesy of the Canadian Council in the first week of April at Hart House. The opera is only two scenes, so Reaney will act as a "curtain raiser" with a poetry reading. Reaney calls his opera a Stratfordian Winter's Tale, "an idealized Shakespeare built up like a Grandma Moses painting." Reaney believes that more of this semi-professionalism in Canadian theatre is necessary for the proper development of Canadian drama.

Reaney's literary magazine has stirred some local interest but no one really knows much about it. The first issue, which should be off the presses in two months, will be of particular interest to University of Toronto students because it will contain poems by five University College poets: Gerry Vise, Christopher Priestley, E. A. Lacey, Michael John Nimchuk and John Robert Colombo. Jay Macpherson will be represented with a paper on "Narcissus", Mrs. Reaney with a short story, and poems by Reaney's students in Manitoba.

The most interesting single feature of the magazine is the fact that Reaney is handsetting it himself, four pages at a time. In format it will be six by nine inches and will be designed by Allan Fleming, who teaches typography at the College of Art. The name of the magazine, "Alphabet", is indicative of Reaney's attempt to feature writing in it which will bare the basic archetypes of all literature. It will appear semi-annually and will be commercially printed as soon as Reaney is able to collect the first subscription fees and, considering that only five hundred copies will be printed, this should be soon.

Reaney is currently writing a long article for "Canadian Literature" on the poetry of Jay Macpherson. Another project on hand is the rewriting of his first unproduced play, The Rules of Joy. This is about, in his own words, "an abortionist who pretends to be a minister's mistress."

The project which interests Reaney the most is his new play The Killdeer. Written in blank verse with the typical Reaney rhythms and images, the play is a three-act record of the struggle of three youths to achieve their identity in a small central Ontario town. "The play has many vivid moments," said its director, Pamela Terry. "but the action is too involved to retell and the large amount of symbolism makes it difficult to discuss without having seen it."

Miss Frances Halpenny of the University of Toronto Press, who plays Mrs. Gardner in the production stresses Reaney's "gift for dialogue." She sees the play as a projection of the poet's mind to account for its varied bird imagery and symbolism. "But it also has a note of realism and this aspect of the play has been caught very well by Miss Terry," she said.

Reaney himself regards The Killdeer as an avant-garde discussion of the problems of his youth. He is quick, however, to discredit attempts to find autobiographical elements in it. "The setting is an idealized Stratford," he explained, "and I have tried to make it both realistic in tone and poetic in nature. This is a difficult combination to achieve in modern verse drama, since there are very few Canadian plays to guide one in this direction."

UTDU Tour Successful

Two members of the University of Toronto Debating Union returned triumphant last night from a three-day debating tour of Maritime universities.

Max Rotstein (1 Law) and Bob Caplan (11 Law) debated with Dalhousie, Acadia and Mount Allison Universities. The tour was the first of a plan proposed by UTDU Students' Administrative Council representative Peter Dembski at a recent SAC meeting to encourage inter-Canadian university debating this year by the U of T.

The UTDU will still continue its regular American tours.

Debating on Wednesday night with Dalhousie University on the topic, resolved: "That Canada should adopt a foreign policy of neutrality," the U of T team took the negative side, and when the house divided, the vote was 45-41 against the motion.

Three judges unanimously awarded the decision to the Toronto debaters at Acadia on Thursday night. They again took the negative in a debate, resolved: "That nuclear tests should be abolished".

The house was honored by the presence of the President of Acadia University, Dr. Kirkconnell, as speaker of the house.

Flying to Mount Allison University in New Brunswick on Friday, they again debated the proposal of Canada's neutrality.

Upon arrival, the team was told they would be debating the negative side of the question, after understanding they would be taking the negative position.

Wednesday night's notes were used, and the team won a unanimous decision from a panel of three judges, of which a retired judge of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick was a member.

Vic Students Gleefully Dismember Foster Child

Victoria College students are today the proud parents of 1¼ refugee children.

The children will be adopted under the Foster Parents Plan, using money raised at an all-college party and hockey game Friday night.

A $50 contribution to the Plan, a world-wide organization officially recognized by the United Nations, sponsors a refugee child for a year.

The foster parents are allowed to select the nationality, age and sex of their foster child, but actual administration of the sponsorship is done by the Plan itself.

Original plans called for the adoption of only one child—

"but since we raised $64 at the party we will adopt the extra quarter-child," said 6T2 class President Mario Somerville.

The party itself was a combination hockey game and dance.

The game—which saw boys using only one-skate each while co-eds were allowed two apiece—saw 6T1 and 6T3 combine to defeat 6T0 and 6T2 by a 3-2 score.

Somerville pointed out, however, that 6T0 and 6T2 won the game 4-2 in an overtime period—"but the period wasn't legal".

Idea for the unique fund-raising drive originated with 6T1 President Bob Oben as Victoria's contribution to World Refugee Year.

Taught For 22 Years

Malcolm Franklin Crawford, 54, a professor of physics at the University of Toronto, died at his Heath St. E. home last Thursday. He had been a member of the staff in physics since 1936.

Born in Theford in 1905, Professor Crawford attended Parkhill High School and the University of Western Ontario, from which he graduated in mathematics and physics in 1926.

He did graduate work at Toronto in spectroscopy under the late Sir John McLennan and was granted a PhD degree. As holder of a Royal Society Fellowship, he studied at the Universities of Wisconsin and London. His research in the field of atomic spectroscopy brought him consideration as an expert in the field.

Professor Crawford was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada in 1939. He was also a fellow of the American Physics Society.

He is survived by his wife, daughter and two sisters.

Eric Bently Named For Stone Lecture

Eric Bentley, critic, director, author and educator, has been named the first Edgar Stone Lecturer in drama at the University of Toronto, Dr. Claude Bissell, president of the University, announced Saturday.

British-born, educated at both Oxford and Yale, Prof. Bentley has spent most of his adult life in the United States. He is now chairman of the administrative committee of Columbia University's Program in the Arts, a grouping of courses on painting and sculpture, the applied graphic arts, theatre, television, radio and motion pictures.

Prof. Bentley is also known as drama critic of the New Republic, a theatre director in both Europe and North America, a critical author and anthologist, and a vigorous defender of modern drama.

He will speak on "The Drama in Our Society" at a public lecture in Hart House Theatre Friday, Jan. 29 at 4:30 p.m.

Prof. Bentley is the first lecturer to be appointed from a new fund established last spring by a gift from Edgar J. Stone, one of Canada's best-known theatre personalities.

Prof. Bentley's published works included A Century of Hero-Worship (1944), The Playwright as Thinker (1946), Bernard Shaw (1947), In Search of Theatre (1953), The Dramatic Event (1954),

Skiers Wanted By Outing Club

The University of Toronto Outing Club is inviting those who are interested in skiing, in and around Toronto, to join their club.

Vice-President of the Outing Club, David Rutenberg (III SP5) said free skiing instruction will be given by experienced members of the Outing Club to those who are interested in learning.

The first weekend will be Jan. 23-24 in Don Mills, and the next will be in Collingwood, Jan.

30-31. On Feb. 6-7 there will be skiing at both St. Sauveur, and at Yale. On Feb. 13-14 there will be skiing again at Don Mills and on Feb. 20-21, skiing in Huntsville.

The highlight of the skiing trips will be the Snoski, Yale's version of the Winter Carnival. Other activities on the agenda include square dances and skating parties.

Varsity Grapplers Humble Western

By GENE GLISKY

University of Toronto wrestlers were the only stay at homes this weekend as they met and conquered the University of Western Ontario grapplers in an exhibition Senior-Intermediate wrestling meet in Hart House Saturday afternoon.

Before a packed and enthusiastic gallery, Blues captured victories in nine of the 14 bouts, five of the victories coming by pinning their opponents. (No, not frat pins.)

GOOD MATCHES

There were plenty of thrills, as both the veteran wrestlers and the first year men gave their all against their traditional rivals.

Varsity's Al Powis won a decision over Western's Don Hagedorn in a classic three round exhibition of careful, tactical grappling in the 147 pound division.

Bob Pearson, all-star end with the football Mustangs last season outpointed Ken Deer in the last second of the final round in the 157 pound class.

REVENGE

Roger Donner of the Blues met an old foe in Don Williamson in the 167 pound rematch. Williamson defeated Donner in the final minute in the Intercollegiate championships last year, so revenge was sweet as Donner, suffering from a badly dislocated finger, outsmarted his opponent to win by a decision.

A familiar face appeared in a new role for the Purple People in the person of one Bill Mitchell. The Mustangs great tackle, Intercollegiate scoring champion and place kicking specialist, and Omega award winner, was smeared by Varsity's Rod Carrow in the heavyweight bout.

Carrow, Canadian 191 pound champion and Pan-American finalist, had no trouble with the big Redhead from Western, pinning him at the 2:54 minute mark of the first round.

Blues Captain Ken Brown, also turned in a quick-pin performance, outclassing Barry Stewart in 4:02 minutes.

Results:

Senior-Intermediate Mixed:

- 147 lb — John Holt (T) pinned Steve Wade (W). Time 6:43 min.
- 157 lb — Roy Wood (W) pinned Mary Flansman (T). Time 1:59 min.
- 130 lb — Archie Nishamura (W) pinned Edward Britlett (T). Time 11 seconds.
- 137 lb — Ken Brown (T) pinned Barry Stewart (W). Time 4:02 min.
- 147 lb — Al Powis (T) Powis (T) decision over Don Hagedorn (W).
- 157 lb — Bob Pearson (W) decision over Ken Deer (T).
- 167 lb — Roger Donner (T) decision over Don Williamson (W).
- 177 lb — Norm Clements (W) decision over Don Shepley (T).
- 191 lb — Hero Brown (T) decision over Barry Thompson (W).
- H.W. — Rod Carrow (T) pinned Bill Mitchell (W). Time 2:54 min.
- 123 lb — Albert Lobos (T) pinned H.Harry Sawchuk (W). Time 4:24 min.
- 137 lb — Archie Nishamura (W) pinned Joe Pama (T). Time 1:09 min.
- 147 lb — Tom Anjan (T) pinned Steve Wade (W). Time 3:47.
- 191 lb — Rod Carrow (T) decision over Jim McMillan (W).

... and in this corner by sharon milgram

Archery, badminton, basketball, skiing, swimming and volleyball are some of the sports which are occupying the free and not so free times of the coeds this term.

A number of archers are preparing for the intercollegiate indoor archery tournament. Since the team has yet to be chosen, there is still time for any potential Robin Hoods to practise drawing back that right arm, practically hooking their thumb under their chin, keeping the left arm bent slightly and releasing the long slender rod with three feathers on one end and a point on the opposite. If, at that point, someone screams, you will know you need a little more practise.

The interfaculty badminton tourney is still in the midst. Starting out with one of the largest groups of participants in recent years, 150, it has been pared down to approximately 30. The top four girls in the competition will make up the intercollegiate team.

Although interfaculty basketball ended before Christmas, which to me seems so long ago, the intercollegiate schedule is just getting underway.

Announced Thursday evening, this years team consists of the following — Forwards: Judy Smith, Joy Mahood, Barb Black, Bev Bonnell, all of PHE; Marg Anne White (POT), and Judy Skene (Pharmacy).

The guard line will be made up of Sandy McMullen, Alayne Patterson, Lynn Philpott, Judy Gray, all once again from PHE; Mary Timmins (St. Mike's), and Kathy Kennedy (Pharmacy).

Since I have been asked so nicely by the boys' sports editor to keep my comment on athletics brief, I find myself running out of my allotted corner. Therefore, I'll close now, reserving comments on the other sports for another day.

IN IRON ORE . . . A FUTURE

Well established and stable, the Iron Ore Company of Canada and its Associates are at the same time pressing forward a vigorous development programme of significance to the country. By participating in this growth, a young engineer may hope to use his imagination and resourcefulness while finding the professional satisfaction that is possible in a mature operation.

Operations of the Iron Ore Company of Canada and its Associates include: the open pit mines at Schefferville, Que. (Knob Lake); the complete railroad system of the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway; and the terminal shipping facilities at Sept-Îles, Que., where ore may be moved onto vessels at the rate of 100,000 tons every 24 hours. Among the newest developments of the group is an important mining and beneficiating undertaking, Carol Project, north of Sept-Îles, destined to process 6 million tons of ore a year.

Geologists or engineers—mechanical, electrical, metallurgical, civil and mining—are invited to visit the representatives of the Iron Ore Company of Canada and its Associates when they come to your campus on 21, 22 and 23 January.

VARSITY SPLIT ON ROAD TRIP

Late Goals Give Laval 5-3 Win In Quebec

Quebec, Jan. 15 — Third period goals by Michel Lagace and Andre Arsenault gave Laval University a 5-3 triumph over the University of Toronto in a hard fought Intercollegiate Hockey League senior game.

The winning goal, by Lagace, was scored with Varsity a man short as Frank Sullivan was serving a minor penalty at the time. Four of the Laval goals came with Varsity short handed through penalties.

EVEN GAME

The teams battled on even terms for two periods before Laval broke out for the clinching markers in the third period. The teams were tied 1-1, at the end of the second.

Joseph Michaud, Claude Dugay, and Paul Dufour scored the other goals for Laval.

The line of Jim Murchie, Howie Roth, and John Gatten accounted for all the Varsity goals as each scored once. Roth's goal in the second period, gave Varsity a 3-2 lead in the game, the second time that Blues had gone ahead of their hosts.

REVENGE

Both goalies showed to advantage at times during the game. Referee Rene Simard handed out 17 penalties, 11 to Varsity.

The Laval win avenges a 7-3 defeat handed to them by Blues in a game back on November 27. Laval remains in first place in the league.

TORONTO — Goal: Giroux, defence: Neale, Sinclair, Simpson, Sullivan, forwards: Roth, Murchie, Gatten, Epp, Grissen, Hickson, Chereba, Ka, Grey, Orcheson, Warren.

McGill Down Montreal 5-1

MONTREAL, Jan. 13—McGill University defeated University of Montreal 5-1 in a senior Intercollegiate Hockey game here tonight to move into fourth place in the league.

McGill goals were scored by Tim Peters, Joe Irvin, Steve Molson, Leo Konyk, and Colin Moseley. The lone marker for Montreal was scored by Guy Belisle in the first period.

The loss was the second in a row for Montreal, and left them firmly ensconced in the cellar. Leo Konyk was the outstanding player in the game as he continually broke up Montreal rushes.

By ROBIN HOST

Bow hunting is one of the fastest growing and most fascinating sports in Canada. Unfortunately the initial outlay both in time and in money discourages most aspiring archer from entering the ranks of the "merry men".

If however, you should become interested and have the time and opportunity to learn the fundamentals of archery, don't limit yourself to the target range.

Within easy reach of Toronto there are several field courses (similar to golf courses except there are targets and trees in stead of holes and sand-traps) where you will feel the real thrill of archery in its most primitive and fascinating form.

The main purpose of the field course is to foster an interest in bow-hunting. The fall deer-hunting season takes most of the bow-hunters to Manitoulin Island or one of the many archery hunting camps.

AFTER Varsity's 5-3 loss to Laval last Friday night in Quebec City, coach Jack Kennedy let it be known that he was considering pressing the green, untried rookie shown here into service immediately to bolster his squad. The fuzzy-faced kid has shown excellent form in practices to date.

Marshall And McMaster Are Too Good For Blues

Playing before a capacity crowd in Hamilton on Saturday night, the University of Toronto Blues basketball team lost their second Intercollegiate game of the season as they were beaten by McMaster University 66-60.

Actually the Toronto team was beaten by Doug Marshall, the four year veteran of the Marauder squad. The 6'4" forward was top man, potting 31 points for the host club. In the double figures also was Leedale with 13.

Toronto, on the other hand had one player, Jim McGuire, to count on for their points. He got 23 but the rest of the team lagged far behind. Dan Norman and Boris Wolchuk with 11 and 10 points respectively were the next in line.

The game started out with both teams using the orthodox two out three in system on the offence and a man-to-man defence. From the first Varsity's headache was height. As in previous games the fact that they lack height became a quite apparent. The Hamilton team had three tall men, Raphael, Martin and Marshall and Toronto had only two who could adequately measure up to them.

At the start of the game the Marauders had gained a six point lead as they lead 31-25.

However in the second half the Blues put on a concerted effort to win and with 55 seconds left they were down only two points and had possession of the ball. Leedale though killed Toronto's hopes dropping in four foul shots to score his team's final points.

One noticeable absence from the scoring list was Peter Potter, the team's veteran guard and captain. Potter's off night came as a contrast to his last game against Western when he lead the scoring. Still more coincidental was that McGuire on that night was 'off.'

Coach McManus was naturally disappointed about losing to the Mac team but still doesn't discount Varsity's chances. The whole outcome of the season is dependent upon the result of the next game. It is do-or-die.

JUST NOTES . . . DON LIPKE will not be able to play this year—he did not get the certificate of medical eligibility . . . this was the first time since Coach McManus started coaching the Blues that they have lost to McMaster . . . McGill will be the visitors on the 22nd at the next Athletic Nite.

Rizak Nets 27 As Assumption Defeats YMHA

WINDSOR, Jan. 17 — Guard Gene Rizak hooped 27 points Saturday night to pace Assumption University Lancers to a hard fought 74-66 victory over Toronto YMHA Blues in an exhibition basketball game.

Rizak potted 12 field goals and three foul shots while Leo Innocente scored 16 points on six field goals and four foul shots. Leo Girard hit on five field goals and one foul shot for 11.

YMHA, with but seven players available for duty, gave the erratic collegians stiff opposition throughout. The score was tied, 18-18, at quarter-time and Assumption held a 35-27 edge at halftime.

Malcolm Chesler was top scorer for YMHA with 22 points on 10 field goals and one foul shot. Ruby Richman was next with 13 points, Umi Cooper getting 10.

In a preliminary game, Assumption's intermediate team, the Crusaders, posted an 80-70 win over Sarnia Y Teen Town, a team which is to represent Sarnia in the Ontario Amateur Basketball Association intermediate B playdowns.

Jack Kelly was high scorer for Crusaders with 23 points while Bob Moore got 20. Bob McPherson led Sarnia with 21 points, Grant Gordon and Bill Horley getting 14 each.

Fine Play By Neale In 8-2 Win

Montreal, Jan. 16—Howie Roth scored three goals to pace the University of Toronto Blues to an 8-2 win over the McGill Redmen in a senior Intercollegiate Hockey game here tonight.

Together with his linemates Jim Murchie and John Gatten, Roth scored six of the eight goals tallied by the Varsity squad. Murchie had two goals while Gatten scored once and assisted on two others.

STRONG DEFENCE

Varsity threw up a strong defence as they completely outclassed the hapless McGill squad. Harry Neale was the individual star, he collected three assists and a goal to bring his total for the weekend to one goal and six assists.

Coach Jack Kennedy said in Toronto that "this was the best week-end of hockey Neale had played since joining the Blues last year." In addition to his offensive work, Neale headed a strong defence that smothered most of the McGill thrusts.

OTHER SCORES

McGill goals were scored by Tim Peters and Leo Konyk, in the first and third periods. Blues collected seven of the eleven penalties handed out by the referee, but never were in danger while killing them off.

Sole bright spot for the Redmen was the play of defenceman Leo Konyk. Konyk scored one goal and set up the other.

TORONTO — Goal: Giroux, defence: Neale, Sinclair, Epp, Simpson, forwards: Murchie, Roth, Gatten, Hickson, Orcheson, Cherepecka, Griffin, Sullivan, Warren, Prev.

MCGILL — Goal: Herron, defence: Richards, McDonald, Konyk, Robson, forwards: McLennan, Irvin, Hutchinson, Merritt, Peters, Gillilien, Molson, Moseley.

First Period
1. Toronto, Roth (Neale) ..... 4:37
2. Toronto, Neale (Sinclair) 16:53
3. Toronto, Gatten (Neale, Murchie) ..... 19:00
4. McGill, Peters (Hutchison, Konyk) ..... 19:58
Penalties — Irvin, 9:04; Sinclair 12:06; Warren 15:05; Grant 17:52.

Second Period
5. Toronto, Murchie (Gatten, Neale) ..... 0:17
6. Toronto, Murchie (Roth) 9:23
7. Toronto, Roth (Murchie, Konyk) ..... 15:21
8. Toronto, Sullivan (Hickson, Griffin) ..... 16:46
Penalties — Hickson 11:24; Neale 19:57.

Third Period
9. McGill, Konyk (Peters, Irvin) ..... 2:57
10. Toronto, Roth (Murchie, Konyk) ..... 15:53
Penalties — Sullivan, Irvin, Epp 7:06; Sullivan 12:56; Irvin 18:36.

Parliament Opens Tonight: Charge CCF Irregularities

By JOHN MCGOEY

The University of Toronto's 1960 Model Parliament gets under way tonight in the face of strong protests from the two opposition parties concerning the legality of the legislation which the CCF government proposes to introduce into the House.

Liberal Model Parliament leader Dick Hamilton (III Trin) said last night that he had registered several "serious objections to the CCF legislation as it is presently constituted" with the Model Parliament Committee. The Committee, a sub-committee of the University of Toronto Debating Union, is responsible for running the Model Parliament.

And Progressive Conservative Model Parliament leader Murray Corlett (III Vic) also issued strong complaints against the proposed government legislation.

Hamilton said "essentially the CCF bills lack parliamentary form to the extent that the whole Parliament would have to be devoted to a discussion of the technical aspects, rather than the subject matter of the bills".

"The Liberals want to debate only the subject matter—but a Parliament can only debate bills which are properly constituted," he continued.

"That is why we brought this matter to the attention of the proper authorities before the parliament started—so time would not be wasted during the actual sessions themselves," he said.

"Our objections to these bills come under several headings,"

Dollar A Scholar

By KAY MCCOOK

A pamphlet called "South African Hell" appeared on campus yesterday. It criticized racial discrimination in South Africa and blasted Prime Minister Verwoerd's apartheid policy.

One of the projects to be partially financed by the SHARE campaign at the University of Toronto is the establishment of extra-mural courses for African students expelled from the universities closed by Verwoerd. SHARE funds will also help buy books for Pius XII University of Basutoland which is the only remaining non-segregated college in South Africa.

Donations to SHARE will also be used for material aid to seven other countries in Europe and Asia. They will finance measures for combatting chronic problems among students and faculties in impoverished universities.

More than 30,000 students in Japan and Thailand are suffering from tuberculosis. SHARE funds from Canada will aid in the establishment of X-ray facilities and sanatoriums in these countries.

More than 3,000 students at the University of Calcutta have to sleep in shacks or disused railway coaches. Canadian contributions to the WUS international budget will help improve living conditions for Indian students.

"It is too easy for us in our prosperity to disregard unwittingly the conditions of our fellows in less fortunate university communities," U of T SHARE Campaign Chairman Doug Ward said last night.

He suggested the campaign's slogan of "a dollar per scholar" is not an unreasonable demand, although the U of T goal is only $3,500. The SHARE campaign runs Jan. 25 - 29.

South Africa Hell Pamphlet Claims

The latest volley in a series of protests against conditions in a Commonwealth country was fired by a group of students from Trinity College yesterday.

A leaflet "South African Hell" was distributed by the University of Toronto Fellowship of Concern for South Africa.

Doug Chambers (III Trin) said. "Keen interest has been shown by the students in the past. We felt that we should issue a rather complete background to supplement our quarterly release."

The bulletin contained a brief outline of the history of the problem, a description of some typical example of the government's proposals and laws of discriminatory nature, and an example of practical solutions to the situation.

"As a result of our letters the Canadian Government voted against South Africa two years ago in the United Nations, Chambers said. "We assumed that they would continue their stand; that they reversed it."

"The Fellowship contributes financially, and by publicity, to attempt to end that disgrace," Chambers said.

IS THIS A MONSTROSITY? Burton T. Richardson, editor of The Telegram, told members of the Young Men's Canadian Club of Toronto last night the University of Toronto campus is offered as an example of bad architecture, "an appalling blight upon the city, filled with an agglomeration of architecture that is for the most part without taste." The University is grouped around a "monstrosity" — Queen's Park, he said. (VSP by Walker)

Companies Descend On Campus In Bigger Recruit Blitzkrieg

Representatives of 136 Canadian and foreign companies will visit the University of Toronto campus during the next three days in a "blitzkrieg" search for new employees.

By Saturday evening they will have held about 4,000 interviews with fourth-year and graduate students in engineering and the sciences. During the period, fourth-year engineering lectures will be cancelled and the classrooms turned over to visiting personnel officers.

This mass assault on the job problem was originated at Varsity two years ago by J. K. Bradford, director of the University's Placement Service. Since then McGill has started a similar program, and observers have come from Canadian and American campuses to see how it works. Its success is shown by industry's response: last year only 102 companies took part.

Key to the project is its emphasis on student's own research. During the fall term, the Placement Service collected all possible data on participating companies and placed it in campus libraries. By the first two weeks in January, when it was time for the students to sign up for interview appointments, they knew what firms interested them most and what questions to ask. To make sure students did do research beforehand, they were limited to eight appointments, each 25 minutes long.

Some of the participating companies will have a representative on campus only one of the three days. Others will have two or more personnel officers conducting interviews from 9 a.m. Thursday till 6 p.m. Saturday. In all cases, interviews will have privacy.

University officials say the blitzkrieg approach has proved more satisfactory than the uncoordinated visits individual companies used to make to the campus at different periods throughout the academic year.

Employers, the officials say, no longer fear rival companies have reached the best students first.

they also are less likely to be kept dangling by students who hesitate to reply to a job offer for fear something better will come along.

The student, on the other hand, has a chance to study all prospects at the same time, the officials say, without long waiting periods between interviews to confuse his judgment. He can commit himself in February without worry that a better job will turn up in March; for the most part, all his possible employers have been on campus.

The new system is considered a boon to faculty too. Before it began, they often lectured to half-empty classrooms when a particularly appealing company was interviewing job applicants.

Hart House Is Surveyed To Discover What's Up

Hart House officials said last night the results of a survey on student eating habits conducted last week would not be known for about two weeks.

A questionnaire was distributed in Hart House by the HH House Committee of Hart House to find out the eating habits of students of the university.

Members of the House Committee were on hand in the halls to fill out the questionnaires.

Some of the questions asked were: "How often do you bring your lunch to University? When you do NOT bring your lunch (a) do you eat a full meal? (b) where do you usually eat? (c) how often do you eat in the Great Hall?"

The questionnaire also asks the students whether they like, or dislike the expense, location, quality of food, atmosphere, and absence of women in the Great Hall.

Peter Brawley (IV Meds), Secretary of the House Committee, said, "In a sample of 100 out of about 500 questionnaires, 25 per cent would like women allowed in the Great Hall."

"That is the least likely reform," he continued, "but they can try."

Journalist Recovering

ANTIGONISH, N.S., Jan. 14 (CUP)—The managing editor of the Xaverian Weekly has been taken off the critical list following an accident last December.

William Fitzgerald, 20, suffered multiple fractures of both legs in the crash which occurred on his way to the Canadian University Press Conference in Quebec City. His taxi driver was killed when the cab pulled out to pass another vehicle and struck a bus.

Several conference members volunteered to give blood in the fight to save his life.

Fitzgerald joined the staff of the Xaverian Weekly in September of 1958, became Sports Editor in November, and at present is managing editor.

Kangaroo Court Snipes At McGill Constitution

MONTREAL, Jan. 19 (CUP)—A group of McGill University students have proposed the formation of a student court of justice to act as an appeals court, it was announced last night.

The new student court would have the power to interpret the constitution which governs the McGill students executive council.

The students who put forward the plan felt that a situation might arise where the Council would have to interpret its own constitution. By having a student court there would be a separation of powers leading to a more effective form of administration, they said.

The originators of the plan have proposed a skeleton of basic principles which they feel would give a deeper meaning and a higher degree of prestige to the conception of student government. They suggested a panel of five members, the president of the student executive and four fourth-year law students.

The group is now testing student reaction to the plan to see if it warrants further development.

WUS Summer Seminar Applications Due Today

Today is the last day for applications to the World University Service of Canada Summer Seminar to be held in Israel this year. Application forms are available in the SAC office but must be returned to the WUS National Office, 22 Wilcocks Ave.

Three University of Toronto students will be chosen to attend the 46-day Seminar.

A tentative program has been planned and will include a three-day orientation period in Canada, during the last week in June. Once in Israel, the participants will attend introductory sessions in Jerusalem and then work in "kibbutzim," the Israeli collective farm settlements, for two weeks.

A three-week seminar will be held at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

The members of the Seminar will participate in panel discussions, debates, and field trips with Israeli students, based on the theme of the Seminar "Israel: Drama of Return and Reconstruction", and emphasizing the contrast between ancient Talmudic traditions and modern technological advances.

At the end of the Seminar the participants will hold sessions to evaluate the results of the 46 days spent in Israel.

This program, WUS hopes, will meet the material and academic needs of Canadian universities in international education. It is constructed to bring Canadian students and professors into informal, intellectual contact with colleagues from other countries. The WUS international study seminars were instituted in 1949 and are designed to bring the problem of economic, cultural, sociological, historical and political aspects of other countries into sharper focus for the participating universities.

PC's Charge Libs Use Pro PR Propagandists

HAMILTON, Jan. 18 (CUP)—The president of the McMaster University Progressive Conservative Club says the leader of the PC Student Federation is willing to debate an allegation that the Canadian University Liberal Federation retains an advertising agency to draw up its political pamphlets.

Glenda Casson stated that Ted Rogers, PCSF leader referred last October "to the fact that the CULF makes use of an advertising agency to write its material rather than using solely the literary contributions of the students, as is the democratic practice of the PCSF."

Miss Casson said Mr. Rogers is willing to meet Tom Sumerville, CULF head, at any time, and at any place to debate the issue and bring it before the public.

Peter Cadeau, McMaster Liberal Leader, said last week, "Mr. Rogers has never challenged Mr. Sumerville in writing or by any other formal means. His charges, which he has never defined, have been made only in speaking to Conservative Clubs." The allegation has been denied by several people, including the Honorable Lester Pearson.

Cadeau has produced copies of the pamphlets in question for the McMaster paper The Silhouette. The first was the federation's monthly news letter which is solely a student publication.

Concerning the second CULF publication, he said, "Our recruiting pamphlet, which is sent out every September, is simply a description of the CULF. This admittedly has not been done by a university student."

comment

after such knowledge

From time to time, especially during swastika-painting periods, some righteous commentator is bound to take alarm at the fact that the primary school children of Germany are not being "taught about Hitler."

They suggest that as long as these young children are shielded from any or all of the details of Hitler's career, there is a chance that a new Hitler may arise in Germany.

Now, a new Hitler may very well arise, and not necessarily only in Germany, but we doubt that teaching young children about the atrocities in their national history will do any good.

Let us say a German child is taught about Hitler and asks his father, "Where were you when bodies were being shoved into the furnaces?"

His father can either reply that he for his part likes Jews and had nothing to do with it. Such an answer is fine, but would tend to remove any reason for bringing up the bogey-man of Hitler in the first place, since the child could be taught virtue without any reference to the collapse of virtue in the war.

Another possible answer would be, "I was there shovelling bodies with all the rest," but whether spoken with pride or with contrition, such an answer could only have a strongly demoralizing effect on a young child of average sensibility. You can't make someone good by showing him what an evil background he comes from.

But then, how can you make someone good? There can be no easy answer. But perhaps part of it lies in the kind of education these youths are getting right now.

Perhaps it can be accomplished by teaching them about the glories of German thought and history rather than its abysses, perhaps by enlisting their allegiance for what is good in the German tradition rather than their terror of what is bad.

Our purveyors of virtues, screaming for contrition, are not completely impossible to understand. They are revolted by the attitude of the youth who say, "So we killed six million Jews; what do you want us to do? We've said we were sorry, haven't we?" But this attitude is perhaps the consequence of too much knowledge of Hitler rather than not enough.

The solution is not to make an example of evil. It is to make an example of good.

Letters Pro And Con

appreciation

Dear Varsity,

My sister has just now acquainted me with your paper. She sent an article, "Love Was Never Like This", that I have read and thoroughly enjoyed.

Attending a school where a sarcastic type of humour is appreciated (since it is about the only type of humour to be found), I want to commend Peter Brawley for the excellent way in which he has described Mickities 1960.

Realizing that it is somewhat easier to be witty about a play with a great many obvious flaws, I would appreciate a sample of what Mr. Brawley may say about some better productions.

Sincerely,
Gibbs Dibrell,

criticism

Dear Mr. Aizenstat:

Regarding your issue of the 13th, I noticed that you so aptly buried the only front-page story with any reader appeal in a single four inch column under a tiny-type headline and played up a lot of "jazz" about charters and new Mickities leaders. The leading story about editor under fire is not even newsworthy. The editor wasn't under fire, he wasn't even being censured. In the first sentence it is explained that he just came close to being censured. People are coming close to being fired, run over and drowned every day yet they don't make the news, let alone the front page.

Granted the charter is important to newspapers and this is readily obvious to anybody who feels like wading through it. The same with the bill although it has some appeal to other party leaders.

The Karvanage story may be in light taste but it is at least readable and amusing even if its validity is questionable. The good taste of the editor, however, should determine whether or not it is too fictional or sensationalistic. If he considers it such he should reread the "editor fired" story. The preceding paper was front-paged in better taste. All in all, the beatnik story is the only one I read all the way except for the editorial, which was excellent.

Yours sincerely,
D. Arthur Henry,
V Architecture.

Spank 'em... or Spoil 'em?

By Susan Kastner

Since the arrival of her baby brother, Sally B. had been completely unmanageable. A year and a half later, she still refused to stay put after being tucked in at night. She would run out of her room, slam the door, slide noisily down the banister and shriek her way into the kitchen.

Mr. and Mrs. B. had a little talk with her, and she assured them she was perfectly capable of staying in bed. But the next night, as soon as Mr. B. left her room, Sally was on her way downstairs again.

"Well, Sally, we tried to reason with you," Mr. B. said. He carried her back into the room, put her in bed and locked the door. Now Sally stays in her room.

This case history illustrates one of the most controversial theories of a controversial school of child study; there is always a better way of disciplining a child than spanking. When St. George's Nursery School opened its doors to eight children in 1920, under Dr. W. E. Blatz, the school's methods were greeted with amused contempt. The methods included allowing children under the age of three into the nursery and urging the children to develop their "creativity". Today, more than 30 years later, Dr. Blatz's writings are used as textbooks for psychology students. 150 children now are enrolled at the school, and there is a long waiting list.

The Institute of Child Study, as it has been called since its reorganization in 1939, consists of a research staff, a nursery, an elementary school and a parent education division.

The school operates on Dr. Blatz's "security theory". The theory is outlined in Dr. Blatz's book Understanding the Young Child. It holds that the individual copes with insecurity in four ways; by becoming independently secure through development of skills; by "immature" dependence; by "mature" dependence, involving "mutual reciprocity in solving problems"; or by remaining insecure.

"Independent Security" is considered the ideal adjustment, but unattainable; and "Mature Dependent Security" is "now more than acceptable. To this end, competition is eliminated, little stress is placed on exams and the child is encouraged to develop his own skills.

What about the horror of parents and educators in 1926 who thought that Dr. Blatz would treat the nursery schoolers as experimental objects, guinea pigs? The child is not "experimented with" in the sense that some critics dread," according to Dr. Blatz's outline of the schools. "He is furnished with abundant material to stimulate his varied interests and his supervision is continuous but inobtrusive. "Inobtrusive" the supervision may be, but the staff of the Institute speaks as one man against untrammelled freedom, and implores the public not to think of their school as "one of those progressive places that lets the kids do anything they want". The unruly child is at first reasoned with, and the ultimate disciplinary action is isolation from the group. But temper tantrums are nearly non-existent, according to Miss Margaret Fletcher, principal of the Nursery School. "In fact," Miss Fletcher said, "new teachers will often demand after a few months, Miss Fletcher, aren't we ever going to hear a temper tantrum?"

This may come as a surprise to those of the horse-sense school of parenthood who maintain that: "A whack on the bottom was good enough and it's good enough Milton, who plays piano at school and is secretary Staff, admitted beating for short-term discipline. Institute policy holds that run one must think, child am I trying to decide upon a sensible and stick to it."

Study and experiment is on the curriculum of students at U of T, who mental health, child method of pre-school is prerequisite for the Study which is considered future staff members.

The Institute's theory wide acceptance since George's Nursery School, linked with the University thirties enrolment in the thing for children whose the know. A whole floor St. George's has sprung The waiting list of applicants that mothers registered birth; mothers who enter their children still Boyd Neel and the Hart House Orchestra Sunday night brought light the most memorable of Boyd Greig's very national and personal music in a program devoted entirely to his works. At a time Greig's music is suffering in disfavour the usual approach to an exploration concert would be that the composer has not been understood his own terms. Dr. Neel touched on point but confined most of his comments to the particular pieces. And again, Greig himself stressed he was not a Scandinavian composer and his research and use of Norwegian folk material justify him. The program for this concert however did not include the best examples of his national spirit.

Greig's best-known piece for orchestra, the Holberg Suite, was most natural, yet most precious opener. Each of the five-section

tunnel of love

Spicy Fun From Old Broadway

Its title is just about as irrelevant as everything else in the play, but the current Algonquin Production of Tunnel of Love (at the Lansdowne Theatre) makes for a splendid evening of mirth even if half an hour afterwards your recollection of what you have seen will be somewhat muddled, which may, mind you, be somehow related to the play's irreverent disregard for what most of us think of as logic; but then, it's a comedy, and what's more, a Broadway comedy, and perhaps it isn't too important.

The play originally wasn't a play at all; it was a novel by Peter de Vries. On its way to Broadway, it had a brief stay in Hollywood, where they made a movie out of it; rather, it might be more accurate to say that someone in Hollywood read the book, and then made a movie with the same title, because there is nothing in Joseph Fields' stage adaptation to suggest that it ever was or could be a novel, and I am sure that no one man could singlehandedly camouflage a novel so well.

This is, what is known as a situation comedy, and the situation centers around a faintly neurotic artist-cartoonist whose main concern is being a failure and whose main preoccupation seems to be monogamy. The point is that six years of monogamy have failed to produce what a neighbour and his wife accomplish at will, or perhaps without even trying at all. The arrival of an adoption agency investigator who is incidentally a sort of educated man's bombshell starts the plot on its tunnelled course and you should be able to guess the rest.

The two principal delights in this farce are Jack Creley and Austin Willis as the ineffectual and overeffeminate lovers respectively. Mr. Creley gives a scintillating performance; he stomps about the stage with good comic effect, and portrays the tribulations of a frustrated husbandship with an excellent sense of high comedy. If there is one fault in his performance, it is that some of his reactions are a little heavily laid on and on occasions very much overdone; the pregnant pause is all right, but if it is too long, and what's more to the point too pregnant, it becomes a little dreary.

Mr. Willis as the prolific neighbour (and incidentally a grey-haired boy who has never tired of sowing his wild oats) gives a very different kind of performance; who wouldn't, given a costume of purple sweater, purple bermudas and purple knee socks? His role is not nearly so colourful; he is apparently intended as a foil to Jack Creley, which never becomes quite clear, but he plays with an amusing blandness and his periodic reactions to the extraordinary situations for the benefit of the audience provide some of the evening's best moments.

Dawn Greenhalgh and Pamela Hyatt as the suburban wives are not given much opportunity to display their talents, but even with a smaller part, Miss Hyatt shows to far better advantage than the other; one wonders why the roles were not reversed, since Miss Greenhalgh's performance is static and inexperienced. Antoinette Bower as the scientific siren gives a very polished performance; she provides the only characterization of any consequence, and fills the stage whenever she is on, Cosette Lee as the adoption agency's busybody interviewer adds more good comedy, although the part seems a little out of place.

George McGowan's direction gives the play good pacing and brings out the best in Mr. Willis and Mr. Creley, but there are times when he seems to have been uncertain about what to do with the two wives. The set, by Eoin Sprutt, are excellent and very detailed; they depict the essence of suburban comfort, which the characters seldom have time to enjoy.

On the whole, the production gives a good demonstration of why Tunnel of Love was a commercial hit on Broadway.

— Pamela Whillans

And Grieg

this work has long passages where the violins or the cellos alone must carry a difficult line. Besides the general weakness of the Prelude the intonation of the violins in the Gavotte and Air was very close to amateur. Perhaps the shock of having scenes of wishful Nordic grandeur evoked by an 18th century group made the proceedings uneasy and incongruous.

Aksel Schiotz, the once famous leader tenor whose voice is going through an untoward series of changes was most effective in recalling the blithe romance of this untimely music. At times during his first group of songs, dealing with the Erl King Saga, his voice came very close to the glory that it once was. His middle range still has the majestic organ-like timbre that served him so well. The orchestral accompaniment supplied the tonal beauty, reserving the emotional texture for Mr. Schiotz's powerful sensitivity.

Parliament

Hamilton said, "but the most important are that they contain no enacting clauses, they contain improper amendments and they are being introduced in an improper manner."

He continued: "The absence of enacting clauses means there is no legal way to implement the provisions of the bill."

"By 'improper amendments' we mean that the bills contain amendments which are general in nature and do not refer back to the Acts which they seek to amend."

"The third change," he said, "is the most serious as it is a contravention of Parliamentary procedure. Both CCF bills are money bills—and such bills must be preceded by a resolution before they can be introduced into the House."

The Liberal leader said he had requested a meeting of the Parliamentary Committee last Sunday, so the matter could be cleared up well in advance, "but they have referred it to the Clerk of the House."

"Looking for a smoothly run assembly, we await a decision from the Clerk, Fred Gans," he said.

Meanwhile The Parliament's Speaker—Gerry Case—said last night he had arranged an appointment with Speaker Rev. A. S. Downer—for later today.

"I will ask Mr. Downer for his opinion on these points raised by the Liberals," Case said.

The Progressive Conservatives too got into the act as they registered a few complaints of their own.

"If the Model Parliament is not to degenerate to a high school debating society," said Murray Corlett (III Vic), parliamentary leader of the Progressive Conservatives, "it is incumbent on the government to present legislation which meets the normal requirements of legislation form."

Due to the constitution of the Model Parliament, the CCF are in the position of having to propose amendments to their own bills. Corlett said, "Tolerance to allow them to change their resolutions to an according form is contrary to the spirit of the assembly."

He said, "The CCF bill without a doubt is the worst drafted and the most ill-considered in the recent history of the model parliament; it shows a complete lack of regard for the jurisdictional provisions of the British North American Act, Section 91 and 92. It includes many clauses 'ultravires' to the federal parliament."

Corlett referred to the fact that the federal government does not provide the portfolios of Minister of Economic planning and Minister of Arts and Culture while the campus CCF cabinet does. "Not only is the bill incorrect in procedure, but they also deny a basic tenet of the system and of sovereignty by asking for approval of expenditures for departments and ministers who have not been created by legislative act," he said.

Jerry Caplan, prime minister, (IV UC) was unavailable for comment last night.

Uncouncilsitting Is Style For The McMistresses

HAMILTON, Jan 18 (CUP) — After giving women the right to run for its presidency last year, the Students' Council of McMaster University has made a complete about-face and decided to repeal the ruling.

The girls on campus apparently agree with the plan to limit their rights on council. Even the five women on the executive have agreed.

One council member felt "the giving of equality to women with regard to the presidency is not realistic in terms of the duties and responsibilities of the president."

The council was told by Brian McCutcheon, "We live in a society in which the top positions are filled by men. If the student government is to be respected, we are forced to follow that lead."

Should the council and the student body accept this new proposal, it will not apply to the upcoming presidential elections at McMaster on Jan. 29. However, as yet no girl has signified her intention of running.

Student Festival

The International Students' Festival will present music, dance, and handicraft exhibits in Hart House February 5.

The Festival, sponsored by the International Students' Organization in conjunction with campus Ethnic Groups representing about 15 countries, are presenting a variety of performances, ranging from choral singing by a Ukrainian choir to a Chinese dragon dance.

Poland has arranged to commemorate the 150th anniversary of Chopin with a recital of Chopin compositions. Hungary is giving a Barokk recital. There will be calypso from the West Indies, a farce from Latvia, and folk-songs from two Canadian groups.

Traditional paintings, wall hangings, and some modern paintings will be exhibited in the East Common Room.

Decorations for the entrance Hall and the corridor are being looked after by the Japanese consul, the Japanese Tourist Association, and the Japan Trade Centre. There will be demonstrations of flower arrangements in the Japanese style.

There are 450 tickets available for the Festival. Byron Hyde (II Premeds), chairman of the Festival and President of the International Students' Organization, said last night there have been over 160 sold to date.

Mr. Hyde continued, "Any other persons from countries other than those already represented who would like to contribute in exhibits or stage performances should contact FROS."

Exhibits will be open to the public at 7.30 p.m. Tickets are $1 each, available from the Ethnic Clubs, FROS, SAC office, and SCM. Refreshments will be served.

Continuing on from where I was so neatly cut off on Monday, I find three sports which might prove interesting to the gate-letes on campus. Skiing, swimming and volleyball.

For the outdoor enthusiasts who enjoy skimming down the slopes over the freshly fallen snow, and for those hopefuls who wish they could do just that instead of stumbling six-sevenths of the way into a snow drift, good news comes from Collingwood!

Instructions are being given GRATIS, each Sunday morning and afternoon to anyone meeting at the barn with ambition and a pair of skis. These instructions are for both beginners wanting to know what skiing is all about, and for old pros wanting to pick up a few pointers.

I think it would be a good idea for all girls planning on entering the interfaculty ski meet being held February 20 and 21 to get out to Collingwood once or twice in the near future to familiarize yourself with the slopes AND the surrounding country.

After all, you wouldn't want to get yourself lost with a medd-man and not be able to find your way back to the men's quarters in which you will be billeted. More about this interesting week-end at a later date.

For those who prefer indoor sports, be it winter or summer, the interfaculty swim meet is quickly approaching.

Finals for the synchronized swimmers will be held January 28, while the preliminaries for the speed and diving events will take place February 1 and the finals for these events will occur February 3. Possibilities for the finals being held at the new pool in the WAB are slim but still alive.

Any girls hoping to enter the meet had better make sure they have the required numbers of practices and also the times for the events in which they intend to swim.

Reaching the tail end of the alphabet, I find the sport in which most coeds will participate this term, volleyball.

The interfaculty teams are prepping for the opening of their schedule which is next week, while the intercollegiate girls are practising hard to try to avenge two earlier defeats at the hands of Western and also to beat the other teams in the intercollegiate volleyball tournament being held at McGill February 12 and 13.

Turning to a sport mentioned last day, Badminton, Sally Meredith, U.C., defeated Ruth Nunns St. Hilda's to win the interfaculty badminton title.

Tonight at the WAB, Archery and Volleyball teams from O.A.C. and McMaster will compete against the teams from U. of T. in an invitational meet.

As a public service to its readers last term, The Varsity Sports Editor produced a sports page totally blank, except for a couple of doodles. Readers could draw on them. They could write essays on them. They could wipe their noses with them. The Varsity Sports Editor would like to know what YOU did with that page. If we get enough interesting ideas, we'll run a full page of them for you. If we don't get any at all, why, we'll run another blank page and give your creativity another chance.

IN IRON ORE... A FUTURE

Well established and stable, the Iron Ore Company of Canada and its Associates are at the same time pressing forward a vigorous development programme of significance to the country. By participating in this growth, a young engineer may hope to use his imagination and resourcefulness while finding the professional satisfaction that is possible in a mature operation.

Operations of the Iron Ore Company of Canada and its Associates include: the open pit mines at Schefferville, Que. (Knob Lake); the complete railroad system of the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway; and the terminal shipping facilities at Sept-Iles, Que., where ore may be moved onto vessels at the rate of 100,000 tons every 24 hours. Among the newest developments of the group is an important mining and beneficiating undertaking, Carol Project, north of Sept-Iles, destined to process 6 million tons of ore a year.

Geologists or engineers—mechanical, electrical, metallurgical, civil and mining—are invited to visit the representatives of the Iron Ore Company of Canada and its Associates when they come to your campus on 21, 22 and 23 January.

BIG ATHLETIC SCHEDULE FRIDAY

THE SPORT of Kings is horsing . . . the sport of commoners is . . . ?

comment by mike chykaliuk

Trying for his sixth successive championship, Jack Kennedy, coach of U of T hockey Blues, was dealt a low blow when it was announced that ace defenceman Neal Munro would no longer play with the team.

Because of mounting pressure Munro was forced to choose between his Law studies or his participation with the hockey Blues. Neil chose the studies.

Kennedy had this to say about this decision; "Neal Munro was one of my best defencemen. His departure leaves a big hole that I don't know how I'm going to fill. However, he is here for an education and I wish him the best of luck with it."

Actually the situation of athletes' quitting their games to concentrate on school work is not new at U of T. Last fall football coach Dalt White also had three top performers, Nick Bruchovsky, Larry Joynt and Gene Chorostecki, sitting out the season for similar reasons.

Why do these athletes allegedly disappoint their teammates and the University of Toronto with such selfish acts?

A look at the requirements of an Intercollegiate competitor may help to explain these deeds.

Most teams practise from one to two hours every day. After a strenuous workout the athlete needs one to three hours more sleep than the average non athlete. If he can not get it at night then he sleeps during lectures.

It is not always possible to leave the game in the arena or gymnasium. The psychological impressions and concerns may last a long time. One may begin reading an exciting Philosophy essay but end up mentally throwing blocks and tackles or scoring more goals than Bertrand Russell has morals.

The day's full schedule (practises, games, sleep, etc.) also curtail the athletes social activities. He may perhaps have one date a week, probably after a contest he has just finished playing in. There aren't too many ladies who enjoy sharing this type of socializing.

With all the time consumed by practises (two to five hours per day) and all the other sacrifices it isn't a wonder that the occasional athlete quits to concentrate on his studies. It is a wonder that anyone competes in Intercollegiate athletics at all.

Oh well, maybe some day a rational human being will invent a game that can be indulged in with out the drudgery of practises (athletic game that is).

Redmen Here Will Feature Athletic Night

Varsity sports fans have their pick of four different sports to watch this Friday night as in addition the league hockey game vs McGill at the Arena, McGill will clash with Toronto in a Senior Intercollegiate basketball game which highlights the third Athletic night of the 1959-60 year.

Other events will see Varsity wrestlers take on Ontario Agricultural College Aggies, while in the pool the senior swim team host Western.

PRELIMINARIES

Preliminary events in the night will see St. Michael's College "A's" playing University College Firsts. This is a rematch of two teams who fought into double overtime the last time they met. The Intermediate swimming team will splash against OAC before the Varsity-Western main event.

JOHN McMANUS' basketball

squad are still looking for their first win in Intercollegiate competition, and if they are to retain any hope of winning the title, the McGill game is a must.

TOGETHERNESS

Blues have only two men who have shown themselves capable of scoring twenty points or more, and if they are to win games, these two must get together.

Peter Potter, veteran guard and Captain, played brilliantly against Western and netted 15 points; but Jim Maguire drew early fouls and had to spend most of the night on the bench.

REVERSAL

Last Friday in the game at McMaster, Maguire was in good form and hit for 23 points, but Potter was "off" and got only four. If these two can get together with adequate help from the likes of Boris Wolchuk, Bob Miner, Mike Muir, Norm Menezel and the others Blues could be a tough team to beat.

The game against Lawrence Tech showed the Blues at their peak, they are bound to hit it again.

REDMEN WEAK

McGill are not expected to be very strong this year, though they did upset a vastly better Varsity team last season and could easily do it again. Their leading scorers are John Moore and John Newsom. Newsom has played ball at Stanford University and is one of several Americans on the team.

Kennedy Looks For Scoring Punch From Three Forward Lines

The Varsity hockey coach is a man with a problem. One of his forward lines is scoring too many goals. Too many that is, in relation to the output of the other two trios.

Of the 26 goals scored by Blues in four league games to date, the "first line" of Jim Murchie, Howie Roth, and John Gatten have scored 17. Defencemen have accounted for four more and the injured John Macdonald three. This means that the others have a grand total of two between them.

BAD INJURY

Much of the trouble stems from the injury to the Captain of the team, John Macdonald. In the only game he played, "Mac" fired three goals himself and helped a linemate get another.

Since then, the remaining two lines have had as many combinations as coach Kennedy has toes. All this is unsettling to players like George Hicken who has the potential to score but hasn't had the opportunity to play with anyone long enough to get used to them.

GOOD DEFENCE

One facet of the team that Kennedy cannot criticize is the stalwart defence. Harry Neale is playing brilliant hockey here, he picked up seven scoring points on the two weekend games, and is now one of the teams leading scorers as well as its most accomplished defenceman.

Able supporting him are Ian Sinclair, who gets better every time out, and the second duo of Gord Epp and Jimmy Simpson. Put a Bobby Giroux behind them in goal and you have the picture of a very complete defence.

ALL-STAR

After several years of obscurity in the shadow of Ray Dunn, it appears that Giroux will probably come into his own as All-Star goalie in his last year at school.

He is well ahead of the other goalies in goal-against average and has registered the only shut-out in the league so far this season. His work has ranged from the terrific to the very good.

ABSENTEE

Kennedy has not received any further word on the status of Neil Munro to date. He is still hopeful of getting the rugged rearguard back for the crucial games ahead with Queen's and Laval.

Notes . . . Howie Roth is the leading scorer to date with seven goals and three assists so far . . . Jim Murchie has five markers as has John Gatten . . . Kennedy said that Neale should have had two more assists in the game against McGill . . . that would have brought his total to five for the game and eight for the two games on the weekend . . . an unusual spurge . . . next home game for the Blues is against OAC on the 3rd of February . . . Laval have a chance to move into first place all alone when they tangle with McGill in Montreal tonight.

Socialism Debate Is Delayed Until Parliament's Half Over

By ALAN WALKER

After 2½ sessions, the University of Toronto Model Parliament finally staggered into the first government bill late last night, an act to establish "public control of the Canadian economy."

Debate on the bill was halted by speaker Gerry Case, and will continue at this afternoon's session.

The CCF bill seeks to bring five Canadian industries and utilities under direct public ownership, the Trans Canada Pipeline Co., The Bell Telephone Co. of Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. and its subsidiary companies, the primary steel industry and the coal industry of Canada.

The bill sets up an "Economic Planning Board" responsible to the Canadian Parliament.

Most of the delay in getting to the bill came from Liberal and Progressive Conservative objections to the bill's form. Liberal Leader Dick Hamilton said the bill contained unprocedural portions. Progressive Conservative member Gordon Ross said it was "incapable of being described as a bill. It can't legally become an act of parliament, and should be withdrawn."

NOT MONEY BILL

The bill makes an allowance of $200,000,000 to the "Public Investment Corporation", and this, Ross and Hamilton argued, put the bill in the form of a money bill which could not have been introduced at that time.

Speaker Case overruled all objections saying the bill was proper "because it does not put a burden on the taxpayer."

Ken Wyman spoke first for the government. He said everyone was expecting the worst in 1961—an economic recession. "We want to bring things about in a rational manner before a crisis," he said.

"We intend to support the co-operative and the small businesses," he said, and added he knew there would be opposition because big business would suffer to some extent. "The Conservatives make no pretence about their love of big business," he said.

LITTLE INTERFERENCE

"We will make sure the nationalized industries are free from day-to-day political interference," he promised, "while being under some degree of parliamentary scrutiny."

Liberal member Allan Barry accused the CCF of living "in a world of illusion" and suggested the government had attempted to "transplant ideas from the very small United Kingdom into a huge country requiring different solutions to different problems."

"National ownership, if it ever had any validity," he added, "has none in Canada." He said the CCF were guilty of

"confused and muddled thinking."

Liberal Leader Hamilton suggested the five companies and utilities were chosen completely at random. "Why nationalize companies like the Trans Canada Pipeline Co.?" he asked. "Why not nationalize the whole pipeline industry?"

Second government speaker, Finance Minister Fred Zeamons, maintained the CCF system of nationalization "would emphasize the individual."

Debate on the bill was halted after Zeamons's speech.

Wednesday's session and the first session yesterday were both taken up with debate on a lengthy speech from the throne.

It outlined the CCF's plans for government and spoke of their election as a "new era" in Canadian political life.

NEW SOCIAL ORDER

"My government's basic objective is not simply the amelioration of present social conditions," Governor-General Joseph McCulley read. "Rather, it is far more vitally concerned with the establishment of a profoundly different social order, rooted in a profoundly different set of social values."

The speech said the CCF government would not allow nuclear weapons or bases on Canadian soil, and that it would forbid the use of any such weapons by Canadian troops in Europe.

A permanent international police force under the United Nations was suggested, and the throne speech said Canada would press for it.

Immediately after the speech from the throne, the CCF government began to put its policies into effect. All Bomarc

Queen's Officials Called Paternalist

KINGSTON (CUP)—Members of two residence committees at Queen's University have resigned in protest of what was termed "unjust and arbitrary" actions of the residence administration following a reversal of a decision of a student court.

The entire student committee of Morris Hall resigned in protests over the administration's action after a recent decision of the McNeil House court.

A lenient view of an offense considered to be of an odious nature—was taken by the court because it felt there were "extenuating circumstances".

The court would have expelled the student from residence for two weeks, and left him on probation for the remainder of the year. However, the house warden, Dr. F. D. Barrett over-ruled this decision, and ordered the student expelled for the rest of the year.

The chairman of the committee and the chief justice of the court then resigned stating, "we cannot accept, both as a matter of conscience, and as a matter of having a meaningful function, being forced to concede all the way to the administration's viewpoint."

Chief Justice Don Fraser told the Queen's Journal that he had attempted unsuccessfully to mediate between staff, and students, and that the refusal of the residence authorities to make any compromise with the student point of view forced him to resign.

An editorial in the Journal also claimed that, "this was only the latest in a series of heavy-handed, paternalistic actions by the residence staff. There would almost seem to be a concerted plan on their part gradually to place more and more childish restrictions on the liberty of the residents."

In a special meeting members of the Morris Hall committee received overwhelming support of the residence for the following course of action:

- (a) resignation from their official positions as defined by the residence constitution;
- (b) reconstruction from their residence as a committee to deal with social functions academic assistance, and all similar matters which are divorced from actual residence discipline.

Wightman Heading Meds Department

Dr. K. J. R. Wightman has been appointed head of the University of Toronto department of medicine, U of T president Claude T. Bissell announced Wednesday night. He succeeds Dr. Ray Farquharson who retires June 30.

Dr. Bissell announced Dr. Wightman will also succeed Dr. Farquharson as Sir John and Lady Eaton professor of medicine. Norman C. Urquhart, Toronto General Hospital chairman simultaneously announced the new department head, now senior physician at the General, will succeed Dr. Farquharson as physician-in-chief.

Keith John Roy Wightman was born at Windsor, Ont., 45 years ago. In 1932, he entered the Faculty of Medicine at University of Toronto and, after winning two scholarships, a fellowship and a gold medal, graduated first in his class in 1937. He took his postgraduate training at the Toronto General Hospital and Cambridge, England.

Dr. Wightman served overseas with the Canadian Army in World War II as a Major, being posted to casualty clearing stations. In 1947, he joined the Faculty of Medicine as an associate and was appointed professor in 1953. He is married with three children.

While Dr. Wightman's interests range through all aspects of medicine, he is known particularly for his studies of the blood. He has a score of publications to his credit, three of the titles being, "Diseases of the Pancreas", "Clinician's Concept of Leukemia", and "Throw Away Those Sulpha Tablets."

Dr. Wightman was chosen to give the lecture in medicine at the annual meeting of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons which opens in Montreal Friday.

SHARE Here After Weekend

SHARE is only a weekend away.

A host of 400 canvassers will descend on the University of Toronto student body in the early days of next week to collect donations for the annual SHARE Campaign.

The U of T objective is $3,500. The money will be used to help the World University Service effect its program of material aid for students and university communities in impoverished areas throughout the world.

"The response from college and faculty convenors is most encouraging," SHARE Campaign Chairman Doug Ward said last night. "Monday should see a record number of canvassers in action in residences, coffee shops and classes," he added.

More than 7,000 pamphlets explaining the program and aims of WUS have been distributed on campus. The pamphlets show the outline of a student refugee, drawn by a Japanese student. The picture has been used extensively in American SHARE Campaigns, and has been incorporated into the posters for the U of T drive.

A pre-campaign donation to SHARE has already been received. Ward said. Chris Gill (III Trin) presented $1.04 to the campaign yesterday, apparently to make bookkeeping difficult, since the U of T objective is "a dollar a scholar". Finance Chairman Ted Tory (III Vic) is now looking for a 96-cent donation.

Varsity Gets Bursaries Shares Stelco's 56 Gs

Fourteen Canadian universities including the University of Toronto will receive undergraduate bursaries valued at $1,000 each under a program of financial assistance announced by the Steel Company of Canada last week.

The program, marking Stelco's 50th anniversary year, will see each university get a bursary a year until, after four years, a maximum 56 bursaries with a $56,000 total value will be outstanding.

The bursaries will involve no restriction in course of study and will give student and university $500 each.

The program also provides for four one-year post-graduate fellowships in metallurgy, each giving $2,000 to the student and $1,000 to the university, the establishment of a chair of metallurgy at McMaster University in Stelco's home town, Hamilton, and eight $2000 cash awards to students in Hamilton and Toronto technological institutes.

Stelco already gives four $2,400 scholarships to students coming from Hamilton and district high schools.

Caledon Weekend

Applications for the World University Service weekend at Caledon to discuss "The Meeting of East and West" close on Monday.

Officials said last night over 20 overseas students and only six Canadians have applied to date for the session from Feb. 5-7.

All speakers are experienced in Far Eastern affairs and maximum discussion time will be allowed. For those who are unable to attend on Friday night, transportation can be arranged for Saturday morning, and the discussion will not begin until after their arrival.

Application forms are available at the Students' Administrative Council office.

Passion Purple

A household science student Wednesday called for the Students' Administrative Council to set up a committee to investigate why Canadian men can't arouse passion in their women.

Mary Muldoon (III SMC) was speaking for the negative in a debate between household science and engineering students on whether "Canadian women lack passion".

The engineering team, supporting the resolution, won. Things are tough all over.

Hey, Kids!

February 9—Dr. James McKeller, Obstetrician on the Staff of Toronto Western Hospital.

February 16—Dr. B. H. McNeel, Chief of the Mental Health Division of the Ontario Department of Public Health.

February 23—Judge Lorne Stewart, Judge of the Juvenile and Family Court of Metropolitan Toronto.

Religion Redefined

Religion was redefined yesterday by Professor J. McCurdy of the Dept. of Philosophy at a meeting of the University of Toronto Humanist Guild.

"Genuine religion has been damaged by a literal interpretation of religious language which has led to ridiculous positions in sociology, morals, biology and other fields," he said. "But religion should not be rejected on that account since it embodies those ideals which men have historically reached for: love and justice. Religion is a metaphor which represents these ideals."

Prof. McCurdy agreed with the humanist that religion is created by men and only by men, and only the symbol of religion is concrete enough to guide all men.

In this respect, religion is a unifying influence, he said.

The other day our vice president in charge of good news announced that someone, somewhere, enjoys Coke 58 million times a day. You can look at this 2 ways:

Either we've got an incredibly thirsty individual on our hands. Or Coca-Cola is the best-loved sparkling drink in the world.

We lean to the latter interpretation.

and Sage missile contracts with the United States were cancelled, and all work on bases in Canada was stopped.

The government also intends to introduce a parliamentary commission to investigate "the hopelessly confused nature of Canada's defence commitments." Red China will be recognized.

Free university tuition will be introduced in bill form, "for all who meet the requisite academic standards."

TRADING STAMPS

The CCFers will "take steps necessary to outlaw the use of trading stamps," will try to ensure that the National Housing Act will "never again permit discrimination on the basis of race, color or creed," and will propose the abolition of capital punishment.

The House will be asked to subsidize the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. to such an extent that there will be no necessity for paid advertising, the throne speech continued.

First speaker on the speech from the throne was CCF Prime Minister Jerry Caplan.

He said there was a shocking social order in Canada. "We spend 50 per cent more on whiskey and tobacco than on education," he said, "and twice as much on cars."

He said it was a shame to think that Canada's "brightest young men" were entering the field of advertising to "prey on irrational elements."

Caplan attacked the "cynical and opportunistic worship of the profit motive" which he said existed in Canada today, and expressed confidence in the concept of socialism with the rider: "Idealistic? No doubt. Impossible? Perhaps."

Caplan said the socialists recognize "the futility of trying to change old parties from within." He blasted the Liberal's activities in connection with the pipeline scandal, and the "discriminatory immigration policies" of the present government.

"This pathetic list could go on all night," he said.

"We are a considerable distance from the goal of a real, full democracy," he concluded, "and until we reach the goal, there will always be a role for the socialist. We are working towards a better society based on social justice and the real brotherhood of man."

"PSEUDO-MORALITY"

Progressive Conservative leader Murray Corlett summed up the CCFers with three words: "Pretension, ineptness and extravagance." He accused the CCF government of "pseudo-morality," suggested their legislation was "untimely" and criticized the speech from the throne for not dealing adequately with the problems of trade and inflation.

"The speech was not filled with half-truths, Mr. Chairman," Corlett said. "We do not call them that. They're lies."

"The CCF proposes castle in the air, and then attempts to live in them," he said.

He termed the proposed CCF legislation "inept, incompetent legislation which flagrantly violates the rights of parliament."

In conclusion, Corlett reminded his listeners the voters had placed the CCF in their present position of power. He said they did so "at their own peril."

Liberal leader Dick Hamilton said the government has no right to outlaw trading stamps, and that such action should be left to the provincial courts. He suggested that if the CBC were made commercial-free, the quality of the programs would suffer to such an extent that viewers would simply turn to American television and radio.

STATE SOCIALISM

Hamilton said it is "hypocritical to suggest that all businessmen are completely greedy and should be removed from their positions." He said it was entirely possible that businessmen were a good deal more moral than politicians.

Regarding the basic ideals of socialism, Hamilton said "we're not against socialism," and then after loud applause, added, "but we are against state socialism."

An otherwise weighty series of comments took a turn for the lighter side when Minister of Labor Larry Zolf (SGS) almost got himself into hot water by saying "as an ex-convict." It was suggested that procedural rules do not allow an ex-convict to sit in the legislature.

EXAGGERATED

Zolf admitted his statement was "slightly exaggerated," and Chairman Gerry Case allowed him to continue.

Zolf acidly called the Premier of Newfoundland "Benito Smallwood," and said there hadn't been too much applause for him recently. Liberal members Ed Roberts (III Vic) and Doug Peppiatt (III Trin) began to pound their desks wildly.

"Ah, two fishermen out of jobs," Zolf remarked. He went on to say the CCF party was not opposed to capitalism, either, only to "state capitalism."

A private bill introduced by Liberal Clare Lewis and strongly supported by Roberts and Peppiatt on the relation between Newfoundland and the Canadian government was talked out in yesterday's first session.

Peppiatt said the danger of the present system of grants to Newfoundland lay in the fact that "Diefenbaker can cut off the money any time the whim crosses his mind. I want to make sure the people get the money they were promised."

Roberts asked, "Is a vision-crazed politician going to be allowed to betray his sacred trust and set aside the constitution of Canada?"

In an earlier session, Roberts referred to Prime Minister Diefenbaker as a "traitor" and then apologized for using the word, "even though I meant it."

Another private bill introduced in Wednesday's session by John Boudry, the PC Whip, asked that the grounds for divorce be widened to include cruelty, desertion, permanent insanity and sexual perversion. It was also talked out.

SECOND CHOICE

Boudry said the present divorce laws were the "primary cause of suicide, and perhaps murder." He said people should be allowed a second choice in marriage if their first choice wasn't to their liking.

Liberal member Casey Wood Jr. said "this bill will encourage irresponsible young couples to plunge into marriage." He painted a grim picture of "dances on Sundays, gambling casinos and slot machines littering the streets" arising out of the bill.

PC Leader Murray Corlett introduced the expected motion of non-confidence in the CCF government. It was defeated 50-47, the parties voting in blocs. The CCF party snapped to its collective feet in a body. The PCs stood in favor of the motion, and were followed by the Liberals who shuffled to their feet after a long look at the PCs.

A motion of non-confidence in the speaker, introduced by the Liberals, was also defeated, with most of the PCs abstaining in protest to a late adjournment.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR

Actuarial Students Summer or Permanent Work

SUMMER PROGRAM

Positions are available for students considering an actuarial career.

Assignments are in the Actuarial Department or closely related fields.

Classes in life insurance are held weekly and company executives discuss their fields.

QUALIFICATIONS

Applicants should have good academic records, particularly in mathematics. Actuarial work should not be considered by a student who is primarily interested in theoretical mathematics.

SALARY SCALE

Undergraduates, $249 to $325 monthly depending on year. Graduates, $5,044 annually. Higher starting salary for those who have completed Society of Actuaries examinations.

LOCATION

Summer work — usually in Newark, New Jersey. Permanent work — either in Newark or Toronto.

Employment representatives will visit U. of T. on MONDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1960. Arrange an interview through your Placement Officer.

and many happy returns

When we first began hearing about Stephen Truscott, he was 14 years old. We notice in yesterday's newspapers that he has turned 15.

We also notice that the compassionate courts have seen fit to reduce the sentence of this clearly mentally ill boy convicted of rape and murder, from execution to life imprisonment.

Happy birthday, Stephen.

tautological

A news report from Washington informs us that "the United States today indicated it would favor including China in a worldwide disarmament program."

The mind reels under the force of such a devastating piece of logic.

A distinguished panel of architects, including Edouard Jeanneret, better known as Le Corbusier, did not desecrate tradition and the contributions of his predecessors.

The panel, composed of Professor of Architecture and Archaeology, Professor Gordon Sam Planning, Mr. A. S. Mathers, Architect, Dr. Thomas Howard, Director of the School of Architecture, and Le Corbusier, made a contribution made by Corbusier to his school.

Le Corbusier, who was born in Switzerland, pioneered the movement in the manner of building. He tried to develop a prototype of the United Nations Building.

300 HH Sunday Evening

By DAVE STEIN

This Sunday, at 8.30 the Hart House will sponsor the 300th Sunday Evening Concert. Featured soloist for the evening will be the noted Canadian Violinist.

Although still in her mid-twenties, Hagen has given European tours and has appeared as the Concertgebouw of Amsterdam, the Romande in Geneva and the New York Philharmonic in 1952 she was chosen the foremost violinist in the Commonwealth.

When the first Hart House was built in 1922 there were no students to enjoy good music. The first fidelity records were still a vague memory and the orchestra gave six one hour performances a week.

The original concerts were intended for students. The musicians often had to have an audience, and students had to get tickets to hear the music.

For almost twenty years, the Hart House String Orchestra has been a world-famous Hart House String Orchestra.

As the free Sunday Evening Concert, the Hart House programme, the Hart House String Orchestra began to grow up, and from these informal evenings and from these informal Club grew up.

Dr. Ettore Mazzolini, principal of the orchestra, when his wife, Mrs. Innis became ill, he took over the orchestra.

He still recalls the first time he conducted. Fresh from studying with Dr. Mazzolini came striding in, rolled up his shirtsleeves and played "songster" the venerable Hart House String Orchestra.

All went well until after the first concert. He took him quietly aside and told him that he was enjoyable but it would be appreciated if he conducted with his jacket on.

Removing one's jacket in public is considered a disgrace.

The twenty-eight year history of the Hart House String Orchestra presents a record that will be a valuable addition to the magnificent Gothic setting of the Hart House. The commercial red-tape great artists have been replaced by those which they wanted to play, not those who were asked to play.

Dr. Healey Willan, the greatest Canadian conductor, conducted his singers in a Christmas concert in 1922. Sir Ernest MacMillan was the Music Committee and he was recently in November.

For many years the Hart House String Orchestra has been a conductor's dream. Rowland Pack, the conductor in September, will lead the orchestra to return Michigan State's concert.

Betty-Jean Hagen will be the soloist in a difficult programme. Tickets are available free of charge. They are welcome, if escorted.

L'Araba Fenice

by Elmo Ciprietti

● The Saturnalia is over now for most people; but there are some, in whose number we find ourselves, who would invoke some Shade or Memory to heighten the activity of the common day. At a recent chance meeting with our friend Edoardo Monterosso, of New York and Toronto, we discussed the coming Festival of Isis and resolved to celebrate it according to the true meaning of the feast. We immediately discarded the plain suggestion, "Put the 'I' back into Isis", and agreed to consult the Ordo Isis; this, we were soon distressed to find, said nothing about the true spirit of the feast.

We soon decided that the season was not festive in the least. Had not my demented great-aunt perished on the Adriatic the same day we heard about Albert Laburde and his ride to Paris? Was it not the third anniversary of Tosca's death? A Requiem party seemed to be the obvious need. We gathered, played Requiem by Mozart, Verdi and Cherubini, read the last pages of The Stranger and consumed a totally unwarranted quantity of Irish Whiskey.

One of the guests brought to light how extremely chic it was that Mr. Ajzenstat's editorial on M. Camus was virtually duplicated in the notices that both The New Yorker and, if you will pardon the mention, Time magazine gave to the accident.

● Riding up to Eaton's Seventh Floor to hear tenor Ernst Haefliger in the Auditorium one afternoon this week I realized that the gentleman I had accidentally struck with my briefcase when I boarded the lift was none other than Mr. Schiotz, the recent soloist with our little orchestra at Hart House. The indecency of speech in a crowded lift limited our communication to facial pleasantries, but we met later browsing through the Karl May exhibit.

Mr. May, whose works cover the entire Seventh Floor Gallery has a fascination for repeating himself. His painting "One Flamingo" sprays vermilion on the viewer; his painting "Two Flamingos" does the same, twice. "One Eskimo" makes the viewer want to have a chest X-ray; "Two Eskimos" made us want to hear some consumptive arias — so we went in to hear Herr Haefliger.

Ernst Haefliger, a Swiss gentleman of parts, of prominence, has a delicate tenorino voice, reminiscent of the Gigli-Tagliavini school for the beauty of its planissimi and the lightness of the supple high range. The Classical Italian art songs which he chose to sing displayed his intimate musicality: an elegance of interpretation and delivery supported by ideal breath control. With belcanto and virtuosity combined in his voice, he was meant to sing Mozart—nothing else. His greatness was summarized when he sang K. 431, Miserere o signor! Why he bothered with the leider and the art songs I'll never know. This concert aria has everything Mr. Haefliger should have cared to show us: a fine declamatory recitative lasting about five minutes, a section of sublime lyrical tenderness, a few stentorian

Le Corbusier has been a leader in the world of architecture steadily since he began designing in 1914; in one way and another, he has had significant influence on just about every school of architecture worth mentioning. A show consisting of some of his architectural models, designs and sketches is this year being circulated across Canada by the Canada Council, and it is at present on view at the Reference Library, St. George and College Sts. The panel generally felt that Corbusier had a "sneaky regard for tradition more than a disregard for it" and "he was a peculiar mixture of great artist and engineer".

Mr. Mathers felt, however, that "Corbusier, in writing books about himself, showed the egotism of a politician and claimed things he didn't invent. He never mentions Max Dunning who was a great help to him. Mr. Grossman countered: "His greatest contribution came about because he blew his own trumpet. Otherwise," he said, "we wouldn't have the few buildings erected after the war."

Professor Vickers commenting on the continuity of Corbusier's work and preceding architecture said "a chapel he had designed looked like a decorated grotto which used pagan religion as a basis rather than Christian".

Mr. Grossman added, "He was particularly struck by the contrast of the modern urban glass buildings and rough mortar, hewn log and sod type sophisticated buildings designed by Le Corbusier."

"Why put a sod roof on a sophisticated building?" questioned Mr. Mathers. "I think this is pure unadulterated exhibitionism," he said. "Why go back to log cabins; they are poor buildings—if they weren't we'd still be living in them."

Mr. Mathers also criticized the glass walled edifices created by Corbusier, and said, "15 years before glass walled structures were

A Re-Review

The play in question, James Reaney's THE KILLDEER, is closing out its run at the Coach House Theatre (200 Bedford Road) with performances tonight, tomorrow and Sunday nights at 8:30 p.m. For a reservation call Miss Mary Smart, 71 Howland Ave., at WA. 2-6896.

Dear Sir:

I write in anger. I have just been reading, twice, Mr. Adelman's review—if that is the word—of The Killdeer. I must suppose that he was at the theatre, since he claims to have seen Mr. Cohen being "impolite", and the story sounds probable, though Mr. Cohen's bad manners are neither news nor relevant. But what play did he think he was seeing? The play he is "reviewing" is not the one that was acted; at best it is a coarse and ignorant parody of The Killdeer.

Of course the play has faults, some major ones: one could have been spared the piranhas and some odd leftover gruesomeness, and the last scene should have been set anywhere but in a courtroom, but this is curable stuff, mechanics. But Mr. Adelman does not recognize a dramatist when he finds one. He writes of "stale satire", "gross exaggerations of psychotics", "lack of any conflict", lack of "honest emotion". I can only assume that he was far more interested in writing an attack than he was in seeing the play. That the speeches are beautifully speakable, taut, proportioned, almost carrying themselves, and a brilliant fusion of poetry and the plain Ontario voice, this seems to have missed his ear completely. As for lack of conflict, did Mr. Adelman even realize what was going on in the scene of antiphonal fencing between Harry and the Jailor's wife? In the dead quiet of the tug-of-war between Eli and his guardian? In the scene of temptation and defiance between Harry and the hangman? Or the struggle to the centre of things between the two young men in the last act? To take only a few scenes at random?

If your reviewer cannot recognize in Mr. Reaney the presence of a genuine dramatist who may still need a bit more practice and some self-editing, but who has emerged from his apprenticeship in one play and who has, already, everything that he and his theatre need, then he has no business parading his ignorance and insensitivity before us.

The Killdeer is already, even with its mistakes (and the real mistakes he seems again not to have noticed) a good play, and it is within an ace of being a superb one. There are few Canadian playwrights who can shape the individual scene as Mr. Reaney can, and none, perhaps, with a more sensitively accurate ear; none who can so riddle the ordinary with strangeness and terror and the extraordinary and still keep it in the honour and integrity of its commonness.

I do not have to defend the blood-bath of horror from which the story springs, or the assured growth to their own centre which the characters undergo, or even the odd tangle of love, chance, outrage and old integrity by which a forgiveness somewhat more convincing than Prospero's emerges at the end: the play's astounding compassion takes care of all of that. But then compassion is hardly what Mr. Adelman seems to want. He seems to regret that he cutting-up of bodies takes place offstage: has he learned nothing about plays from the killing of another kind of bird on-stage in Miss Julie?

cruelty with a purpose

Recently a Toronto newspaper published a spread of photographs of young children. One photo shows a luckless youngster with tears streaming down his face, obviously in agony. It might be a cute photo, except for the way in which it was taken. First, the photographer made it clear that "not all child studies should be laughing. It is natural for children to cry and show their emotions." The mother was apparently convinced, because she said slyly, "It was easy to make him cry; we just took away his toy." Why, certainly.

banality, or how to write an am&d review

"Dave Brubeck Plays the Bach Festival" is a live concert taped by Columbia at Prades, France last summer at the annual Bach memorial music extravaganza, organized by Sol Hurok. There are sides to Brubeck brought out in this album that I have never heard before. Critics love to speak harshly about Brubeck's borrowings from Bach, and they say what he plays as a result isn't jazz. But what Dave and the boys played at Prades is jazz and then some.

The first important thing about this album is the instruments the group use. Dave pounds out his aetrical chunks of sound on a harpsichord with full pedal clavier. Morello finally went all the way East and plays nothing but water gourds. Joey Benjamin (still their bassist, which establishes some sort of record for a bassist's sticking with Dave), plays a cello for the occasion, and Paul Desmond takes a crack at the English Horn.

Most striking track on the album is one which takes up most of the first side, Bach's first English Concerto. Dave plays exactly what Bach wrote, but moves the right hand in 3/4 time and the left in 4/4 giving the concerto a sound totally unlike anything it had before. Paul breaks in every so often with swinging riffs, harmonizing carefully but contrapuntally with the original Bach charts. All in all they get a real jazz sound with Dave's fiercely ragged, (although always logical), chords, and Paul's long melodic line. The rhythm section of the two Joes lays down a solid beat behind Johann's harmonies and tremolos.

All I hope is that this fine group doesn't succeed in bringing classical music and jazz so close together that they pass each other.

marriage marriage on the wall

On page two of this issue there is an article about a marriage seminar to be held at Knox College. The lineup of speakers, when taken overall and in order, supplies a rather frightening picture of marriage. The first speaker is the principal of Knox, who can presumably give some sort of moral basis to a marriage. The second speaker is an obstetrician. This is logical. But with the last two speakers, there are several very unpleasant connotations to the whole idea of marriage. One is a judge of a juvenile and family court. If that doesn't put you off marriage, the other speaker might have a better chance. He's an expert on mental health.

supply and demand

Just before press time I got a call from SAC President Walter McLean who spotted a sign on Whitney Hall women's residence he thought was worth mentioning. "We're doing it now," the sign read, "while men and materials are available." Surely there must be more subtle ways of advertising the fact.

sororities again

It's interesting to know the National Federation of Canadian University Students has taken it upon themselves to recognize University of Toronto fraternities and sororities. On their little brochure issued to delegates, and filled with goodies like free city maps and free Varsitys, are several "acknowledgements", among them "Men's Fraternities of the University" and "Women's Fraternities (sic) of the University."

canadian jazz magazine

Canadians have their own jazz magazine, something I didn't know until The Varsity's jazz reviewer Peeter Sepp mentioned it to me. It's called Coda, is issued monthly, has 30 pages and few ads, and sells for the phenomenal price of 15 cents. A traditional jazz fan, John Norris, heads up the small operation here in Toronto, but he has correspondents in many Canadian towns and cities, as well as in several United States border points. The January issue, besides having the reports of the local doings, carries a few good features, record and jazz book reviews. Have a look at it. It's in the University Bookstore.

moments of brave resolve, and a true finale: molto pomposo, entirely predictable. Of course, I had to stay until the Mozart, but not being able to listen to anything after it, I made an inglorious exit, turned back to Karl May.

• The opening paragraphs of my review of Sunday's HHOA concert were printed in the last issue by my otherwise faithful and capable assistant Mr. Peter Brawley. Anticipating my wrath, he signed it Anon. Had he taken the trouble to inquire after me at local taverns, Mr. Schlotz's artistry and Dr. Neel's complete understanding of Edward Greig would not have gone unsung.

• The recording session for Katy Cruel at the CFRB Studios last Tuesday produced what several cast members later at the KCR called the best performance ever. The results will soon be available on a 12" L.P. which will sell for a mere four dollars. Hopes that the show would continue at Hart House were dashed because of previous bookings. A rumour circulated that the folk opera would move off campus in March has not yet brought the required financial support for such an endeavor. Katy Cruel will rank as one of the greatest accomplishments of Canadian musical theatre when the music receives professional treatment and is adequately heard.

• More Briefly Noted

We have yet to thank Toke Oike for the hilarious spoof of an AM&D centre spread in their Christmas issue. Ed Chaffer's expose of a new art medium "interpresnik" really makes a little more sense artistically than our friends at Skule realise. Scientific principles have, in fact, been the basis for a lot of modern art. "TSO . . . so . . . so . . ." directed against our reviews of symphony concerts was very well written and in spite of the slurs on our person, we invite the author to offer his services to the true AM&D. ***** St. Michael's SAC has recently come up with a plebeian solution for getting people to attend their At Home . . . Tickets are free for the asking . . . imagine wearing white tie to an event with no admission charge! ***** L'araba fenice — the arabian phoenix — is mentioned but not seen in the first act of Mozart's Così Fan Tutte — Mozart's symbolic concern for its existence produced a great work of art. We think we've found it and this column should sometimes throw some light on the subject.

banned in the United States because they leaked." He said, "Corbusier was still writing books on how to build glass walls when the construction was proved to be wrong. He should have known it wouldn't work but he liked it aesthetically."

Prof. Stephenson challenged this and said, "this building was an experiment and although the people inside may have been a little uncomfortable they were proud of it." He added, "Canadian buildings are very comfortable and very ugly."

There are many possibilities for city planners in the work of Le Corbusier, said Prof. Stephenson. "Although his views for urban living are rather limited, he is a theorist who can't be overlooked or forgotten. Whether the people on upper Avenue Road ever heard of him or not, they were influenced by him."

Mr. Grossman said the state of modern architecture today "is very sad". Changing technology and continually changing material have produced a confused period."

McGill Goalie On View As Redmen Play

When McGill Redmen step on the ice tonight to play the Varsity Blues, they will be featuring the most battered goalkeeper in captivity.

Alex Herron just managed to live through the games with Blues last year, but how nobody is quite sure. Those who watched the games last season will remember that Blues had a hard shooting squad, and even handling 20 shots a game was quite a task for any goalie.

Poor old Herron had the magnificent record of stopping 252 blasts in the four games between the traditional rivals. During this span he allowed 49 goals. Thus he had to contend with an average of 75 shots a game.

Most goalies don't have that much work in four games. He managed to come through the battering creditably however. This year has not been as good for the little redhead, he allowed eight goals when Blues played in Montreal last weekend, but with both he and Varsity's Bob Giroux in form, fans should be treated to some topnotch goaltending tonight.

Blues will be led by the high scoring trio of Jim Murchie, Howie Roth, and John Gatten. Gatten and Murchie are the heaviest men on the team, both tip the scales at better than 210 lbs (they wouldn't reveal the exact figures) while Roth is the lightest at about 145. Despite this, Roth has more goals (7) than either of his linemates.

Laval are now four points ahead of Varsity.

JIM MAGUIRE, Blues' leading scorer will be on hand when Varsity host McGill in an intercollegiate Basketball game tonight. Blues are looking for their first win. (VSP by Burns)

Basketball Blues Host McGill In Highlight Of Athletic Night

The McGill Redmen will be the guests of the Varsity Blues Basketball team tonight as they play in the third intercollegiate game of the 1959 season at Hart House at 8:30.

The Toronto team is in a do-or-die position as they have already dropped their first two games of the season.

Blues will be in top form for the game and quite a match is in store.

McGill Redmen have, as in the past, had a relatively weak team that is supplemented by Americans. Guard Dave Boyd, who hails from Central Washington College, and Don Bishop from University of California are examples. The team also has several veterans back who will add to the starting five.

Toronto will not have to contend with problem of height as the big man on the floor will probably be Jim Maguire the teams top scorer, who measures 6'5". With players such as Pettey Potter, Mel Cohen, Dan Norman and Norm Menzel to boot the chances of a Varsity win are good.

At practice last night the team was in particularly high spirits and Coach John McManus promised that a few surprises would be in store for the McGill team.

It will be the game for Varsity and also for McGill for they are in the limited schedule which makes every game a must for them.

Swimmers Meet With Mustangs

Varsity swimmers square off tonight at Hart House with the University of Western Ontario in an attempt to avenge a 62-37 defeat suffered at the hands of the Mustangs late last season.

Coach Marius Van Nooten and his squad have been hard hit by graduation and academic failures, but still figured to put up a good battle against the Purple People.

Three Canadian Olympic prospects, Bob Fisher, Marv Chappelle, and Wally Unger, will be in action for Blues, and may well be the reason Varsity upset the powerful Western squad.

Western, incidentally, is coached by Canada's Olympic coach, John Faulkner and boast a few Olympic prospects of their own. It should be a high calibre meet, and one of the most important to be seen in the Hart House pool this season.

Another factor that points to a Varsity upset is the edge that divers George Huovinen and Gary Logan hold over their Mustang counterparts. Huovinen and Logan recently placed first and second respectively in the Toronto Open Diving Championships.

Varsity Intermediates face the newly formed OAC team in the preliminary event and look to be easy winners. Some of those expected to play a big part in any victory are Dave McIntyre, Bob Patterson, Kim Moore and Jim Sheoff.

Van Nooten has been training his teams hard for these matches as they are in a sense the intercollegiate rehearsals.

Notes . . . Three Varsity swimmers, John Deacon, Bob Fisher, and Marv Chappelle will take part in the All-Star Swimming meet in Hamilton tomorrow . . . they will represent Canada against the US . . . along with Wally Unger, they are rated likely candidates for the Olympics at Rome next summer.

Letters To The Editor...

Dear Mr. Sports Editor:

I noticed in the Wednesday issue of the Varsity, a small announcement inviting readers to comment on what they did with the blank page produced in lieu of a sports page last term.

I should first like to offer "Kudos" to the sports department for originating this novel idea. Now, if only the news, AM&D, features, and editorials departments will follow suit, we will have a more interesting and more controversial Varsity.

I do, however, have a few suggestions for further improvements to the newspaper. First I believe it would be a good idea to do away with the doodles. While they do have a great deal more originality and clarity than the photographs usually published in the Varsity, the ink they are doodled with has an unfortunate tendency to run. My second suggestion is to neatly perforate the pages into eight handy rectangular sections. Not only would this do away with the need for a Masthead executive but your shortage of reporters would be solved. All that would be necessary to put out a good Varsity would be a group of sweet old ladies gaily punching holes in sheets of paper 'til the wee hours of the morning. I don't think it necessary to add that this would also do away with such lame excuses as broken down presses and dribbling and plopping.

Please continue to keep up the good work.

Yours, while waiting for the first twelve page issue,
Zarry Erman (UC)

Dear Sir:

You wanted to know what I did with your page, your beautiful empty page? Oh, it was wonderful! You can't imagine what I did with it. It was such a lovely idea I had for putting it to use! Marvellous, marvellous thought, it was, putting that page in The Varsity.

I can't thank you enough. Oh poetry! Oh life! Oh, it was just too, too much for me! Aaargh . . .

Trudy Cowan, I P&OT

CCF Bloc Vote Sweeps Clean

By ALAN WALKER

The CCF party stood as one man at the last session of the University of Toronto Model Parliament.

Government measures to establish public control of the Canadian economy and to cut back Canada's "military" defence were passed, in spite of strong opposition Friday.

Debate picked up where it left off Thursday, in the middle of discussion of the controversial act to nationalize several Canadian industries and utilities as part of a program to establish public control over the Canadian economy.

A move by Progressive Conservative leader Murray Corlett to stop the debate by adjourning to consider inflation "as a matter of major and immediate concern" was checked.

PC member Craig Ross renewed the opposition's attack on the CCF bill by saying "organized labor cannot withstand the change from capitalist to commissar. This bill makes tyranny inevitable."

He said the PCs had always believed in and fought for a national policy, but added: "We had a business policy made up by businessmen. The labor policy was left to labor, and the state policy was left to the statesmen."

Ross lashed out at the individual members of the government across from him, calling the front benchers "faddists and fanatics."

He said the British people elected the Labor party in 1945 and were rewarded with "six years of planned poverty, woe, waste and weakness."

The Study Secretary of the Student Christian Movement of Canada, a man who considers capitalism and Christianity irreconcilable, will speak to University of Toronto students tomorrow.

Rev. Vincent Goring will talk to the campus Socialist Forum on "Christianity and Socialism".

Talk is at 4:30 in Room 14, Victoria College.

Bob Morgan of the Liberals continued the attack. He termed the CCFers "the avant-garde of the JCR" and said the effects of a socialist government in Canada would be "increased costs, political interference, corruption, red tape and restriction of the progress of the Canadian economy."

Harvey Schwartz, Minister of Co-operatives, defended his party's bill as not being "just nationalization. No longer will the decision of a few corporate investors determine the pattern of Canadian investment," he said. "The will of the few will be replaced by the will of the people."

The parliament then moved into the committee of the whole to allow free discussion. A Liberal amendment to strike "the coal industry of Canada" from the list of industries to be nationalized was defeated. The Liberals tried again, this time with an amendment that the nationalization be approved in principle only, until investigation should determine how the concerns might best be taken over.

CCF leader Jerry Caplan said he had no objections to such an amendment, and it was carried.

Liberal leader Dick Hamilton asked the Tukanan's General Store be added to the list of concerns to be nationalized, "because this fits in perfectly with the haphazard planning with which this bill was drawn up." He said the store was inefficient and that it was being run by "horrible profit-seeking capitalists."

CCF Minister of Economic Planning Ken Wyman leaped to his feet and attacked the Liberal amendment as "typical smear campaign. We are not aiming at the small businessmen, only at those powerful people without responsibility," he said.

Tukanan's General Store was not added to the list.

The legislature moved out of the committee of the whole, and Phil Goulston took up the Liberal cudgel. He asked the members to consider the bill "rationally" and suggested the nationalization of the coal industry would lead to "a real monopoly." He said the companies listed could not all be accused of making excess profits, and quoted figures showing the Trans Canada Pipeline

ANGRY Eugenio Moore (III UC) lashes out at a Liberal stand that Canada should not participate in a United Nations vote to censure South Africa's apartheid policies. Liberals held that Canada should work through the Commonwealth before voting in the UN. ## Controller Wants a Nickel Back On His Beer Bottle

A member of Toronto's Board of Control told a group of socialists last night a five-cent refund on beer bottles "would bring every one of these bottles back to the brewery where they belong".

Controller William Dennison was speaking at a meeting sponsored by the University of Toronto Socialist Forum in conjunction with the Toronto Labor Forum on the subject of Civics. He recalled that "recently a skin diver in Lake Simcoe brought up $82 worth of empty beer bottles in one day from a favorite winter fishing spot, where the bottom of the lake was literally knee-deep in bottles—broken or otherwise."

Mr. Dennison wanted city council to oppose the increase in beer prices authorized by the Liquor Control Board of Ontario which he felt amounted to "taxation by commission".

Controller Dennison was also concerned with the winter unemployment situation and said "even though the winter works program has been allotted $800,000 the system isn't as good as it sounds". He said, "Premier Frost and Prime Minister Diefenbaker have laid down the rule that a man can't just be unemployed, but must be on relief before he can apply for work."

Mr. Dennison said he has had many welfare cases come to him recently and mentioned one humorous incident. He said, "A man came to me the other day who had been recently released from Burwash. He complained that, while his wife and children were getting relief, the Department of Welfare refused to give him relief."

"So I called the department and they got out their file on the gentleman." Mr. Dennison continued. "It seems that it wasn't his wife and children after all. She was married to someone else and his real wife had run off with another man."

"As a result I learned that the Department of Welfare has a rule that common-law spouses have to be together at least a year before they can go on relief."

St. Mike's Resignations

Tom Sutherland (II SMC) last night said he resigned as Fine Arts Chairman of the St. Michael's College Students' Administrative Council because he felt the "council was using me as a scapegoat".

His letter of resignation was received by council Jan. 12, a week after a council meeting had voted no confidence in Sutherland and then refused his proposal that it accept his resignation.

The dispute involved rewriting of the script of the annual SMC musical by someone outside St. Mike's. Sutherland said council blamed him for the rewrite although he would have taken action if the council had asked him to.

Cathy Higgins (SMC Western Year) was named Fine Arts Chairman to succeed Sutherland.

Fred Dreger, formerly publicity manager of the SMC Music Guild and manager of the SMC Glee Club, both fine arts function, last night said he had resigned from these positions in sympathy with Sutherland.

James Fontana (III SMC) who reigned in mid-October as co-producer of the SMC musical, "Mickities", said he felt Sutherland was unfairly dealt with. "I feel there was personal mudslinging by members of the council," he said.

Private cars are acceptable, but candidates are advised to bring pencils, paper, dependable watches, navigators and lunches.

Wild Queen's Parties

KINGSTON (CUP) — A resident of the Queen's University area has complained that noisy student parties, some going on until 4 a.m., are slashing property values in the neighborhood.

This is the claim of J. C. Desterre, who asked Kingston's court of revision to lower his assessment.

Students living near his home whoop it up most of the nights on weekends, and property values are taking a nose-dive, Mr. Desterre said. Judgment on the appeal was reserved.

The appeal was one of 900 expected to come before a three-man court which is determining if Kingston's recent assessment increase of $10,000,000 is warranted.

Substituting Two Of AVR Leads

Two of the male leads in "Christopher Jones" have been replaced during the past month. All-Varsity Revue officials said last week.

At a rehearsal last week, Robin Barron, male dancer and comic lead, fell and fractured his ankle.

The fall occurred during a stunt Barron was performing for the cast during a rehearsal break.

He has been replaced by professional dancer and actor Jerry Clyde.

Choreographer Clifford Collier said, "Though their styles are not similar, Clyde is a natural comedian like Barron, and I feel that with his former theatrical and dancing experience, Clyde can easily step into the comic lead."

In December Deane Hutchinson who was scheduled to play the title role, dropped out of the show due to illness. He was replaced by John Harasti, who has trained with the Chord Theatre, the University Alumni, and the West End Players.

Director Barry Callaghan said, "Harasti's experience which includes four productions with the University College Drama Guild, SAC's '57 musical show "Finian's Rainbow", the touring production of "Wry and Ginger", and roles with summer stock have well qualified him to play Christopher Jones."

Secondary female lead Ruth McKenzie was also struck by illness in December. She underwent surgery for acute appendicitis over the holidays and has just returned to full rehearsals.

Tickets for "Christopher Jones", scheduled for the week of February 8-13, go on sale Monday through Friday, January 25-29. The following week, February 1-5, tickets will be sold at the Hart House box office.

New Vigor In Fund Drive

The University of Toronto national fund now stands at $11,243,906, but still is far short of its minimum goal of $12,600,000 to finance a five-year expansion program.

Neil J. McKinnon, campaign co-chairman released the figure last week and commented industry and commerce have contributed $8,120,000 representing two-thirds of the total. He said the drive had dwindled off during the holiday season, but was now being renewed with vigor.

Corporate response to the campaign has been from every field and size of industry. Mr. McKinnon said, "I believe this is a true reflection of the concern for, and support of, higher education in Canada by the business community." Eleven thousand companies have donated so far. M. Wallace McCutcheon, co-chairman of the fund, called the response of Canadian affiliates of United States companies "most encouraging."

Company had a net loss last year.

Conlton asked the CCF to prove exploitation of the workers had taken place in any of the industries or companies, and insisted nationalization "offers no guarantee to end exploitation of the workers."

PC leader Murray Corlett had the last crack at the bill before the vote. He said state monopoly was the CCF goal. "Competition is the CCF's enemy, not monopoly," he said.

Conlton said the CCF was a party of "division and hate," and suggested the bill was "an immediate threat to our economic freedom and an eventual threat to our political freedom as well. We do not believe in collectivism," he concluded, "we believe in community."

PC member Jim Baillie made another attempt to delay the vote and Speaker Jerry Casagrande finally ruled he was "obstructing the business of the house."

The vote was held, and the government was victorious.

In spite of a plea by External Affairs Minister Steve Lewis that the foreign affairs debate be conducted with "dignity" and that all speakers be allowed a chance to have their say, course of the debate was interrupted several times.

Lewis said that the CCFers be given a fair chance to debate socialism.

He said there was a "positive moral duty to socialize" and attacked Lester Pearson's policies on external affairs which allowed "3,250,000 Indians to starve to death in 1953 when Canada's wheat surplus was 382,500,000 bushels."

"As socialists, we passionately reject these policies," Lewis said.

"SHOCKING AFFRONT"

He said the Conservatives had contributed only $2,000,000 to alleviate the situation, "a shocking affront to human needs. We are going to give one per cent of our gross national product to people who need it," he said. "We do not prize morality."

Lewis said what was even "more unforgivable" was Canada's consistent refusal since 1945 to condemn the South African apartheid racial policy. He said a similar situation existed because of Canada's refusal to recognize Red China, "a demonstration of wholesale servitude to the colossal absurdity of the United States policies."

PC member Del O'Brien called the CCFers "pseudo-superior humanitarians" and spoke of the "schizophrenic nature of socialist policies."

O'Brien said the CCF policies were a "latent contradiction of modern socialism," that socialism was "an escape from reality" and the CCF members were "political beatniks."

Liberal member Gerry Godsoe followed along the same lines, accusing the CCFers of moral cowardice. "It is most difficult to implement such a bill," he said, "because it is most impracticable. It is drawn almost verbatim from a suggestion put forward by the Soviet Union in the United Nations."

The CCF bill resolved that Canada abandon all defence plans involving nuclear weapons, re-appraise the justification of her membership in NATO and press for a fresh disarmament conference by the United Nations Disarmament Committee along lines which would limit in clear weapons to the nations now having them.

BALONEY

Defence Production Minister Minto Makarchuk accused the Conservatives of making "one blunder after another." He said too much money was being spent while "ever after" a balance is reached.

Makarchuk said his department intended to turn the present Bomarc site at North Bay into a tourist attraction.

A clause in the external affairs bill instructing Canada's UN delegation to co-sponsor resolutions "censuring South African apartheid racial policies" turned out to be about the most controversial and hotly-debated subject of the evening.

Liberal member Allan Barry advised non-interference in the South African racial policies because "the condemnation of the apartheid policies of South Africa would break communication with South Africa."

The Liberals introduced an amendment to the CCF resolution, resolving to strike out the section on the racial policies.

Barry said he believed condemnation would send South Africa "further along the road it is travelling."

He added: "Condemnation would leave the South African minority isolated."

Eugenie Moore, Minister of National Revenue, rose "as a black member of the Commonwealth" to speak for his people.

"Right now Africans in South Africa are being moved from their lands to other areas to make room for so-called white areas," he said. "The Liberal amendment is in direct contradiction to the theory of the equality of man."

Moore, who is president of the West Indian Students' Federation, shouted, "it is not strange that we have this from the Liberals" as he waved the amendment angrily. "You brought Negroes from the south to work on our railroads, and you have kept them on your railroads."

He answered opposition criticism that the Commonwealth was not mentioned in the speech from the throne. "It was a significant omission," he said, "because the myth of the Commonwealth has ended."

He pointed out that at present Negroes cannot obtain some NHA loans and asked why. He was not answered. "I had with me," he said, "I must be had with diplomacy. The only defence against this is peace."

PC member Max Baillie said the CCF policy could only lead to "armed neutrality."

Meanwhile, Liberal Parliament Leader Dick Hamilton (III Trin.) last night issued a statement concerning his party's stand on the South African issue.

"The present government of South Africa, with its policy of apartheid, has strengthened itself to such a degree that already many people believe it cannot be removed except by revolution. The problem is seemingly insoluble," he said.

"We feel that Canada should do all possible to help immediately. Action might be taken through the Commonwealth and then perhaps we should sign the United Nations motion of censure," he continued.

"But we should be careful, for a judgment on someone else's affairs rarely helps—and often worsens the situation," Hamilton said.

Debate on the resolution swung back to the defence portions when Defence Minister Jerry Izenberg said there must be an end to "those who profit from others' destruction," referring to munitions manufacturers. "Defence can no longer which he said was "no neutrality at all. We must back up the United States," he said. "If we want democracy we must fight for it. We can't isolate ourselves."

Final CCF speaker Peter Dembski said the present system of defence was based on "the biggest bang for the buck" idea, which was a hopeless one.

In conclusion, Dembski said, "The CCF relies on a philosophy of love and understanding. We do not act as nations or even as individuals. But only as human beings. We are sick of a world that thinks its only defence is war."

PC Dave Crane said he agreed with CCFers Moore's ideas on racial equality, but added "we believe we have an instrument for attaining these ideals in the Commonwealth."

To a CCF question as to why the PCs refused to support the censure of the South African apartheid situation, Crane said he believed it was none of Canada's business at the present time. "We believe there is still room for international manners," he said.

Liberal Phil Goulston got the last word. He said the CCF had a "simple solution on ultimate, like accepting the United Nations as the answer to everything. The CCF government has no appreciation of realities," he said.

He pointed out the cost of pulling out of the Roman agreements, because of contracts, would be almost as great as staying in them.

DEFEATED SOUNDLY

The Liberal amendment to strike the section on South Africa was defeated soundly, with the PCs siding with the CCF.

Voting on the CCF resolution was a bit more complicated. There was never any doubt as to the result, because the 50-man CCF government voted as a group on every clause.

But there was some doubt in some of the opposition members' minds about the bill. On several occasions members of the opposition voted with the government. On the clause granting recognition to Red China, the vote was almost unanimous.

service charge

This week for the nth time World University Service campaigners will be facing their annual problem of getting one dollar out of each U of T student, so that they can perform the services listed elsewhere on this page.

It should be easy but it never has been. It is presumably not enough to reiterate the struggle that students all over the world are continually fighting against material and political limitations. Appeals to brotherhood, love of neighbour, moral responsibility, have grown old and hackneyed.

Nor is an appeal to practical politics possible. WUS by refraining from political action in the countries in which it operates has made it clear that it has one purpose and one purpose only; not to "win the cold war" but to give concrete aid wherever it is asked for simply because it is asked for.

So we have come to the point where all the old appeals fail. For in fact, you have no moral responsibility to anyone unless you impose it on yourself. If you are so much as capable of asking seriously "why should I give a dollar to SHARE?" you are beyond the point where any answer will seem satisfactory.

In other words, SHARE can only exist in the context of a community that does not have to be told that it has certain responsibilities, a community that exists by virtue of the responsibilities it has created for itself. And such responsibilities can only be created by action, in the present case, by giving.

If the action is not taken, the responsibility does not exist. To refuse to give on this occasion as well as on others, is to acquiesce to a world without values, without love, without moral responsibility and ultimately without meaning.

Those who want such a world are welcome to it.

Bedsheet Bogey

This letter first appeared in THE VARSITY office some time ago, but before we had a chance to print it, it was spirited away by a band of neo-deviationists, imperialists, capitalists, democrats and one or two liberals. Only after a hazardous adventure have we been able to retrieve it, and we now offer it, not without pride, for the readers' avid consumption.—Ed.

Dear Sir,

There is a certain bogey haunting this continent: the bogey of communism. Not that it's the kind of fear nobody mentions. Not at all. Pulpit, press and platform are joined in one big, unhappy condemning chorus. It is hidden in the sense that you will have to go a long way to find out exactly what communism is.

This lack of open discussion stands out particularly oddly when you remember that in those parts of the world—the greater part of it, actually—in those countries where the famous "battle for men's minds" is going on, the representatives of our way of life habitually refer to this as democracy. Yet those countries, not these, are the places where people actually are informed concerning the different political tendencies of our time.

It is symptomatic of the clampdown on free discussion over here that probably 90 per cent of what your readers have heard concerning theories is misrepresentation. Obviously what is called for would be an expression of Marxist views in such a fashion that everyone could hear and compare. What you would need is a campus communist club.

The former club was squeezed out of existence by the pressure of the cold war. We all know what has happened since then. Peaceful coexistence has broken out in world relations—and not by accident, but because millions demanded it. The achievements of the people who possess socialism have become so palpable, and so dramatic, that rational persons everywhere are inquiring as to the reasons.

In Canada the system that has promised a never-ending suburban prosperity has lately been suffering a series of bumps and jolts, each sharper than the last, each leaving its own residue of misery, and each adding a degree of substance to the threat of something very much worse. The removal from our country of profits from our U.S.-owned industries and resources, hitherto more than offset by the inflow of new investment capital, is now beginning to come into its own.

In short, these are times when people are finding a lot in the world around them to question.

It is now high time, therefore, that university students in Canada had an opportunity, unobstructed by bedsheet bogies, to look into things for themselves.

Your very truly,
Dan Goldstick,
President, Communist Club

re: weekend reviewed

BETTY

Last evening a gracious lady who is also a great violinist played to a packed hall at the 300th Hart House Sunday Evening Concert. Miss Betty-Jean Hagen, internationally known Canadian violinist, made what was already a milestone in the history of the Hart House Music Committee into a memorable musical evening.

The first item on her programme was the familiar Brahms Sonata in A major. In spite of a certain coldness in Miss Hagen's approach to the music, one appreciated the clarity of tone which she elicited from her instrument. This clarity was present even in her attack on the forte passages in the first movement, and showed to even better advantage in the restatement of the theme following the pizzicato in the second movement. Here especially one felt the haunting quality of Brahms.

The solo violin works of Bach are among the most sophisticated music ever written. In presenting the Sonata in G minor Miss Hagen took upon herself no easy task. A formidable amount of sheer technical precision is demanded. One sometimes felt, particularly in the fugue, that the tense, surging quality which this piece should possess was somewhat lacking. The brilliance was there, especially in the presto, and once again Miss Hagen evoked lovely sounds from her instrument. One might have wished, however, that some of the subtle interplay of the piece had been better brought out by a greater clarity of statement.

The second half of the programme opened with the Hungarian Folk-tunes of Bartok, a piece previously unfamiliar to the reviewer. The music is programmatic, and is intended to call forth images of jail-birds, grasshoppers, weddings, sad love songs and happy drunks. This it did, to the intense pleasure of all, including Miss Hagen who seemed to enjoy playing this delightful piece as much as the audience enjoyed listening to it.

The last number was Paganini's La Campanella. Paganini was a virtuosissimo violinist who enjoyed composing virtuosissimo music for himself. The piece is an unabashed tour de force, and Miss Hagen played it as a display piece, and very effectively. The Great Hall was filled with the sound of a violin which for the moment sounded like a carillon.

As her encore, Miss Hagen played a Brazilian Suite of Darius Milhaud's. It's a charming little bagatelle written originally for the piano, and it was great fun.

One could hardly end the review of the 300th Hart House Concert without once again praising the admirable accomplishments of Mr. Leo Barkin, who accompanied Miss Hagen, as he has so many Hart House artists in the past. The competent self-effacement demanded of the good accompanist requires no small talent. Mr. Barkin so often.

HAGEN

The Music Committee presented us with Miss Hagen, and Miss Hagen presented her audience with a splendid evening of music. We're grateful to them both.

Jean Weir and John Pierce

GLASS

Unlike the later Williams' plays, The Glass Menagerie, which opened on Saturday in Hart House Theatre, makes no attempt at stark realism. On the contrary, in the opening speech, Tom, who is both chorus and a central figure in the plot, tells us that it is a memory play, a journey back in time to the turbulent thirties, an era of economic depression, shadowed by the ominous rumblings of approaching war.

When the play was first produced in 1945, its audience was in every way conscious of and involved in this war, and the emphasis of the social theme served as a link between the real world outside the theatre walls and the sentimental, almost timeless world which is the background of the play. Today, however, thirty years after the war, this theme definitely dates the play and is almost an obstruction to the development of the main theme involving Tom, Laura and Amanda their mother.

Robert Gill's current production is at all times adequate, and at moments outstanding. Unfortunately the humorous aspect of several scenes is exaggerated, resulting in a distortion of moments which were actually tender or even pathetic.

Zivile Nalavaika, playing Amanda, falls short in her portrayal of a vol dominating woman who can not let her girlhood in the South. Her characterization needs more variation, for she develops in this production, she reaches her emotional peak too early, and herself nothing to build towards as play progresses. Consequently, which should be emotional high points are less effective than they might be. Also the timbre of Miss Nalavaika's is such that it is not always satisfying throughout the theatre.

Mary Anderson as the crippled, shy Laura, gives a very fine performance. The last scene, between Laura and Gentleman Caller is strongly moving sensitively played on the part of actors. Physically, Miss Anderson is too attractive to be totally believable as a girl who is terribly insecure about her appearance. It is to credit that this does not in any prevent her from giving a very satisfying performance.

The Gentleman Caller, as portrayed by Michael Kaplan, is entirely believable as an "emissary from a real world" which we (Laura, Tom and Amanda) were somehow set apart. He brings into every facet of his character, of vitality and enthusiasm; in short, the Gentleman Caller.

Highest praise, however, must go to Robert Graham in the dual role of brother and narrator. The credit for the high points of the evening to this accomplished actor. He is completely convincing and has mastered all the subtleties of a demanding role. Although most of the comic lines are his, it is not his interpretation of the humor incongruous with the play.

The stage effects are well done, and also help to further the delicate mood of the drama. The lighting by Ronald Montgomery is very good, particularly the colored reflections of a nearby dance hall. One could wish, however, that the music in the second act were actually dance music, rather than a violin. The set is well designed and executed and Mr. Gill has made excellent use of the lamp pole in his staging.

The production will be in Hart House for the rest of the week. Those who see it will have an enjoyable evening of theatre.

... In Hong Kong A Hovel

WUS Photo

The World UnUniversity Service of Canada has announced that their goal for this year's Share Campaign at the University of Toronto is one dollar for ever student.

Although the objective of the campaign has been fixed at $3500.00 the Share Campaign Chairman Douglas Ward expressed the hope that this year's campaign would widely exceed the objective.

Four hundred canvassers have been enlisted to collect the money.

The campaign will ast from the 25th until the 29th of January.

- As part of its program for year 1959-60, World University Service has decided to place special emphasis on the problems of World Refugee Year. Particular attention will be paid to the refugee students in Hong Kong and Algeria.

- In its program of action for the year of 1959-60 WUSC has also decided to lend its support to the following projects around the world.

- GREECE—Student lodging and living facilities in Florina.

- JAPAN—Student health facilities, including establishment of a pre and post-cure sanatorium.

- AFRICA—Text books for Pius XII University College of Basutoland, the only non-segregated university left in South Africa.

- And support for students who have been displaced through the restrictive laws regarding non-white students in South Africa.

- VIETNAM—Student lodgings and living facilities and the establishment of a WUS co-operative store.

- THAILAND—Support for the anti-TB campaign: the purchase of full-size and miniature X-ray film and anti-biotics and the finances to provide free or partly free treatment for about 100 students.

- INDIA—Support for co-operative schemes at university centres to provide the greatest possible help for the largest number of students at minimum cost.

- PAKISTAN—Medical instruments and supplies for university health services.

- KOREA—Aid to the Seoul Hostels for students living outside the city.

marriage monkeyshines

A psychology professor, I hear, was telling his students about experiments in which a group of monkeys had been trained by artificial mothers. He added that the method could possibly be applied to humans. From the back of the room came an elated cry: "See doll, I said you could be replaced."

parliament revisited, editorially

Last week I sat through all five sessions of the U of T Model Parliament. A lot of it was just plain dull, especially when the members of the three parties were speaking just to please their own ears. A little bit of it was amusing, not just the clever asides thrown back and forth across the floor, but the oh-so-serious manner of the student politicians. Now I could chatter about how the little people involved made a big thing out of absolutely nothing, and how the parties carelessly and slavishly followed national party lines. But because the members took themselves so seriously, I will do the same.

A Varsity editorial writer asked a question two weeks ago. He said the CCF party had been screaming for years for the chance to put socialism into effect. Then he asked "will they use it?" The CCF party tried to use their chance. They drew up bills and resolutions carrying out their economic policies. They did not use the opportunity to debate (again) the issue of recognition of Red China. External Affairs Minister Steve Lewis mentioned the editorial, and begged the opposition to let the debate proceed freely without interruption.

In every session it was remarkable how few constructive statements came from the opposition benches. Time and time again the Liberal and Conservative members stood up and reeled off lists of clever names for the CCFers, such as "political beatniks" and "pseudo-moralists." The CCF offered political philosophy. The opposition offered insults.

There were a couple of exceptions. Two members of the opposition in particular made fine speeches. But the whole CCF party conducted itself admirably. In spite of the opposition's opposition, the CCF triumphed, and not only because of superior numbers. They made a fine government, and I hope we will see them again next year, with an even larger majority.

religion and the arts colleges

Probably my greatest problem around the University of Toronto is remembering what college is what religion. University College is the outsider as it were, filled with people of all religions, or no religion. St. Michael's is Catholic, and it's difficult to forget. But the difference between Trinity and Victoria is one I cannot fathom.

I know one of them is United Church and the other Church of England. So starting from there, it seems quite obvious which is which. Victoria was Queen of England. QED, Vic is C of E. But Trinity. The United Church is made up of an amalgamation of three other churches, Congregationalist, Methodist and Presbyterian. Hence the college is called Trinity.

It's all extremely logical, and I for one am firmly convinced, now that I have thought about it, that my theory is the correct one. So if there are any Anglicans at Trinity, they had better start considering moving out.

vanity thy name is newspaperman

When reporters start working for The Varsity, what concerns them most is getting their name in the so-called masthead adds every night they work. Then they start getting interested in bylines. A year or so of that, and the only thing that interests them is their byline on a check. I had forgotten about this interest in bylines until our last press night when I was at the North Toronto Herald trying to fill two gaping holes in two of the pages. I tossed a short article into the page-one hole. The reporter who had written it was up there with me. In my innocence I wandered out of the composing room for a cold water stay-awake treatment, and then came back. Somehow a byline had appeared over the article. And somehow it looked a bit big. It was in 24 point type, which is about three times as large as the byline at the head of this column. It was all upper case, and it was set in bold face in the bargain. Where bylines are concerned, there are no ethics.

All student weekends at Caledon Hills Farm have been cancelled until further notice, Hart House officials said Friday.

Cancellation, they said, is due to a power failure Dec. 28. They hope repairs will be finished some time in February.

Meanwhile, plans for the World University Service Caledon Seminar are going ahead. WUS officials said last night the conference will be staged in spite of difficulties. Should Caledon not be available, another location will be used, they added.

Delegates to the seminar, Feb. 5-7, will discuss "The Meeting of East and West".

Volleyball Team Is Chosen Varsity Lose Archery

By PAM HILL

More intercollegiate competitive games are being played this year than ever before because of the new Women's Athletic Building.

And not least among these was OAC's and McMaster's visit here last week, each with two volleyball teams and an archery team.

Toronto finally decided upon both the Senior and Intermediate volleyball teams. Returning to the spot-light from last year are: Judy Cansfield, Signy Paulson, Mary Lou O'Hagen and Viu Canep. Others the make the grade were: Judi Belick, Inara Grava, Carol Miles, Norma Whyte, Dawn Fitzroy, Esta Halpen, Phyllis Hart and Mary Lowther. Of these, Dawn Fitzroy was possibly the best that night, although many more practices will give the others a fair chance before the Intercollegiate Meet at McGill.

The intermediate team—very hard to sort out—used the following players: Anne Baldwin, Joslyn Palm, Rene Silverstein, Val Lewis, Nancy Lou Campbell, Evie Sihler, Les Pickercell, Reita Bardins, Barb Walfish, Ann Caldwell, Nancy Hill, Arlene Lief and Sally Jo Evans.

In a preliminary game, OAC defeated McMaster 25-9 and 16-9. When the two teams met Toronto, they were playing against mixed teams, rather than straight seniors and intermediates. This evened out the match, and gave all concerned a good practice.

The results stood as follows: against OAC: 14-11, 8-16 and 17-13 for Toronto. Against Mac: again Toronto 25-10, 14-23 and 17-10.

Also preliminary to this was an archery tournament, each team consisting of four archers. Toronto was represented by Gina Hogg, Jean Hayward, Marg Merritt and Carole Anne Duthie, who scored 493, 444, 416 and 299 respectively.

This totalled 1,687 points for U of T, but it was not quite enough to top OAC's 1,891. Mac placed third with 1,409. Top scorer was Nancy Besley from OAC with 524 points. Gina Hogg was second with the above-mentioned 494.

Interfaculty Summary

Upsets and long scores ruled the hockey scene in last week's Intramural battles.

UC I, defending Jennings Cup holder, won their first victory of the season by defeating Vic I 2-1. Musselman and Wensley were the Redmen snipers while Doucette scored for Vic.

SPS III walloped Meds II by an 8-1 count. Kirwin, Mathew and Armitage scored two each for the Skulemen while McLeod and McKindle added singles. Ellis sank the lone Docs' goal.

SPS IV, meanwhile, trounced Vic III 10-1 and SPS III beat St. Mike's B 3-1. For the IV's Murray scored a hat trick while Bellemey added two goals. Edwards, Bakke, Ross, Levine and Redican helped out the rout with singles. Hobbes got the one for Vic. For the Engineer's III's McLeod, Armitage and Kirwin got the goals while Kapsa scored for SPS.

4-3, Lennahan and Cragg scored a pair each for Architecture while Reed scored twice and Ross contributed a single for the Divinity scholars.

Vic IV defeated UC IV 5-2. McKnight scored twice for the Scarlet and gold with Scott, Thomas and Wisebrough adding singles. Blacksten and pearl scored for UC.

St. Mike's D walloped Vic V 8-3. Bolger, Cochrane, and Murray with two and Sorbara and Guerin with singles were the Irish snipers. Oaks, Crawford and Thompson countered for Vic.

In Major league basketball, Jr. SPS defeated Dent A 54-48. McElroy sparked the Junior Skulers with 16 points while Girdle-stone led the Toothpullers with 12.

Knox edged Architecture 54-48. Armitage with 18 and Coleleugh with 14 points led Knox while Katz hooped 22 for Architecture.

Emmanuel defeated Pharmacy 41-32, while Vic I trounced Sr. Med 54-20. West was top man for Vic with 15 points.

SPS VI defeated St. Mike's D 25-15, while Forestry A beat Wycliffe 34-18 and Dent III yr. edged St. Mike's E 26-24.

Sr. SPS, quickly becoming a major threat for the basketball laurels beat St. Mike's A 55-31. Basadur and Pashkevich both hooped 17 points for SPS.

In Minor league basketball, St. Mike's Nugent edged St. Mike's B-ers (and with a name like no wonder they get edged) 26-16, while Med IV yr. B walloped UC McCaul 53-16.

Simpson and Gallagher both scored 20 points each as St. Mike's House II swamped UC Hutton 98-21. Med IV C defeated II Mech. 36-19, while II Chem. beat SPS TKL's 35-24.

UC Taylor defeated SPS Luniks 52-39, Forestry C edged Pharm. Pestles 23-20 and Vic Mid House beat Dent. III yr. 36-33.

IV Metal edged Med IV yr. A 32-29, St. Mike's Elmsley Hall beat Pre Med II yr. 39-26 and UC Tigers roared over SPS Zaps 47-29.

In Water Polo action, St. Mike's A splashed to a 8-7 win over SPS II. Ross scored four goals for the Irish, Causon added two and Samson scored a single. Chapelle scored six times for SPS while Quaid scored one goal.

... and in this corner by pam hill

To my way of thinking, the most thrilling thrill of the women's Athletic season has hit! Surely it was terrific to see the Women's Athletic Building open, but boy gee whiz, I've been drooling to get into that pool! I didn't think I'd ever see the day, but I did!

The new pool is finished!!

The interfaculty swim meet will meet in it!!

The swim club are the first ones in this Tuesday afternoon!

Well! When I heard of this I really cheered — really! This is wonderfully, marvellously great! The pool is just enough larger than another pool on campus to out-do the men! And there are two diving boards! One meter and three meter — and the depth is just right — twelve feet — just right — just up to my waist! Somewhere along the way, someone forgot that divers need over five-foot-six of water to dive into, in competitive diving, and Hart House divers have been scraping their noses ever since!

Now the gals can dive with ease in the Interfac! They will not hurt themselves! The meet which I'm going to say, is on Wednesday February the third! This will be the first official meet in the pool!

But alas, alack, o misery! Much enthusiasm has left us less femmes for swimming, and I suppose they can hardly be blamed! It is sort of out of season to swim! However, Trinity will hardly ever win the cup again unless they suddenly come out of the blue like in hordes!!

And UC has a terrific chance if only they'd reverse from their usual apathetic selves! I guess we'll all submit to Fitz Ed and their new four intercoll swimmers!! (Poor SALLY BAMBRIDGE)!!

But with the new pool, this should be a real incentive to get out and try! Three hours practice are all that are required prior to entry, and there is today, Wednesday and Thursday left, but not Friday and Saturday!

First year is usually relied upon for much action because they are interested, having just come from High School and just before that from Public School and because they are in better condition than the less fitted senior years! Throughout every year, fewer and fewer participate in any active athletics! It's not that they have less time (the opposite is more true), but it is just that they are too lazy, or too pseudo-sophisticated, or something like that! I guess it's a little late in the year to start harping on this, but I hope to goodness gracious that something like that is done about it very soon in the future!!! Kids that come out to the hockey say they feel much better after they quit! The same with swimming — etc.!! Just to get out to something makes you feel alive, etc! Instead of as if you were walking around in four feet of mire! The men have Hart House and use it at their leisure! Now we have our very own new building! Get out and use it kids at your leisure!!!!!!

VARSITY'S LOST WEEKEND

Redmen Upset Varsity Blues In Third Place

By GENE GLISKY

University of Toronto hockey Blues, hailed as the Cinderella team of Intercollegiate competition in pre-holiday contests, ran out of fairy Godmothers at the Arena on Friday, dropping a 4-2 decision to the once lowly McGill Redmen.

Singularly enough, it was not a matter of Varsity playing badly enough to lose, but McGill playing well enough to deserve the victory. Getting yoe-man service out of veteran defencemen Leo Knoyk and Mike Richards, sparked by the sometimes brilliant net-minding of goalie Alex Herron and bolstered by a crop of tough rookies, McGill refused to take a back seat to the floundering Blues.

Steve Molson fired the first McGill goal mid-way through the first period to set up a lead Redmen never relinquished. Joe Irvin and Knoyk assisted on the score.

Redmen led 3-1 at the end of the second period on goals by rookie Dave Flam and Jim Grant. The first goal was scored when the Varsity defense was caught napping, enabling Knoyk to set up a two man breakaway, while the second was scored with Blues a man short on a penalty to Harry Neale.

Varsity's first goal of the contest came from the stick of rookie Al Orcheson assisted by Gord Gow and Bill Griffin, at 17:40 of the period.

Blues dominated play in the final frame in a desperate attempt to remain in the game, but lady Luck failed to cooperate. Several scoring chances went by the boards as Varsity snipers either failed to find the target or fell prey to the goal post jinx.

Gord Merritt, of football fame, fired the insurance goal for Redmen as once again Varsity defenders failed to unscramble themselves in their own end. Tim Peters and Bruce Hutchison assisted on the play at 10:27 of the period.

Blues finally found the range less than two minutes later when Neale scored his second goal of the season from a scramble in front of the McGill net. Howie Li'l B'ar Roth assisted on the marker. Redmen were playing a man short on a slashing penalty to Herron.

From this point on, Redmen closed the gates on Varsity.

Playing exceptionally tenacious defensive hockey, McGill ably supported Herron to thwart Blues' snipers.

Only six minor penalties, three to each side, were handed out by referee Gord Fèveau in the rugged but relatively cleanly played contest.

Just notes: If three stars were to be picked for this game, they would have to be McGill's Alex Herron and Leo Knoyk, while Blues rookie defenceman Ian Sinclair was tops for Varsity. A good and surprisingly noisy crowd of over 2,000 fans saw this fast and sometimes furious contest. Welcome home to the Blue and White handmen who are always welcome to rock the rafters at the Emporium with their spirited renditions. The bugle blowing "CHARGE" was particularly effective.

Noticed a famous ice personage observing the proceedings from rink-side, in Maxie Silverman, noted Silver Fox in hockey circles in Northern Ontario. Silverman, who is famous for his expert eye in spotting inexpensive hockey talent for any team he may at present be guiding, seemed interested in several of the Blues.

McGill—Goal, Herron; defense, Richards, McDonald, Knoyk, Messier, forwards, McLarnon, Irvin, Hutchison, Merritt, Peters, Molson, Flam, Mosely, Van Plew, Grant. Toronto—Goal, Giroux; defense, Neale, Simpson, Sinclair, Epp; forwards, Brooks, Roth, Murchie, Gatten, Griffin, Hicken, Cherepacka, Orcheson, Sullivan, Gow. Referee, Gord Fèveau; linesmen, John Hudson, John Sullivan.

First Period
1. McGill, Molson	7:17
Penalties — Gatten (charging) 5:26, Grant (tripping) 16:09.
Second Period
2. McGill, Flam	5:36
3. McGill, Grant (Molson)	13:08
4. Toronto, Orcheson (Gow, Griffin)	17:40
Penalties—Neale (charging) 8:45, Neale (slashing) 12:34.
Third Period
5. McGill, Merritt (Peters, Hutchison)	10:27
6. Toronto, Neale (Roth)	12:19
Penalties—Herron (slashing) 11:54, Merritt (holding) 12:45.

Western Mustangs Wallop Queen's

University of Western Ontario won their fourth game of the Intercollegiate season as they downed Queen's Gael's 88-64 in London Friday night.

Western was led by hook shot artist Greg Stone and the surprise star of this year's team Gary Boug. Both players scored more than twenty points as the Mustangs completely outplayed Queen's.

HARRY NEALE lets a bullet go that McGill goalie Alex Herron turned aside in brilliant fashion. Herron and his mates threw a big monkey wrench into Blues' plans for retaining the Intercollegiate title when they defeated Varsity 4-2.

Cagers Win First Slaughter McGill

Before a half-filled house on Friday night the Varsity Blues on their third try finally won as they beat McGill Redmen 90-78 at Hart House.

Toronto took full advantage of the full court press and zone defense which they threw up against McGill. However many of their chance to score were lost by poor shooting.

The Redmen had their starting lineup dominated by Americans but they didn't seem to have enough horses.

Mike Muir and Jim McGuire were Varsity's top men each getting twenty-one points. Boris Wolchuk was the next Blue scoring eleven.

The game was described as a "loosely played" contest and this was no exaggeration. The Toronto team just couldn't seem to get all going together.

At the end of the half the Blues had an eleven point lead and from then on they were in no danger.

There was a lot of action around the boards and especially during the second half. Bob Miner did a particularly effective job for Toronto in this department. Muir in the second half was deadly with his outside shots. During the last six minutes the fouls started to catch up the player and four had to leave the floor.

Coach John McManus although pleased with the win felt that they will have to improve greatly when they take on Assumption next week.

Just Notes . . . St. Michaels "A" team defeated U.C. Firsts 53-37 in the preliminary match . . . McGill's top scorers were Gary Ulrich with 21 points and John Newsom with 16 points . . . Next Athletic Night will be against Assumption and the Defending champs are gunning for two years in a row.

Mustang Swimmers Down Blues 50-41

University of Western Ontario senior swimmers downed their Varsity counterparts by a 50-41 score in an eleven event meet in the Hart House Pool last Friday night. The Intermediate Blues fared better as they posted an easy 41-26 win over Ontario Agricultural College in an eight event meet.

Western swimmers were paced by Larry Freeman, a former Varsity student. Freeman picked up wins in the 220 and 440 yards freestyle events.

Highlights of the night from the Varsity point of view was the great effort by Marv Chappelle in the 100-yard freestyle. His time was 51.8 seconds only 4 off the Canadian record of 51.4. Chappelle also swam on the sprint team that won the 400-yard sprint race for Blues.

Western swimmers were helped by the absence of two Varsity swimmers who evidently felt that a formal dance was more important than helping their team to victory. Coach Marv Van Nooten pointed out that if they had come Varsity would probably have won the meet.

In the Intermediate event, Tretheway of OAC was the only double winner. He captured the 50-yard freestyle and 22-yards back stroke events.

Jackie McInnes registered one of the major upsets in the Toronto and District B and C badminton tournament when she defeated favored Ann Hamilton, 11-9, 11-6, in a ladies' single B division semi-final at the Boulevard Club. Miss McInnes will meet another surprise victor, Jane Davies, who downed Barbara Langley, 11-6, 11-5, in the final.

Ed Yablonski upset Dave Hutchison, T&D junior champion, 15-8, 15-11, to advance to the final of the men's singles. He will meet Jack Fitzsimmons, who edged Bill Waterbury, 15-13, 51-7, in the other semi-final match.

Mac Marauders Triumph, 90-68, Over Redmen

Hamilton, Jan. 24—A 57-point scoring spurge in the final half paced McMaster University Marauders to a 90-68 Intercollegiate senior basketball victory over McGill University Redmen Saturday night at the Drill Hall.

Victory was the Marauders' second in four Intercollegiate starts. The win also tied Mac's 1959 win record, which was six in 21 games.

BELIEVE it or not, Jim Murchie (foreground) missed the net on this drive after being set up by Howie Roth. Blues missed many scoring chances as McGill downed them 4-2 at the Arena Friday night.

Quebec Plans To Revise University Financial Aid

Provincial financial assistance to Quebec universities is being drastically revised both in quantity and in method of distribution, it was reported yesterday. The Quebec government proposes to grant universities additional aid on a basis of $1.75 a habitant beginning next term. This $8,750,000 will be in addition to the $11,146,000 in regular grants, the reports said.

A special sinking fund will take over the $25,000,000 in federal grants refused by Quebec universities in the past because of provincial disapproval and kept in trust by the National Conference of Canadian Universities.

This money will be used to help finance capital investment programs and future expansion projects. If Quebec can reach agreement with the federal government.

The $16,000,000 in federal grants now in the hands of the Canada Council for university capital investment programs would also be placed in a special sinking fund.

WUS

The World University Service Seminar, slated for University of Toronto's Caledon Hills Farm has had its location changed, WUS officials said last night.

The seminar will be held at the Anglican Conference Centre, Aurora, Feb. 13-14. The change was made necessary by the closing of Caledon Farm because of a power failure in December.

Twenty-seven students have been chosen to attend the seminar but WUS officials said vacancies are very likely to occur. Applications for the seminar will be accepted at the Students' Administrative Council office and at the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students Office, 5 Willcocks St., until Friday, Feb. 5.

Temporalist Emerges To Talk About Goliath

A former Trinity College professor of philosophy who retired to the country to think last spring, returned to the University of Toronto campus yesterday to announce the target date for the employment of his world organization theory of "Temporalism".

Bruno Morawetz said the year 2000 will see temporalism, the grouping of the world's population according to their birthdates.

He explained he was advertising, not publicising his theory at a meeting sponsored by the U of T United Nations Club, and went on to discuss contemporary world problems in the allegory of "David and Goliath".

Action is the "Goliath" which must follow petitions, which are good in their own right, but are not enough.

We, as citizens, are "David" doing the work of the Goliath.

He advised the students in his audience that university education is not "an admit to leisure card", admitting them to leisure time.

Mr. Morawetz is enjoying his life as a farmer and public school history teacher, but he believes the small farmer is on the way out.

Commerce

A link between students and businessmen will be further strengthened next Monday with the second of five weekly meetings sponsored by the Commerce Club of the University of Toronto.

Students will hear representatives of insurance, trust companies, the stockmarket, banking interests and investment counsellors deal with their approach to investments analysis.

In the course of the series, such topics as bonds, proxy battles and their significance, stock yields and how they influence prices, buying of stocks on margin and securities on bank loans will be discussed.

The meetings are held at 4 p.m. in room 151 of the Economics Building, and further information may be obtained from Ken Bream, HU. 8-4860, or Michael Berger, HU. 5-6255.

Payment Of SCHOLARSHIPS or BURSARIES

Welcome, Tar Heels

Twenty-two students from the University of North Carolina arrive in Toronto tomorrow to begin a hectic three-day weekend designed to give them a taste of Canadian university life.

Before they leave Sunday night the students—dubbed the Tar Heels after their university nickname—will have spent a day gambolling in the snow, will have watched a NHL hockey game . . . and will "have gone to about three thousand non-stop parties" said Weekends Chairman Virginia Lomax (III Vic) last night.

The visit marks the second end of an exchange weekend between the University of Toronto and UNC. First half of the exchange came last November when 24 U of T students visited North Carolina.

Other highlights of the weekend include a performance of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, a luncheon at the Granite Club hosted by a 1917 graduate of UNC, and a discussion of Canadian-American relations.

Keynote speaker at the discussion will be Prof. K. W. McNaught, who will talk about Canadian-American relations.

"We're also hoping for informal discussions on less weightier subjects", said Miss Lomax.

"We're all looking forward to having these students visit the U of T", Miss Lomax said, "and we just hope they survive the twin rigors of a Canadian winter and the hectic schedule we've planned for them."

German Disowns Jew-baiting Youth

A Special Report

By the Canadian University Press

BRUSSELS, Jan. 26 — A representative of the 6,000,000 member German Federal Youth Council has denied any association of its members with anti-semitic forces in Germany.

The chairman of the council Edmund Duda declared recently that the organizations in the council, "have categorically dissociated themselves from these irresponsible activities," by what he called "hoodlums and some young people".

He added that the council, "protests against the identification of the young generation of Germany with such elements, and declares the German youth has nothing in common with those individual offenders."

The German Federal Youth Council (Deutscher Bundesjugendring) is a member of the World Assembly of Youth (WAY). The National Federation of Canadian University Students is the Canadian member and acting secretariat for the organization.

Membership in the FYC is derived from 14 large youth organizations, which form the non-partisan and inter-denominational council.

Mr. Duda stated in his declaration that, "This youth has shown that they are seriously endeavouring to overcome the Nazi past."

He also believed that "The Diary of Anne Frank" has met with a response among German youth hardly accorded to any other book.

sac at a glance

Besides taking steps to set up a series of lectures on Racial Discrimination, the Students' Administrative Council last night:

—voted, over the strong objections of Varsity Editor-in-Chief Sam Aizenstat and Executive Editor Mark Nichols, to publish only one more issue of Otherside (tomorrow's) during the current academic year;

—accepted Blue and White Chairman Dave Tavender's recommendation that the U of T have five cheerleaders again next year;

—heard a report from Weekends Chairman Virginia Lomax about "the wonderful time" the U of T's Carabins had in Montreal last weekend;

—learned from Finance Commissioner Stan Dubas that four students had received money from the SAC but had not yet accounted for it;

—and listened attentively as Chairman Claude Brodeur ruled they could not accept a resolution constituting the second week of February as "U of T Cat Week" "because of the doubtful interpretation of the word 'cat'."

Reject Kennedy

The Saint Michael's College Oratorical Society last night defeated a motion endorsing the candidacy of Senator John Kennedy for president of the United States, by a vote of 12 to five.

Speaker of the house was Robert Bergeron. Speakers for the government were Stan Kirschbaum and Michael Breen and for the opposition Kathryn Miles and Michael Pare.

Communist Letter Starts SMC Row

The men's vice president of St. Michael's Student Administrative Council, stormed from the session Tuesday night after council refused debate on possible publication of a letter by Dan Goldstick rebutting an anti-communistic article appearing in The Mike, the College newspaper.

Peter Dembski called the action of the council "one of the most undemocratic moves" he had ever witnessed.

The issue flared up after the then acting editor of The Mike, Edith Smith, refused to print a letter by Goldstick, leader of the University of Toronto Communist Party, refuting an article in The Mike by Stan Kirschbaum, which attacked communism.

The article said Goldstick was trying "to put on a happiness which hides the face of the tyrant and dictator."

After reading the article Goldstick immediately phoned Miss Smith and asked if she would publish a letter supporting his position.

At the time Miss Smith agreed.

But after reading Goldstick's reply, she contradicted her earlier position, saying it was not the policy of The Mike to run articles written by non-St. Mike's students.

Miss Smith decided to consult SMC faculty advisors. They suggested it was her responsibility to print the letter.

Still she held out, stating the letter did not really answer Kirschbaum's article and was just a jumping off place for propaganda.

Meanwhile Paul Foley, SMC

SAC president arranged to meet with Goldstick in the Co-Op, the College restaurant. Also present were Peter Dembski and Dorothy Symko, Loretto vice-president.

At the Co-Op conference Goldstick announced he would bring the issue before the SMC Council for decision. Foley warned him there was a feeling among council members that Miss Smith's stand would be supported.

A vote was taken to "put" the question. Dembski and Rick Alway opposed. A second vote was taken on the question. It too passed. This time Alway went along with the majority. But again Dembski opposed.

In supporting Miss Smith, Foley said there had been no personal attack in the article on Goldstick. He also made it clear it was not right that a Catholic newspaper should publish Communist propaganda.

Last night the Varsity learned Dembski had been kidnapped by Edward Gabis (III SMC) in an effort to forestall Dembski's appearance at the council meeting.

The plot failed and Dembski arrived at the session fifteen minutes late.

A Welcome By Weekend's Co-chairman, John Wood

Hark the sound of Tar Heel voices! You've arrived at last! Welcome to Canada.

You couldn't have come at a better time, for now we can show you Canadian winter at its best. We hope you'll savor some memories of it that you'll never forget.

Welcome also to the University of Toronto; we're proud of our Alma Mater's reputation of being one of the best academic institutions on the continent. Meet our professors: they help us to create here an atmosphere of ideas, where the man who thinks, however radically, is held in highest regard.

We promise you it will be a full weekend—packed with activities that are typical of us and our way of life. We hope you enjoy them all. As we did in Chapel Hill, try to absorb fully as much as you can. Thus we can benefit by a full appreciation of each other. This will lead to mutual understanding.

east's law

One of the world's leading authorities on oriental law is visiting the University of Toronto this week.

Dr. Norman Anderson holds the position of director of the Institute of Advanced Legal Studies in the University of London, England, will give several lectures at Osgoode Hall and at the U of T Law School.

He will also speak at two meetings sponsored by the Varsity Christian Fellowship today and tomorrow at 1:00 p.m. at Osgoode Hall, O.T.C. Bldg.

SHARE Campaign

Total Up 20-Fold

Returns to the SHARE campaign so far have amounted to almost 20 times the total collected at the same stage last year, SHARE officials said last night.

By the third day of last year's campaign, $78.25 had been donated to the fund-raising drive sponsored by the World University Service to finance its program of material aid to needy students in foreign countries. This year $1,551.62 has been collected since the campaign started Monday.

"We have every hope of reaching our objective of $3,500", SHARE campaign chairman Doug Ward said last night.

The percentage of donors giving is higher than in former years, he said. A record number of canvassers has been recruited to personally contact as many students as possible during the week-long run of the campaign.

Biggest boost to the drive is $679.06 from the School of Practical Science, collected in a combined United Appeal-SHARE drive in November. Engineers gave only $150 last year.

SHARE finance chairman Ted Tory said yesterday that final figures would not be available until next week. Individuals not canvassed can hand their contributions into the Students Administrative Council office any time this week, he added.

The SHARE campaign, aiming at a dollar a scholar, continues until Friday.

THIS BEAT-TYPE character represents a poverty-stricken student set to benefit from the SHARE Campaign which is currently running on campus. Contributions finance the World University Service program of material aid for needy students in foreign countries.

Christian Socialist

Our present structure of University education is sinful because we discriminate against those who can not afford higher education, Reverend Vincent Goring said in an address Tuesday, sponsored by the Socialist Forum.

Rev. Goring, study secretary of the Student Christian Movement, said, no man-made system is completely reconcilable with Christianity, however, Socialism is far more compatible with Christianity than capitalism.

Parliamentarian's Idea: Constitutional Changes

Paul Martineau, parliamentary assistant to Prime Minister Diefenbaker, enlarged on his earlier suggestions for methods to amend the Canadian constitution at a Progressive Conservative Club meeting yesterday.

During a talk on PC programs and policies, Mr. Martineau was asked about statements he made in the house during the first session of parliament.

"I spoke about possible ways to amend the constitution," he said. "The views I then expressed were my own personal views, and have nothing to do with my position. I did not clear my speech with the Prime Minister. He is in no way committed to the thoughts I may have expressed."

Mr. Martineau said a constituent assembly could be called to amend the constitution, and a constitutional court formed to interpret it.

Football Team Wanted

Canadian University Press
WINNIPEG, Jan. 25—Football may come to the University of Manitoba, and a majority of students appear willing to pay $5 each for it.

Last week the Manitobans voted in favor of entering a team in the Western Inter-Collegiate Athletic Football Conference.

With only one faculty to be heard from in a referendum, 65 per cent of the students had voted, and of that number 57 per cent were in favor of football.

New University

Premier Frost announced Monday night that Sudbury is to have a new university, along the lines of the University of Toronto which will qualify for provincial grants as soon as it is established.

The university is to be known as Laurentian University and plans will be put into effect with the introduction of a private bill in the legislature.

The announcement was made following a meeting with a delegation of about 20 representatives of the Roman Catholic, Anglican and United churches, headed by Father Emile Bouvier of the University of Sudbury.

The new university will be a federation of denominational colleges and universities into a non-denominational federation similar to the U of T.

As a non-denominational school it will qualify for provincial grants which were not available to the University of Sudbury which was a denominational school run by the Jesuit order.

Before meeting with Premier Frost the delegation met with the government's committee on university affairs.

However, the results of the referendum are not binding and the vote was held to sample student opinion. Although the balloting was in favor, football fans only took a 450-vote margin. It is up to the students' council to decide for or against entry.

Should the council agree, student fees will shoot up by $5. Each student will receive in exchange, a season ticket, and something to yell for, or at.

The overall cost for the team in the first year is estimated at $25,000, but the estimated cost for the second year drops to $15,000.

Even if the council decides in favor of the team, the final say in the matter lies with the university board of governors.

skid talking

Skid talking is more than a slip of the tongue. It is a slip of the whole mind. It exists in phrases which are almost correct, but which aren't quite, and still mean something rather deep and revealing. Like, for instance, "I never liked you and I always will" is a fine example. Sometimes these phrases are spouted purposely. More often than not, they are accidental. Last night I asked a gentleman what he thought about a certain young woman.

"I worship the bed she lies in," he said, and wandered off into the fog.

Things people say provide me with some of my favorite amusement. I called a women's residence a couple of days ago, and said I'd like to leave a number.

"Just a minute," a young female scholar said to me, "this pencil went and broke on me."

Really? All by itself?

your student government in action

Every two weeks a group of students meets somewhere on the campus to chat about student business and anything else it happens to want to chat about. This august body is called the Students' Administrative Council, and you pay for it. The meetings are pretty sparsely attended. Usually there is difficulty getting enough for a quorum, let alone enough for a representative cross section of the campus. The audience almost always consists of a single Varsity reporter. Once in a blue moon a photographer drops in.

This is what SAC members dream about:

"There's a lot of correspondence this week. The first letter is from a Mrs. Idelwild Fitchberg who complains students of the university are killing her grass by cutting across her lawn on the way to lectures."

After a long lingering look at the Varsity reporter, a SAC member announces solemnly: "I move we go into closed session to discuss this problem." The Varsity leaves. Ten minutes later he is back. The commissioner speaks: "It has been decided to set up a committee to investigate the problem of Mrs. Fitchberg's grass. I nominate the KCR Chairman to head the committee." A committee of twelve is chosen. It is decided they will stake out Mrs. Fitchberg's lawn and scrutinize all passersby for two weeks, at which time they will report to the council. From there the question will be put before the Caput in the form of a motion of censure against the students killing the grass.

On to the next business. "It has been learned," says one member, "that a Chairman of the SAC has maliciously and criminally purchased six paper clips for his committee." A motion of censure against the chairman is duly passed. He is suspended, and a committee is formed to elect him from the hall. A second committee is formed to hold him out in the hall until the third committee can be formed to shake him by the heels. A fourth committee, headed by the finance commissioner, scrapes up the money which falls to the floor. The cost of the paper clips is subtracted from the sum, and the unfortunate council member is released.

(This catharsis will be continued next week if I am still at liberty to do so.)

Settlement Life

Settlement. It is their club as much as tennis and squash clubs are to the more fortunate. Its members come from a district which is crowded, old, depressed, a traditional reception area for ethnic groups.

They enter a new $750,000 building that is financed and maintained by the City of Toronto. The United Appeal is depended upon for programming and Founded 50 years ago by University of Toronto men, the University Settlement's objective was to acclimatize newcomers to Canada. Today its job is greater and its appeal wider. It conducts morning nursery groups, teenage woodworking and arts and crafts shops, cooking classes for boys as well as girls, and gymnastics and swimming for all. Night classes are held to teach English to new Canadians.

There are no formal limits to the center's work. The older generation brings in its problems about law, finances, employment, and housing.

"People here find it hard to go to strange agencies when they are in trouble," explained Harry M. Morrow, the Settlement's executive director. "They want to have something firm and anchored in the community instead of a problem place."

Ninety per cent of the Settlement's workers are volunteers.

"We depend on the 'one person tells another' system to attract these people," said Vivienne Danden, Mr. Morrow's assistant. Not only trained social workers but skid musicians from the Royal Conservatory of Music, gym instructors, and art teachers from the Ontario College of Art offer their services to swell out the full-time staff of 26. Parents know where their children are and what they are doing. But, more important, they have pride in their activities.

Ron Howze, 30, a worker at the Settlement since 1951, has seen both the ins and outs of his job.

"Being one of the hell-raisers in the community as a kid, I can manage to keep two steps ahead of the kids I work with today," said Mr. Howze. He prefers group work to case work. "Our kids need a group situation. That way we can teach them how to work with each other so they can relate their experiences in the community outside the Settlement."

Dave Mabon, 26, a U of T graduate in social work gave us his views of the Settlement with relation to his Hyde background in social work. He is the camp director for the University Settlement, and general supervisor of boys' activities during the year.

The subject of his Master's thesis is "The Employment Problems of Youth." Since ninety per cent of the Settlement's members, out of school, are working, looking for jobs, or unemployed, Dave has his material right at hand.

Dave, a newcomer to the Settlement, hopes to stay long enough and do a thorough job.

"Too many social workers move around and never get to know their own neighbourhood well. It took me a year to get these teenagers to talk to me," he said. "They aren't really sympathetic to outsiders. They are suspicious of adults who have authority."

"In our area," he continued, "there are people of all races working closely together. They are extremely tolerant of people of different races and religions."

(Varsity reporter, Arlene Arnason, in the middle of that note above, swept through the University Settlement Recreation Center recently to find what went on. Photographer Alan Walker went along for laughs. This is what they found.)

Mr. Mabon said that churches and other social agencies tend to concern themselves with people of one particular race or religion.

"We try to encourage tolerance whenever we can," he said. "At Camp Boulderwood we have things like United Nations Day, with a big program built around peoples of different countries. Eighty per cent of the members speak another language at home."

There is a similar attitude towards religion. Everyone is accepted at the Settlement.

"Several people on our staff have no religious faith at all," Dave said. "We have no religious activities." But he added that the Settlement co-operates with churches wherever possible.

"There is a feeling among the churches, although we have never been told of this directly, that some of our activities are irreligious, such as the Sunday night dances, but the kids asked for them," he said.

During the interview we watched two of the boys playing cards. They were laughing and talking and looked as normal as any U of T student. Later we found out they had both been recently released from Guelph Reformatory. Their crime was breaking and entering. They are now the co-captains of the Settlement basketball team.

There are times when Dave has his doubts about his boys, temporarily at least. Three fellows once broke into the Settlement itself, stole money, and were caught walking away from the house with a record player. They were sent to Guelph.

"We tried to make them realize we weren't mad at them," Dave said, "and we visited them several times at Guelph." The Settlement won, and the youngest boy, 16, is back in circulation again. He has held a steady job for nearly a year.

odyssey continued

The position of comfort (not to be confused with Comfort show of paintings by Jock Macdonald at the Here and Now block above Bloor east of Avenue Road). It will be on all Monday. Almost every painting in the show is excellent, all in the hall. Most, though, like the three shown on this page, control and tension with which the highly complex forms are found especially moving. (It should be Macdonald No. 3 on the organization in two and three dimensions. There is marvellous shape. The emotion, if you must have emotion, is rather mild, simply in the combination and arrangement of forms, just as sure that "all art should aspire to the condition of music", but to provide a fair analogy here, that might be helpful.

The mildness of the effect in all the paintings in this show position of comfort. These are all very fine paintings. But they been put together by a man who paints so tremendously well, he really means it, even when, as in most of this show, he really

The next stop in my odyssey was Laing Galleries, Bloor rise from comfort I fell here into the deepest pit. I refer to it is painful even to speak about them. There is in them (which are trite and naive and boldly vulgar) or in colour blindness). These horrible paintings must be seen to be believed.

I rushed out gasping for breath. I had reached the next step in my ascent from this pit came at Isaac's Gallery above Gladstone.

Since this show is over, I will say very little about it. It is a tremendous dexterity and intelligence, here at work on a problem is that for me there is an odd triteness and lack of venturesomeness solution to the problem of the medium that does not exist in Macdonald's.

From here I ascended progressively, first through the next the Ecole de Paris at Roberts' Gallery (Yonge just above Bloor) Paris at the Art Gallery of Toronto. The AGT show is more but its general consistency is at a lower level than that of the among these it is the work of Clavé, especially a large painting cult to look at things like this and then at the Parisian representation without feeling that representational painting is a pointless particularly poor bunch at Roberts'.

The Fifteen Painters from Paris show is very interesting who had seen this show wrote a letter to one of the afternoon thought the painters were laughing at her. Without extending is hard sometimes to disagree with her. Would it be puritan stuff?

In any case, let us immediately dispense with Hans Harp of a complete fraud. The rest, with the possible exception of more than frauds. But most I found mildly interesting or more painters of this show are Wols and Jean Bazaine. In Bazaine's ing for. Another painting worth a second look is De Stael's in the show.

But the final consummation for me was in another room vaguely attracted by a group of Riopelle's all seeming to be were two paintings that represented that ascent from the Macdonalds and the deeper abyss of the Laing Harrises into Ronald's Exodus. I will not talk about it. Go and look at it took hold of me and shook me deeply. I stood in front of it enough) was Slumber Deep and it was painted by—Jock Macdonald. By a man who could paint like this the things at the Here and to the Art Gallery and make them show you this picture. I have never seen a better painting.

So finally, my odyssey fulfilled the last conditions of the back to the artist I had started with. But he was a changed

The trio consists of Ray Brown on bass, Edmond Thigpen on percussion, and Oscar on piano. The group worked with an inspired unity of expression, particularly on such numbers as "It Ain't Necessarily So" and the selection following, "Ill Wind". Elaborate introductions led into almost orchestral arrangements, followed by invariably groovy improvisations.

Some of the selections were: the lyrical opening number, "Autumn Leaves", Duke Jordan's boppish "Jordu", swinging versions of some standards such as "My Heart Stood Still", "I Didn't Know What Time It Was", and a marvelously opened "How About You", "Ill Wind" paid homage to Art Tatum, another jazz great. "Billy Boy" rocked and romped in a down home groove, and "Golden Striker" proved to be a forceful rendition of the well-known Modern Jazz Quartet number.

The unit sound and rhythmic interplay between the three artists was superb, as in their

The AM&D Editor has a problem.

Now, there seem to be very many evenings when there are, say, two or three, or four "events of more than routine interest", to quote a certain magazine, so that on those lovely, lively nights there is good cause to have, say, two, or three, or four reviewers who will be prepared to deliver healthily biased opinions that we can print.

Well, we don't have enough to go around—we need about a thousand more—so your appearance in The Varsity office one night soon will bring unbounded delight, and you have nothing to lose but your friends when your reviews appear in print.

rendition of Clifford Brown's "Daahoud". Edmond Thigpen and Ray Brown provided excellent pulse, and contributed strongly in their featured solos.

This eventful evening has disproved "campus apathy" as all the tickets were snapped up during the first three hours of distribution, it has contributed to the acknowledgement of good jazz in a cultural framework, and it has enabled many to hear a great Canadian artist under the best possible conditions. It is to be hoped that similar projects will be possible in the future, particularly if the high-standard set by this memorable concert can be repeated.

TV Looks At AVR

Television's Playhouse 90 is considering using the "Christopher Jones" script and music.

Gino Matteo and Jim Doris, writers and co-producers of this year's All-Varsity Revue, said last night, "Although Playhouse 90 doesn't ordinarily consider college musical comedies, they are holding the script and music for further consideration".

Matteo and Doris added, "Of course, if Playhouse 90 does decide to accept it, both the script and music will have to be shortened from the original scheduled for Hart House the week after next—and we would be very happy to do so."

Comic lead Robin Barron, on crutches since his ankle fracture which occurred during a rehearsal break last week, is still scheduled to appear in "Christopher Jones".

Although dancer-actor Jerry Clyde has replaced Barron as comic lead dancer, script-writer Matteo said, "Barron is too good a comic to lose altogether. Even on crutches, he can bring the house down."

Director Barry Callaghan is scheduled to be interviewed next week on the two CBC radio stations in Toronto regarding the show and its possibilities as a television musical.

The theme melody from "Christopher Jones" will be played during these programs. The theme is the opening number of the show, introduced by contralto Carol Payne as a blues number.

Throughout the musical, the theme is used as background for the love scenes, and is sung in the last act by female lead Marian Metcalfe as a love ballad. Musical director Paul Robinson said the orchestra for "Christopher Jones" will be composed of at least 26 pieces.

"We're planning to add a big sound to musical comedy in Toronto," said score-writer Jim Doris.

Tickets for "Christopher Jones" are now on sale in the Students' Administrative Council building.

ENTERTAINMENT

The Schoolmistress—Ossington Theatre—All about a girl who doesn't like teaching school, and who is being married, and who wants to be an actress at the same time. The work of Arthur W. Pinero, for whom it was a hilarious success 75 years ago. This company meets with somewhat less success in the 20th century. Cast: Sylvia Gillespie, Geoffrey Alexander and the rest of the cast bravely try to keep it alive. Direction by Jean Rotz and Murray Davis, with sets by Clare Jeffery. Nightly at 8:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday at 5 p.m. also Students 60c.

The Tunnel of Love—Lansdowne Theatre—The representative of an adoption agency turns up at the right time but produces a little tad in what might be considered the wrong way—a zany and delightful farce, executed brilliantly by Austin Willis, Jack Creley and half a dozen equally unbelievable characters. Nightly at 8:30 p.m. (On Lansdowne just above Bloor).

The Killdeer—James Reaney's play is held over for another week; practically no one agreed with our reviewer's appraisal of it, but you may attach what importance you will to that. (Coach House Theatre, 200 Bedford Road, at 8:30 p.m.)

The World of Suzie Wong—The old fairy tale about the sweet, sensitive young maidens who are forced, mind you, to make a living at prostitution, which somehow or other is treated as a kind of art in itself. The Chinese setting does not quite manage to distract from the illusions of the playwright. It had two years in New York; it has one week here, which ends Saturday night. (Nightly at 8:20 p.m. at the Royal Alexandra Theatre.)

music

Eaton Auditorium—Toronto Bach Society—Another instalment in a local success story on Thursday, January 28th. The Bach Society has survived both pessimistic prediction and bad reviews to provide good music on a somewhat consistent basis. The guest artists tonight are Ilona Kombrink, Jan Rubes and Mario Bernardi. The program consists of the Suite No. 3, Cantatas 32 and 70 and the piano concerto in F minor.

Maple Leaf Gardens—Moscow State Symphony—The biggest, the best, straight from Russia, a genuine Russian orchestra that neither sings nor dances, but has Konstantin Ivanov as conductor, and Emil Gilels as featured soloist. On Tuesday, February 9th. Tickets available from the Gardens box office or from the Troyka Book Shop. Royal Alexandra Theatre—National Ballet of Canada—A month of Canada's own, from February 1st to 27th. The National Ballet gets better every year, and one no longer attends out of a sense of patriotism, but because they're good by any standard. Lois Smith and David Adams are featured artists, details of programs and tickets available from the box office. Special rates for students.

Eaton Auditorium—Marian Anderson—On Thursday, February 4th, a recital by one of the truly beautiful women in the world, as well as one of the most sensitive artists. Any concert by Miss Anderson is a moving and rewarding experience; this one will be no exception.

Hart House—Claude Frank—Another in the CBC Celebrity Series in the Great Hall, on Wednesday, February 3rd. One of Schnabel's last pupils, and a highly praised artist in his own right, Mr. Frank has chosen an all-German program, consisting of works by Schubert, Schumann, Beethoven and Brahms. Tickets are free, and are available to both men and women on a completely non-discriminatory basis.

A Pot Of Nothing

Line the pan with a paper-thin plot to provide a structural framework. Avoid any subtlety, make the fairy tale real. Our hero is a noble and rich knight, who, for local flavour hails from Toronto. For a touch of the unusual make him a bourgeois bohemian painter who has fled to the exotic Orient to escape the confines of his philistine background and prove himself in the field of battle. Our heroine is a charming damsel in distress who has ended up in a Hong Kong brothel because her cruel uncle deflowered her at the tender age of fourteen. Provide her with a child to add to the distress.

For modernity make the field of battle the psychological, but keep it simple lest the effect be lost. Our hero lives in the brothel where he paints nude portraits of our heroine. He refuses at first to engage in battle because he can't afford to pay for her services and rejects any offers of charity. (It is of the same order as the western hero who refuses to wear his gun.) Complicate the growing love with a series of sailors, a drunken Englishman, and a sober Englishwoman. The Englishman disposes of the sailors by becoming the permanent client for our fair damsel. He, in turn, must give up his secret pleasure on the order of an irate wife. He returns to a better and happier marriage, and all because our charming heroine, sweet Suzie Wong, has restored to him his virility.

The moment of decision arrives for our hero. He must choose between a successful career as a painter in the company of a virgin, upright English woman and an impoverished life with the deflowered Suzie Wong. True to the example of his historical predecessors he dons his guns and crawls into bed with our fair maid.

It is now Suzie's turn. She can choose to continue her love with our Canadian hero, endangering his painting career, and ensuring the poverty of her young son. Nobly, she sacrifices her love and flees. But with the help of bucketfuls of rain and a dash of pity the lovers are restored to each other in a soppy finale.

So much for the lining. Now, the batter. Along with a personable and charming Jeri Miyazaki as Suzie Wong and a handsome Robert Lomax as the knight turned painter, throw in a few insipid English colonials for commonwealth atmosphere, along with a miscellaneous array of sex-hungry sailors, disreputable, but sweet, Chinese "flowers of the bar", and an entourage of policemen, vendors, and coolies.

Spice with heaping cups of suggestive and cute nuances on sex. Suzie jealously inquires with reference to the English woman "Who was that virgin?". Our hero blandly replies, "Come, Suzie, that isn't a nice thing to say about anyone." Another funny of this order is Suzie's demure remark when our hero threatens to remove his trousers.

"Pants on, pants off, all same to me." There is no limit to the quantity added.

Stir the mixture slowly to appropriate background music for the correct sentimental effect. Decorate the product with a variety of ostentatious props and colourful Chinese costumes. Include a revolving stage and some authentic rain that belong in an engineer's nightmare. Allow Joshua Logan to serve the dish. The guaranteed result is the sentimental cellophane production of The World of Suzie Wong, which this week occupies the Royal Alexandra Theatre.

Suzie Wong is on the intellectual level of a popular adult comic book like Life, with the corresponding psychological superficiality. The result is a colourful composition of colourless matter.

And the audience ate it up.

UofT Accepts The Challenge

The University of Toronto has joined with other Canadian Universities in taking up the challenge of the 15,000,000 refugees of the world.

An organizational meeting of the World Refugee Year Committee which was held last night was well attended, with representatives from every sector of the campus.

Barbara Thomas of the national headquarters of the World University Service outlined the World Refugee Year. It was initiated by a group of young men in Britain. The UN then set aside the year from June '59 to June '60.

Tony Jennings was elected chairman of a committee composed of Dick Hamilton, Malcolm Martini, Dave Newman, and Anne Wetzel.

Following the showing of a film "Exposure" prospective projects were discussed. These included proposals that the UN club contact high schools, that petitions be sent to the government, and that a Blitz be held on campus.

In Which Pam Hill Writes

Dear Editor,

Golly!! I've been your minion for four years! Four years!!! And this is what I get! Is nothing sacred? Is my by-line to be sacrificed to the insensitive efforts of re-editors? To men re-editors? How unkind! How cruel! How unchivalric! Did you think that I would ignore such a slight? Never!! Can I not maintain my individuality even in this hive of mental activity? Am I to suffer to be dragged into the morass of intellectual uniformity and shifting pedantry? What a colossally terrifying thought! Four years for naught! For what? To be re-edited on some dirty make-up table! Incredible! Unthrilling!

Yours, goodness gracious!!

CURLERS WANTED

A few more curlers are wanted to fill out a rink for the University curling club. Interested persons please contact Bill Harris, WA. 1-1561 before Monday if possible.

DEEP MYSTERY

There is a great mystery in the Intramural Sports Office these days. Last Monday after a game the Intramural Game box which holds timers etc. disappeared. It is too big for a basket, too small for a suitcase. Why would anyone want it? Please return it.

... and in this corner by sharon milgram

While most peoples' attentions have been lured to the new pool on campus and the meets, not carnivals which are about to take place in it (that's enough on THAT subject) I'd like to attempt to divert their rapt interests to another form of H2O; the frozen kind, commonly referred to as ice.

That's what a number of coeds have been skating or trying to skate on for the past few weeks. It's amazing what this ice along with a small piece of rubber and a long stick with a curve on one end and a little piece of tape on both ends can do to these slippers and sliders struggling along on the rink. (An enclosed area of ice.) It transforms them into HOCKEY players!

They become adept at the art of skating, stick handling, tripping, hooking, boarding, holding and many of the other niceties of hockey.

Now, the first of these characteristics, skating and stick handling, are fine as long as they are not done off-side or after the puck has been iced. But, the rest of these newly acquired achievements are taboo, especially in girls hockey and in most cases, in the boys game.

But taboos, like rules, etc. are made to be broken, and broken they are! Therefore, who but the referee appears on the scene to penalize these "ignorers of rules"? There's just one thing wrong with this picture, other than its being here at all — the refs, like the girls aren't doing their jobs properly.

I must admit that the boys this year are an improvement over those in previous years, they're cuter for one thing, but that is not the point. They have also shown an improvement in their calls of icing the puck and off-sides. How do you like that? Me "praising" the referees?

BUT, that but had to come, they still have a few changes to make before achieving perfection. The basic change being, learn the rules of the girls game and especially that glaring rule which is supposed to soften the girls game with respect to the hockey we usually see played.

THAT rule, which I am slowly getting to, states in simplified language the following: Body checking is illegal and should earn the offender a two minute rest in that reserved area known as the penalty box.

This rule is the one which is most often ignored and of all the rules, it should be the one most strictly adhered to! This rule was put in the "book" for girls hockey in order to prevent as much as possible, bodily harm to the weaker sex. That's us.

Therefore, you refs, please try to call the game by the girls rules, not that I want you to ignore the tripping and elbowing as you have been doing, but instead, add body checking to the list of offences to be called.

P.S. Why not face masks for gal goalies? If it's good enough for Jacques

ANOTHER BIG SPORTS WEEKEND

Hockey Blues Tour Quebec

University of Toronto hockey Blues will face the battle of simple Arithmetic plus McGill Redmen and University of Montreal Carabins when they leave for a weekend jaunt into the wilds of Quebec tonight.

Blues tackle Redmen in Montreal tomorrow night and Carabins in Quebec City Saturday night. The simple Arithmetic, Blues face till the end of the season or until they lose another game? One more loss will almost inevitably cost them the Intercollegiate Hockey championship which Varsity have held against all comers for the last five years. Simple as that.

Not quite as simple, however, will be their foes. After last Friday's exhibition even the most sceptical must admit McGill are rapidly becoming a team to contend with, while Montreal, although in the doldrums would like nothing better than to earn their first victory of the season against the once mighty fallen.

Missing from the Blues' lineup on this excursion will be dependable defenceman Gord Epp who suffered a severe "charlie horse" in the McGill game and Gord (Espanola Flash) Gow is recuperating from an illness.

And so Jack Kennedy has ears, Varsity hockey fans have ears, even the sports writers give a damn. Now if only the hockey team would worry.

In practices last night Blues appeared a happy go lucky group of pucksters and it seems most unlikely that the pressure of competition will show its wear and tear. There were good spirits all around, good natured jostling, good natured good nature and a wee love all comers atmosphere and what atmosphere!

All shilly-shallying aside, if Varsity entertain any hope of a successful tour of the badlands, they sorely need; a take charge guy, a get mad guy, a thump-em into the ice guy and about (approximate figures) 15 want to win guys. Somebody somewhere has to get a tiny bit angry chaps, the handwriting is on the wall.

The return to action of Captain John Macdonald may be the necessary spark.

The return of slamin' Frank Sullivan to his familiar haunt at the blue line will add the muscle and the thump.

The one scoreless game (although they did get one goal): the PHE (not to be confused with PHEW) line of John Gatten, Jim Murchie and Howie Lill Bar Roth is no indication that this trio will not break out again.

George Hicken is just about due, so with Macdonald and Bill Griffin as linemates, Kennedy may have found the right combination.

And so it goes. Many things may yet happen. With Ian Sinclair on defense, rapidly losing his bashfulness and developing into a smooth rearguard of the Lorry Stacey type and Jimmy Simpson turning into a rushing and heady blue-liner, things still can be bright.

And don't forget Harry Neale is still on our side!

And Bob Giroux, mask or no mask, is one of the finest goalies in the league.

And before this error is carried disastrously too far, "The Varsity" apologizes to Gallant Jonathan Gatten for misquoting his playing weight. Let it be known far and sundry, our Johnnie is not 210 pounds as quoted, but, a nimble, fragile, husky, scrawny, shifty, mean, lean and hungry miserable 195 pounds with dips (we) all over him and his umbrella up.

HERE is the potent trio that Varsity Basketball Blues will face when they host the Assumption Lancers, defending champions of the Intercollegiate league, Friday night, in the third Athletic Night at Hart House. On the left Gene Rizak, All-Star guard and leading scorer; on the right Leo Innocente, another starry guard. In the middle, Hank Bissetti, the coach.

Wrestlers Host Rensselaer

Last Friday evening the U of T wrestling Blues bowed to Ontario Agricultural College 25-14 in an exhibition meet held at Hart House. Varsity, wrestling brilliantly, won most of the matches and would actually have won the meet had all the Toronto wrestlers been eligible.

Four of the evening's matches were defaulted to O.A.C. for this reason.

Toronto 191 lb iron man Herb Brown, defeated two opponents (at different times of course) one a heavyweight, and one his own weight, but was allowed credit for only the one bout. Rules you know.

The Intermediate team also dropped their exhibition 23-14 to the O.A.C. Intermediates for much the same reason — too many ineptible wrestlers.

This Friday the Athletic night entertainment will include Blues hosting the Rensselaer Polytechnical Institute in what should be another sparkling wrestling display.

Notes: Last years 147 lb Intercollegiate champion Bill Polito is still wearing a cast over his injured elbow and may not be able to compete this season.

Brilliant 137 lb sophomore Kenny Brown (no relation to Herb) is recovering from a bout with the flu but is expected to compete Friday.

The following are the results:

WRESTLING

Senior
123 lbs.—J. Ansell (OAC) pinned J. Pama (T). 140 lbs.—J. Hill (OAC) won decision over J. Stephenson (T). 137 lbs.—K. Brown (T) drew with T. Connel (OAC). 147 lbs.—A. Black (OAC) decision over A. Heavyweight — H. Brown (T) pinned G. Rolland (OAC).
Intermediate
121 lbs.—A. Dobros (T) pinned H. Leslie (OAC). 130 lbs.—G. McAlpine (OAC) pinned T. Briffes (T). 137 lbs.—J. Holt (T) pinned J. Hostawser (OAC). 147 lbs.—T. Pama (OAC) pinned J. Pama (OAC). 157 lbs.—S. Black (OAC) won decision over M. Flanchman (T). 167 lbs.—F. McElliot (T) pinned G. Baver (OAC). Heavyweight — S. Carrow (T) won decision over G. Grunau (OAC).

Final Boxing Trials Friday

This Friday at 8 o'clock the U of T boxers will square off for the team championships in a 12 bout meet to be held at the Hart House gymnasium.

To date all the fights have been the 'no decision' exhibition type of contests. Friday, however, the boxers will scrap in earnest for the right to represent Toronto in the Intercollegiate tournament to be held at Montreal on the 12th and 13th of February.

The crowded 165 lb. class should provide most of the thrills where no less than four members will compete.

Last year's 165 lb. Intercollegiate champion Mike Butt will try to defend his crown against Bob Dodds (last year's 155 lb. Intercollegiate champion) Izak Bouwer, graduate student from South Africa, and Norm Goldberg.

Of the 12 bouts three will be exhibitions since not all the divisions are as well contested as the 165 lb. class.

The following bouts are scheduled for Friday:

- (1) 165 lb. Decision—Bob Dodds vs. Norm Goldberg.
- (2) 165 lb. Decision—Izak Bouwer vs. Mike Butt.
- (3) 145 lb. Decision—Frank Corner vs. Jim McManus.

- (4) 140 lb. Decision—Bernie Catford vs. El Frechette.
- (5) 140 lb. Exhibition—Andy Catsford vs. Val Spring.
- (6) 130 lb. Exhibition—Art Vachon vs. Ozzie Hutchinson.
- (7) 155 lb. Decision—Robert Turner vs. Fred Johnstone.
- (8) 145 lb. Decision—Allen Anderson vs. Paul Wilton.
- (9) 175 lb. Exhibition—Emmett Neary vs. Robbie Miller.
- (10) 155 lb. Decision—Andy Vandenberg vs. Tony Copping.
- (11) 145 lb. Decision—Ken Chasse vs. Mike Wilson.
- (12) 165 lb. Decision—Winner of No. 1 vs. Winner of No. 2.

Bowling Green Swim Here

By GENE GLISKY

Bowling Green State University will provide the opposition when the Varsity swimming team takes to the Hart House Pool this Saturday afternoon. The meet will be the second of the season for Blues who are prepping for the defence of their Intercollegiate championship in London February 27.

Bowling Green will be extremely powerful opposition for Varsity as they are the defending N.C.A.A. National Champion of the N.C.A.A. Last year they won nine of eleven meets and the year before they were undefeated in a dozen encounters.

Stars of the Bowling Green squad are co-captains Hank Reest and Ray Martin. Reest gained All-American selection in the 220-yard freestyle last year and Martin also gained All-American selection in several events.

A good indication of the power of this squad is that of their sixteen record marks over various distances, no less than half are held by members of this year's team.

Varsity are not completely outclassed, however, Marv Chapelle, Blues' freestyler, has already posted a faster time in the 100-yard freestyle than the all-time Bowling Green record. With other fine swimmers like Wally Unger and a diver like George Huovinen, Varsity will give the visitors a good meet.

Blues' coach Marius Van Nooten expects that several Canadian records will fall as a result of the meet Saturday. Despite their loss to Western, Blues still rate as slight favourites to retain their Intercollegiate title this year.

Play Lancers In Big Game

By NOEL BATES

The Varsity Basketball team will be host to the Assumption University Lancers at Hart House on Friday night at 8:30 in the third Athletic night of the season.

The "Game" will be extremely important for both teams to win Toronto, if they wish to remain in contention will have to win and Assumption, if they want to remain undefeated and strengthen their chances for a second consecutive championship.

However, it will be a difficult task for the Blues as the Assumption team will have all but three of their team from last year returning. They have strength in the one department which Varsity (and especially in this game) will be weak. That is height.

Normally the Blues two tall men, Jim McGuire and Boris Wolchuk, have the problem of looking after the other teams "big" men but there is a possibility that Wolchuk will not be able to play because of a pulled back muscle which puts the onus upon McGuire.

The Windsor squad also has all-star guard Gene Rizak who is an excellent all round player, being the leading scorer in the League last year and having set an N.C.A.A. record for foul shots in Toronto. He poses quite a threat every game. In the backcourt with him will be Leo Innocente a three year veteran for the Assumption team.

One other disadvantage for the Blues is that Mike Muir aggravated an old football injury playing against O.A.C. on Saturday night and although it was first feared that it would keep him out of the game but now he will play but his 'ability will be impaired'.

If Peter Potter and McGuire can get hot and the others like Danny Norman, Mel Cohen and Norm Mencil can play the heads up ball that they are able to, a Varsity victory could result.

JUST NOTES . . . the preliminary match will be at 7:00 when Bathurst Heights meets Runnymede both of the T.D.I.A.A. in a high school exhibition . . . the Blues lost a close game to Andy's A.C. last night . . . the score of 70-64 . . . McGuire was the top scorer . . . Blues were down one point with a minute to go but Andy's popped in three outside shots to one Blue foul shot to win the game . . . there is a full night of activity at Hart House on Friday night . . . if you're not doing something drop down and even if you are doing something drop it! (or her) and come down . . . a good game, a good crowd and especially a victory are hoped for . . . Assumption lost by five points to Lawrence Tech the same team that Varsity lost to by one point . . .

Debaters Blast Library Policies

Hart House debaters decided Thursday night the University of Toronto Library should have closed stacks, librarians should be dancing girls, and The Varsity's editorial policies on librarians are 'absolutely right'.

Chief Librarian R. H. Blackburn heard his new Sigmund Samuel Memorial Library blasted by debaters as a $3,000,000 anthology of complaints as Ayes carried the evening by 17-13 on the resolution "A Book in Hand is Worth Two in the Stacks".

Mr. Blackburn said 30 percent of any collection of books is "never used—never even read".

"We never know," he continued, "which books will not be used, but our function is to provide students with particular books—a function best served if the stacks are completely closed."

He said the "greatest problem" was misplaced books in the stacks. "This could be solved as in Vienna where there is no lending to first or second year students."

"Books are often stolen until May," he pointed out, "and then we find them in lockers at Union Station, or in Sudbury."

The Librarian admitted there was a need for improved service, but also outlined the responsibility of borrowers to other students.

First Ayes Speaker, Jordan Sullivan (II SMC) said it was "tough" to get hold of important books after they had been stolen. However, he quoted a Varsity Editorial which said, "the many should not have to expiate the guilt of the few".

Sullivan supported the open stack system saying thefts could be prevented by adapting the Hart House method.

"This would mean," he said, "that students would enter the stacks in underwear only; thus preventing many, many robberies."

Noes speaker Boris Freesman (II UC) expanded the resolution analogy: "A book is indeed bird-like; one has to hunt it with a gun."

He said slow stack service was to due the fact "the floor runner in the stacks is always in the process of reading a Reader's Digest condensation of the Encyclopaedia Britannica".

Second Ayes speaker Peter Lydon (IV SMC) sympathized with the library staff tagging them, "under paid and over taxed". He recalled the days when a student could browse through the stacks "tearing and comparing as he went".

Lydon finished by appealing for better library service because in university "books are a student's right not his privilege".

Case for the Noes was summed up by J. G. Godsoe (I UC) who pleaded for "more stack passes and an ideal atmosphere for concentration".

Speaking from the floor D. Schwart (I UC) labelled the present library set up as a "form of paternalism". He advocated a committee of students, staff and librarians, to change the role of the Wallace Room which is now merely a social forum.

K. Golby (II UC) suggested painting the library wall with murals of shelves and books "to get at least the feeling of being in a library".

"The word stacks has for me," he added, "a connotation of disorder. What would I do, if my book were on the bottom of one of these stacks? They'd be picking up the books for months."

J. A. Pierce (IV SMC) said, "the undergraduate is unhappy unless he has something to gripe about perennially. With the library so highly lit every evening, naturally it is the subject of complaint."

Varsity Cagers Upset Lancers

By NOEL BATES

Before a crowd in excess of 1,000 the Varsity Blues outplayed, outscored and out-fought Assumption Lancers the defending Intercollegiate Basketball champions 78-76 in the tensest game that Varsity will play all season.

The crowd at Hart House was noticeably abundant with Assumption supporters, and all were on edge all evening as the pressure on everybody was near the bursting point, especially to wards the end of the game.

It was a big upset for Toronto who have a real black mark on Assumption's bid for a second successive title. They now have to beat Western twice. For Toronto, the game was a godsend for they are now back in league contention.

Toronto for all but the last two minutes held a commanding lead. With two minutes left Jim McGuire fouled out and this player who scored 24 points on offence and was brilliant on defence was immediately missed. Assumption took a 76-71 lead but Dan Norman, who topped the Blues with 26 points, and Peter Potter teamed up to cut the lead to one point with a minute left.

Boris Wolchuk, playing with a bad back, put Varsity ahead by one point and Assumption had the ball.

Checking well, the Blues partially blocked a shot and Doug Wyles got the rebound. At this point he called time out to the referee. The whistle blew but Pat Dunnion, apparently failing to hear the whistle over the roar of the crowd, kept checking. There was a flurry of elbows and fists, both benches emptied and pandemonium reigned. When things cooled off Wyles was sitting on the bench Dunnion was on the floor with a bloody nose. But all was not finished. Leo Innocents felt that his team mates had gotten a raw deal and he attempted to persuade Wyles of the fact. Unfortunately for Innocents, Wyles played Blue football. The ref helped Innocents off the floor and sent Wyles and Dunnion to the dressing room.

When the game continued the pressure became greater and in the next attempt to score Peter Potter was fouled by Gene Rizak. Potter sank the last point in the game.

Coach John McManus deserves a great deal of credit for his offensive system which stupefied the Windsor team for most of the game. He placed two men on Rizak and Innocent whenever either of these players got the ball. As a result, Rizak who usually hits in the 30's found difficulty in shooting through McGuire's stomach. (McGuire is 5" taller than Rizak.) Innocent fared a little better netting 18.

Dan Norman played the pivot position on offence and accounted very well for himself he led the Toronto team in scoring with 26 points and was outstanding around the Toronto boards.

Potter was held to 13, but the captain used ball control throughout the game very much to Toronto's advantage. Mike Muir, Bob Miner and Norm Menczel all played well for Toronto.

The biggest blow to Toronto came late in the first half when Norm Menczel was helped off the floor after pull-

Vic Raids New Hall

University of Toronto's newest and seemingly impregnable women's bastion, Victoria College's Margaret Addison Residence, fell to a small band of student raiders Thursday night.

The students gained entry to the residence by overpowering the night watchman. No one knows how they opened the doors, but its suspected someone on the inside helped them.

The band forced to flee with "suitable booty" after they learned Women's Dean MacPherson, was checking each room.

Several girls were still scratching their heads the next morning when they found their wardrobes minus several foundation garments.

Pitt Wins Car Race

Jack Pitt of the British Empire Motor Club took first place in the huge Abner Steinberg-Bud Martin Sports Car Rally last weekend.

Pitt guided his Ford Zephyr over 100 miles of horrible roads to highways ten and seven, north of Brampton, in 3½ hours.

"Five drivers out of the 20 in the race got lost," Bud Martin commented last night. "The rally was a navigational exercise and we sent them over unused back roads. We also gave them tricky directions."

Appointments

John H. Sword has been appointed executive assistant to University of Toronto President Claude T. Bissell.

Mr. Sword has been secretary of the school of graduate studies for the last 12 years.

Dr. Bissell said Mr. Sword will take over his new post July 1 when Dr. Murray Ross resigns as vice-president to become full-time president of York University.

Mr. Sword holds a BA from the University of Manitoba and an MA from U of T.

Meanwhile Dr. Edgar McInnis, president of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, has been appointed professor of history at York University. Dr. Ross announced last week. The appointment was the first made to the York University staff.

Dr. McInnis is a former professor of history at U of T.

a world of good — (sororities note)

Missionaries have been entering darkest Africa for years, carrying the word of the God Of Their Choice to the heathens. With the word, they have carried fundamental principles of human rights.

Now the time has come to wash our own dirty linen. A professor from another university will come to U of T later this year to give a special lecture on race relations. Although faced with a fanatic belief approaching that expressed in Mein Kampf, the professor will try to bring civilization to Sorority Row.

I will personally make sure all sorority presidents get a chance to hear this lecture. All they have to do is ask.

young anarchist?

Metropolitan Toronto Police must be getting curious about Frank Adamek. In a Toronto court last week Adamek was fined $20 for operating a radio station without a licence. The police radio in his car was confiscated. Police had previously warned the student to remove the radio, and he had done so, but had reinstalled it.

Last September 26 firemen rushed to Adamek's home to extinguish a blaze caused by home-made rocket fuel. Adamek said he had been heating a mixture of sulphur and zinc when a hole burned through the pot. Firemen poured water on the flames, while nervously watching an array of jars and bottles lining the walls of the basement.

What is he up to?

Examinations have cast a frightening shadow over the staff of Le Quartier Latin, the student newspaper of the University of Montreal. A CUP story says almost the entire staff of the paper will have to resign because of "pressure of academic work." Le Quartier Latin is published twice a week. It seldom carries photos, and is usually devoted to features and editorial articles. It does not need a large news staff. The Varsity is published three times a week. Read it with respect, it's printed with tired blood.

whatsa matta, you all chicken

Surely among the nearly 15,000 students at this university there is someone who wants to have himself tattooed. A plea in The Varsity by my operative number one, Lewellyn von Grenfel, had no result. So I am now begging you in person. It doesn't have to be a major job. I'm not asking you to squirm in the chair while a battleship is slowly etched on your chest. Just your initials, or your girl friend's initials tattooed on your arm would be enough. Or if you're a girl, you could have "Fabian" or a heart or a triangle or a dollar-sign done in green, depending on what year you're in. But anyhow, it won't cost you a dime. And you'll get your picture in The Varsity and everything. Come on down to the dank basement of the SAC building and roll up your sleeve. Sure, I could have it done on myself, but er, eh . . . I'm chicken.

Ex-UofT "Prof" Caught At UofO

OTTAWA, Jan. 31, (CUP)—A professional hoaxer who once lectured at the University of Toronto has been trapped by his own scholarship at the University of Ottawa.

Robert Peters, 42, has fooled universities around the world by passing himself off as a lecturer specializing in various fields.

Known in some circles as The Parson, Peters was fired by the University of Ottawa Jan. 20 after somebody tipped off university officials that his lectures on Tudor history were, although academically excellent, not backed up with a university degree.

Peters claimed he had a BA from the University of London and a PhD. from the University of Washington.

He taught history and divinity at Trinity College in 1949 for three months until he was found out and fired.

Peters was a deacon of the Anglican Church in England in 1941 and was ordained a priest in 1942. In 1955 he was unfrocked by the Archbishop of Canterbury reportedly because of newspaper accounts of bigamy he was said to have committed.

When he came to Canada last year, Peters is quoted as saying he was taking his "fourth and best" wife with him.

offered more colorful suggestions such as making the time more enjoyable by hiring dancing girls to entertain waiting students while the staff fished for stack books.

One unidentified student shouted "further literary sex" could be fostered by the adoption of the motto "Do It Now While Men and Materials Are Available".

Another student said a program of "National Erotica Week" could be established and the traditional Catholic fear of books on the "Index" could be alleviated, by simply opening the stacks.

"In Love Men Are Not Honest"

Men are out to get "as much mileage as possible" according to a debate decision last week.

SPS and POTs debated the issue "In Love, Men Are Not Honest".

Freda Dancy (I POTs) said men have a loose definition of love in mind when they talk to their girls. "They say they are in love with every girl they take out."

John Brant (II SPS) defined love from Webster's dictionary and went on to explain that women on dates hear only wedding bells while men are thinking of the mileage they can get out of them.

"When a man is really in love, then he is honest," he said. "Honesty is an essential feature of love," he reassured the girls.

Marg Billings (I POTs) said men take advantage of girls to the greatest extent.

Alberta Council Insists Editor Represented

EDMONTON, Jan. 31, (CUP)—The students' council of the University of Alberta refused last week to let the editor of the campus newspaper, The Gateway, give up his non-voting seat in the council.

Joe Clark asked the council that he be no longer required to sit as a member of the council, suggesting the editor serves no purpose there and that his presence might be used to levy undue influence upon the opinions and editorial freedom of the paper.

His request came hot on the heels of a suggestion at the annual Canadian University Press conference that editors should not sit on council.

Varsity Editor Sam Ajzenstat sits on the U of T SAC as a voting member.

Members of the Alberta Council insisted no influence has occurred in the past and suggested there was little danger of it coming now.

They also said it was convenient for the council to have the editor on hand so he could report on the activities of his paper.

The Gateway is the only major student organization with a seat on council.

Clark argued that if the paper should sit and report, other groups financed by the students' union should also be represented.

In the final vote, only one councillor supported the motions that the editor be allowed to relinquish his seat. Twelve members voted against the motion, and nine abstained.

"All society frowns on IT before marriage but it seems to me 84% is society itself," he said.

One of the girls said she doubted the validity of the figures for women. She said there are a few girls who are "spreading themselves around".

tantrum

The other day we got a ride with a man who was the Canadian agent for a new line of men's cosmetics. The featured product in this line was an ointment called "Man Tan."

"Man Tan", according to our chauffeur, was wonderful stuff. It is an aid to acquiring a magnificent sun tan.

All you have to do is smear a little of it on your face, expose yourself, and a few hours later your face is glowing with healthy colour.

Of course it wears off after a time, but "Man Tan" will shortly be available in whatever outlet you are accustomed to use.

At first it sounded wonderful. In only a few hours we could look like Clark Gable looks all the time. We even contemplated growing a moustache.

But then when we looked in the mirror, we had second thoughts about the benefits of "Man Tan."

After all, we didn't look so bad. As a matter of fact, if you wanted to be perfectly honest about it, we were obviously pretty healthy and handsome right now. "Man Tan" couldn't do us very much good.

And now, just anyone from anywhere can look as ravishingly handsome as us.

All our tedious hours at the beach during the summer and under the sun lamp during the winter will be equalled by a handful of ointment.

If it keeps up, no one will be able to tell us rugged outdoor types from anybody else.

We're all in favour of democracy. We believe devoutly in John Diefenbaker and motherhood.

But the line has to be drawn somewhere.

There just has to be a way of distinguishing the Us from the Them.

Egalitarianism had gone too far.

"Man Tan" must go.

Music In Toronto

CLAUDE
FRANK

The third in the series of CBC Celebrity Concerts will occupy the Great Hall of Hart House this Wednesday night, and it will feature the German-American pianist Claude Frank.

It promises to be a celebrity concert to end all celebrity concerts. Rudolph Serkin, himself of fame, particularly in the Bach repertoire, said of Mr. Frank: "I consider Claude Frank one of the finest and brilliant musicians of this generation. His pianism is outstanding, and his deep and most sensitive musicianship is absolutely unique!"

Although born in Nuremberg, Germany, he has made his home in the U.S. since 1941; he is 35 years old. He is today counted among the major American artists.

His program will include works by Schubert, Beethoven, Brahms and Schumann. Tickets are FREE, and available to men and women alike (sic) at the Hall Porter's Desk in Hart House. The concert begins at 8:10 p.m.

Nutcracker David Adams and ballerina Lilian Jarvis make a charming contrast in the ballet "The Nutcracker." The National Ballet will perform the fourth act of this delightful ballet here on Feb. 16 and 19.

NATIONAL BALLET

The National Ballet of Canada opens at the Royal Alexandra Theatre tonight. They will be presenting, in addition to works in the standard repertoire, several new works including Pineapple Poll. The plot is loosely adapted from W. S. Gilbert's poem and the music is Arthur Sullivan's, but the final results are strictly the National. The program for the first week of performances is as follows: Mon. Evg., Feb. 1—Les Rendezvous; Pas de Deux Romantique; Li-la Garden; Pineapple Poll (first performance in Toronto). Tues. Evg., Feb. 2—Les Rendezvous; The Mermaid (first performance in Toronto); Offenbach in the Underworld. Wed. Evg., Feb. 3—Les Sylphides; Ballad; Pineapple Poll. Thurs. ## WEEKEND

HERESPENT

That There Is Snow You A

By Ed Roberts

A Toronto winter was thawed by southern charm this weekend as 22 students from the University of North Carolina spent the weekend as guests of the University of Toronto.

It was a wild zany sort of weekend which started with a bang as the train bearing the Tar Heelers northward was five and a half-hours late pulling into Union Station.

But once they finally did arrive they received a tumultuous welcome as their companion Tar Heelers from the U of T swept forward in one huge wave of "Welcome Y'all's" to embrace old friends.

And immediately the strains of the song were raised to the rafters in a which more than any other was to be of the weekend.

And on they went into a razzing session which before the weekend ended saw Tar Heelers sing their song at Toronto's Granite Club, in the cloistered halls of a Woodbridge farm, in a basement room at a French restaurant, in the mid-surgency hockey crowd at Maple Leaf Gardens in jam-packed cars of the Toronto Transit Commission and in the homes where the numerous all-night parties were held.

Pictures of happy Carolinians trying their first snowball, and making their attempt to master the art and science of skating, and screaming themselves hoarse at fast-ranging National Hockey League games.

And then there was the quiet dignity of an early morning service in the Trinity Church and breakfast in sedate Strachan Hall.

But the weekend was more than a succession of wild times, happy songs and parties.

It was a chance for a group of representative students from the U of T to get acquainted with a group of students representative of entirely different background, a background that most of the Toronto Tar Heelers only by hearsay.

And it provided a chance to show most of the opinions Toronto students about the south were not wrong—but definitely distorted in many instances.

But some impressions came through scathed, and even strengthened. That the southern accent is for real, and all that those gracious southern manners is not generated. And those southern belles are beautiful and charming beyond even the dream of a U of T engineer.

FLICKSPENT

Chaikovsky Opera Good Fin

EUGENE ONEGIN, now entering its second week at the Radio City Theatre, has been contemptuously dismissed by the Globe's Frank Morris as "lavender and old lace". This is not an original comment—at least three other Toronto critics have hurled the same epithet at Chaikovsky's lyric opera.

Perhaps it is a florid manner of saying "Eugene Onegin" is an anachronism, and has no place in contemporary society. It is almost too simple to refute such a charge by stating that the opera deals with unrequited love. If love has no place in our present society, we may as well drop the Bomb and get the whole sorry mess over with.

Instead, I will say that "Eugene Onegin is far more than just a love story—it is a profound and witty comment on society, and in particular that very colourful, off-beat character in 19th Century society, the dandy, as exemplified by Baudelaire, Vigny and Lermonotov.

Albert Camus, in his brilliant study of non-conformity, "The Rebel" has this to say about these Satanic misfits: "Disoriented, like all people without a rule of life, he is coherent as a character. But a character implies a public; the dandy can only play a part by setting himself up in opposition. He can only be sure of his own existence by finding it in the expression of others' faces. Other people are his mirror. A mirror that quickly becomes obscured, it is true, since human capacity for attention is limited. It must be ceaselessly stimulated, spurred on by provocation. The dandy is, therefore, always compelled to astonish."

... He plays at life because he is unable to live it. He plays at it until he dies, except for the moments he is alone and without a mirror. For the dandy, to be alone is not to exist. The romantics only talked so grandly about solitude because it was their real horror, the one thing they could not bear."

Judging by Camus' statements, the 19th Century Romantic bears a striking resemblance to (stat's definition), and even merged beatnik comes to share of analysis: "When they fail to commit suicide or go mad, they make a career of prosperity. Even when they exclaim that they are to keep quiet, their silence is a

One of these weary Carabins eyed the camera with mild interest, but his two friends are dead to the world. The floor must have been more comfortable than it looks.

Lively singing is only part of the fun on a Carabin Week-end. These Carabins are really putting their hearts into it.

THERESPENT

Les Carabins a Montreal

"Savoir-faire français, English savoir-vivre..."

This was the greeting of the Université de Montreal to the Toronto Carabin visitors. By the time the Toronto students said "au revoir" to Montreal, they knew the French-Canadians had more than their share of both the savoir faire and the savoir-vivre!

On Thursday night, January 21, the walls of Windsor station shook with the Varsity cheer (in a French accent.) Toronto had arrived in Montreal—and it was a case of love at first sight.

The greetings this time around were far from shy. Arms and scarves were thrown about the necks of the Carabins. The bright gold and blue scarves, knit by the Montreal physiotherapy students, are still being worn around the campus by the Toronto carabins.

That evening, Montreal prepared us with songs, punch, and a taste of night-clubbing, French-Canadian style, for the day of skiing to follow.

We were treated to "croissants" and coffee on Friday morning at the University "Social Centre". A CBC program, "Chez Miville", probably the French-Canadian equivalent of "Toast and Jamboree" was on hand with songs and jokes to interview both English and French Carabins.

From the breakfast party we went to the Laurentians for skiing—square dancing—and hot buttered rum. A moonlight sleigh-ride through the mountains to a party, and the day was perfect.

The theme of the weekend was presented in the discussion group—"Does Canada Waste Talent?" Education was discussed—its availability, the differences between the English and French-Canadian systems, and the opportunities for employment and research.

A very different picture than U of T is presented by the University of Montreal. Built high on Mount Royal, overlooking the city, its buildings are all modern and fully equipped.

In the "Centre Social" building, Monsieur Lemay, director of the Social Centre, gave a Martini party before the Saturday night dinner. Monseigneur Lussier, rector of U of M treated the Carabins to a banquet, "gourmandise permis" after the martinis.

Eighteen hours later, and eighteen hours of sleep less, we left Montreal.

Clutching skis, baggage, scarves, and each other, the two sides of Canada bid a noisy farewell. After tears, frantic promises of return visits, letters, autographs, the train pulled out.

Now, a week later, it is over. Perhaps the weekend was too rushed—we left Montreal stunned that so much had happened in so short a time.

The gains however, were tremendous. Besides a new friendship, and everlasting understanding, the Toronto Carabins have a new concept of the important place in Canada of the French-Canadians, of their hospitality, and their fun.

HALFSPENT

Queen Victoria Revisited

The average age of the audience at the Crest last Saturday was about fifty-five years. The age of the play being presented is considerably more. Arthur Pinero's The Schoolmistress delighted our grandparents 70 years ago; it's difficult to say that it is not an enjoyable play even yet—it is—but it is also very tiresome in spots.

After a very weak opening scene, featuring the young ladies of Volumnia College, the action picked up with the entrance of Charmion King as Miss Dyott, the proprietress. Miss Dyott, it seems, has married a Gentleman, and is currently engaged in the worthy task of discharging her husband's debts. To further this end, our schoolmistress becomes a comic opera star. This extra-curricular activity must of course be kept secret from the young ladies, and from "darling Vere" who could not stand the shock of having an actress wife. To explain her absence, Miss Dyott says she is visiting a clergyman's wife for a few days. Vere decides to have a party for his bachelor cronies at the girls' school while wife is away. The young ladies, who are apparently supposed to be very independent types, have their own ideas as to what sort of party Vere should give. Complication stumbles in after complication and characters prance and posture across the stage; they don't write plays like they used to.

As for the acting, how can modern actors tackle a play like this? Most of the actors on stage "tutuate" between violently overacting, and looking embarrassed about the whole thing. Charmion King sweep, about the stage competently and effectively, but the total effect is rather colourless. The Hon. Vere Queckett must have been an uproarious figure in his day; despite Geoffrey Alexander's best efforts, he is only a mildly amusing character. John Vernon as Rear-Admiral Archibald Rankling overacted shamelessly but was sometimes quite funny. The very talented Sylvia Gillespie made the part of a schoolgirl heroine who was both precocious and meddling as humane and sympathetic as possible. The young ladies were generally very tiresome. Ed. Simay played Otto Bernstein, impresario straight out of a vaudeville skit, as just that. Amelia Hall does good work as Mrs. Rankling, but it is to little avail. The characters are dashing, honourable and or boring.

After all this, it may seem insincere to say that the Schoolmistress was at times quite amusing. The sternest thing that can legitimately be said against it is that it is simply not suitable for production today. It's humour lies in lampooning the characters and customs peculiar to Victorian England. These no longer exist, and are comprehensible to a young modern audience as archaisms only. There is no underlying universal appeal, such as in the plays of Moliere. It was a bit of fluff, even in its own day, and there can be no adequate reason for producing it today. On the other hand, the play obviously has more merit than the average Broadway comedy.

It's really not fair to our grandparents to expose their remembrances of "classic farces" to the irreverent eye of the more sophisticated public of today.

THOUGHTSPENT

"Not Persuasion But Delight"

"In a world that doesn't believe in art, art is represented in print with more importance than it possesses."

This was one of many biting views expressed by Eric Bentley, distinguished critic and Professor of English at Columbia University, in his lecture "Drama in our Society" in Hart House Theatre, Friday evening. Prof. Bentley delivered the inaugural lecture in the newly founded Edgar Stone Lectureship in Drama.

Professor Bentley thoroughly deflated the influence of literature on social conditions. He said, "artists and theatre guilds have no faith in art so they make excessive claims about it. Its real effects are small internal and hard to observe."

"All writers have some axe to grind," he said. "Unfortunately the type of drama which attempts to convert people does not attempt it reasonably. If artists were rational, they would not use the theatre for this purpose."

Professor Bentley also noted that these propaganda writings "are only persuading the persuaded". No Broadway plays about negroes have ever attempted to convert a conservative southern audience to a northern point of view. He felt that if drama is to have any influence it must start with respect not for society but for the people in society. "Our Puritan forebears thought the theatre was a place where wisdom was unlearned; those people who expected a blossoming of the arts when democracy developed were disappointed."

"The working man turned to automobiles and television because operas and symphonies are addressed to dowagers. They don't have the right clothes, the right manner, or the right accents."

"The theatre is also directed to the upper classes but alongside Broadway and television there is a hunger for high art among the public."

"The masses earnestly consider domestic dramas as deep as Ibsen and are likely to find Death of a Salesman as noble and profound as King Lear," Professor Bentley said. He felt that men in the literary profession are inclined, wrongly, to overlook the small good done by this.

Prof. Bentley pointed out that when the masses are given an opportunity to see good drama at reasonable prices and convenient hours, they appreciate the most sophisticated literature.

Professor Bentley concluded, "today social drama will be about atom bombs or complete world destruction. We must expect a literature of terror, nihilism, and defeat, a literature of man waiting for doomsday without God."

"A type of freedom literature may emerge in which the writer will not be able to see the light because of the surrounding black cloud but will struggle for it anyway."

"Writer will be the conscience of mankind simply because they do not know what else to do."

Opera Review con't.

orial touch, fully expressing in a few telling moments, the hamminess of the dandy.

Onegin, the Lermontovian central figure, is also a finely drawn character, wallowing in "Weltschmerz". Whereas Lensky is swayed by his public, Onegin attempts to remain aloof and lead his audience by the nose. The chorus in the Gremm ballroom scene give us the best insight into his character when they ask each other in hushed voices what role he is now playing—Child Harold or ardent patriot. As for his sudden discovery in this same scene that he loves Tatyana, Camus again provides an interesting insight:

"The Byronic hero, incapable of love, or only capable of an impossible love, suffers endlessly... To love someone whom you will never see again is to love like a flame and to cry out for self-annihilation into the bargain."

Thus, while Onegin appears to be sincerely in love with Tatyana, he is in reality far more in love with the torments of unrequited passion. The final scene would perhaps be far more ironic if Tatyana as coldly disdained Onegin, as he had her in the first act. But Chalkovsky was too interested in Tatyana as a human being. The effect is still shattering.

Certain valid criticisms may be made of the film version of this opera. The first act approaches monotony, due in part to the omission of the peasant dance in the first scene. And every once in a while, the director falls in love with his visuals, and sacrifices rhythm to a lovely final shot.

The actors are nearly flawless, both in interpretation and in lip synchronisation with the singers' voices. Ariadne Shengelaya presents a simple, warmly emotional Tatyana; Igor Ozerov as Lensky is the perfect poscut, and Vadim Medvedev as Onegin, apart from being too sympathetic when spurning Tatyana, is beautifully shallow and world-weary as the Satanic adolescent.

In general, "Eugene Onegin" is a sensitive and imaginative mounting of an all-too-often overlooked masterpiece. It deserves to be regarded, alongside Vera Stroyeva's "Boris Godunov", as one of the finest opera films made to date.

Rochester Tech Fencers Down

Rochester Institute of Technology suffered a defeat at the hands of the U of T Fencing team here on Saturday, losing 2 matches to 1. In the three weapons fenced, Toronto won the foil 5 bouts to 4, lost the sabre 4-5, and won the epee 5-4. Fencing for Toronto were Paul Nightingale (IV Arch), captain, Martin Nash (III Meds), vice-captain, Sandy Bell and Malcolm Bell (both III SPS), Bill Greaves (SGS) and Ron Rice (II SPS). Nash starred among the Toronto fencers, winning all three of his epee bouts by wide margins over his opponents.

The defeat of the strong Rochester team is regarded as a good beginning for U of T's fencing season, which continues with an Ontario Team Foil Competition here on Thursday evening, a return match at Rochester in two weeks, and the Intercollegiate Championships.

Sabre
Rochester—Steele, three wins no losses (11 hits against). Dunbas, one win two losses (13 hits against). Cannon, one win two losses (14 hits against).
Toronto—S. Bell, two wins one loss (11 hits against). Nightingale, one win two losses (14 hits against). M. Bell, one win two losses (14 hits against).

Foil
Toronto—M. Bell, two wins one loss (10 hits against). Rice, two wins one loss (11 hits against). S. Bell, one win two losses (14 hits against).

Epee
Rochester—Capurso, three wins no losses (6 hits against). Dunham, one win two losses (12 hits against). Ottemiller, no wins, three losses (15 hits against).

Toronto—Nash, three wins no losses (4 hits against). Greaves, two wins one loss (10 hits against). Rice, no wins three losses (15 hits against).

Rochester—Capurso, two wins one loss (7 hits against). Mounse, one win two losses (13 hits against). Mason, one win two losses (14 hits against).

FENCERS square off at Hart House in the meet between Rochester and Toronto Saturday afternoon. On the right is Sandy Bell. Varsity won the meet 2-1.

The Assumption followers at times did not display good conduct in the stands. It is perhaps a petty point but, fire arms whether or not they contain real bullets have no place in a gymnasium.

The team was physically exhausted after the game and it was truly indicative of the way they played. They gave all their

A word about the refereeing. Some of the visiting fans were noticeably upset at some of the calls but in the opinion of this reporter all calls were fair. Ollie Mandryk is one of the best officials in the league and a comment against him would not be well-founded.

The tension towards the end of the game grew to the bursting point, and one man who obviously could not take it was the Lancers' coach Hank Blasetti. After trying to attack a fan, he was dragged screaming and cursing from the floor by two unidentified friends after the game. When asked for an opinion of the officiating he said: "Those &@!%* took it away from us!!"

OAC Girls Capture Archery Tournament

Although their first view was our new W.A.B. left the girls from the other universities very impressed and delighted, it didn't affect the shooting eye of the girls from O.A.C. one little bit.

In fact, shooting in the brand new gym might even have inspired the Aggies as they achieved one of the highest team

Although their first view of scores in tournament play, 4,033, in winning the Women's Intercollegiate Indoor Archery Tournament.

Toronto, winners of the meet for the past three years had to settle for the runners-up spot. As hostesses, I guess the girls were just being polite. Following Toronto were Queen's, Western and McMaster.

Overall, the tournament was labelled a great success. Besides the new building and the new champions, there were three perfect ends shot to add that extra little lustre to the shoot. For those who don't follow Robin Hood and his merry men, a perfect end is when six bulls eyes are gotten in six attempts.

The perfect ends were achieved by Nancy Besely of O.A.C. who shot hers in the morning from twenty yards and Toronto's Nancy Hogg who got two, Nancy shot both of hers from fifteen yards getting one in the morning and one in the last try of the afternoon.

The individual scoring records showed why Aggies won the meet. Three of the top four shooters were from O.A.C. with the fourth member of their team not far behind. Top scorers were as follows: Iola Price, O.A.C. 1064; Nancy Besely, O.A.C. 1023; Gina 'perfect shot' Hogg, Toronto 982; Florence McCully, O.A.C. 980.

Victoria Still Lead In Track

Victoria College retained their lead in the standings of the weekly indoor track meets as Jim Snider set a new record in the Senior half mile run last Tuesday night. Snider's time was 2:01.7. Second was Peter Watson, also of Vic.

Mike Turk won the Junior half mile in 2:09.7, as UC captured the first three places in this race to stay in second place behind Victoria.

Results of University Championship Track Meet:

Junior 880 yd. run — 1. Mike Turk, uc, Time 2:09.7; 2. Ed Lahay, uc; 3. Peter Bing, uc; 4. Jerry Stewart, vic.

Senior 880 yd. run — 1. Jim Snider, vic, Time 2:01.7 (New Record); 2. Peter Watson, vic; 3. Bill Crothers, pharm; 4. Bob Charmichael, SPS.

Sprint Medley Relay — 1. Trinity: Barry Matheson, Abbot Consway, Dick Hamilton, J.M. Griffin, Time 2:16.3; 2. vic; 3. SPS.

Point shooting, after three weeks: vic 32, uc 26, med 15%, smc 15, trin 12, sp 10%, and pharm 10.

. . . and in this corner

by sharon milgram

It's while I'm in my mostest favouritest favourite shode up on Bloor Street that I get to thinking about this looming think or thwim meet — some of which is being already done with. Like the synchronized that is, man, y' know. And I'm seeing this list that has Nursing at the top, carefully followed by Vic, to say naught of P&HE. I'm calculating that this is neither decisive nor indicative, but just a good start.

I'm overhearing this Lil Bobson (almost-doctor — doing a good job on the guy beside her) at the next table, and I'm knowing she is the Intercol. diver for the Bluesers. But I also get the tip-off that a Miss Dixon of my lovely black and red "Panther" college is competing, and I'm thinking that first place will not be at all obvious to the naked eye.

Then my one-eye is contemplating those lovely fillies in the races. And those "black horses" are running best, so that's where mine shekels go.

While I'm peering across campus with a 'share-ful' arm, I'm bumping into Cynne Hare trotting laps between the Nursing Building and the Medical Building. She'll take a first in the back-stroke, while "Fizz" McCullen is trying to edge out Jill "Victor" Fisher for a second. And I'm also seeing the above "black machine" give Val Lewis only a slight edge in the 75 individual medley.

But then I see this great cloud of UC, Vic and dear Trinity in the free-style, breaststroke and relays. That cool UC blonde (Lowell Pelton, she's telling me her handle is), will easily edge out Liz "Fizz" Hunt and Joy Sinclair in the 100 free; and then Lyn Philpott etc. in the 50. I give Pat Armstrong several strokes on Pottsie's Shirley German. But I'm being honest in thinking that those old Trinity relays aren't really as fast as they're thinking. I'm seeing P&HE and Nursing giving a reeeeeeally big show.

But Val Lewis is showing the best butterfly on campus, and will be many lengths ahead of Ann Edwards, who may also be in for some surprises.

So . . . I'm advising all youse land-lubbers to gamble on Phizz Ed, Nursing and Victor in dis order. My very own Panthers can do so little . . . glub . . .

BLUES IN SECOND PLACE

Blues Rally In Third To Edge Redmen 3-2

Montreal, Jan. 31 — University of Toronto Blues returned home with four points from their two weekend games in Montreal.

Friday night they edged McGill Redmen 3-2 and then Saturday afternoon downed University of Montreal Carabins 7-4 in a Senior Intercollegiate hockey game.

Obviously tired after Friday's grueling game with McGill, Toronto nevertheless skated to an easy victory over the last place Carabins. Montreal has yet to win a game this year.

Eleven players shared the goal getting in the game. For Toronto it was: John Gatten, Howie Roth, George Hicken, Gord Frey, Harry Neale, John Macdonald, and Bill Griffin. For Montreal: Gaby Alain, Claude Dugay, Ronald Matte, and Jean Bernier.

Ten penalties were called, six of them against Varsity, including a misconduct and a minor to Hicken. He received a two minute penalty for butt ending and a misconduct for swearing at the referee at 12:15 of the second period.

As in Friday's game, the return of Captain John Macdonald to the Varsity lineup after a long layoff, proved a factor in the easy win. Macdonald has transformed the second line of himself, George Hicken and Bill Griffin into a definite scoring threat and this is good news for coach Jack Kennedy who is preparing his club for a stretch run at the league leading Lavars team.

First Period
1. Montreal, Alain (Landreville) ..... 2:45
2. Toronto, Gatten (Neale) ..... 8:48
3. Toronto, Hicken (Sinclair, Neale) ..... 10:45
4. Toronto, Roth ..... 13:05
Penalties—Orcheson 4:28, Matte 8:18, Duparme 9:08, Gatten 13:56, Hebert 16:19.

Second Period
5. Montreal, Dugay ..... 1:47
6. Toronto, Frey ..... 4:45
7. Toronto, Neale (Cherepacka, Orcheson) ..... 11:52
8. Toronto, Macdonald (Griffin) ..... 12:31
Penalties—Hicken (minor and misconduct) 12:19, Lemaire 16:23.

Third Period
9. Montreal, Matte (Dugay) 2:56
10. Toronto, Griffin (Murchie, Hicken) ..... 9:26
11. Montreal, Bernier ..... 13:22
Penalties—Frey 15:15, Cherepacka 15:57.

Whip Montreal 7-4

Montreal, Jan. 29—Sparked by the return to action of John Macdonald, the Varsity Blues scored three goals in the third period to earn a 3-2 win over the McGill Redmen in a grueling Senior Intercollegiate Hockey game.

Macdonald scored the tying goal early in the third period and then set up linemate George Hicken for the winner in the dying minutes of the stanza. Harry Neale, a standout on defence for Blues, was the other scorer.

McGill's great defenceman, Leo Konyk, scored one goal and assisted on Joe Irvin's counter for the Redmen. McGill goalie, Alex Herron was brilliant again, kicking out shots from all angles and frustrating many of the Blues' better scoring chances.

In the Varsity nets, Bob Giroux was only a little below his rival at the other end. In addition to the fine play of Macdonald, Bill Griffin, was a strong performer for the Blues.

Although receiving eight of the twelve penalties handed out by Referee Jim Haggarty, Varsity experienced little difficulty in killing them off and yielded only one goal when playing a man short.

Colin Moseley of McGill was taken to Montreal General Hospital after hitting the boards early in the first period, breaking his ankle. Mike Richards and Gord Merritt also of McGill received face cuts that needed stitches.

First Period
Scoring—none.
Penalties—Murchie 11:19, Roth 16:47, Neale 17:55.

Second Period
1. McGill, Irvin (Finn, Konyk) ..... 20:00
Penalties—Hutchison 6:25, Hicken 12:51, Richards 14:21, Neale 16:19.

Third Period
2. Toronto, Macdonald (Hicken) ..... 0:11
3. McGill, Konyk (Irvin, Moseley) ..... 11:45
4. Toronto, Neale ..... 12:01
5. Toronto, Hicken (Macdonald, Sinclair) ..... 14:22
Penalties—Neale 10:12, Irvin 12:26, Griffin 13:44, McLennan (major) 16:27, Simpson (major) 16:27.

Boxing Team Complete After Friday's Trials

Four additional members of the 1960 Varsity Boxing team were determined as a result of the bouts held during Athletic night in Hart House on Friday night.

In the 145 lb class, Jim McManus won by decision in a rip-snorting fight over Frank Corner. McManus is looked on as a good bet to win his weight class in the Intercollegiate Championships.

The 140 lb class saw Paul Wilton out Allen Anderson. He will represent Varsity at this weight. Another fine fight saw Fred Johnstone edge Bob Turner in a hard hitting match.

The 165 lb class had the most action, and no less than three bouts were fought before a representative was determined. In semi-final matches, Izwak Bouwer out-fought last year's champion Mike Butt, while in the other fight, southpaw Bob Dodds whipped Norm Goldberg.

Bouwer was forced out of the final by an injured hand and this gave Butt a chance to make up for his loss and keep his title. Butt came up with a solid performance, however, and got the nod from the judges.

The Intercollegiate Championships are in Montreal on Feb. 12 and 13. Coach Tony Canzano is still confident his boys are good enough to win.

RESULTS

1. 140 lb., Paul Wilton won decision over Allen Anderson.
2. 150 lb., Jim McManus won decision over Frank Corner.
3. 155 lb., Fred Johnstone won decision over Bob Turner.
4. 165 lb., (semi-final) Bob Dodds won decision over Norm Goldberg.
5. 165 lb., (semi-final) Izwak Bouwer won decision over Mike Butt.
6. 165 lb., (final) Bob Dodds won decision over Mike Butt.

Would the manager of the swimming team please turn complete results of the meet with Bowling Green into the Varsity office as soon as possible in order that they may appear in The Varsity on Wednesday. The meet was originally scheduled for Saturday, but the visitors did not arrive until too late.

Varsity Matmen Lose To Rensselaer, 22-11

By JEFF HAMMOND

Fresh from a recent trouncing of Queen's, a well-coached Rensselaer wrestling squad moved into Hart House on Friday night and emerged with a 22-11 decision over the Blues. The outcome of this meet proved no surprise.

The visitors piled up an early lead, taking decisions in all but one of the lighter divisions. Varsity's Ken Brown provided this exception as he continued to live up to his billings. Facing a crafty opponent in Ralph Kummier, Brown's cautious approach earned him a decision in the 137-lb class.

The heavier bout gave Coach Amos more to smile about. Reckless Roger Doner picked the best part of the evening to put on his usual awesome display. His crowd-pleasing, relentless attack, brought cheers from a half-time basketball audience that had sifted into the Upper Gym. Rensselaer opponent, Joe Colangelo, succumbed to a very rapid manoeuvre at 4:24. In the 191-lb bout, Toronto's Herb Brown earned the decision on his early scoring. A revitalized Jay Morley had him in trouble in the last round, but with time and points on his side, Brown managed to stall to the finish.

Toronto's Rod Carrow, always pretty to watch, gave about 40 pounds in the heavy tilt, but his speed proved too much for Len Brushie, who went under at 6:54.

A 22-11 result sounds very lopsided, but remember that forfeiture of one bout in this meet because of ineligibility meant that the Blues faced a 5-point deficit from the outset.

Wrestling
123 lb. T. Graves (R) pinned J. Poma (T). 130 lb. B. Peckham (R) won decision over J. Stephenson (T). 137 lb. K. Brown (T) won decision over R. Kummier (R). 147 lb. A. Jackson (R) won decision over T. Aman (T). 157 lb. J. Brown (R) won decision over K. Deer (T). 167 lb. D. Scroan (R) won decision over J. McEligott (T). 177 lb. R. Doner (T) pinned J. Colangelo (R). 191 lb. H. Brown (T) won decision over J. Morley (R). Heavyweight Rod Carrow (T) pinned J. Brushie (R) but lost bout due to ineligibility.

UofT Caput Re-establishes Varsity — Fraternities Divorce

The following is a full text of the statement on fraternities released by the University of Toronto Caput last night.

Many members of the public associate both men's and women's fraternities with the University of Toronto in a way that indicates their belief that fraternities are an integral part of the University. The existence of this erroneous belief is amply borne out by references in the press and elsewhere, and by correspondence received from time to time by the President.

This popular belief receives some support from practices which have developed over a period of years, and from which it might appear that fraternities have a recognized status within the University. For example many fraternities use the name "University of Toronto" on their notepaper. Again, certain University student publications, such as Torontonensis and the Student's Handbook, refer to fraternities in terms that suggest a formal relationship between the fraternities and the University: pictures of fraternity groups appear in some student Year Books, and the biographies of graduating students may include a statement of fraternity membership along with the list of University activities and offices.

In order to clarify the situation for the public, the press, and indeed, the University community itself, the Caput of the University has felt it desirable and necessary to place on record the following statement of principle with respect to men's and women's fraternities:

1. There is not at the present time, nor has there been in the past, any formal relationship between the University of Toronto and fraternities. The University regards fraternities as it regards any other club or organization which is not recognized by the Caput. It follows that fraternities are in no sense recognized by the University of Toronto as bodies entitled to any University privileges. Premises occupied by fraternities and used for fraternity purposes are in no sense University residences, and membership in a fraternity confers no special status in the academic community. The life of the University is to be found in the Colleges and Faculties, in the residences and in the numerous student organizations officially recognized by the Caput.
2. The Caput is now taking action to secure the discontinuance of the use of the name "University of Toronto" on any fraternity's notepaper, the references to fraternities in University of Toronto publications, the concessions in advertising rates to fraternities in such publications, and any other practices which lend support to the erroneous belief that fraternities have any official position in or relationship to the University of Toronto.
3. The Caput views the membership of a student of the University of Toronto in any fraternity as it would view his membership in any other club or organization conducted outside the University as a self-governing and independent group. It is not within the competence of the Caput to dictate to

By Alan Walker

The keen edge of the Caput slashed down on fraternities last night and severed them forever from the University of Toronto.

A statement released last night, imminent for weeks, began by terming as "erroneous" the common belief that fraternities and sororities on the University of Toronto campus are connected with the university, and outlined steps to ensure the lack of connection will be made more obvious.

Action is being taken to have all references to the Greek letter organizations stricken from U of T publications, and the words "University of Toronto" will no longer appear on fraternity letter paper.

The Caput also said it will ensure the discontinuance of any other practice which might lead people to believe the organizations were connected with the university.

Although the statement was released to the press last night, copies were not issued to the fraternity presidents. Several of them said they were displeased.

Richard Krempolec, Grand Master of Kappa Sigma fraternity, said the move may "cause hostility between fraternities and the Caput". He termed the move "surprising" and said it was "impolite of the Caput not to notify us".

Krempolec said the fraternities had never been asked to explain themselves to the Caput, and suggested "anyway, I don't see how they can make sure we drop the name from our letterheads".

Glen Taylor, President Senior of Phi Chi fraternity, said his organization claimed no relationship with the university.

"We desire no recognition, and don't want to be influenced by the Caput."

Many of the fraternities and all sororities contacted refused to comment on the statement.

In an earlier statement, issued soon after the discrimination scandal last October, the Caput supported a statement by University President Claude T. Bissell that discrimination "strikes at the very heart of the university". In the same statement the Caput said it was studying the situation.

CAN'T DICTATE

There was no mention of fraternity discriminatory practices in the statement. "It is not within the competence of the Caput to dictate to outside groups" the statement said, after emphasizing that the fraternities were not in any way connected with the U of T.

The statement ended with the reminder that the Caput has the power to forbid a student membership in any group or club if the organization "should be deemed inimical to the interest of the university".

President Bissell said last night although the Caput has no control over the fraternities as organizations, it does have control over the individual members, "and we are now in a position to say, if we wish, that he is quite free to belong to a fraternity but, if he does belong he can't stay in the university".

SECURITY LEAK

The statement, a closely guarded secret, appears to have leaked out in advance, if only partly. At a meeting attended by representatives of about 20 frats two weeks ago, an unidentified member read a four-part statement which he said was the statement to be issued by the Caput.

Since that time the Caput statement has been revised several times, but the clauses in the official statement dealing with letter-heads and appearance in U of T publications were read at the meeting.

The semi-secret meeting was held in an attempt to form an inter-fraternity council. The representatives overwhelmingly defeated the plan, saying such a council could lead to greater control by the university.

Quick Divorces Foe Of Marriage -- Knox Head

The Principal of Knox College listed expectations of easy divorce and inferiority feelings as the great forces against wedlock today, at a Marriage Guidance course last night.

Dr. J. S. Glen said both these traits were "artificially induced in young wives and mothers by the 'be modern' type of advertising".

"Especially in the United States," he said, "many people regard divorce as the accepted fact of social conduct. The result is that they enter marriage with the idea of its terminability. This is the popular idea of 'Let's do it'."

The doctor said due to the current saga of advertising wives feel they must "be charming enough to be re-chosen by their husband every day after breakfast."

"A young mother," he said "believes that if she lets herself go, gains a pound or two, she will lose her husband."

Concerning divorce he said, "Marriage is meant to be permanent, on this all religions agree. Though divorce may be necessary, it is a concession. It is contrary to the purpose of God."

"In principle man and woman can love only once but in ordinary life there are exceptions. The happy unity of the home is the greatest blessing a child can know," he said.

"A few years ago many people had never seen a divorced person. Far more common were the marriages which held together," he explained. "Often children are born in the attempt to hold the couple together, this is bad mental hygiene. Therefore never advise people to adopt a child or to have children to this end."

Speaking of American women as an exemplar he said, "The women's position has been undermined, she must fight to hold her husband. One half of the population, those who care for the next generation, are robbed of their dignity in public."

The Marriage Guidance lecture is the first of four to be held during Feb.

The Share Campaign Almost Reaches Target

The SHARE Campaign finished its week-long fund-raising drive at the University of Toronto Friday nearly $400 short of its $3,500 target.

However, Campaign Chairman Doug Ward said last night returns are not yet complete and he is confident the quote will be reached.

"Most of the colleges and faculties have notified me more money is to come," he said.

Victoria topped the poll with $716.43 representing one quarter of the U of T total of $3,055.40.

Ward attributed the campaign's success at Vic to "a dynamic committee" which recruited canvassers by telephone and made personal contact with the college's students. Over 50 per cent of enrollment at Vic and Trinity contributed.

SHARE money will be used to finance World University Service projects to provide material aid for needy students and universities in eight foreign countries.

CHARLES SNELLING (11 Meds) does a Russian split for the photographer. Former Senior Men's Canadian figure skating champion, Snelling will be doing a solo in the Blue and White Ice Frolics February 5, at Varsity Arena. Story on page three.

Several Students Protest Bookstore Exam Prices

The University of Toronto bookstore came under fire yesterday by several U of T students because of the high cost of books and old examination papers.

And the students made it clear they intend to take their complaints to the Student Administrative Council.

Their ire flamed up when the bookstore said it was selling individual exam papers at 10 cents a copy. Last year full exam sets cost $1.00 each.

Organizer of the protest, Michael Sole (II Arts) said six years ago the entire set cost 10 cents. "Then the price soared to $1.00. Then this year the price is 10 cents a single exam. This is almost 1,500 per cent rise in cost," he said.

Matters came to a head this week but the trouble began back in September, Sole said.

"Books were cheaper in the summer than in the autumn," he pointed out.

Wycliffe Upset

Wycliffe College's student council last night threw out its government, defeating a vote of confidence requested by council prime minister Glen Drover.

The upset followed a one-vote defeat of a motion by the council's governing party, headed by Drover, to set aside money for new student lounges.

Wycliffe's student council is set up on a parliamentary two-party basis. Doug Dittrich has formed a new government to try to carry the money motion.

The vote rejecting the money for the lounges followed a vote approving the conversion of some rooms into lounges.

Drover asked for the confidence vote and was defeated by a wide majority. He then resigned.

Today there is a news meeting. It is at 1:00 p.m. It is in the basement of the SAC Bldg. It is in the Varsity Office. To attend are: Barry Zimmerman, Stan Barron, Alvin Shapiro, John McGoe, Jayne Nesbitt, Kay McKook, Maryanne Kelso, Debbie Halper, Carolyn Purdon, and last, but not least, fearless, faithful, fantastic FRED HOST.

The Varsity Christian Fellowship, who usually get their announcements in in time for the Current Events column, are sponsoring a lecture by Prof. Stanford Reid of McGill University on Christianity and modern society in Wymilwood's Music Room at 4:30 p.m. Thursday.

University of Toronto delegates left last night for the annual University Model United Nations held in Montreal Feb. 3-5. The eight Toronto delegates will represent India and Denmark.

Main issue discussed will be admission of Communist China to the UN. Toronto is expected to take a major part in the proceedings.

Among other topics to be discussed will be the Algerian problem, South African apartheid, peaceful use of outer space, disarmament, and enlargement of world security.

On the final day of the assembly delegates will draw up a plan to launch a series of UN clubs at universities across Canada.

Delegates from American Colleges will also attend the assembly, sponsored by the four

Campus National Groups In International Festival

Two hundred additional seats have been made available to the International Students' Festival at Hart House Friday, Feb. 5.

The participating students are enthusiastic about their exhibits, going on display at 7:30 p.m. A cast of 200 will participate in the stage show beginning at 8 p.m.

Over 16 ethnic clubs on campus are contributing their time and talents to the success of the Festival.

Poland will commemorate the 150th anniversary of Chopin's birth with a recital of the composer's compositions. Hungary is giving a Bartok recital. There will be calypso numbers from the West Indies, a farcical comedy from Latvia, 50-member Ukrainian choir, folk songs presented by two Canadian groups, the famous Wong Lion Dance performed by the Chinese group, and more.

The audience will be greeted by 30 hostesses dressed in their national costumes and wandering minstrels will supply live music from their respective countries throughout the evening.

Traditional paintings, wall hangings, sculpturing, and modern paintings will be exhibited in the East Common Room. The Festival's art collection has been insured for $20,000. Theme of the conference is "Tradition and Tomorrow".

Walter Kanitz, CFBF disc-jockey and Toronto Daily Star columnist, will be master of ceremonies for the show.

Decorations for the entrance and corridors have been arranged by the Japanese Consul, the Japanese Tourist Association, and the Japan Trade Centre. There will also be demonstrations of flower arrangements in the Japanese style.

Byron Hyde (II Pre-meds), chairman of the Festival and President of the International Students' Organization, said last night that he hoped a good number of faculty members will attend as well as students.

Tickets at $1 each are available from the ethnic clubs on campus, FROS, the SAC Office and the SCM.

Ice Frolics to Feature Canada Skating Champ

Never again at a University of Toronto Winter Carnival will students have igloos collapse on them, travel miles through snow and ice, and freeze solid when they pause longer than three minutes during the festivities.

All the traditional discomforts of the annual Winter Carnival splash have been removed and now spectators can recline in the relative comfort of Varsity Arena to enjoy the Blue and White Ice Frolics Feb. 5, which is replacing the Winter Carnival.

Former Senior Men's Canadian figure skating champion, Charles Snelling (II Meds) producer and choreographer of the figure skating portion, is doing a four minute solo.

The evening will provide varied entertainment in the way of hockey games, figure skating and novelty races.

The traditional Varsity-SAC hockey game and a girl's hockey challenge between Victoria and Trinity will provide an exhibition of both good and bad playing.

Skating relays will be held between Blue and White executives of the four Arts colleges and Meds, Engineering, Dents, and Forestry.

Miss Varsity, Marjorie Chapman (III Vic) will present trophies to winners of the events. A 16-girl chorus line will be in the opening number along with U of T cheerleaders.

Tickets for the ice show can be obtained at the SAC office, from Blue and White representatives, or at the door, for 50 cents.

CAPUT

pro

The Caput could either have taken fraternities and sororities under the wing of the administration and regulate their practices, or they define more clearly the distinction between the university and its fraternal satellites.

The caput has chosen to refrain from direct interference with fraternities and sororities and at the same time to exclude them from all campus activities of any sort whatsoever. And they have wisely decided to preserve the right of any student to join a fraternity or sorority.

We wish to applaud both decisions.

Student organizations become subject to scrutiny by the Caput only when they seek to participate directly in student activities or request a constitution and financial support from the SAC.

As long as they do neither of these things, a student organization is free, within the bounds set upon all students, to exist for whatever purpose it sets forth.

It would be a clear restriction of our freedom if the Caput were to supervise all organizations in which students in any number participate.

And to restrict the right of any student to join any off-campus organization of his choice would be to establish the dangerous precedent of an academic "Big Brother" assuming responsibility for personal ethical and moral standards.

We are not, in endorsing the Caput's decision, also endorsing fraternities and sororities. We still feel their illegitimate exclusiveness and discriminatory practices must be stopped.

It is only that we do not believe that they can be stopped by any official act of the University.

We believe that fraternities and sororities will improve when individual members are sufficiently awakened to the evil inherent in their practices that they work to improve conditions within their organizations and resign when their efforts are unsuccessful.

We do not believe in a legislative conscience.

con

The Caput, the most powerful body on the University of Toronto campus and the one which controls every member of this campus, has disappointed us deeply.

We have been waiting more than three months for disciplinary action to be taken on the disgraceful and disgusting example of discrimination by a U of T sorority. The statement has been released, and we are still waiting.

Now we see why the statement was such a long time coming. It is a carefully-worded document, one that covers everything in one way or another. But it doesn't say anything.

Fraternities and sororities don't care if they can't use the words "University of Toronto" on their newspaper. And they say they only appear in Toronto-nensis because it is a custom.

Now, after the Caput statement, these insidious organizations are still free to discriminate against minority groups, as long as they do it quietly as they have done for years.

Conduct within fraternity and sorority houses must be left to other authorities, our president says.

Fraternities often defend themselves by saying "Look how we solve the residence problems." It's not worth it, especially now that residences are rising all over campus. Let's get rid of these noxious groups of self-righteous children.

The Caput statement concludes with a semi-threat. They reiterate their powers under the University of Toronto Act, which allows them to expell any student if that student's conduct reflects unfavorably on the university.

Fraternities are outgrowths of the juvenile gang. Sororities are groups of hyper-social girls with an aimless "purpose." They bring nothing but shame on the University of Toronto.

The Idea Of Christopher Jones

Stephanie Collins, John Hrasti and Ruth Mackenzie chum it up during a "Jones" rehearsal. Tickets are available at $1.25 at the Hart House Theatre Box Office.

Gino Matteo, who along with James Doris is producing this year's edition of AVR as the musical comedy CHRISTOPHER JONES, here writes a sort of preface to the play. He hastens to explain that the seriousness which characterizes his remarks really bears little relation to the tone of the musical; the play is a satire; it is intended as good theatrical fun.

... If it were an idea play my first great debt would be to William H. Whyte, an original disorganized organization man. Mr. Whyte, an editor of Fortune Magazine, makes an interesting study of a new man he has found — the Organization Man. Instead of this man doing as he likes as long as he does not offend society of another individual, he does as he must in order not to offend society.

Because of the organization man, a Great Game has developed. Those who do not adhere to the organization have found a ridiculously simple way to get around it on its own terms — they pretend to live by the code. While they seem never to offend, they quietly manipulate. The individuals spite the individuals, and the profound irony of it all lies in the fact that the organization individual doesn't mind.

If this play were an idea play, it would only have one idea in mind; make the young man feel uncomfortable. To an extent I have tried to do this, but I have done it half-facetiously by borrowing from the world's most un-recognized philosopher: Leo Durocher. Mr. Durocher, erstwhile manager of the New York Giants has given me a single statement which espouses the way of the disorganized men openly and bluntly, with no pretense at playing the Great Game. ... in his succinct snarl: "Nice guys finish last."

There is no organization man of prominence in "Jones." Only Bliff falls readily into the category of the expert player of the Great Game. He drops his role only with his equals because playing the Game is not really fun unless you can talk about it.

OUR READERS WRITE, AND

socialism

Dear Sir:

In North America, and even on the University of Toronto campus, the word "socialism" generally elicits a response of horror, suspicion, disinterest, and especially ignorance. Yet North America is probably the only part of the civilized world where this is so. Elsewhere, as in Europe, Asia, Africa, people know far more about and are far more concerned with socialism. Even leaving aside the Communist countries, in such countries as India, or Israel, "socialism" is the accepted thing, as much as shibboleth-word as is "democracy" both here and there. But the North American, even the student, remains, quite blissfully, ignorant.

Ours is generally considered to be an age of great issues and great problems. To all of these, in understanding and for solutions, socialism is most relevant. But of this the U of T student is only vaguely aware and even less concerned.

It is in this situation, and with a view to its remedying, that the University of Toronto Socialist Forum, a student organization for socialist discussion and education, was founded last Fall.

Since its beginning there has been widespread misconception and even more widespread ignorance as to what the Socialist Forum actually is. It is this misconception and this ignorance that this letter is intended to dispel.

The Socialist Forum is, in the first place, exactly what its name implies—a forum for education and exchange of ideas, generally interesting itself in matters of interest from a socialist point of view. Secondly, it is nothing more than a forum, its constitution absolutely forbids the Socialist Forum to in any way take any position on any particular political question except by the unanimous vote of a general meeting of the organization—and membership is open. Any person who supports the aims of the organization is a member.

The Forum is non-partisan. It is not connected, officially or unofficially, with any political party or group.

The Socialist Forum is not at all like a political party; it has a quite different role to perform. A party is inevitably limited in outlook and oriented to specific political questions and to the voters. The Socialist Forum on the other hand can be broad and impartial, a meeting ground where differing ideas can come into stimulating contact, where controversial questions can be discussed, where theory, which parties tend to worship from a distance, can be studied, where socialists can improve their knowledge and non-socialists can learn of socialism. The Socialist Forum proposes to do this by means of lectures, discussions, study groups, etc. Already this year it has presented such speakers as ex-Communist Joseph Salsberg and Rev. Vincent Goring, of the S.C.M. With the Toronto Labour Forum, a similar group, it has presented several interesting speakers, the last being Controller William Dennison.

In summation, the Socialist Forum is an open, non-partisan forum, based on the need for political discussion, for the free exchange of ideas.

Michael Rowan
Secretary, Socialist Forum

To the Editors of the Varsity:

I read last week with great interest your confused editorial on the swastika-sickness of the past month. As a remedy, you advocate that the youth should be taught the German History rather than the atrocities of the years 1933-1945. There is much here that one can fault with. Looking back at one of the hundreds of years after Hitler only carried on the tradition of Germany has never had real democracy. Its so-called democracy is one that was forced upon because she lost the war. The man people weren't prepared for democracy in 1945 and they are in a better position now. The youth must be taught all the history in all its ugly truth events that must rank as the history, there is little that called "good". The German nation somehow has always been an aggressor. This has been true for the hundreds of years up to Bismarck and cause for the world position today—half-way to nowhere.

If a German youth should ask his teacher if he supported the Nazi party movement, and if the answer is affirmative as it invariably is in 75% of the time, it is quite difficult for that youth to realize that such a movement was evil. For, if his teacher was in part responsible for mass-murder and is allowed to shape the minds of his pupils, it becomes increasingly apparent that the Nazi movement couldn't possibly have perpetrated the evils he has heard of. The nauseating fact is that West Germany has invested authority in many "ex-nazi" butchers (the prefix "ex" is a cover to make them more palatable).

VIC'S MIKADO

Sullivan Fares Better Than Gilbert

Any group that undertakes to present a Gilbert & Sullivan opera, especially as widely popular a one as the Mikado, is taking head in hands. There is such a wide audience of G & S fanatics that they are letting themselves in for severe criticism if they fail; but they may be sure of an ecstatic response if they succeed.

This was the case last night when the Victoria College Music Club opened at Hart House in an unusually lively production. Even the mediocrity of Gilbert's dated dialogue managed to get submerged in the general joy.

The Chorus upheld its traditional place as one of the strongest points, musically, of the show. However, director Terry Sheels could have made more imaginative use of the female section of the Chorus, they cluttered up the stage and indulged in an unsettling amount of skipping and hopping. The male section was utilized more effectively to emphasize the illusion of perspective created by Peter White's clever sets.

The principals varied from fair to superb, for a student production. Dave Lemmon as Nanki-Poo, the son of the Mikado, was comically unsteady and his acting tended towards woodenness; he hardly conveyed the impression that he was burning with passion. Yum-Yum, played by Helen Goggin, was suitably delicious. One may add that the clarity and sweetness of her voice (although a bit spoiled by insecure intonation in the solo "The one whose days") added to the pleasantly high quality of her performance.

Her two sisters, Peep-Bo and Pitti-Sing (Ellen Wiley and Earlene Moore) completed a most appealing trio. Gerald White as Pish-Tush, a rather nondescript nobleman, filled his part adequately. It was noted that all four of these singers were occasionally drowned out by the orchestra (twelve professional musicians whose playing suffered from lack of rehearsal with the ensemble), but in the next night or two this sort of problem will no doubt work itself out.

Marc Somerville was a delightfully satirical Mikado and one noted as a pleasure that his voice had improved quite a bit since last year. Katisha, acted by Kathie King, was weak especially vocally, when her first entrance, but got better and better towards the end.

Her unfortunate victim K. K. Ko, the Lord High Executioner (Terry Cox), gave a splendidly funny performance and delivered his lines with a speed that left one gasping. He is easily the most gifted performer in the production.

The role of Pooch-Bah, Lord High Everything Else, was given an excellent interpretation by Dan Yelding, whose dramatic timing was perfect. His long speeches could have become tedious in less accomplished hands, but he was able to carry them off with just the right amount of pomposity.

By professional standards the orchestra disappointed our expectations. There were numerous passages in which stronger co-ordination should have been achieved, as well as a significant cooperation with the vocalists and indeed with Paul Sweetman, the conductor. They are, however, excellent musicians and did have one or two good moments of just the sort of playful instrumental perfection of high quality.

Once the cast has cleared the little first-night line fluffs, decided to do a bit of off-stage singing and when there was one noticeable collision, and learned how to operate the ubiquitous fans, the Vic production ought to be even more than well worth seeing.

Ballet Bounces In

On Monday night, the National Ballet opened its annual four week stay at the Royal Alexandra Theatre with a varied program which included two new works and two from the standard repertoire. The highlight of the evening was centred in David Adams' new ballet, Pas de Deux Romantique in which he was accompanied by his wife, Lois Smith, in a piece of perfect cooperation.

Abandoning the traditional three part division of a classical Pas de Deux, Mr. Adams has created a brief single movement which lasts just long enough to satisfy but not saturate. From the triumphant entrance to the equally effective exit, the audience was given a consistently good piece of dancing, unswayed by accompanying corps. The lucid line of Lois Smith is striking to the beholder in the relatively simple and pure choreography, set to the music of Frederick Chopin.

This husband and wife team, who have given so much of their time and talent to the National Ballet, are here seen to their very best advantage. Each enhances the other and Mr. Adams anticipates the actions of Miss Smith with perfect timing, creating that sense of effortlessness which is the essence of true ballet.

Unfortunately, on Monday night, this could not be said of the rest of the corps. There was a lack of polish and a lag in timing which was frequently embarrassing as well as disconcerting. Les Rendezvous, with which the evening started, gave one a very uneasy sense of mediocrity, with toe and hand gestures on the whole inelegant and unfinished. Such a lively number as this, with some very good moments choreographically, has been in the standard repertoire of the 'National' for some time but it does not yet have the appearance of clear definition and perfection which it needs to be truly successful.

Lilac Garden, one of Antony Tudor's ballets, was not, one felt, as successful on Monday as it has been in previous performances. Celia Franca, who has formerly taken the part of the frustrated woman in the past of the groom-to-be, was conspicuously absent. Angela Leigh, who danced this role on opening night, tends to be rather grotesque at times although she achieved her best effect in her brief solo in this ballet. The choreography calls for many stylized and conventional movements which at times seem almost melodramatic, not to mention hackneyed. Lois Smith, although able to express emotion through the likeness of her body, is none the less deficient in the facial expression necessary to complete the effect.

The evening concluded with another new ballet for the "National", that of Pineapple Poll, adapted from Gilbert and Sullivan. The lead, which was slated for Lillian Jarvis, was performed by Frances Greenwood who is physically inappropriate for the role. Unfortunately, the Company has no healthy and buxom personality technically equipped to perform such a character as that of a bumpo woman. Miss Greenwood's dancing, however, was at all times alert and neatly put together. Moreover, Colin Worth's interpretation and execution of Jasper, the Pot-Boy, was a high point in this supposedly comic dance.

Choreographed by John

Cranko, this ballet lacks the wit, sparkle, and humour associated with Gilbert and Sullivan. The opening scenes with the corps gave a sense of confusion rectified only by the lively and precise dancing of Laurence Adams. Moreover, the solo by Pineapple Poll which attempts to burlesque the techniques of classical ballet falls far short of the potential opportunities provided. As the proposed climax of an opening night, this ballet failed to achieve the desired effect.

presentable to the decent people.

The New York Times states, with much evidence to back it up, that in fifteen of West Germany's largest cities, eight of those cities have ex-nazi or S.S. police chiefs. The government, it states, designates its highest positions to Hitlerites. As long as these people hold these positions in Government and Education, German youth will never know the real facts of World War II. They must be taught those deeds perpetrated by their slaughter-happy Kinsmen, for these recent outbreaks only serve as a grim reminder as to what happened before and what could conceivably happen again.

In Toronto (I do not know of other Canadian cities), Anti-Semitism is not a dead issue. Along with our concern over the German youth, we should increase our concern over our Canadian youth, for a great many U of T graduates with degrees to back up their claim to logical thinking and acting, still carry on illogically and hate-poisoned when confronted with Jews. A degree doesn't guarantee tolerance. Many graduates have no idea what Jews stand for or even who they are. These graduates represent the worst weakness in our fight for tolerance. It is these people who are easily-turned towards the "I hate Jews" attitude, for no other reason than the fact that they are ignorant of what and whom they are directing their venom at. If you were to ask your Christian friend as to what he thought was the reason for these anti-semitic incidents, he would be hard-pressed for an answer. "I don't know," he says—and that is the crux of the whole problem.

Jew-hating Christians, and their numbers are legion, show their malice for no reason they know of—their friends joined the bandwagon, so they did too. It doesn't take much to get such a movement rolling—just a few stupid, neurotic individuals. In Germany one expects this sort of thing—nazi doctrine can never be wiped out—but in Toronto one just wonders what prompts these incidents. And lest we forget, degrees don't guarantee exemption from anti-semitic acts. If more graduates had a better knowledge of the other religions of this world, besides their own, anti-semitism would be dealt a stunning blow. But the fact of the matter is that they know surprisingly little of any religion, including their own. We should remember that it is just as easy for neurotic imbeciles—the backbone of anti-semitic acts—to get degrees as it is for anyone else. Many U of T degrees cover a thick layer of anti-Jewish venom.

The so-called "tolerance" of many avowed Jew-haters can be compared to a bandage covering an ugly scar. Remove the "tolerance" and you find an ugly disfiguring hate. Remove the bandage and you find an ugly disfiguration of the skin. But there the comparison ends. The skin disfiguration in time disappears; the poisonous hate remains and under cover of "tolerance" grows, and feeds on those around it like a cancer—it never disappears. It lies dormant waiting, always waiting to attack; it grows fat on ignorance and cynicism and disbelief; it crawls and it creeps beneath its cover—the cowardly cover of a forced barbaric "tolerance", carried out to satisfy a civilized community.

Dave Helwig, co-author of the musical tragedy "Katy Cruel", last night said last month's production of the folk opera in Hart House which drew full houses and rave reviews will not be revived.

However, a Canadian Broadcasting Corp. producer has asked for and received a copy of the script and the show's authors, Helwig and Mike Rasminsky, are negotiating for possible professional production, he said.

For either CBC or other professional production, Helwig said, the script would be completely rewritten.

The January production in Hart House theatre was sponsored by the University College Literary and Athletic Society and produced by Bill Davis, a UC graduate.

An attempt to present the show, with essentially the same producer and cast, in another on-campus theatre failed, Helwig said, because the authors could not find a theatre.

Helwig is a fourth-year English student and Rasminsky is a scientist who graduated from UC last year.

Records of the UC production will be on sale in the UC rotunda to those who ordered them and to others from 12-2 p.m. Friday.

University of Toronto's three delegates to the World University Service Summer Seminar in Israel were announced yesterday.

Representing U of T at the six-week conference are Alexandra Johnston (III Vic), Gerald Izenberg (III UC) and Lionel Mausberg (I Meds).

They were chosen last week by a nine-member student and faculty judging board.

Miss Johnston, a native of Brantford, is on the executive of the Modern History Club, is secretary of the Victoria Debating Parliament and was convener of WUS Treasure Van in the fall. She is enrolled in the English Language and Literature course.

Izenberg, in Modern History lives in Toronto and is active in U of T debating teams, the History Club and Model Parliament.

Mausberg is a member of the Medical Society Executive and comes from Kitchener.

The U of T delegates will attend lectures in Israel, visit work camps in various collective settlements and participate in a three-week seminar at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Theme of the conference is "Tradition and Technology in a New Country".

Second Water Carnival Scheduled For March

Plans were unfolded last night for the Second Annual Water Carnival, to be sponsored by the University of Toronto Swimming Team, and held March 4th and 5th. The show will follow the same format as last year's sellout hit. Top swimmers will be in attendance to try and establish further records in all events.

Last year's show was held in the Hart-House Pool, but this year, the committee has decided to ask for the new Women's pool in view of the superior facilities for the spectators.

The purpose of the carnival is to provide funds for the U of T swimming team to help develop Canadian talent. Last year's profit of $800 was used to send members of the team to the Pan American games. This year, it is hoped to raise funds to send swimmers like Marv Chappelle, Bob Fisher, John Deacon and George Huovinen to the Canadian Olympic trials in Winnipeg during the early summer. A sizeable sum will also be contributed to the Canadian Olympic fund.

Among the stars who have accepted invitations to attend the Carnival this year are George Breen, Alan Somers, Don Harper, Ron O'Brien, Sara Barber, and Johnny Collins.

Breen is well known in Canadian swimming circles and last summer won the 400-metre freestyle in the Pan American games. Somers won the 1500-metre freestyle race in the same games. They will attempt to set new records at the Carnival.

Harper and O'Brien are diving champions. Harper holds the National 3 metre title, while O'Brien has the National Collegiate 1 metre championship.

Collins was a favourite with the crowds last year and set several Canadian Open marks in the under 13 age category. He is looked upon as a future Olympic star.

Barber is perhaps Canada's best known female swimmer, and finished second in the Pan American backstroke event last summer.

When asked why the request was made for the Women's pool in preference to Hart House, publicity director Nick Thierry said, "We have asked for the Women's pool because it provides an unobstructed view to the public. In addition it also provides a one and three metre diving board which will add considerably to our diving show, which promises to be the greatest exhibition of diving ever displayed in Canada."

Swimming Stars will not be the only attraction to this night. A demonstration of synchronized swimming, so popular last year, will again be featured, and a demonstration of the uses of the Aqua Lung will provide a further highlight.

Last year's Carnival saw 28 Canadian Open and Native records set, including one World record and a tie with an existing global standard. Bill Zorzyk, then coach of the swim team set a World mark in the Butterfly event, while Carin Cone equalled her mark in the backstroke.

Miss Cone is unable to return this year, but negotiations are in progress with a big name US swimmer.

Snider Wins 2 Mile Race

Jim Snider continued his winning ways in the University Indoor Track Meet at Hart House last night as he won the Senior two mile race and helped Victoria increase their season's lead over UC to 46-36. Snider paced the field with the fairly fast time of 9:50.8.

Mike Turk (UC) continued his winning ways in the Junior two miles to keep UC within striking distance of the Vic total. George Rhoden, former Olympic star, won the senior 220-yard dash, while Bob Bertolin picked up a first in the Junior event.

After four weeks of competition, Victoria leads the field with 46 points followed by UC with 36 and then far behind is St. Mike's with 23.

Results of University Championship Track Meet:
Senior, 2 miles—1. Jim Snider, vic, time 9:50.8; 2. Jim Griffin, trin, 3. Neiles Van Loon, uc; 4. Bob Carmichael, sp.
Junior, 2 miles—1. Mike Turk, uc, time 10:25.2; 2. Jerry Stewart, vic; 3. George Jaschke, vic, 4. Ron Fletcher, uc.
Senior 220 yd. dash—1. George Rhoden, med, time 24.0; 2. Al Breston, vic; 3. Bob Sprink, uc; 4. Bob Carmichael, sps.
Junior 220 yd. dash—1. Bob Bertolin, uc, time 25.7; 2. Jim Beirgesnehe, uc; 3. Jeff Jewell, sps; 4. Gary Logan, vic.
Point standing after four weeks of competition: vic 46, uc 36, sps 23, med 20 1/2, trin 15, sps 14 1/2, pharm 10.

Professors Play Their Students

Fourth year Commerce and Finance students will sally forth to do battle with their professors in a hockey game at Varsity Arena next Tuesday afternoon at 3:00 p.m.

Captain of the Profs will be Ian Macdonald, Dean of Men at University College. He is engaged in recruiting members of the faculty for his team now, and is also after members of the student body in order to weaken the class team.

Varsity Wins In Badminton

The University of Toronto won the Senior Intercollegiate Badminton Championship at London last week end. Toronto were undefeated in all 24 matches, 16 singles and eight doubles.

Ross Lundy captured the Singles title for the second year in a row, while he and Casey Wood, of football fame, teamed up for the doubles championship.

comment On Caput's Stand

By Bobbi Arrington

Perhaps this article should be entitled what have they done, but it appears that concerning discrimination I am a separate entity from the "they" to which I refer. The differing point is that I am personally aware of the problems existence.

When a person thinks seriously about his society and his status in it, he comes to one of two decisions: "I will stand up for what I believe to be right" or "I don't care". The complication arises when one has to take into consideration whether or not he wishes to do what has always been done and not disturb the group.

For the person who has agreed to be interested this question poses the problem of whether his society has always been the best of all possible worlds and therefore whether or not the individual in his quest for truth is going to be opposed to society.

Basically this is what The University of Toronto was up against when I brought the question of discrimination to The Varsity. The reason I told anybody about what happened is a kind of a mystery to me now. I am not sure if I expected the fraternities to feel prompted to correct whatever was compelling them to refuse a person because of sheer color or if I expected of such moral individuals that they would rise en masse and say "shame". I do know that I had intended to inform.

Many things have been hashed around at the Students' Council meetings and at The Varsity. The most pronounced debate was the individual right to partici-

"Christopher Jones" is going to Lambert Lodge tomorrow, AVE officials said last night.

At 1:30 p.m. tomorrow the SAC's musical comedy "Christopher Jones", scheduled for Hart House next week, will be presented for the benefit of the 720 men and women who live in Lambert Lodge, Toronto's largest Home for the Aged.

"We expect an audience of about 400. Those who are bed-ridden will hear the performance over the PA system," said Producer Jim Doris.

At the Wednesday evening rehearsal Gordon Jones of CBC taped an interview session with the cast. Songs from the show were also taped for broadcast.

The tapes will be included in the program "Gordon Jones At Large" heard over CJBC Saturday evening at 6:00 p.m.

Tickets for "Christopher Jones" are available at the Hart House Box Office or they may be ordered from any cast member.

After he receives the degree he will address the convocation.

McGill Approves Daily's Freedom

(Canadian University Press)

Montreal, Feb. 4—McGill's Student Society last night passed a sub-amendment to its constitution guaranteeing the McGill Daily editorial freedom, after refusing to do so for a month.

The sub-amendment reads: "In the editorial columns of the McGill Daily, the managing board shall be free to express whatever opinion it holds, save that no editorial shall treat of a religious or political question in a partisan way, or express or imply any but a neutral attitude in discussing any student election."

Earlier in January the council approved "in principle" the Canadian University Press Charter which calls for freedom of expression and freedom from external influences. But it would not incorporate a guarantee of press freedom into its charter constitution.

The change was suggested by Roger Phillips, Editor in Chief of the Daily during a meeting to discuss constitutional changes.

A member of the council pointed out this would give the Daily no new power, but merely a "legal leg to stand on."

The McGill Law Undergraduate Society President attacked the amendment, saying although an oppressive council might restrict freedom it is more probable such faults will lie with the editor. He maintained because the students support the newspaper financially, responsibility should lie with their elected representatives, the Students Council.

Phillips countered saying the Student's Society Constitution was a direct contradiction to that of the Daily, which has council approval.

He noted unless all rules were properly set down it is possible to have a repeat of the irregularities which necessitated the re-run of a recent campus election.

The sub amendment was approved by a vote of 202 to 63.

Meanwhile on the west coast the University of British Columbia's student newspaper, Ubysses, lashed out against the U of BC Alma Mater Society on a similar issue.

The CUP charter, unanimously supported by 24 member papers of CUP was rejected by the AMS who said it clashed with the student constitution.

According to the constitution, as publisher of the Ubysses, the AMS has complete control over the policies and opinions expressed in the paper. This conflicts with the charter section guaranteeing complete editorial freedom.

Although the AMS said it did not want to control the policy of the paper, the wording of the constitution gives it complete control.

SHARE Makes Quota

The first campaign at the University of Toronto this year to meet its quota wound up $21.63 to the good.

The SHARE Campaign, which ran on campus last week, netted $3521.63, SHARE officials said last night. Objective was $3,500.

Doug Ward, SHARE Campaign Chairman last night attributed the drive's success to its "realistic objective" which represented one fifth of the Canadian goal of $15,000 used to finance the World University Service program of material aid to foreign students.

(Canadian University Press)

MONTREAL, Feb. 3 — A preliminary brief on education prepared by students at Laval University to be presented to Quebec Premier Antonio Barrette has been rejected by the University of Montreal Students' Council.

An official of l'AGEUM said that the brief "was too short, and we will not support it unless it is amended in the direction suggested at the last regional (NFCUS) meeting."

In effect l'AGEUM suggested that the brief, which was sent to all Quebec universities for approval, does not go far enough. The brief contained four proposals which asked that:

—measures be taken so that education be available to all those desiring to study, and to those who have the ability whatever their financial means;

—a Royal Commission of Inquiry be set up to study education in Quebec;

—the Royal Commission be especially concerned with equality of opportunity of education even to the university level (tuition-free education at the high school level is not completely general in Quebec); —the proportion of the bursary which the student must return to the government, be reduced.

The official pointed out that l'AGEUM questioned "the reason for the prolonged, and repeated thanks for the establishment of statutory grants which are not yet adopted, and a system of loans which delays on a long term basis, the establishment of equality of education."

Any Varsity staffer not upshowing for the hockey game will be ferreted out full-length, on 23 ems bold face.

Blood Gives Free Theatre Tickets

A pint of blood will be worth a free theatre pass to members of the faculty giving the highest percentage to the University of Toronto Blood Campaign. Red Cross officials said last night.

Passes have been made available by the Odeon and Twentieth-Century Theatres and Towne and International Cinemas, said Nancy Davidson, Student Service Commissioner for SAC.

The blood drive, second this year, is being launched to complete the 4,500 pint quota of the first campaign last November. The 2,600 pints netted then served 22 Toronto hospitals for 12 days.

"We are particularly eager to have students who couldn't give in November," Miss Davidson said. A large percentage of would-be donors were turned away at that time because of colds.

However, she stressed that students who gave in November can give blood again, since health authorities say blood may be given every three months.

There will be fewer clinics for this drive, Miss Davidson added, but they will be better located. Clinics will be set up in the School of Nursing, Sir Daniel Wilson Residence, Trinity, Victoria, Saint Michael's College, and at 67 College St. The campaign runs Feb. 15-29.

Anglicans Have Congress Here

More than 100 delegates for the Second National Canterbury Conference will meet on campus for four days starting Feb. 11. The delegates are from 18 Canadian universities.

The local Canterbury Center is headed by Rev. William Bothwell and a council of 16 students and staff members.

The purpose of the group is to maintain a close connection with the inter-denominational Student Christian Movement but to have a program of worship in the Anglican tradition, said Rev. Bothwell.

U of T President Claude T. Bissell will read a message of welcome to the delegates at the opening session of the Conference.

staff changes

University of Toronto President Claude T. Bissell announced this week growing enrolment and a steady increase in research projects have resulted in the appointment of Prof. D. J. Le Roy as the head of the chemistry department at U of T.

Prof. J. G. Breckenbridge will take over the department of chemical engineering and applied chemistry.

Both men have been on the staff at the U of T for several years.

York University President Murray Ross yesterday appointed Dr. George Grant Associate Professor at Y U.

For the past six years Dr. Grant has been professor and head of the Department of Philosophy at Dalhousie University in Halifax.

French Politics

An Engineering debater told a student audience in the Engineering Building yesterday afternoon "If you have two Frenchmen together, you have a political party, and if you have three, there is an opposition."

The resolution "Democracy has failed in France" was thrown out by the audience 22-25.

First affirmative speaker, Dick Jones (I Ap.Sc), said "The Gallic temperament is such that politics in France became a national pastime." He suggested: "by the early 50s there was a new party of ex-premiers."

"No political party has been in power a full year. Mendels-France came the closest." Jones said democracy has never given France a stable economy or government.

Speaker for the noes Jack Abella (III Ap.Sc), said "certainly there have been difficulties and instability but there always remained freedom, justice and happiness in France."

Profs' Pay

A shortage of university professors in Canada is continuing despite salaries already well in excess of American professors'.

Canadian education specialist Dr. Edward Sheffield is conducting research to investigate the problem.

Dr. Sheffield said last night Canadian universities pay at least $500 a more than their American counterparts.

Ralph Mitchener, chief of the higher education section of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, made an earlier disclosure that confirms Sheffield's statement.

Largely because of federal grants, Canadian university salaries have climbed about 24 per cent since 1956, Dr. Sheffield said.

"Immigration officials tell us that between 1950 and 1958, 475 American crossed the border to our universities."

frolics

Varsity staffers are hurriedly vying for positions on the annual Varsity - SAC game which will be one of the highlights of the Blue and White Ice Frolics tonight in Varsity Arena.

Sports Editor Dave Griner, will spearhead the attack for The Varsity, backed by Peter Brayley, Harvey Shepherd, Carolyn Purden, and any other staffer who manages to find skates that fit.

Faithless Frank Host will not be participating.

Charles Snelling (II Meds) former Canadian Men's Senior figure skating champion will also prove to be an attraction.

The Ice Frolic starts at 8:15 p.m. Tickets can be obtained from Blue and White members, at the SAC office or at the door, for 50 cents.

radiation

A University of Toronto professor held out new hope for leukemia sufferers, at a meeting of the Biology Club last night in Victoria College.

Dr. D. G. Baker of the C. H. Best Institute, speaking on "Radiation and the Whole Animal", said several leukemia victims had been exposed to radiation to kill their defective bone marrow.

After transplants of normal marrow, he said, the patient had emerged cured.

"The current threat of nuclear war has made radiation research a pressing problem," he said.

Dr. Baker, working with the Radiation Research Unit of the Best Institute, is investigating the "early-fallout area".

Entry forms are available from the Hart House Hall Porter and the deadline for entries is Friday Feb. 12.

Ecce!! CI

Ever hear of a tandem simul?

Well there's going to be one in Hart House Feb. 17.

The Hart House Chess Club is holding the "mammoth tandem chess simul" in which two men simultaneously play against 101 (in this case) opponents.

For a registration fee of $1 payable to the Hart House Hall Porter, you can take on Frank Anderson and George Berner, both internationally known champions.

The HH Chess Club says they believe the simul is the largest ever to be played.

Mr. Anderson is the former Canadian Chess Champion and is a graduate of the U of T. Mr. Berner is the Yugoslav Chess Master and is now in his final year at the U of T's Faculty of Medicine.

University of Toronto sociology Professor Oswald Hall won the first Eggar C. Hayhow Award for editorial excellence last week for an article that appeared in a quarterly journal of the American College of Hospital Administration.

news snaps

Statistic

Final enrolment figures for the University of Toronto show a student body of 14,882, an increase of 6.1 per cent over last year.

Traffic

HAMILTON, Feb. 4 (CUP)—Flocks of McMaster university students ambled around their campus carrying signs yesterday demanding a stoplight at Main St. and University Ave.

The demands followed an accident at the corner in which a third-year coed, Ethne Cunningham, was injured.

She suffered a critical concussion when a truck hit her as she was crossing the intersection.

Politics

HALIFAX, Feb. 1 (CUP)—After debating such items as the cession of Sable Island, the third session of the Maritime Universities' Student Parliament ended Saturday bringing high praise from such full-time politicians as Paul Hellyer, and Justice Minister Davie Fulton.

The student parliament, the only one on an intercollegiate basis in Canada, met at Saint Mary's University in Halifax establishing what is becoming a biennial event among 11 universities and college participating.

otherhand

The St. Michael's College interview that appeared in Otherside last week seems to have raised all the wrong questions while the right ones have been set aside.

Two facts would seem to have emerged from that interview. The first is that to some extent the principle of authority is a basic principle of life at St. Mike's.

The second is that this is by no means an authority dictatorially imposed but an authority accepted and recognized by the students there as the only real foundation for the moral life.

In view of this it is not entirely fair to use the word "paternalism" in the derogatory sense that has come to be its only sense, of conditions at the college.

The word "paternalism" presumably means "the undue imposition of authority." The key word here is undue. What constitutes "undue" authority, and who has the right to decide whether it is undue?

Since the feature appeared, a great many people have suggested that only students at the college have the right to decide whether the authority exercised there is "undue."

We feel, on the other hand, that anyone who can think has this right. We feel further that to dwell on the question "who can criticize?" is to miss the point.

The point lies in the first question. Not who has the right to call authority undue, but much more important, just how much authority is undue authority.

The feature in Otherside did not get around to considering this problem very deeply. It merely made a first step in laying a factual framework within which this question could be discussed.

This discussion would be a complex one. But we can suggest at least one starting point that might prove more constructive than the kind of bickering that has been going on since the interview appeared.

This starting point arises out of the last article in Otherside, the one on Beatniks and is simply this: that anyone including the writers and interviewers of the feature, who believes that the principle of authority in moral matters is not a good one is obligated to find a substitute.

It is at least debatable whether the untrammelled activity of the individual consciousness provides us such a substitute.

Hillel is something of an enigma to most of the non-Jewish students on campus. It's not a fraternity, but what is it?

The Hillel Foundation has existed on the University of Toronto campus only since 1946, but the Hillel organization has existed since 1923. The program was pioneered by Rabbi Benjamin Frankel at the University of Chicago as a Jewish educational institution, was given the name "Hillel" for the Jewish sage renowned for his devotion to Jewish tradition and his passionate love of Jewish learning. After a year, the B'nai B'rith organization took over the sponsorship of Hillel, as a natural facet of its program of service to the Jewish community.

Since those days, Hillel has grown into an international institution serving nearly 150,000 Jewish students on more than 200 campuses in Canada, the U.S., at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem and at the University of London.

The ideal of Hillel was, and still is, to relate, for the Jewish college student the study of Jewish values and heritage to the same intellectual plane as their academic studies. Specifically, the Hillel program is designed to provide the Jewish student, through study and discussion, with adequate and accurate knowledge of Jewish life by acquainting him with the faith, the literature, the history and the life and thought patterns of the Jewish people.

Each individual Foundation operates under the guidance of a Hillel Director, usually a Rabbi. Although close ties are maintained with the national office, each Foundation is geared to the unique needs of the individual campus. Because Hillel operates on the principle of self-motivation, each Foundation is primarily what the students make it.

In many ways, the Toronto Foundation is an exemplary one. Since its inception in 1946 under Rabbi Kamenring, there has always been a definite emphasis on student participation, and on the cultural and intellectual aspects of the Jewish role on campus. In 1950, the present Hillel House on St. George Street was acquired.

The Toronto Jew is characterized by a varied ideology and diverse cultural background and the program at Hillel shows a correspondingly broad concept of the role it has to play in the University community.

Hillel is the only centre of Judaic study on the Toronto campus.

To maintain close relations between the various Foundations, and to facilitate a wider exchange of ideas, annual Inter-Hillel Conferences are sponsored. Such a conference is being held in Toronto this weekend. Attending are delegates from Montreal, Kingston, London, Buffalo, Ithaca and Toronto; the program consists of student papers and talks by Jewish scholars.

The central theme of the paper is "Judaism and Thinkers", and is divided into three sessions.

The first session deals with the Philosophy of Judaism. The papers presented show a diversity of views, rather than a haphazard approach to the subject. A Jewish philosophy of different and somewhat contradictory ideas are expounded. Martin Buber and Orthodox constructionism seems to attempt to remold traditions to fit harmoniously with the demands of science and art.

soloist for hho

Only three months ago we predicted the Hart House Orchestra might establish a record during its current series of Sunday-evening concerts in the Great Hall. If we may quote ourselves from The Varsity of Nov. 5, 1959: "Latest report is that the following program, set some time ago, will remain unchanged, perhaps the first such occurrence in HHOA's history". There followed a complete listing of the works to be played by the Orchestra on all five evenings.

Readers who attended the first four concerts of the series will remember that no changes were made, as we predicted: the Orchestra was able to present every work as planned during the summer. But at the last moment, we learn from Dr. Neel, the Orchestra's learned conductor, that happily a change has been called in the timing of the last concert, scheduled this Sunday evening at 8 o'clock.

We say happily not because we are glad we shall not be in the Capitol Suite by Wednesday night, but because the appearance of a guest soloist has volunteered his services. Violinist Steven Staryk, in his youth, left Toronto years ago to take the concert-master in Sir Thomas Beecham's Royal Philharmonic Orchestra.

Consequently, besides the flat Sinfonia, Mozart's Don Giovanni, K. 137, Two Etudes for piano, and the Opus II Swedish composer Dag Nerg's Violin Concerto, we shall be hearing Bach's Violin Concerto. And at home, Mr. Staryk.

GOINGS ON ABOUT TOWN

theatre

The Schoolmistress—Crest Theatre—Arthur W. Pinero's "classical farce", circa 1885, exposed to the supposedly sophisticated audience of today and showing wrinkled evidence of its age. Charmion King, Sylvia Gillespie, Geoffrey Alexander and company are left with the generic problem, and they don't do too badly at that. Direction by Jean Roberts and Murray Davis, sets by Clare Jeffery. (The Crest informs us that students' tickets are 75c on week-days, and $1.00 weekends; nightly at 8:30 p.m., matinees Fridays and Saturdays at 5 p.m.)

The Tunnel of Love—Lansdowne Theatre—Sex and sub-urbia provide the theme for this delightful piece of nonsense; Jack Creley, Austin Willis and the girls have a lot of fun with it, and so probably will you. (Nightly at 8:30 p.m., Friday and Saturday matinees at 5 p.m.; on Lansdown Ave. just above Bloor.)

cinema

A more or less conscientious guide to films of unusual interest now showing in Toronto.

Eugene Onegin—(Radio City Theatre)—The Chaikovsky opera adapted with artistic success to the screen; Ariadne Shengelaya, Igor Ozelov, Vadim Medvedev and company are very nearly flawless. The film is approaching its third week (Bathurst and St. Clair).

Happy Anniversary—(Odeon Carlton Theatre)—This film looks to be just another sexy comedy, but the accompanying short might be of more interest: it is Man of Music, featuring Dr. Healey Willan and also his St. Mary Magdalene Choir, and it was mostly filmed on campus and around Toronto. The feature, by the way, provided Toronto's Four Lads with a very lucrative title song. The two films open today.

The Mouse That Roared—(International Cinema)—A riotous piece of nonsense now in its fourth month here, starring Peters Sellers and Jean Seberg, in color.

The Scapegoat—(Tovne Cinema)—A film based on a novel by Daphne du Maurier, starring Alec Guinness in a dual role; in fact, this is the only aspect of the film that can be recommended without serious qualms.

Smiles of a Summer Night—(Christie Theatre)—A lively item originating from Sweden and directed by Ingmar Bergman; it is adorned with English subtitles for all but five minutes; as that five minutes of untranslated Swedish seems to have upset the censors. (Continuous from 7 p.m., Christie St. Clair Ave.)

ballet

National Ballet—Royal Alexandra Theatre—Friday this week students are admitted at half price. Program: Les Sylphides, Ballad, Pineapple, evg.—Pas de Six, Death and the Maids, Pas de Deux, The Fisherman and His Wife in the Underworld; Wed. evg.—Pas de Deux and the Maids, Pas de Deux Romance, Mermaid, Pineapple, Pol.; Thurs. evg.—Pas de Deux, Lilac Garden, Pineapple, Pol.; Fri. evg.—Carnival, The Fisherman, and His Wife in the Underworld; Sat. mat.—Coppelia; Sat. evg.—Les Sylphides.

SUNDAY

Hart House Orchestra—Great Hall—The final concert of the year by Boyd Neel's orchestra; more details on the page.

Cecilia Anderson—Trinity Convocation Hall—Recital by this artist who has to her credit the A.R.C.T. Gold Medal for piano; she has given several occasions with the CBC. The program includes works by Beethoven, Faure, Liszt, and others. Admission free; at 8:30 p.m., with refreshments afterwards.

TUESDAY

Moscow State Symphony—Maple Leaf Garden—The biggest and the best straight from Russia. The orchestra that neither sings nor dances. Konstantin Ivanov as conductor and soloist at the piano. (Tickets $2.00 at the Gardens and at the Troyka Book Store, College Street.)

jazz

It will take us weeks to catch up with the jazz spots, and what appears below is only a partial listing of the limits of space and memory.

Chelsea Club—The whole gambit is that moving to the Frontenac Arms Hotel, where the jazz is more intimate. Tonight Eve Smith with Duke Ellington, will warble. (Friday 10:30 a.m. with dancing; Saturdays 3:30 a.m. without dancing; Sundays 9:30 a.m. without dancing; Fridays only.)

House of Hambourg—Like, dance music, birds, 9 to 11, with Alexander ("The say) Lazarov, followed by jazz with the group, who are playing it like real rock. (It isn't in Hambourg at all; it's on College Street.) The Gene Rodgers Trio provides the music here, which for reasons which you know if you've been has to be fairly strong.

...now opening in Hart House, the annual International Student Festival opens.

The theme of the festival this year is Japan.

Proceeds from the festival will go towards the establishment of an "International Students House" on the University of Toronto Campus.

Featured in this year's festival will be a Japanese house and tea house that is being specially constructed in the foyer of Hart House by the Japanese trade Counsel.

In the art gallery there will be an exhibition of Israeli painting, and Canadian painting and sculpture.

In various rooms in Hart House there will be exhibits of Israeli, Hungarian, Estonian, Latvian, German, Indian, Canadian, and Pakistani groups and clubs on Campus.

For this year's show in the Great Hall, Walter Kanitz will be the master of ceremonies. The show is composed of several striking production numbers performed by various organizations of international students.

Byron Hyde, the president of the International Students' Organization called this year's festival the most exciting he has ever seen.

He expressed the hope that students all over the campus would take the opportunity to attend.

humanism. Thus the traditional concept of morality based on fear of punishment is replaced by the idea that an individual must live a good life because it is "best" both for himself and the rest of the world.

The relationship of existentialism and Judaism is harder for a non-Jew to grasp. Martin Buber teaches that salvation lies in the I-Thou relationship in an enlightened community of men. Friendship based on reason and judgment is necessary but it is not the highest relationship; God is the eternal Thou and is glimpsed in every man relationship.

The position of the Orthodox Jew is the most easily defined of any, and at the same time the most widely attacked both by Jew and non-Jew. This is probably because both Christian and Jew, practising or otherwise, have definite links with traditional Judaism, and many rightly or wrongly, consider it as something that they have "outgrown". The orthodox Jew is a minority within a minority.

The second session concerns itself with the struggle for self-definition. The modern American Jew believes that the traditional Judaism must be relaxed and, in order to preserve the identity of the Jew, substitutes an organizational Jewishness typified in such institutions as B'nai B'rith.

Comedy, Tragedy And Lyricism

Ingmar Bergman has directed over twenty-five motion pictures to date, providing the script for at least half that number. Until recently he was virtually unknown outside his native Sweden, and it was only with THE SEVENTH SEAL that he rose overnight to a leading position in the film world.

Bergman went into theatre after a violent break with his father, a Lutheran pastor. During the thirties he directed imaginative productions of Ibsen, Kaj Munk, Pirandello and Strindberg, as well as his own plays. Then, in the early forties, he wrote the scenario for ALF (MISS JULIE) Sjöberg's masochistic love story, HETS (TORMENT). This was Bergman's formal introduction to film, and he has devoted himself almost exclusively to this medium ever since.

SMILES OF A SUMMER NIGHT (Odeon-Christie) is the first Bergman film to have a commercial run in Toronto. To try to evaluate a writer's style, philosophy and development from one work, no matter how good, is never an easy task. It's like making a snap judgment of someone you don't know too well, and hoping that closer acquaintance with that person won't alter the judgment too radically.

What little that can be said about Bergman, then, from this one film, is that he is an eclectic writer, borrowing freely from Anouilh, Ibsen, Strindberg, the Medieval Romances, and the Gothic tales. This eclecticism is both Bergman's strength and his weakness; for, although he is adroit in his use of his sources, his constant alternations of style impose a rambling, episodic structure on his work.

SMILES OF A SUMMER NIGHT is a fascinating and complex study of human interrelations. It is concerned with frailty and strength, compassion and cynicism, understanding and ignorance. It deals with love. It deals with hate. It hints at virtue and revels in vice. In short, the film is a slice of life, and a considerable slice at that, almost too big to be more than superficially digested at one sitting. It is a disturbing picture; I only wish it could be regarded as a bedroom farce, but its implications strike too close to home.

As there are three smiles to the summer night, so there are three major tones to the film. The first, lasting until the banquet scene, is predominantly comic; the second, ending with the mock duel in the pavilion, mainly tragic. The third and last section is lyrical. The film can thus be said to resemble Shakespeare's final plays.

The protagonist is Frederik Egerman. Caught between a child-wife (a refined Baby Doll), who treats him like a father, and a mistress who takes every opportunity to mercilessly flay his vanity, Egerman seems too pathetically absurd to fill a heroic role. He suffers from the self-respect which makes calamity of so long life. But he has too much self-awareness and compassion to be easily dismissed. Though he is shorn of all pride during the purgatorial summer night, he is the only character who emerges with any real dignity.

Count Malcolm, Bergman's devil, is obviously the antagonist, a sort of militaristic dandy. He pate in an organization (whether or not that organization is "right" or "wrong") versus the right of a governing academic body to govern the moral rights and standards of an academic community.

There is much to be said about both of these views. It would be a terrible thing if the Caput or any other government were given the undeniable right to dictate to members of the community what they should believe and how they should act. This in fact would add a greater pressure on those individuals who had decided to "care".

Then again I am in a unique situation in this case. I am most definitely biased because I have personally been offended and the comment of the frat girls that I was a "wonderful person" makes me feel that there is nothing left for me to do but compel people to accept me.

There is no doubt in my mind that I was naive in thinking that people wouldn't be concerned with what accident of birth I had come upon and that only what kind of a person I had made myself to be counted. But with all the disillusion I can still sympathize to some extent with the "others": those who do not feel the unfaltering stare of the public every hour of every day.

My comrades at school should not have to be made to feel "different" but it is apparent that if someone does not pull the chair from under the supposed "lucky" ones, the groups with the smallest number are going to be forgotten. It is indeed a sad thing that the chairs have to be pulled, but what other recourse is there?

Does the world have to wait for a black and white war of hatred to be shaken from a slightly selfish position of complacency?

In this sense I agree with the latter side of the argument—it is the right of a government to govern the moral rights and standards of an academic community. I shiver as I say this, but when the community is composed of majority and minority both have individual rights. Certainly the majority cannot be made to suffer for the minority, but it is equally unfair for the minority to suffer because a majority exists.

The Caput of this university has washed its hands of the matter of discrimination in fraternities. I do not blame them in this decision because they have other business to attend to besides such a trifling matter.

I do not say this satirically, but no one can deny that one person encouraged to withdraw from rushing formalities by one representative was a trifling matter when one considers the number of students attending this university and the fact that it was not disturbing the university routine.

What the Caput failed to see was that actual matter symbolized much more. What the whole business said in fact was that there was a certain amount of perverted morals being practiced by students at the University of Toronto. They also failed to see that it just might have been more practical and more in keeping with society mores if they had said definitely that what was happening was very much disapproved of to the point of some form of practical admonishment.

What the Caput did was to admonish all fraternities and not mention anything about the fact that some frats are really trying to break down the paradoxical traditions remaining in a democracy of "equals". It is too bad that everybody had to be slightly punished by a re-statement of university policy towards fraternities.

At any rate, I have informed. I have made some people annoyed. I have prompted the same old "humanists" to stand up once again and get slapped in the face. Perhaps I have also prompted the SAC to set up the lecture series on race relations and set up a committee on such.

It seems that I have done something, exactly what is another matter.

Little do the uneducated know that when they look to the colleges and universities for the answers they are approaching a crowd of confused and abused people.

Smiles Of A Summer Night cont'd

is the prototype of twentieth-century humanity—man reduced to the level of the machine. He seems far more at home in his automobile, or playing with his swords and pistols, than he does with his fellow human beings. Malcolm possesses only the basest of feelings: jealousy, revenge, hatred, contempt. No love. Just pride of ownership. He is ruthlessly frank (he tells his wife quite blatantly about his mistress), yet he displays a distinctly prudish streak. He is genuinely outraged when Desiree enters his bedroom in the middle of the night.

"Have you no morals, Desiree?" he asks; "what if my wife woke up and found you here?" And later he orders: "Turn your back while I put on my trousers!" He is a modern Hotspur, obsessed with honour, and possessed of a grotesquely twisted morality.

Desiree is the most womanly member of the female cast, yet paradoxically the most masculine. She smokes cigars (and censorship prevents me from going any further with this); she beats Malcolm with a poker; she is the aggressor in winning Frederik back. The perfect manipulator, she remains in complete control of herself and the situation until the fake duel. Indeed, she seems far more interested in the game itself than in the prize involved. But Malcolm upsets her stratagems, forcing Desiree to realize, perhaps with a tinge of regret, that she really loves Frederik. "Freut euch des Lebens."

Egeman, Desiree, Count and Countess Malcolm, represent the last of the three summer night smiles. A tight-lipped smile, holding back the tears, and sometimes twisting into a sneer. It symbolizes love in its most refined and civilised state, heavily inlaid with bitterness and cynicism.

The second smile—a broad, healthy, animal grin—bestows itself on the two servants, Frid and Petra. This is love at its most basic, and it is not by accident that a whinnying stallion is in the background of the hilarious seduction scene. Within the frame of reference of the film, this is the freest, happiest form of love.

The first smile, that of the young lovers, Anne and Henrik, is hazy and indistinct, almost unsure of being a smile at all. Frid says: "There are few young lovers in the world today. You can count them on one hand." Perhaps that's just as well, for theirs is the most selfish kind of love, a love that cares little for the human misery it leaves in its wake. Anne and Henrik cannot face up to the responsibilities of their love, and indulge in a literal flight from reality.

When Desiree's mother, referring to Anne and Henrik, says: "How pitilessly cruel is youth." I think she is exaggerating. How lacking in awareness might be a better description. In a way, Anne and Henrik complement Malcolm and his wife, even as Desiree and Frederik complement the two servants, Frid and Petra.

The film uses many symbols. To mention a few of the most obvious: the white veil, signifying purity and inexperience in life. The clock, where an Isolde-like figurine introduces the love-death sequence between Henrik and Anne, and the figure of the grim reaper prepares us for the macabre Russian roulette episode, where Iago-Malcolm, seemingly victorious, is ultimately the loser.

Bergman employs several very interesting cinematic touches, as in the Gothic banquet scene with its alternating dissolves and dollies; of the use of panning for comic effects (derived from silent film techniques), as in Desiree's apartment, where the camera swings from Desiree to Egeman, ludicrously garbed in a nightgown; or from Malcolm lighting a cigarette to his wife, whom we had not noticed in the previous shot. Visuals of striking beauty are recorded, in particular the swans on the river, and the timeless symbol of the windmill in the closing sequence.

While Bergman does not seem to have complete control of his elements at all times, he still manages to achieve remarkable results. SMILES OF A SUMMER NIGHT is a cry of despair, rendered the more exquisite by its comic overtones.

Blues Down OAC 7-3 The Scoreboard Tuneup For Montreal

By GENE GLISKY

Ontario Agricultural College Redmen may be the team to beat in the Ontario Intercollegiate Hockey League, but they showed little of the form that makes them the scourge of that erstwhile loop as Varsity Blues trounced them to the tune of 7-3 in an exhibition encounter at the Bloor Street Ice Emporium Wednesday afternoon.

A relaxed Jack Kennedy watched the "nothing" game as Harry Neale, scarred but undaunted, wielded the reins from behind the Blues bench. Neale, suffering a gash on his forehead from a practise accident, did not dress for the contest but chose to utilize his coaching skills instead.

Using four full lines, it was a contest dedicated to the untired element in the Varsity hockey organization, and the rookies came through in grand style garnering the majority of the scoring points.

Al Orcheson was "johnnie on the spot" as he fired two goals and assisted on another. Gord Gow, coming round to the form expected of him all season was at his swooping best as he scored one marker and assisted on two others. Gow's goal was without doubt the prettiest scoring play seen at the Arena all year. Taking a pass from George Hicken outside the OAC blue line, Gow shifted around the Redmen defense and cleanly beat Jim Wetmore in the OAC nets with a backhand to the corner.

Jim Murchie, Jim Simpson, Pete Warren and George Hicken were the other Varsity goal getters.

Redmen looked their best early in the third period as Ron Anderson and John Henry scored back to back goals for the Aggies. Defensively, big, tough and bespectacled Tom Sawyer was the roughest rearguard for the comparatively featherweight OAC squad.

Ice chips: We were impressed with the play of rookie Ev Rush in his debut in the hockey wars. Quick and tough, Rush may develop into an effective right wing for Kennedy.

Carabins Last Visit

Blues resume league play against Montreal at Varsity Arena this Saturday at 8 o'clock. This is a change from the routine Friday night extravaganzas, so let's not forget the difference. Varsity need to win every game if they wish to remain in contention against the pace setting Laval team. At the moment Laval have 18 points to Varsity's 10, but two four point victories against Queen's explain some of the spread.

Linesmen Dan Sadowy and John Reimer, of the Varsity Intramural school for referees handled this exhibition tilt with the aplomb of veterans.

See you all, plus the Blue and White Band at the important game SATURDAY NIGHT.

Two weeks ago, the Blues' star forward line of Jim Murchie, Howie Roth, and John Gatten, were scoring so many of the team's goals, that coach Jack Kennedy was beginning to wonder if the others were ever going to pitch in and lend a hand.

Suddenly they stopped scoring. Nobody else started, and Varsity lost to McGill 4-2 right in Varsity Arena. Then last weekend the unknowns started potting goals at a great rate, and Blues won two important games. The "big" line scored only two of the ten goals in those two games.

Kennedy is hoping that everybody will get together Saturday night when Blues host the Montreal Carabins for the last time this season. Montreal were plastered 12-0 Wednesday night by Laval, but still possess several fast skating stars, and after that McGill game, well you never know what might happen.

Blues now lag eight points behind Laval, and every game is in the must category. One loss and they are finished. Game time is 8 p.m. and THERE IS NO SKATING AFTER THE GAME.

Varsity Swim Against McGill On Saturday

Canada's top three freestyle swimmers clash this Saturday afternoon as the University of Toronto Swim Team hosts the McGill Redmen in an exhibition meet, at 3 p.m.

Cameron Grout, the blonde flash who holds the Canadian record for the 100-yard freestyle and who was a member of Canada's Pan-American will swim against his own team mate Dick Pound and Varsity's sensational freshman, Marv Chappelle in the hundred yard race.

Records are expected to tumble in this race, a preview of the Olympic trials this summer. Bob Fisher, out with an injured elbow, has recovered and should win the 200-yard backstroke.

With swimmers like Wally Unger, Nick Thierry, Kirk Thompson, Ernie Wilson, and Alex Ashenhurst also on hand to pick up points, a Varsity win would appear to be in the cards.

Last week's meet with Bowling Green was cancelled because the visitors misread the contract and showed up at the wrong time.

Notes . . . Ron Walbank, chairman of the committee that is organizing the swim carnival, mentioned that all the leading hopefuls for Canada's Olympic swimming team will be on hand . . . they, Cameron Grout . . . Dick Pound, from McGill . . . John Shortreed and Denes Svetko from Western . . . as well as the Varsity swimmers who are considered top contenders for a spot on the team.

. . . and in this corner by pam hill

Five interfaculty records were broken last night in the women's interfaculty swim meet, the first official meet to be held in the new pool.

Miss Valerie Lewis was the individual champion of the meet, amassing 40 points. Miss Lewis swam the 25 yards butterfly event in 14.8 seconds, establishing a new record over Shirley German's 18.6 of 1958.

Another first and a record went to Miss Lewis in the 75 yard individual medley, with Cynthia Hare of Nursing close behind her. The old record, set in 1948, was 55.0. It is now 53.4.

Valerie's third position was again a first, and again a record. The Physical Education 200 yard medley relay team placed first, with a new record of 1:07.6, five seconds faster than Victoria's record of 1958. Swimming in the event were: backstroke — Sandy McMullen, breast-stroke, — Doris Miller, butterfly — Val Lewis, and freestyle — Lynne Philpott.

The fourth record was claimed by Cynthia Hare, a former Canadian Champion, and holder of the Williams Trophy. Miss Hare easily came first in the 50 yards backstroke with a time of 33.6, beating Beryl Lewis's 1954 time of 33.8 (incidentally, Beryl is Val's sister. "Are there any more like you at home?").

The last record was set by Trinity's 200 yard freestyle relay team. The eight lengths were covered in 2 minutes and 13 seconds, a good half length anyway ahead of the second place P&HE team. Swimming for Trinity were: Vals Echlin, Janet Medland, Pam Hill and Margot Nunns.

Lowell Pelton (UC) claimed two individual firsts in the 50 and 100 yards freestyle races. Miss Pelton swam both these events for Varsity in the Intercollegiate Meet this year.

The last, but far from the least, first went to Pat Armstrong of Victoria in the 50 yards breast-stroke in a time of 41.6. The old record of 36.8 set in 1935 still holds.

The final results saw P&HE first, Vic and Nursing second, and Trinity third. After Miss Lewis, individual winners were: Doris Miller and Sandy McMullen, both of Phys. Ed.

The meet was well run — the officials did a wonderful job — the spectators were thrilled with the whole show

U of T Host To First High School Tourney

The first high school wrestling meet ever held in Toronto will take place Saturday afternoon and evening at Hart House. Sponsored by the University of Toronto, the meet has attracted more than 60 entries in eight weight classes from seven high schools in and around Toronto.

Among those making entries are Winston Churchill, R. H. King, Whitby, and Richmond Hill. The preliminary rounds are on Saturday afternoon, with the finals being held in the evening.

Officials regard the entry list as impressive, and note it as an indication of the growing popularity of a sport long established in schools below the border.

The University Team is idle this weekend, but on Tuesday they travel to Buffalo for a return bout with the Buffalo matmen. Following that is a meet in Guelph on the 13th.

Bill Polito, out for the last three weeks with a dislocated elbow, has been seen prowling around the wrestling room in the last few days, and if he is ready for the Intercollegiate meet, Varsity's chances of a good showing are materially improved.

Cagers On Trip To Queen's And McGill

The Varsity Blues will take to the road this weekend as they take on Queen's and McGill in two intercollegiate basketball games.

The Blues upset highly favoured Assumption last week and are out for two wins as they still have a chance to tie for first place. Although McGill and Queen's have lost about every game, a loss in either city would finish the Blues for the season.

Toronto has played McGill Redmen once and they won handily, 90-78 in a slack contest. The Redmen have their lineup dominated by Americans but judging from their playing here they have not added to much to the threat of their team.

Gary Ulrich and John Newson were their two top scorers down in Toronto netting 21 and 16 points respectively.

The Queen's Golden Gaels will meet Toronto for the first time on Friday night and this team has won only one game all year, against McGill.

They are coached by Frank Tindall of football fame and have relatively unknown players on their roster. Most of their players are doing postgrad work and have been around for four or five years. Their top scorer this year is Bob Laughton a guard. Other players that are to be watched are Len Price, Denny Bozic and Jim Pando.

Toronto will be at full strength for the trip. Boris Wolchuk is gradually recuperating from his bad back strain and Mike Muir will play in spite of his injured ribs.

JUST NOTES . . . the Blues played Osgoode Hall last night and won by a score of 83-52. . . The team returns next week to play O.A.C. on the tenth and McMaster on the 13th. . . the Blues will again be without the services of Howie Spanetz as the quasi-trainer for the squad feels that it is more important to stay home and study than go on a road trip. . . (?) . . .

IRON-CLAD DEFENCE like SAC goalie Peter Dembski uses here wasn't enough to stop the valiant Varsity team from routing the SAC 4-2 Friday night. In spite of all dastardly attempts to take the game, under Robert's Rules of Orders, the SAC was unsuccessful and was totally crushed. Trying to help Dembski stop the well-aimed Varsity puck is Blue and White Chairman Dave Tavender. The two sturdy characters on the right are Varsity copy-runner Riho Pild, treacherously playing for the SAC, and Varsity sports writer Mike Chykaliuk. (Varsity Staff Photo by Walker)

Student Spectators See Varsity Vanquish SAC

Highlighted by the annual hockey clash between The Varsity and the Students' Administrative Council, the University of Toronto Ice Frolics warmly entertained a chilly crowd in Varsity Arena on Friday night.

Under the auspices of the Blue and White Society, the two-and-one-half hour ice show which this year replaced the Winter Carnival presented two hockey games, comic relay races and individual skaters, including former Canadian Men's Champion Charles Snelling.

The Varsity-SAC game starred skateless goalie Peter Dembski, protected by a plastic screen, who allowed only four Varsity goals to pass his defence. Three penalties were handed out to Varsity players for interfering with Dembski's screen and another two-minute offence was committed by a Varsity player who checked a female SAC player too heavily.

Varsity stalwarts were Managing Editor Harvey Shepherd and Photographer Jacques Roberge who played the entire game standing up, "a feat which Shepherd has never before accomplished," officials said.

Varsity opened the scoring with their first shot on goal by "Rocket" Glisky in the early seconds of the game. Dave Tavender of the SAC scored at 11 minutes to make the score 2-1 for Varsity.

Varsity scored again twice in the second period and Tavender scored for the SAC.

Glisky hit the mark again, and Peter Brawley and Mike Chykaliuk each counted one. Final score was 4-2.

SAC President Walter McLean distinguished himself in the fun-filled hockey game by being out of town.

But the game was not over with the final whistle. Three fights erupted on the ice between opposing Varsity-SAC players.

Cups were presented to the winning performers by Miss Varsity, Marjorie Chapman.

Huge PC Rally Sees UofT Men Voted In

A pair of University of Toronto students were elected to the executive of the Progressive Conservative Student Federation over the weekend, as the Young PCs wound up the biggest national convention in their history, at Ottawa.

Gordon Ross (II Vic) was chosen Secretary Treasurer of the organization, while David Crane (II Vic) was picked to edit the national Conservative Student News Letter.

Highlight of the PC convention, attended by 43 universities from across Canada, was a speech Saturday night by Prime Minister John Diefenbaker.

In an off-the-cuff talk sprinkled with flashes of wit and subtle puns, the Prime Minister told some 500 delegates they should not be disillusioned into letting their guard down because of the recent Conservative victories on the local and national levels.

He announced the government is setting up a national essay contest open to any Canadian university student. Essay topic is "History and Philosophy of the Conservative Party in Canada."

Mr. Diefenbaker also said the government intends to set up a string of "school facilities" to pass on details of Conservative history and policy to anyone interested.

U of T delegates described Mr. Diefenbaker at his "enthusiastic best." They also said seminars, designed to provide open discussion on current political affairs and held for the first time at the annual conference, were highly successful.

Ask SAC Join Civil Rights Plea

By David Lewis Stein

The issue of civil rights and race relations will be again put before the Students' Administrative Council.

The SAC has been asked by the Human Rights Committee of the Toronto Labour Council to join a deputation to the Metropolitan Council of Metropolitan Toronto.

The deputation will ask the council to recommend to provincial government an amendment to the Fair Accommodations Act that would prevent discrimination in the renting of apartments and multiple housing units.

The deputation will also ask that the council recommend to the federal government that federal funds be withheld from multiple housing units which practice racial discrimination in renting.

The issue of Fair Accommodations recently achieved widespread publicity when a survey made public by the Human Rights Committee revealed that several apartment house owners in Toronto had refused to rent apartments to Negroes.

The Human Rights Committee has already sent similar deputations to the civic councils of St. Catharines and Windsor. Both these cities have gone on record as endorsing the committee's recommendations to the provincial and federal governments.

The Human Rights Committee of Toronto is a subsidiary committee of the National Human Rights Committee of the Canadian Labor Congress. Each provincial council has its own Human Rights Committee and there are also several subsidiary committees in large cities.

Two years ago the Toronto Committee conducted a similar survey to the one that sparked the present deputation.

At that time they discovered that of the apartments tested, 50% of them refused outright to rent to Negroes.

Surveys are conducted by having a Negro apply where apartments are advertised for rent. If he is refused, a short time later a white applies for the same apartments.

In the survey conducted this year 26 apartments were tested. Ten apartment houses refused outright to rent to Negroes, and six refused to rent to Negroes on what the committee regarded as dubious grounds.

Aged See Advance Run Of "Christopher Jones"

The curtain went up for the first time on the musical comedy "Christopher Jones" Saturday.

A preview showing was performed for 720 men and women at Lambert Lodge, Toronto's largest Home for the Aged.

Lodge Recreation Director Mr. Clark said: "As soon as it was announced there was to be a musical comedy performed here, the news began spreading like wild fire. It has provided a topic of interest and excitement for the past week."

The performance was carried over a public address system for those who were physically unable to attend in person. The auditorium was filled to capacity.

Because of the small stage, few sets were employed. The audience was asked to use its imagination, and during the performance director Barry Callaghan gave a brief synopsis of the locale and action in each scene.

John Harasti (Christopher Jones) captivated the audience.

The show was held up several times until the laughter and applause quieted.

In one dramatic scene where Marian Metcalfe (I UC), (Stephanie Collins) screams with anger, a number of elderly ladies were heard to gasp audibly.

Comments on the performance ranged from that of enthusiastic praise to that made by a little old lady who said: "I enjoyed the show very much". Then, she threw up her hands! "But oh, there was so much drinking involved."

Christopher Jones opens tonight in Hart House Theatre at 8.30 p.m. It runs until Saturday.

Tickets are on sale at the Hart House box office.

ISO Festival Charms Capacity HH Crowd epstein winners

The International Student Festival drew a capacity crowd for their second annual exhibition at Hart House Saturday night.

The theme of the festival this year was Japan.

Sponsored by the Nisei Student's Club, the Japanese exhibit displayed paintings, flower arrangements, and Japanese dances.

Proceeds from the festival will be given to the University of Toronto to go towards the establishment of an International Student's House on the campus.

The festival also featured music, dancing, and exhibits of Israeli, Hungarian, Estonian, Latvian, German, Indian, Canadian, and Pakistani groups and clubs on campus.

"The main purpose of the exhibit was to present the culture of different peoples in different countries," said Byron Hyde, president of the International Student's Organization last night.

Hyde said "The success of the festival was better than was anticipated at the start."

Last year 180 people came to view the festival, and this year approximately 600 attended.

"The International Student's House which we hope will be set up soon, will serve all students on campus, and will be a centre for the exchange of ideas," said Dorothy Shimizu, recording secretary of the ISO.

Hyde expressed the hope that an International Student's House would soon be found on campus in order that the festival could be set up in more convenient surroundings.

A news meeting is today, like. At 1 p.m. in the Varsity Office it is.

Results of the annual Epstein awards for creative writing at University College were announced Friday by Professor N. J. Endicott, judging committee chairman.

Top prize of $350 went to David Lewis Stein (IV) for a collection of short stories.

Other high winners were Howard Adelman (III), $200 for a play; Christopher Priestly (IV), $200 for poetry and $75 for a play; R. W. McCrae, $150 for a short story and a novel; David Helwig (IV), $100 for a short story and $75 for a play, "Katy Cruel."

Prizes of $25 each went to D. C. Humphreys, T. Thompson, A. Zelenka, Miss G. Kubinyi, D. Larsen and A. Leggett.

Prof Barred From US Due To Student Prank

A University of Toronto professor was refused entry to the United States recently, because of a student prank during his university days.

The professor, whose identity was not disclosed, was reported to have stolen a magic lantern in his youth and apparently got a police record because of this.

This disclosure was made last week, by Elliott Pepper, of Attorney General Robert's department, during a discussion of police records by the Ontario section of the Canadian Bar Association.

Ashley Cooper told the section that it was not fair to saddle good citizens with a police record for some minor offense committed years ago.

Assistant Crown Attorney Henry Bull felt that the matter should be considered further, before such records could be wiped out.

The matter will be reviewed by the association during the next two months, before a decision is made.

when they sparked off verbal fire works at a PC panel discussion held in the East View Hotel, headquarters.

One of the duet, Thomas Stroob (U Vic) levelled a blast of criticism against policies of the Canadian Immigration Department.

Thomas accused the department of discriminating against Negro students applying for entrance to Canadian Universities.

He said Negro students "were forced to crawl to the Immigration Department once every four months to have their visas extended."

"White students from the West Indies have it made, though. They don't have to lower their dignity by resorting to this type of thing," he said.

Thomas was part of a panel which included External Affairs Minister Green; his parliamentary secretary, Wallace Nesbitt, MP for Oxford; Stuart Fleming, MP for Okanagan-Revelstoke, and Mrs. Harry Quart, Québec, President, Women's Conservative Association.

Another unidentified U of T delegate bluntly asked the press to leave when a discussion over the pros and cons of allowing Red China into the United Nations reached the point of white heat.

The delegates openly swamped a resolution calling for the recognition of Red China. The ensuing discussion which lasted one hour was marked by hisses and cat calls.

The China issue was raised by a McGill delegate Miss Edna Shuster, during the panel discussion on foreign affairs.

After Thomas wound up his attack on the immigration Department, Mr. Green asked: "Are you sure about your facts. I am very careful that is right."

But he promised to make inquiries.

Meanwhile Phil Goulston (U UC) was chosen as president of the Canadian University Liberal Federation, which held a national meeting in Ottawa simultaneously with the PCs.

The 15 U of T delegates, part of a 250 Liberal delegation, heard speeches by Mr. Pearson and Mr. Pickersgill in the Chateau Laurier.

The student Liberal offered the PCs a formal challenge to debate whether the PC Student Federation is larger than the Liberals. The debate would be held in Montreal or Ottawa later in the year.

The challenge was officially issued over an Ottawa radio station. But later Goulston and his followers raided a PC convention dinner minutes before the Prime Minister showed up to speak, to deliver it in person. They were turned away.

At one point in the weekend Finance Minister Fleming had a tough time filling a PC engagement.

In a dash from a cabinet meeting the minister miscalculated the distance behind his car and ploughed into another vehicle - Justice Minister Fulton's car.

religious welfare and ethnic organizations throughout the city.

Mr. A. Allan Borovoy, executive secretary of the Human Rights Committee of Toronto said tonight that the reason he is asking the SAC to participate in the delegation is because he feels that "University students are not divorced from the community and are concerned with all questions of social justice."

Prof's Brother Predicts Peace, Defends China

By BARRY ZIMMERMAN

The brother of a University of Toronto professor told a peace rally last night, the communists will be used by God to bring world peace whether they know it or not.

Dr. James G. Endicott, Chairman of the Canadian Peace Congress, and brother of Prof. N. J. Endicott of University College spoke to a packed house in Massey Hall.

Dr. Endicott asked "Who can deny that God can use the communists to bring peace? We Canadians have a duty to re-educate our American friends on the problem of China," he said.

"Hardly a week goes by when American trained troops are not attacking the coast of China and burning villages," he said.

"How would you feel if someone did not like your politics and placed a tank on your lawn, calling on Billy Graham and God to bless this action and saying if you try to remove the tank it is aggression?" Dr. Endicott questioned.

Last night U of T student Giles Endicott, nephew of Dr. Endicott, commented on the meeting saying, "We are related by blood but not by politics. I think he should be commended for his attempt towards peace, but the name of the Canadian Peace Congress has become too black for it to have any effect."

He felt the Peace Congress is being used by "persons" for political benefit. He said: "I do not think an organization like this should be used for political capital."

Giles thought his uncle's earlier petition for nuclear disarmament "worthwhile".

Danny Goldstick, President of the U of T Communist Club also attended the meeting but refused to comment on it.

Frenchman Speaks

For a moment he became very serious.
"It is something my fellow country-men and myself will never forget."

We talked about French Canada.

I feel very close to French Canadians," he smiled.
"There are differences yet. But there is still a bond in race and customs. It is a feeling you experience, a closeness, that can be only known when you leave home, journey far, and run across a man who speaks your own language."

Fredrick Paul Deloffre was a student in Paris when the war machine of the Third Reich rolled across his country.

He was too young to join the army. He would have, but the occupation was swift in France.

There was something else. The Germans were shipping all the young French they could get their hands on back to Berlin to work as slave laborers.

Young Deloffre was eligible.

But if you knew how, deportment could be avoided. There were ways.

Fredrick Deloffre found one. He stayed in France. Two of his close friends were not so lucky. Both were members of the French underground. Near the end of the war, Gestapo agents picked them up. They were shot.

"After a war there is much forgetting to do," he reflected.

The professor says many Canadians have wrong conceptions about the social life led by French students.

"University students at home are not the heavy drinkers the world seems to make them out to be. As a matter of fact it is rare to see a French student drunk. They can keep alcohol in their residence. I, personally, have supervised a residence three years and never saw a bottle. Most of their money is spent on skiing, smoking and movies."

"What about girl-boy relationships," we pondered. He laughed, leaned back in his chair, made a tent with his fingers.

"Dating in Canada is so formal, and open. Almost regimentation. Canadian couples have certain nights they go out, certain set nights. What is it—Friday and Saturday?"

"Not so in France," he chuckled. Relationships are a little more easy, also a little more private, hidden. No one knows who belongs to who, whose going steady.

Here are the things Fredrick Paul Deloffre likes: He likes Toronto transportation facilities, because of good connections, Canadian weather because the city is organized to fight it, documentary films, Canadian art, King Oliver Jazz, U of T's modern buildings, good wine, Moliere, and little girls—probably because he has one himself.

He is unsure about beatniks.

"I have never met one. Therefore I cannot really judge. In Lyons we have none. But I suppose one would find them in Paris. But then one finds all sorts of things in Paris."

He admitted that the student-professor relations in Canada are better than they are in France.

"French professors are considered to be the law and the prophets. They rarely discuss issues with the students. French students rarely approach them. It is like this. The average French student merely sits and believes."

"There are also many more professors here per student compared with the ratio in my country. The students have fewer classes during the week. They study more on their own. They have too. The curriculum is harder there than in most Canadian universities."

He praised facilities at U of T.

"You are very lucky. Very lucky. Students here have just about everything they could wish for—materially anyway. Study facilities are excellent. Many books are available. The professors and instructors have larger and warmer and cleaner offices. You indeed have much to be thankful for."

The French ambassador of education has been in Toronto for three weeks.

He leaves for Lyons in the middle of May.

We hope by then there will be a solution to the Algerian crisis: and with it a solution to the problems of the Algerian student.

If there is, one of the happiest men in the world will be Fredrick Paul Deloffre . . .

ODDS & ENDS

By Alan Walker

cruel jewel

When I saw Katy Cruel last month, the haunting quality of several of the songs literally made my hair stand on end. I had the same experience last night, listening to the record of the show.

This is it, the recording of what is probably the greatest original campus show in living memory. Katy can be yours forever.

Almost every song from the show is on the disc, and the performances were never better. Somehow, whether you beg, borrow or steal it, get $4 together in one lump. Wander over to the University College rotunda some time during lunch today, and buy that record. You'll never regret it.

insarcophagument

Prussic acid is probably the most deadly of all poisons and has been known to kill in less than ten seconds. The most common salt is potassium cyanide, frequently used for suicide. But the favorite poison of murderers is arsenic, and I think I know why, after reading the symptoms of arsenic poisoning.

To start with, a difficulty in swallowing and stomach discomfort are noticed. Later there is violent pain with nausea and vomiting. The skin and extremities are cold and damp. There is headache, dizziness and cramps in the limbs. The face may be blue, the pulse feeble and the respiration weak. If at this point the patient fails to pass into a coma and die of exhaustion, the symptoms of chronic arsenic poisoning set in.

The eyelids swell and become inflamed. The hair and nails fall out. The skin turns black. The nerves become useless and paralysis sets in. Blindness may occur.

In spite of the fact that arsenic poisoning takes a long time, and there is a danger the victim may get to an antidote in time, it's worth it, isn't it folks?

reaney revisited

Received anonymously at The Varsity office (some of the best writing we print is so received) is a poem written in James Reaney style and addressed to me. I reprint it, with thanks.

A Reaney-type in which wkr's wish is fulfilled.
A bomb and a bomb and a bomb
Came out of the blue sky.
And out went the unembalmed, and the balmy balm
With which to embalm the unembalmed.

Happy Easter, whoever you are.

typos

Typographical errors are a lot of fun, especially when they come close to home. Varsity Editor Sam Aizenstat dug up these for me. This one's from the Trinity Review:

"The poetry of Irving Layton presents an interest development of Hobbes' view that man is an irrational, violet and lusting animal."

Another literary type is this one from the Waterloo Review:

"... three essays which attempted to distill two centuries of revolutionary innovations in a way that would be meaningless to a wide audience today."

From the Daily Star's entertainment page comes this gem:

"The producers of Ben Hur insist that no animal was not injured in any way at any time during the shooting."

From the Globe and Mail, a quote from the Right Reverend F. H. Wilkinson, bishop of Toronto:

"there is not a man living who at some time or other in his life, for others if not for himself, falls upon his knees."

A couple of errors I made myself in news stories will always stick in my mind, mainly because they almost cost me my job:

"Cause of the blaze was attributed to careless smoking by firemen."

"John Stevenson was critically injured when the car in which he was riding rolled over and was taken to hospital."

caveatemptor

I got a letter from a first year University College student about Ries Karvanaque: "Obviously from your account of her narrow escape from death on an icy highway, Ries Karvanaque needs driving lessons. (Slamming brakes on an icy road?). I hereby place myself for hire at $10 per hour." Unfortunately the writer has missed the point of the Karvanaque story. SHE gets the money. And anyway, she only goes to parties, never into closed cars.

be the product of this country and founded on a theme from the Canadian West.

Briefly, the story concerns a stranger, Ben, who is not accepted by the first generation but with whom the second generation falls in love. When an inadvertent death occurs, jealousy, hatred and violence are aroused and focused on the figure of the stranger. The noose is produced and the death of the innocent Ben is a foregone conclusion.

The opening gaiety, achieved by fresh costumes and a community square dance, includes acrobatic high jinks performed by wild boys. Soon, however, this mood gives way to the seriousness of Ben's rejection by the community as a whole and the earnest love scenes with Rose are interrupted by Martha, the jealous elder sister. Finally, the desperation of Ben's pleading for life is followed by the lost and grief-stricken movements of the two sisters. The variety of choreography and mood which this ballet evokes is beautifully knit together in a harmoniously ordered whole.

OF THE NATIONAL BALLET COMPANY are Cecily Paige, Lawrence Adams, Harold da Silva and Judie Chapman, as they appear in BALLAD.

Of special note was the expressive dancing of Angela Leigh who took the role of Martha, the older sister. She is jealous of the success of Rose, her junior, but is no less grief-stricken when Ben is killed. It is a work which grows on one with successive viewings.

The evening began with Pas de Chance, a work seldom performed by the Company. It is choreographed by David Adams and is quite a charming and frivolous creation. It needs, however, very skilled and technically adept dancers to bring it to the perfection it deserves. It did not have them on Thursday night and the spectator was frequently uneasy throughout the performance.

Gala Performance, the witty burlesque of classical ballet by Antony Tudor, closed the programme. Unfortunately it is used too often by the National as a filler and therefore, its merits have become common. It tends, however, to be very popular among the gentlemen spectators, and therefore has some definite value! On the whole, the evening was a very successful and enjoyable one, a great improvement over Monday.

book store

Dear Sirs:

The issue of The Varsity for February 3 contained a reference to the method adopted this year for the distribution of examination reprints. Because the new system is intended to make papers available in a more convenient and economical form, and because it was established following suggestions made directly to the Bookstore by prominent students, it is important that the present policy be clearly understood and correctly stated.

Last year all papers were sold for a given year, regardless of courses, in a single unbroken set at one dollar each. It was drawn to our attention that most students wish to procure only five or six papers, and that ability to purchase these as separate items was desirable. The charge of ten cents per paper made under this system is purely nominal. The sales of examination reprints continues to be conducted at a substantial loss, and solely as a service to students. The average edition sold of each paper (there are more than nine hundred separate papers) is smaller than ten copies, and the advantages of the new system would therefore seem to be obvious. If purchase of the complete year's papers is genuinely preferred, however, a return to the former method would provide a smaller administrative problem.

Yours very truly,
Harald Bohne, Manager,

Dear Sir,

I have read with interest the articles which appeared in your paper with regard to scholarships requested by Algerian students.

My intention is not to discuss the reasons which Algerian students may have for not pursuing their studies in Algiers itself.

However, I should like to state that all universities in Metropolitan France are open to Algerian students in a spirit of complete freedom and liberalism.

Algerian students, like their French classmates, are entitled not only for free tuition, social security benefits, entrance to students' restaurants (meals at 20c), but are also eligible, with no restriction of number, for bursaries to cover living expenses (the same holds good for students belonging to states now independent of France, such as Tunisia and Guinea). For instance, the University of Lyons, alone, would be able to provide aid for all Algerian students who wished to apply for fellowships.

F. DELOFFRE, professor at the Faculty of Arts, Lyons, France, in charge of bursary awards, visiting professor at University College.

WATERCOLOURS

Revival In HH Gallery

The popular notion that water-colour is the medium of the Sunday-afternoon dilettante is due for a reviewing, and if the works of Viktoras Brickus, now on exhibit in the Hart House Gallery, are any indication of what can be done with water-colour, then we may expect a healthy revival. The too-pretty, rather faded watercolours of the past are gone. Here we have healthy, vigorous works of a master of this medium.

Mr. Brickus is more successful in his landscapes than in the few still-lives on view. This is nature in the raw—massive rocks, angry skies, barren trees struggling with the elements.

In Blackwater Swamp we find a chilling black pool biting at the dry trees and rushes at the shore. There is an exciting texture which emphasises the acute tension of the scene.

That there is strong emphasis on line in most of the works represented here is obvious. Brickus' forms are strongly laced with black lines which give definition to the underlying shapes. The technique is not new, but it is used with skill.

In a few of the works, Mr. Brickus shows a tendency away from this outline technique. Jack's Wharf shows a richness of colour which itself defines the forms. In this work, Mr. Brickus has used a freer brush, a more spontaneous stroke which reveals a drama of a type different from that revealed in most of the other landscapes.

Rockland Wood is another of Brickus' most arresting watercolours. The deft handling of the blackish trees shows spontaneity and sensitivity. The composition is powerful and carries the eye in an S-curve from foreground rock forms to a distant mountain. This depth is characteristic of Mr. Brickus' work. One is immediately aware that these are not just surface paintings. In the landscapes, we are almost led through the woods.

Brickus is by no means a flashy modernist. The subject matter forms a strong base in each of the works, and Mr.

Brickus has analysed his subject well, has treated his line with sensitivity, and each stroke of his brush seems to say, "This is Nature".

CAGERS WIN, LOSE ON TRIP

Edge McGill 55-51 In A Dull Contest

Varsity Blues, before a small crowd of apathetic supporters, managed to win one of their two road trip games as they defeated McGill Redmen 55-51 in an intercollegiate basketball contest at Montreal.

Toronto had the lead for all of the game and were threatened only in the last few minutes but staved off the last minute drive of the host club for the victory.

It was the second win for Toronto over the Redmen who are now permanently established as the sole possessors of last place.

Coach John McManus said last night that his team was lucky to win this game. The night before his team dropped a game to Queen's.

Gary Ulrich was the best McGill player on the floor—for Toronto there was nobody in a game that coach John McManus candidly described as a "stinker."

Just Notes . . . Toronto split their weekend . . . it was fatal for them as they are now out of league contention . . . The most noticeable thing about the weekend was the miserable shooting which was apparent in both games.

Queen's Tops In Badminton

The new WAB (Women's Athletic Building) had a pretty busy weekend, playing host (or hostess!) to the women's Intercollegiate badminton tournament, plus basketball and volleyball games vs Queens.

In the badminton, Queens repeated their success of last year, and sailed through the tournament undefeated. The six-way "Round Robin" type tournament the first to be held in the new building, continued all day Friday, and Saturday Morning.

The contest was between Queens and Toronto all the way, with the other universities far behind. Friday morning, Queens and Toronto were tied 6-6, but by the evening Queens had a two point lead, 12-10. They kept their lead and finished Saturday morning with 15 points to Toronto's 12.

The Toronto doubles team, Nancy Lou Campbell and Mary Holden won all their games by a large margin, except against the strong Queen's team of Dorothy McLaughlin, and Hea-

JEAN MACKENZIE (2) and an unidentified Vic player stoop to help Referee Jim Murchie (14) to his feet after a fall while Murchie was officiating the Victoria-Trinity girls' hockey game at the Blue and White Ice Follies Friday night at Varsity Arena. When asked the reason for his fall, Murchie was somewhat incoherent and could not give any reason other than that the ice took a sudden dip in that spot when he skated over it.

Blues Edge Montreal In Lethargic Contest

By GENE GLISKY

University of Toronto Blues shrugged their respective shoulders, and with a hum and a ho decided to remain in contention for the Intercollegiate hockey championship by lethargically condescending to defeat Montreal's sagging Carabins 3-2 in an uneventful hockey clash at Varsity Arena Saturday night.

A comparatively sparse crowd decided to forego Televised spectaculars from Maple Leaf Gardens to groan their sagging Blues to victory. A moment of joy arrived mid-way through the second period when jovial Jim Murchie, down to a trim, mean 215 pounds of galloping dynamite staged an impromptu wrestling exhibition with Montreal's rough and ready Guy Belisle. Both were banished for five minutes for fighting, called fighting for lack of a better word. Howie Li'l B'ar Roth sparked the proceedings when he indulged in a stick poking tussle with Carabin Jean Paquette.

Defenseman Jim Simpson, up from the Intermediates for his first year, with the big team and used in this contest as an alternate defenseman-forward, sparked the Varsity attack with a two goal effort.

Simpson scored his first at 12.04 of the first period while Harry Neale was cooling his emotions in the penalty box. Montreal came back seven seconds later to tie it up on an unassisted goal by Roland Mongeon.

Simpson put Varsity ahead to stay at 8.26 of the second period, assisted by Neale and Murchie, while Murchie fired the winner 21 seconds later on a pass from center John Gatten.

Montreal pulled to within hailing distance early in the final period on a goal by Marcel Landreville, but good defensive play by the Blues rearguard and some excellent antics by Bob Giroux in the Blues' nets salvaged the important victory.

Considering the importance of the contest, Blues did not appear extremely eager to outdo themselves to earn the two points. Carabins, with only twelve men in the lineup appeared both fresher and more win hungry.

Blues outshot Carabins 45-23, held a wide margin in territorial play, but lacked either the knack or perhaps the drive to score more goals.

Swimmers Down McGill Redmen

Cameron Grout (McGill) won three events in the swimming meet between Varsity and McGill Saturday at Hart House, but it was not enough to boost his team to victory, and the Redmen went down 53-41 in a very close meet.

Highlight of the meet was the record breaking performance of Dick Pound of McGill in the 100-yard freestyle. He shattered the old record of 51.4 seconds and now the new mark is 51.1.

Varsity relied on their divers and relay teams for most of their points, these three accounting for 22 of the Blues' score. George Huovinen won the diving in fine style, his score was over double that of the first McGill competitor.

Good news for Varsity coach Marius Van Nooten was the performance of veteran Joe MacInnis in the 200-yards breaststroke. MacInnis finished well in front of his opponents and if he could win the Intercollegiate breaststroke, Toronto would be well on their way to retaining their title.

Grout's three wins came in the 440-yard freestyle, 200-yards individually medley and the 200-yard butterfly.

Dick Pound was the next

Queen's Win Easily Over Blues, 66-47

Last Friday night at Kingston Varsity Blues delighted a full house of Queen's Golden Gaels supporters as they proved again that age-old rule that if you don't score you can't win. Needless to say they lost by the pitiful score of 66-47.

Toronto, playing in a spasmodic manner, seemed to feel that defence is the best offence as they out rebounded the Gaels 58-35.

This win leaves Toronto, who looked like they were going for four in a row over the weekend, in a tie for fourth spot in the six team league.

Queen's stayed with a more orthodox theory and it paid off. Right from the start they took the lead and were never threatened throughout the game.

Frank Tindall, the Queens coach, admitted after the game that it was the best game that his squad had played all year, a most unfortunate fact for Toronto.

Jim McGuire, usually the top scorer for the team, fouled out and failed to get into the double figures.

Boris Wolchuk was Toronto's top scorer hitting for 12 points and Peter Potter the veteran guard and captain of the team hit for 8.

Dennis Bozic was the host team's leading man as he tossed in 21 points.

Coach John McManus tried every trick in the book in an effort to win. From full court presses, zone defence, and man to man defence, all these failed.

This loss finished the Toronto team's chances of doing well in the league this year.

winner with victories in the 100-yard freestyle and the 220-yard freestyle.

Blues' chances for the Intercollegiate title are further strengthened by the expectation that John Gossage, a former stalwart will also be turning out with MacInnis in an effort to give Varsity plenty of depth.

Varsity do not have another meet now until the Intercollegiate championships in London February 27.

Vanier Says U of T Is Unifying Influence

By TERRY BOURKE

The University of Toronto added another distinguished figure to her alumni ranks Monday night—Canada's head of state, the Governor-General.

Before a packed Convocation Hall audience, studded with leaders from the church, military, and political worlds, Major General Georges Philias Vanier received an Honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

U of T Chancellor Jeanneret officially conferred the degree by draping a flowing scarlet toga over the shoulders of the Governor General. Later Mr. Vanier signed the university golden book.

In his convocation address the Governor General stressed that the U of T is playing a major role in channelling French and English-Canadian streams of culture into a pool of stronger national unity.

"The public example the U of T has set in the past has given to French-speaking Canadians, an idea—and this is very salutary—of the efforts that are being made in other parts of Canada to break down any barriers of misconception and ignorance which may have existed and which could hinder the cause of Canadian unity . . ."

"And this is a unity," he added, "which should be based on sincere appreciation of our diverse backgrounds and not on a monolithic conformity."

He pin-pointed the fostering of the study of French culture and language undertaken by Dr. Jeanneret and the establishment of the Gray Lecture-series, as examples of the U of T's contributions in this field.

Mr. Vanier was appointed to the Governor-General post last fall. Before that he had a brilliant and colorful career in the military and diplomatic fields.

He was a founder of the famed Vandoos, the Royal Canadian 22nd Field Regiment. On his retirement from the regiment, he was made an honorary Colonel-in-Chief.

In 1939 he became Canadian ambassador to France. When war broke out he fled across the channel with his wife and family in a pint-sized fishing sloop.

Later he resumed his ambassadorship.

When his new appointment brought him home after a 30-year stay overseas, he said the thing striking him most forcibly was a "much greater ease and lack of self-consciousness in the relationship between the two largest racial groups in Canada."

Speaking in a slow, steady voice, he told the crowd it was his "happy conviction" that in this country "we have come a long way toward being able to rejoice equally in our similarities, which are great, and in our differences which, giving us mutual pleasure, add color and variety to the Canadian scene where it is our good fortune to live together."

He called the British Commonwealth the only example of an empire in the history of man that has not collapsed. He said the structure of the Commonwealth followed the rule of family life.

"The father passes to his children some of his goods and authority and in the end a strong family partnership is created," he said.

Some Like AVR But Some Don't

The opening performance Monday night of the AVR's "Christopher Jones" scored a home run in the hearts of most first nighters—but for others "it never got past first base".

A poll of the audience was taken to see if the advance build-up in radio, television and the newspapers was merited.

Commenting on the effect the show had on him, former Varsity Art, Music, and Drama Editor Elmo Ciprietti said, "I'll feel better after I've knocked back a couple of scotches."

In for the night from the University of Western Ontario student Elspeth King said, "I thought it was very well done for an opening night production."

Commented AVR representative on the Students' Administrative Council, Jim Little, "It was really good. Top notch. Just a little tightening-up and it will be perfect."

UN Co-operation Among Campuses

MONTREAL, Feb. 9 (Special)—Representatives of 17 Canadian universities set up a Students' United Nations Association of Canada at a special conference here Sunday following the University Model United Nations.

The meeting approved a provisional constitution after approving a motion by the University of Toronto delegation that no permanent structure be ratified until at least 25 Canadian universities are represented.

Campus UN Club president Bill Ede and Students' Administrative Council president Walter McLean represented the UofT at the formative meetings of the organization.

The organization is to work with the UN Association of Canada and campus UN clubs to achieve continuity among university programs and co-operation at the high school and university level, delegates said.

It will also attempt to bring universities from coast to coast into participation in the annual University Model UN in Montreal.

Two four-man U of T delegations, representing India and Denmark, went to the model UN Feb. 3-6. Sixty universities from Canada and the United States sent a total of 71 "national" delegations.

U of T delegates successfully entered a resolution about the control of outer space.

The model UN voted to deny Communist China UN membership, heard two Catholic priests, two professors and an Indian diplomat discuss overpopulation and listened to Canadian opposition leader Lester B. Pearson discuss Afro-Asian nations, the Security Council and the need for international co-operation.

We need a girl.

A gorgeous hunk of physical education teacher is coming to town and he's lonely.

If you want to be seen in the company of such a handsome fellow, phone The Varsity and ask for Gellely Ignazio.

You won't get him, because although his name has been connected with The Plot because of his reputation as a ten per cent man, he's washed his hands of the whole deal and everybody connected with it.

And when Ignazio won't touch something with a fork, watch out. Someone's bitter, bitter wormwood will tell you what you want to know.

Protest Bloody Skule's Chariot Racing Result

An Electrical Engineering team yesterday captured the Jerry P. Potts Memorial Trophy, in the annual Engineering Chariot Race.

The race was held to kick off the campus Red Cross blood campaign which began this week and continues until Feb. 29.

The winning team was captained by Jack Slade (I AsSc) assisted by Tony Short (I AsPc) who carried the chariot's wheels around the front campus course. Race officials who approved this practice are under heavy fire.

Rules specify the entry must have two wheels; the "flying saucer" used by the winning team had no attached wheels. Race official Frank Collins (IV SpSc) ruled the entry was satisfactory, but it is expected this ruling will be appealed by the two drivers who placed second and third.

The race was started by the unofficial firing of a gun by an unidentified Meds student on the roof of the Medical Building.

Losing drivers threatened to refer the question of unorthodox equipment and starting procedure to the race convenor and ask for a meeting of the Engineering Society to consider their complaints.

Students Plan Protest French Nuclear Blast

The only thing that can stop Don Roebuck and friends from picketing the French Consulate Friday is a hydrogen bomb.

Roebuck, a third-year University College student, is planning a protest march on the consulate and Toronto City Hall at 3 p.m. Friday to protest the imminent blast of a French H-bomb in the Sahara desert.

"The French Government is so bull-headed that nothing can stop them," Roebuck said last night, but he suggested the demonstration might "stimulate public opinion against bomb tests in general."

Those wishing to join the protest march should assemble in front of University College at 3 p.m. A waiting car filled with demonstrators will shuffle back and fourth to the scene.

Roebuck insisted the demonstration will be "spontaneous" and said it was sponsored by no organization.

In the event that France explodes her bomb near the little town of Raggan in the Sahara before the demonstration, Roebuck said, the demonstration will be cancelled.

Define St. Mike's Type

A definition of a "student of St. Michael's College" recently formulated by the SMC Students' Administrative Council, was questioned at a meeting of the SMC-SAC last night by the past president of the School of Graduate studies.

John J. Snyder objected to the implied jurisdiction by undergraduate students over graduate students. "Graduate students would like to dissociate themselves with undergraduates concerning the social life of the College," Snyder said.

The SAC defined as an SMC student, "any male or female enrolled in or residing at the University of St. Michael's College lay residence who is proceeding towards a degree or Ontario Government certificate."

William Hawken (III SMC) pointed out that the graduate students would now get many of the advantages of being associated with the SMC-SAC, with few of the responsibilities.

After having the matter clarified, Snyder replied that his only reason for bringing up the issue was to be sure that the matter was in the best interests of the graduate students.

U of T Skiers Win Honor In America

The ski team of the University of Toronto came out on top in competitions which attracted over 200 university skiers to the Yale Sno-Ski in the southern Adirondacks last weekend.

Toronto's Pete Richardson (II Meds) took an easy first in the slalom. Third among the men was Mike Parrag (III ApSc). Toronto placed third in the women's competition with Jane Furness just 2.7 seconds behind the winner.

The Outing Club's fast downhill men were disappointed by the cancellation of the downhill race due to dangerous conditions. One Yale man was almost killed in this race last year.

Other activities at the weekend meet included a banquet, singe song and square dances. British-American Oil paid part of the 1,100-mile transportation costs and gave the skiers a warm send-off.

Spectrum

Kenneth McNaught, University of Toronto history professor, yesterday blasted the public attitude to reality, the West's tolerance of governments "worse than Stalin's" and "our Christian society" which has crumbled morally.

He was writing in the first issue of a newsletter, "Spectrum", which was distributed on the U of T campus yesterday morning.

Editor Jack Robertson (III UC) said Spectrum "will appear when there is an issue which deserves comment." The bulletin intends to present "the Christian view."

This edition featured articles on World War III, Africa and the West, and World Refugee Year. One article asked the former chairmen of the U of T history department, Dr. Creighton, who was recently appointed to a Royal Commission on Africa, to play an influential role in the work to produce democratic institutions.

The part that Canada has played in World Refugee Year was called "a trivial gesture" and "a sop to the conscience of the most shallow-minded" in another article.

Students attending the second in a series of lectures on marriage held at Knox college last night were advised to have a physical examination before marriage in order to be "an asset and not a liability."

Dr. James McKellar, obstetrician at Toronto Western Hospital was speaking on "For Success in Any Venture One Needs a Healthy Mind in a Healthy Body."

A knowledge of the other's disabilities may lead to a modification of activity, but this should not prevent any marriage," he said.

"While many couples wish to limit their families in the early years, if one waits till he can afford to have a child, he may never have any," he said.

Dr. McKellar spoke of the rapidly disappearing "concept of intercourse as sinful and just a little less wrong after marriage" as an idea "which is happily declining."

THE VARSITY

Cambridge Climbers Roof — and Social —

by Robert Eddison
Department of Slavic Studies

With all the talk about how to maintain a corporate life on an expanding university campus, it is worth taking a look inside a Cambridge college. Some would say that the life there is too corporate. Each college is surrounded by sturdy iron railings topped by a menacing array of spikes and gut-curling barbs. By midnight the college gates are all closed and, unless he has a late pass, the small-hours-type of undergraduate is left either to doss down in the gutter or risk spifficating himself by climbing in.

He usually chooses to do the latter; yet the number of casualties is surprisingly low. True, there was the Indian who nearly castrated himself by grasping at a spike which then began to revolve. But, on the whole, most get away with the odd scratch. The authorities feel no compunction in installing these diabolical devices; on the contrary, it is felt that they provide for the young a healthy test of initiative. After all, did they not have to cope with the same obstacles in their undergraduate days?

Climbing in Cambridge is also done for the sheer thrill of it. There is even a club which specialises in roof climbing at night. There is hardly a building in Cambridge that has not been climbed by some undergraduate. A book has even been published (anonymously of course) which contains some hair-raising pictures; one of them shows a climber dangling from King's College Chapel in gym shoes. He looks like a mental home patient with his face blotched out to avoid identification.

One of the latest feats has been to put a Morris VIII (a small car, even by English standard) on top of the Senate House. The authorities were in an awful rush to get it down, as honorary degrees were to be conferred there on the following day.

The excitement of climbing is further heightened by the need to avoid the attention of the university internal police force. This consists of Proctors and their "Bulldogs" who have the sordid job of taking down particulars from anyone they catch; "I'm sorry, sir, but it's the regulations." Giving particulars can be rather embarrassing when you are skirting a narrow window ledge a hundred feet above the Bulldog's bowler hat.

The usual penalty is a fine, or confinement to college after 10 p.m. Financially speaking, the latter imposes no great hardship as in many colleges a small fine of ten cents is imposed anyway on anyone coming in after 10 p.m.; so, by being forcibly confined to his college, the fly-by-nighter saves money on 'gate fines.'

These gate fines are assiduously collected by the college porters. The Cambridge porter is a character in his own right. His is a difficult job; he has to maintain discipline, yet at the same time he must show respect to the young gentlemen under his charge. His main (unwritten) function is surely to provide a link with tradition. Many of them have been with the same college for as long as forty years. As their memory for names is highly developed, the chances are that they will remember the habits of an undergraduate's father in alarming detail.

"Ee was a one, Sir, yer Father was. Why, ee used ter 'ave a new girl friend every week." The undergraduate (probably a very proper youth) blushes for his father's peccadilloes. Who shall deny that at Cambridge the sins of the fathers shall not be visited on the son?

Yet this is perhaps only right, as the sons also benefit from the mere fact of their fathers having been at university. This nepotistic tradition is perhaps the strongest at Trinity College; alas, even at Trinity, the fact that one's father was "up" is no longer quite the laissez-passer that it was. The edge of the knife-sharp entry competition has been getting progressively sharper (mainly owing to the bulge); consequently, it is cutting away at much of the old aristocratic tradition. But, as Trinity is the largest college at Cambridge, it will probably be the last citadel to fall.

It's Dufte, Man

from Michael Kater

Starnberg, near Munich, November, 1959

The first thing that will strike the foreign student who enters the city of Munich is the scarcity of rooms. Having arrived from the port of Bremen one night in October, I went straight to the Youth Hostel, where you can sleep (one night only) for 50 pfennigs (about 10c). But that night the place was filled up. So they kindly sent me to a private home, but again the Bavarian Hausfrau could not keep me, as her sofa had already been let out for the night. I stayed in the home of her daughter (married), seven blocks down the street, for one night only. I had to get up at 6 a.m. the next morning since I slept in the living-room.

At the University Room Agency I found a line of 75 students waiting at 7:30 in the morning. Rooms sell for as high as 150 marks a month in this city, in any other town for not more than sixty. I talked to several students who were moving in with their girl-friends under the pretense of being married. A double room costs "only" 160 a month and you can share the cost with your favorite one—if she is willing.

After a week in Munich, ten of us (Americans and Canadians) went to visit a friend in his newly-rented place. We were as quiet as you can be with ten. The next morning our friend had to move. I am now living in a motel in Starnberg, a resort twenty miles south of suburban Munich. I must admit, of course, that Munich is not as Toronto—50 miles long and 20 wide.

Americans are very conspicuous in the university. They seem to be together all the time, and in the Mensa (the student dining-hall) Uncle Sam has usually reserved three large tables for himself. Americans and other foreigners have a talent for acquiring the most astounding samples of Bavarian dialect. I was greeted the other night by a little Japanese, in flawless Bavarian. He had intended to study medicine in the USA, stopped over in Munich, liked it, and stayed there. He is now making preparations to become a Herr Doktor.

I also know a jazz-enthusiastic student from New York, who is a painter, has quite a bit of trouble finding a permanent room, since he is colored, and is now going on a tour of German universities to lecture on "Race Problems in the United States of America".

"I would rather paint, and the topic does not really interest me," he explained, "but, Man, I need the Kohlen." (Kohlen, or coals, is student-slang for money.) To my question, whether he liked it here, he replied: "This is a swingin' town, Man, but the only trouble is, that you get too used to it."

And what a citadel! Above the main gate stands Henry VIII with a broomstick in his hand. (Originally it was a sword, but it broke and some enterprising undergraduate inserted a broomstick in its place which has been there ever since.) Through the gateway is Great Court, about the only "bigger and better" thing the English possess. In fact, so big is it that only the fastest sprinter can get round it while the clock above the chapel strikes midnight.

To the west of Great Court lies the River Cam. This was the river some beautiful young actress plunged into during the summer shooting of the film starring Curt Jurgens and Cambridge life. This scene has to be shot at night, so that the flames which were meant to be consuming the sheet the beautiful young actress was wearing would show up in the dark. But, if she felt cold then, she must have felt pretty hot the following day, as the next scene was supposed to depict a winter take showing some students about to leave for London in a diminutive open car that wouldn't start. The actors were blanketed in mufflers and duffel coats. Everybody else was in shirt sleeves. The final irony was that when the car was meant to start it wouldn't. The actress got annoyed.

The crowd grew larger. After all, it wasn't every day that one saw such a delightful example of desirable femininity. This is not to say that there are no beautiful co-eds at Cambridge. There are; the trouble is that, after the first three weeks, they give up being examples of desirable femininity and become students instead. This is particularly true of the girls living at Girton College, which is three miles out of Cambridge. They bicycle in to lectures come fair weather come foul, once, often twice, a day. In winter they wear thick woolen stockings and it is hard to look feminine through all that.

However, they really come into their own at the famous May Balls (which are in fact held in June). An invitation to a May Ball puts a real cachet on a girl's social success. The bigger colleges give a May Ball each year, the smaller ones every two years. Here the girls swirl round in a riot of diaphanous nylon, woollen stockings forgotten. With any luck, their partner will have laid on a punt for them on the Cam. Once afloat, they will dream along to the strains of a guitar and look very, very wistful. With luck they will kiss near the Bridge of Sighs under one of the weeping willows on the bank. With a little bit more luck the fellow will suggest a night spin to London in his fabulous new sports car.

If he does this the chances are that he will be a member of the socially exclusive Pitt Club. It is the only club in Cambridge that doesn't solicit new members. In fact, an applicant always runs the risk of being "blackballed" by existing members who do not like him. Even if he clears this obstacle, he still has to fill in the questions: "Which school?" in the "right" way. If he hasn't been to a private school his chances of making the club are slim. Once admitted, however, he is heir to all the whims and fancies of an elite society: right down to the suede shoes, the cavalry twill trousers, the leather-elbowed sports coat, the "my deah, how perfectly adorable" affectation of the Oxford accent. He will be heir to Nancy Mitford's U and non-U values, to the upper class distrust of things academic and to its partiality for young debutantes. In short, the new member will probably end up an "heir" tout court.

peace on earth

Sir:

I attended a "Peace Rally", held under the auspices of the "Canadian Peace Congress" at Massey Hall last night (Sunday, February 7th).

Under the guise of peace, the various speakers used the occasion as a political sounding-board in which the meaning of the word "peace" was perverted into a glorification of Russia and China and involved lengthy diatribe on the U.S. influences on Canadian affairs. The result was a distorted mosaic in which the themes of peace and disarmament were hopelessly lost.

One American guest speaker even attempted by relating stories the Russians found amusing about Dulles. The man at least proved he was competent in the medium of the sick joke.

Peace and disarmament should be advanced from a Canadian viewpoint—what sensible action can be taken through our government, what problems will be faced by our economy in the readjustment and how we can solve them, what the many rewards and benefits of peace and disarmament would be for Canadians. Achievement is far more likely through constructive plans than by dire recollections and predictions. Everyone has had access to the film On the Beach and could have seen the effects of nuclear war in picture form.

This film, however, was not mentioned at the "peace" rally; nor were the lengthy discussions on disarmament in the Canadian House of Commons recently or the work done by the U of T Committee for banning nuclear tests. Instead attacks were made on British Imperialism in Africa and funny stories were told about dead men.

Peace, disarmament and friendship among all nations are the goals—NOT Red propaganda.

why, thank you

Sir:

It is my observation that the majority of letters published by your fine journal either serve the purpose of expressing dissatisfaction over some editorial policy or else voice a personal opinion in reference to some current contentious topic. All too frequently are the merits of The Varsity overlooked. It is my purpose to pay tribute to some of these merits.

In the daily coverage of student activities of all kinds, The Varsity keeps the reader in touch with a much wider range of thought and ideas than he could possibly acquire for himself by personally participating in these many and varied phases of student life. In a university as large as ours this is an invaluable service.

Because of the many colleges and faculties that constitute the University of Toronto, and too, because of the myriad sub-groups such as fraternities and other cultural and social organizations, the individual student often finds his loyalties so divided and perhaps even fraught with conflict, that he all too often loses his sense of identity with his alma mater—football games and like chauvinistic-inspired events notwithstanding. The Varsity, by providing something for everyone under the aegis of a unifying organ of dissemination, counteracts these disintegrating influences.

Also deserving of laudation—to get down to more specific features—is the column "Odds and Ends" by Alan Walker. The column is entertaining, interesting, and above all, informative. Moreover, the author demonstrates a remarkable understanding of human nature, which, in a journalist especially, is a rare quality.

For example, such psychological analyses as appeared in reference to "skid talking" are the workings of an astutely observant mind. In addition, I feel that the author's didactic desires to induce others to profit from his own experience—so evident in many of his past columns—should not go without recognition or praise. May he continue his good work!

Joe Wallace is one of those "banned poets" you hear about every so often. He has published three volumes of poetry but none of his poems are in the standard Canadian anthologies. He has outsold every other Canadian poet writing today yet he is seldom, if ever, mentioned in the staid university quarterlies and literary magazines. To put it briefly—Joe Wallace is unknown in his native land.

Perhaps this is because Mr. Wallace is, as he phrases it, a "Communist sympathizer." He is on the wrong side of the political fence to be acceptable. His poetry is written "for the people" and not "for the critics." His collected poems, published two years ago, had to be issued from Moscow. In three languages — Russian, Chinese and English — Mr. Wallace's collection "The Golden Legend" has sold 30,000 copies, in less than two years.

Mr. Wallace is now sixty-nine years of age. He lives in two poorly-heated rooms in an old house at Summerhill Gardens. When I inquired about the possibility of interviewing him I was told that his health was poor. After writing to Wallace I went to visit him one morning. I found him agile and eager to talk. Over cups of coffee and manuscripts of his poetry, surrounded by the curios and mementos of his trips to Iron Curtain countries, I took some notes which might be of interest to readers of The Varsity.

Mr. Wallace is about average height, a bit pale, with graying hair and light-rimmed glasses. His hair and pale complexion show his age, but his trim figure and clear eyes suggest a liveliness which counteracts his increasing years. All in all he struck me as an affable retired insurance salesman — certainly not the literary figure I had half expected to see.

In fact, Wallace is a most unusual literary figure. As I mentioned "The Golden Legend" — his fourth volume, a collection of his previous three — was published two years ago by the Foreign Language Publishing House in Moscow. "This was unique," Mr. Wallace said. "It was the first time that a living poet had been translated into Russian and had been, at the same time, issued in both Russian and his native language." He takes pride in the fact that this Communist honour was bestowed upon a Canadian, even if he is unknown as an author in his native Canada.

Talking with Wallace would automatically impress one with the Marxian concept of the poet's function. "The poet should write and express for the people, the working people, and not the small minority of intellectuals," he said. When I suggested that this criterion would rewrite Canadian literature once and for all, he agreed. Poets like Kenneth Leslie, who once, according to Charles Bruce, received a salary of fifty dollars a week to write a religious poem for a Baptist minister's Sunday sermon; Wilson MacDonald, who was invited by the Russian Writers' Union to visit Moscow; Robert Service, parts of Lampman and Layton — all of these would play a central role in a rewritten Communist version of Canadian poetry.

But Mr. Wallace was not overly concerned with theorizing. He preferred to talk about his past, and what an eventful one that proved to be! His father was a commercial traveller. Wallace was born on October 29, 1890, in Toronto but the family of four soon moved to Nova Scotia. The most interesting thing about his early education was the fact that he spent part of his early youth in St. Patrick's Home, a local reform school, "more because of family trouble than maliciousness."

Wallace's parents were Roman Catholic and he still is. "I've had a difficult time reconciling Catholicism with Communism for others," he said. "But never for myself. I am a very devout Catholic but many people do not see how I can join the two." In any case, Wallace managed to survive two years of St. Francis Xavier University at Antigonish. After an innocent prank backfired he quit before his expulsion was announced.

All My Brothers Are Beautiful

by Joe Wallace

I am the youngest one of them all Growing the fastest but still too small
All of my brothers are straight and tall
Even when they are stooped with toil
All my brothers are beautiful.

Long ago they scattered from home
Some to settle and some to roam
What does it matter field or foam?
All of my brothers are neighbors now
All my brothers are beautiful.

They were robbed wherever they went
Stand and deliver, profit and rent,
Eating the ashes of discontent
Still for all of their bitterness
All my brothers were beautiful.

Caught in the blind man's buff of war
They died and they didn't know what for
For God and Country the gangsters swore
None of my brothers are blindfold now
All my brothers are beautiful.

One has the beauty of golden bars
One has the beauty of night and stars
Varying skins but the very same scars
White or red whatever the shade
All my brothers are beautiful.

I am the rainbow's radiant prism
I am its beauty and symbolism
I am the builder of socialism.
The whole world blossoms as I grow tall
Blossoms for my beautiful brothers and all.

Panic

Verse

The American way of life:
You can get away with murder
if you use a golden knife.

There's panic in the papers
Stocks and bonds are cutting capers
Rich men jumping from skyscrapers.
What's the rumpus all about?
Peace broke out.

It's Dufte Man, continued from page 3

Another American acquaintance is a girl who has spent all her scholarship money of last year and is now staying on, doing little, just studying here and there, without being properly registered at the university. "I like it here," she said, "and till my dad calls me back I'll stick it here, if I can get the money."

What about Canadians in this town? The first one I met while I was on an inspection tour of Munich's largest music store, during the second day in the city. I was fiddling about on a piano in the corner playing some Jazz-tune, when somewhere somebody joined me on guitar. This went on for half an hour without a word spoken. When I looked around, I saw a huge black beard, hideous behind a yellow guitar. The beard was Canadian.

Born in Ottawa and raised in England, Stan Watson was now living in Spain, studying classical guitar and composition under Segovia. To make a living, he was composing music for Spanish films; but he had been with George Shearing at one time.

Then there are six scholarship students here at the university, on exchange, and most of us here for one year. But sometimes we feel lost, representing a rather small minority as compared with the ten, even hundreds, of Americans.

The strangest fellow I met came the other day. I was being introduced to a select group of German and American nihilists ("beatnik" would be too vulgar a term for them, for they claim to be productive, but I must admit that I have seen no sign of it yet). This particular Canadian specie had been here for eight months, spoke no German and refused to learn it. "I am sick of Winnipeg," he exclaimed, "and besides, I have my own philosophy. I see no reason to work." I looked up. "You see," he said, "there is something happening in this town."

He then asked me for 50 marks and a place (my room) to stay over night. "I live off the kindness of my German friends. We are one big Brotherhood. I have never had to worry about a beer yet." He seems to have been the most original ambassador-of-goodwill whom Canada has ever let loose on German soil.

Before I talk about learning and sublime things such as art, theatre and concerts, let me talk about Bier. I have fallen for that stuff. Bavarians say you must drink at least one liter (quarter of one gallon) a day, in order merely to survive. I hope I am safe here, for I have never had less than a liter a day.

Bier is drunk when you get up, when you eat a meal, when you make conversation, or when you go to bed. It is exempt from the Federal Food Tax in Bavaria alone and it is the milk for Bavaria's people. Half a liter costs 13 cents.

I have told nothing of Schwabing yet, the Greenwich of Munich. It used to be great, the Munichers say, but the old spirit is gone. What was the old spirit? You can find the new spirit in the "Bath-tub", the "Little Farmer", the "Cage", the "Moth", or the "Night-owl". Here either American Jazz is King, or Italian "Sweet Music". The bands consist mostly of university students.

Since I have some professional interest in this kind of thing myself (pertaining to the former variety of the music mentioned), I have been turning the cages moderately often. One fellow I met came from Ohio State University (at one time, so I was told, who was studying medicine here for the last eight years), he played a beautiful guitar and a few in the "Night-owl" (Night-owl) every night. He plans to make it his degree.

His first job was with the International Correspondence Schools selling mail-order courses. He hated selling, and still does, so he quit and drifted aimlessly for a while. "The only thing I took seriously at the time were the 'tawdry rhymes' I had been writing for a number of years." He became a partner with his brother who had started the Wallace Advertising Agency in Halifax. He married and had two children before his wife's death in 1927. During these seventeen years he began to take an interest in politics. In 1912 he began working for the Liberal party. Soon, however, he began to write for the Old Worker, a pinkish newspaper in Toronto, and he soon became a lecturer for the Labour cause. He even became a Labour candidate in the city of Halifax, but this was before the slow recession of the party.

In typical capitalistic fashion he was told by his superiors to stop writing and speaking on behalf of the Labour cause. He refused and quit the advertising field. A period of unemployment followed until in 1933 he hitchhiked to Ottawa for a labour conference for the unemployed. The Canadian Labour Defence League, which was backed by the then illegal Communist party, asked him to go to Montreal, where he did organization work for the League. In 1936 he was writing for the socialist newspaper Daily Clarion in Toronto and in 1938 he became unemployed again. This time he was able to live on the small advances he occasionally received from his free-lance lecturing.

The history of a socialist is always one of political injustice and imprisonment, someone once said. In 1941 Wallace was interred for eighteen months in a succession of prisons — Don Jail, Lansdowne Barracks, Petawawa and Hull. The charge was never really clarified but it had to do with "alien opinion." In prison Wallace had to mix freely with condemned Nazis and suspected fascists. On one occasion, because he corrected an officer who had called him a Russian, Wallace was sent to solitary confinement. I asked him what he did for the four weeks. "I wrote poetry on the wall with a nail," he said, still smiling.

While in prison, Wallace met a fellow inmate, Mitch Sago, who liked Wallace's frankly-direct proletarian verse. Sago managed to have some of the prisoners sing Wallace's lyrics. Both were released about 1942 and Sago arranged to back the publication of Wallace's early poetry. The next year Contemporary Publishers in Winnipeg issued 1,500 copies of "Night is Ended", a collection of sixty rhymed poems. Selling at a dollar a copy, the hard-bound volume was sold

ask sac

A few days ago the SAC received a letter from the Human Rights Committee of the Toronto Labor Council, asking them to participate in a deputation to the Metropolitan Council.

The deputation will ask the Metro Council to recommend to the provincial legislature an amendment to the Fair Accommodations Practices Act that would prevent apartment house owners from discriminating on the basis of race or color.

The deputation will also ask for a recommendation to the federal government that federal money be withheld from multiple housing units in which cases of discrimination can be proven.

The SAC has been asked to participate in the deputation in the name of the students of the University of Toronto.

The Human Rights Committee's request will present two problems to the SAC.

Is the amendment which they are seeking justified.

Is helping to realize this amendment the proper business of the SAC?

We believe that the amendment is justified and that helping to see it enacted is one of the most important functions of the SAC.

The Fair Accommodations Practices Act applies at the moment only to such extremely public places as hotels, tourist courts, bars, and dance halls.

The amendment would extend the act to apply to "multiple housing units." This refers most specifically to apartments.

Recently the Committee for Human Rights revealed several instances in which Negroes were refused apartments that were later rented to whites. There is unquestionably need for some type of legislation preventing discrimination in the rental of apartments.

The only question that remains is: To what extent will such legislation infringe on rights of private property.

The amendment proposed refers only to self-contained residences.

It will not apply to rooming houses and dwellings in which there are shared accommodations.

There is no attempt to restrict the variety of ways in which an individual may wish to dispose of his own personal property.

For these reasons then; because racial discrimination is apparent in the rental of apartments, and because the remedy proposed for the situation will not in any way infringe on the rights of private property, we strongly endorse the amendment set forth by the Human Rights Committee.

And we believe that seeking to have the amendment enacted is the direct concern of the Students' Administrative Council.

They are a body of elected representatives authorized to act and to speak on behalf of more than 14,000 students.

A student is more than a member of an academic community. He also is a resident of this city and in the majority of cases a citizen of this country.

And membership in a national community as well as an academic one imposes several obligations.

And perhaps the sternest of these obligations is the obligation to improve the community.

And working to realize in concrete legal form the principles of social justice is the best improvement in the community we can think of.

We therefore urge individual students to express their opinions on this proposal to their SAC representatives.

And we urge the SAC to participate in the deputation to the Metropolitan Council.

It is a civic responsibility and a moral obligation.

revenge is seat

I haven't seen it yet, but I've heard about it from so many people it must be true. The girls at one sorority near the University of Toronto campus (but having nothing to do with it of course) have apparently been saving their copies of The Varsity religiously. They have apparently cut out all my columns. And they have apparently glued them end to end and have hung them in the toilet of their house.

Pretty cute.

according to neitzche, laws are for lesser beings

Sitting in on one of the last rehearsals for Christopher Jones last week, I was offered a beer. This wasn't too unusual, I've been offered them before, but when it happened in the basement of St. Michael's College at 1 a.m. I was naturally a bit surprised. While downing it, I asked where it came from. "Oh," said an 18-year-old actress airily, "the SAC provided it."

And there sure enough, tonight the SAC will be asked to authorize an expenditure of $50.76 for it.

And sure enough, several SAC members are waving around complimentary tickets to "Christopher Jones."

our master's voice

From a space filler in one of the Toronto daily papers I recently learned that "the original Thomas Edison phonograph in 1877 cut sound waves on tinfoil, which lasted for only a few playbacks." This got me thinking about how such a record might be reviewed in an early version of The Holy Downbeat.

The sound reproduction of this new platter isn't the greatest, but the jacket is out of this world. It has Edison sitting cross-legged on the floor of a smoke-filled coffee house playing bongoes. The selections, all oldies, go well under the title of "Sing Along With Tom", but the sound is too far out for most of the cats. I mean either you dig that sort of thing or you don't.

One of the tunes, "Standing Waves in Phase", really threw me for a loss. What can you say about genius like that? He's got a real hard-bop scratch there. Look for this boy's next releases, which include "More Sing Along With Tom" and "Edison Plays Whist."

just reminiscing

Watching a cop tick off an SPS-man for hitchhiking to Skule last week, I was reminded of a similar experience I had several years ago. In those days my group used to travel from one end of Etobicoke to the other with our thumbs, simply because there was no other way to get around. It happened every day. An officer would speed up to us and threaten us with instant death if he caught us again, but it didn't bother anybody.

Things hadn't been going too well for us one week, so my perverted mind, still only in its infancy, came up with an idea to encourage a sense of charity in those on whom I was compelled to depend for rides. I wrapped up one arm in a sling and stood back to watch the results. It worked perfectly for a couple of days, until I ran into my old problem — the law. In true television style the cruiser screeched to a stop beside me. The man in blue got out and ran around the car. He opened the back door and motioned me in.

Right then I thought I'd had it, until he asked me where I wanted to go. I stumbled for a minute, and then told him. He drove me there sympathetically.

Try it, Skulemen. There's one born every minute.

the moment of truth -- when we all panic

There are ominous signs all over the subways lately, showing a woman rushing to get on the train and the conductor blowing his whistle and saying quietly "why take a chance." So what happens if you do take a chance, and get your arm caught in the closing door FROM THE OUTSIDE.

The conductor has long gone back to his paper, and you are trotting along beside the train as it gathers speed. You're puffing a bit now, and yelling, but of course you can't be heard above the roar of the train. A few seconds of this and you're beginning to get a bit worried. That's when you look up and see the end of the platform coming at you at 40 m.p.h. Splat.

Six Characters In Search Of A Director

A comparison between KATY CRUEL and this year's All Varsity Revue, CHRISTOPHER JONES, seems inevitable. Both productions were far more impressive because of their potentialities than because of their actual realisation on stage. But there the similarity ends.

While one felt, in KATY CRUEL, that the direction would never rise to any great heights, it never sank below the level of competence. In CHRISTOPHER JONES, which opened Monday night in Hart House Theatre, one had the uneasy feeling that the whole show was going to fall apart any second. It is a great tribute to the cast that they managed by sheer, sometimes desperate, determination to hold the show together.

Their achievement is the more remarkable because they did it all on their own. They certainly had no help from the director, Barry Callaghan.

Mr. Callaghan, in the space of three hours has managed to perpetrate every sin of which the amateur theatre is capable, and even invented a few of his own. Such obvious faults as slow pacing, completely arbitrary (and wrong) characterizations, little or no attempt at blocking, lack of balance between singers and orchestra, and total ignorance of lighting and scenic design — these are bad enough; when the director stoops to the lowest level of artsy-craftsiness and adds two totally irrelevant scenes to the beginning and end of the play, one begins to despair of the future of Canadian theatre.

The average playgoer would probably attribute most of these mistakes to individuals such as, the stage manager, conductor, set designer, writers, actors, etc., but it is the director's task to integrate the talents of these diversified personalities into a harmonious unit. If this harmony is unrealised, the blame must ultimately be laid at the director's door.

But if Mr. Callaghan bears the responsibility of preventing CHRISTOPHER JONES from being a first-rate production, how much more opprobrium must be levelled at the Students' Administrative Council for placing Mr. Callaghan in this destructive position.

It seems incredible that the SAC, which annually channels so much of the students' fees into these productions, and which is still the laughing stock of the campus for its Hart House fiasco in the last two years, did not even try to get the best director possible this year. For once, the book is worthy of considerate treatment. It has many glaring weaknesses, true enough, but an intelligent director could have overcome most of these flaws, not exaggerated them out of all sensible proportion. The fact that the SAC decided on Mr. Callaghan leads one to conclude that they expected, perhaps even desired, CHRISTOPHER JONES to be a flop. They certainly cannot claim any share in the success which the show undoubtedly achieved.

The cast is exceptionally talented, far more so than the cast of KATY CRUEL, but it is pathetic to see such talent hamstrung at every conceivable opportunity. Only John Morley (a lively, humorous "B.J."), Bryan Neale (the horrific Blifil — the man who can walk through walls), and John Harasti (a boisterous, if unsubtle, Jones) manage to emerge from the general chaos relatively unscathed. But then they, more than anyone else, seem to be left to their own devices.

Marian Metcalfe has obviously been informed by her director that shrewishness is synonymous with coldness, a fact which might explain her almost screeching delivery of A Man's Just A Man. When allowed to become a human being, her performance improves immeasurably. Hers is probably the most neglected talent in the show.

Another talent gone to waste is Ruth Mackenzie as the port secretary. Miss Mackenzie seems to possess unlimited vitality, but she is an undisciplined performer. A lot less mugging in the first office scene would greatly enhance her performance. It would be nice too if the writers expanded her part; we lose sight of her after the second act, and the third act needs a bit more bounce.

Alexander Leggatt contributed a very warm performance as Gus, but almost ruined the whole effect with his passionate, but oh, so 'pointless, declamation against Blifil. Perhaps a quiet, more intense reading would produce happier results.

Musically the show is excellent, though the orchestra tends to drown out the singers, and the amplifying equipment makes Hart House Theatre sound like Maple Leaf Gardens on an exceptionally bad night. Holly Jordan, in one brief number, knows how to put across a song in a way that should be a lesson to the rest of the cast.

More rehearsal for the orchestra would seem to be indicated by the numerous sour notes on opening night. Also, music bridges between the interminable scene changes might help prevent whatever mood has been established in each preceding scene from being entirely dissipated.

The dances, imaginatively choreographed by Cliff Collier, and capably handled by the "corps" are the high point of the musical. Two quibbles: the office party dance should be already in progress as the curtain opens, not start off cold, and the ballet sequence, beautiful as it is, should be cut. It adds nothing to the theme of the play, and only slows down the action more than it already has been.

And although it is a little late in the day to act upon this advice, I would suggest that the whole play could be cut and reshaped to much better advantage. Get rid of that Prologue and Epilogue; they're nothing but the most abominable type of "kitsch" theatre. The subway scene is quite amusing for the first few minutes; after that, it degenerates into repetitive doggerel — like several other scenes, it doesn't seem to know when to end. The scene should either be pruned remorselessly or removed altogether. And "B.J.'s" death should definitely be set up more deliberately. It will still come as a shock in a supposedly satiric musical, but the shock will be infinitely more acceptable.

CHRISTOPHER JONES is a bold experiment for university theatre; along with KATY CRUEL, it has made this year notable for campus musicals. Unfortunately, this year hasn't been notable for campus musical directors.

At Their Best With Les Sylphides

On Saturday evening, the National Ballet proved that they are completely capable of giving a highly polished performance of that most delicate of romantic ballets, Les Sylphides. Their rendering of this ballet which demands a maximum of rhythmic interpretation was almost beyond reproach. The corps de ballet fully met the demands of Chopin's music, interpreting it with the restrained and flowing movement essential to the development of the atmosphere which the ballet is intended to create. They showed a precision and unity of purpose which is seldom found in many of the major companies where each member of the corps is frequently of soloist calibre.

The mood created by the corps in the Nocturne was not however upheld by Sylvia Mason who danced the Valse. Miss Mason gave a mathematically precise and vivacious interpretation which makes her outstanding in the Swan Lake Pas de Trois but which is quite inappropriate to Les Sylphides. The atmosphere of enchantment was recaptured in the later phases of the ballet by Jocelyn Terrell and Jacqueline Iving. In dancing the Mazurka, Prelude and Valse, both these dancers displayed a more subtle understanding of the musical content which they were able to interpret to perfection. Miss Terrell has overcome the ungraininess which has given her difficulty in previous years and now shows promise of becoming a fine classical ballerina. Hans Meister did the best that is possible with what is perhaps the most distressing male lead ever created for the ballet. Some enterprising young choreographer might pay a lasting tribute to Fokine by revising this embarrassing part which can do no less than destroy the mood of an otherwise fine ballet and make the greatest dancer appear ridiculous.

André Howard's ballet, The Mermaid, is based upon Hans Christian Andersen's tale of the mermaid who, falling in love with a prince whom she has rescued from a shipwreck, assumes a pair of legs in order to pursue him on shore. She arrives on the quay to find him celebrating his reunion with his fiancée and as she is unable to persuade him to return her love, she is forced to go back to the sea. Kay Ambrose's settings and her costumes for the prince and his attendants were as effective as her costumes for the mermaids were bad. Admittedly, the task of costuming a mermaid is not an easy one, but this designer has solved the problem with relative success in The Fisherman and His Soul and it is difficult to understand why she has dressed her ballerinas in a facsimile of the trappings of Gypsy Rose Lee.

music from moscow

Last night Maple Leaf Gardens was turned into a concert hall for the Moscow State Symphony Orchestra, their conductor Konstantin Ivanov and Emil Gilels; it would be difficult to decide which of them was the most outstanding.

Unfortunately, their program consisted entirely of Tchaikovsky and I would have preferred hearing a more varied program. It was nonetheless interesting to hear Russians interpreting this very Russian composer who has regrettably been discredited by some "intellectual" musical circles. He has, in fact, been accused of every musical crime possible. It is true that at times he has overworked themes which cannot bear it, but the beauty of most of his themes more than compensates for his fault. If on rare occasions his orchestration is overly lush, more often he overwhelms us with his brilliant treatment of the orchestra. One thing is certain: to play Tchaikovsky well a top-notch group is essential. I do not think that I have ever heard him performed more successfully than last night.

They opened the program with the Fifth Symphony. This work has been overshadowed by the more popular Fourth and Sixth Symphonies; it is an uneven piece, but has some intensely moving moments and powerful climaxes.

The first movement began with a slow introduction in which the "fate" theme is introduced by a clarinet; it is taken up by the winds and woven throughout the entire work. This movement, with its strong emphasis on woodwind writing makes great demands on the wind section. Here the Moscow group was particularly satisfying, providing us with some brilliant oboe, clarinet and bassoon playing.

The second movement gave the strings their opportunity to sing out. In this rather somber movement, they provided a full rich sound and generally excellent group playing. The movement ended with an exciting restatement of the "fate" theme.

In the scherzo Tchaikovsky has given us one of his most delightful waltzes. Its mood is almost melancholy and provides some of his characteristically ornamental writing.

The fourth movement, however, is anything but melancholy. It is an exuberant statement in which the orchestra pulls all the stops; The fate theme is emphatically and optimistically proclaimed. The orchestra's fortissimos made the auditorium quake and their responses to the conductor were instantaneous and effective. Much credit for this high standard must go to conductor Ivanov—he expects a great deal from his orchestra and he gets it.

Emil Gilels with his flawless technique and unfailing musical instinct gave the much-pondered Piano Concerto No. 1 a new aspect. The first movement is really a magnificent musical achievement; it incorporates every resource of the orchestra and some most inventive piano writing. Gilels displayed magnificent control of the keyboard; together with the fine co-operation between piano and orchestra the concerto provided one of the most exciting musical events heard in Toronto in a long time.

The subtitle of the collection is Thoughts in Lyric. Wallace's subjects are brotherhood and love. His technique is often pedestrian, but to a social poet this term is complementary. Here is one poem, How High, How Wide, written while in solitary confinement at Petawawa.

My prison window is not large
Five inches high, six inches wide,

Perhaps seven.

Yet it is large enough to show
The whole unfettered to and fro
Of heaven. How high, how wide is heaven?

Five inches high, six inches wide,

Perhaps seven.

Night Is Ended, which is now a collector's item, contains a short introduction by Margaret Fairley, wife of the Emeritus Professor of German at University College, Barker Fairley. There is also a quotation from a letter of E. J. Pratt, Emeritus Professor of English at Victoria College. In part it reads:
These poems are genuine lyrics and most refreshing to meet nowadays. They are emotionally dynamic without undue spread of sentiment. I like the impact. Wallace is writing out of his life and no one may deny the sense of conviction.

Meanwhile Wallace was not particularly happily employed, nor was he regarded as a poet overnight. In order to aid the war effort he was asked to take a short course in lathe operation at Central High and he then was employed producing submarine parts in a factory.

Not to be intimidated by management, he helped to organize a factory union and he emerged as its president. Engaged, however, in an industry geared to war production, he found himself temporarily unemployed in 1946. He found work as a caretaker at the Muskoka Sanatorium and then at St. Michael's Hospital. He worked with his hands for eight years. "This was not a degrading experience to me," he said, "for I felt, and still feel, that a poet should do manual labour, and he should have a chance to meet all classes of people. He should even live and work with them."

In these clubs German beatniks swing to the sounds of Dixieland or Swing a la Muenchen, or simply sit and stare into their beers. The girls have long, stringy hair like Juliette Greco, tight-fitting jeans and like-fitting sweaters. Men wear black sweaters (only black seems to be allowed) and terribly long hair which they comb forward in a very strange fashion, so that it falls into their eyes.

Some of them look like newly-born birds. They call this hair-style "Cesar-cut", and I don't like it, but it is in high fashion here. I think Elvis has missed something.

They dance until three or four in the morning, and then they sling their blonde beachicks (and how blonde) over their Vespa or Goggo and off they go. Don't ask me where.

Yes, Schwabing is dufte. (You will not find dufte in any dictionary. It means "it swings, man"; the word comes from "duftig" or nice-smelling and was perverted to "dufte" in Berlin, the centre of German culture "Kultur" and originality "Originalitaet".)

So far, I have not said anything about serious things going on here. But I think I shall write of learning and the arts in my next letter. In the mean time this is Michael (Michel) from Muenchen, saying ish magazine now defunct. published All My Brothers for one dollar a copy. A large soft covered collection of twenty-three lyrics, its 850 copies were soon sold out. The title poem is reprinted on this page and shows a straight-forward lyric beauty and an almost naively beautiful statement of theme. The poem was meant, like many of the others, to be set to music and sung. Making Hay is another such lyric, which was finally recorded by the Travelers on a Hallmark label. The Freckled Girl is one of Wallace's most popular poems, appearing in this collection for the first time. All My Brothers contains, in addition, a number of political satires, of which Panic is a good example.

A year after its appearance, Wallace was invited to visit Roumania, Poland and Hungary by a cross-cultural group in the Soviet Union. This was his first trip abroad and he returned with a favourable impression of the "Russian experiment." "All this nonsense in the newspapers about slavery has distorted the truth," he explained. "The rich were simply told to behave, and to produce for the good of the people. That was all that happened."

On his return Wallace retired on some annuities he had managed to accumulate. He went on the occasional speaking tour for the Communist Party, reading his poetry, discussing his politics and impressions of Europe. In 1956 New Frontiers again published a collection Hi, Sister, Hi Brother!, a paper-bound edition of forty-nine poems. Two thousand copies were printed at a dollar each. This is the only book by Wallace still in print (and it is still available at the Midtown Book Store).

Meanwhile Russian and Chinese magazines were beginning to translate Wallace's poetry and publish it in their literary magazines. In December of 1956 he was invited, as was Wilson MacDonald about the same time, to visit these two countries. His entire trip was paid for by the Writers' Union. He returned in September of 1957 more favourably impressed than ever.

"After forty years of misrepresentation in newspapers," he explained, "it took Sputnik to shock the western world. Even western politicians had begun to believe the lies they had fed on so long. Communism has made such tremendous strides in Europe and Asia that the small setback it has received in Canada will only speed socialism on faster. The future of Canada belongs to Communism."

As a result of the trip, The Golden Legend appeared in 1958. Wallace's selected poems totalled a hundred pages, bound in boards, selling in Russia for the equivalent of thirty-five cents. (A copy is in the University Library.) There is a Russian introduction and a set of Russian notes at the end of the volume. Wallace contributed a four-page preface, outlining his life and philosophy. The Golden Legend, printed in two colours, contains 106 poems from his previous volumes. Ten thousand copies were printed in English, 10,000 in Russian and 10,000 in Chinese. "A most rewarding experience," he said, "was to receive letters from remote places in China and Europe on the same day, from people who have read my work and appreciated it."

Mr. Wallace began to discuss his impressions of Communism. "The Russians have no unemployment problem," he explained. "Their production is not geared to war production and, since their plants are already working to full capacity, they stand to gain nothing by an imperial act of aggression. The former owner of a Chinese silk factory told me everyone was better off, including himself, now that there was no talk of the profit motive."

"Actually there is no fear among the Russians of secret police. People on all social levels mix freely. Since tipping is prohibitive and prices are fixed, human beings can carry out the transactions of everyday life in a human fashion. No one is reduced to a mere figure in a production machine. Artists are able to respond in a spontaneous fashion to the beauty around them. I wrote more and better lyrics on the continent than I do here because of the friendliness of the people and their happy way of life."

"Canada is not free. Everyone fears for his job, particularly the writers. Since they cannot support themselves by their pen, they all hope to become respectable professors of English at our universities. So they all write for themselves, for their editors and critics—never for the people who should be reading them. In Russia, on the other hand, writers are highly paid and respected in their own right. Similarly among the proletariat—here a worker cannot get a job unless he toes the right political line; there, in Russia, every man is born with the right to a job, regardless of his political opinion."

At this point in the discussion, Mr. Wallace's pet budgie bird descended on my head and began to nip at my neck. "His name's Lennie," said Mr. Wallace, as if in explanation of his action. Then I remembered that Northrop Frye, Principal of Victoria College, had mentioned Wallace's work in one issue of The University of Toronto Quarterly. I asked him what he thought of Frye and Frye's remark that Wallace's work suggested to him a competent poet deliberately indulging in harmless doggerel, thereby betraying his talent. "Who's Northrop Frye?" was his only reply.

With that I began to leave and Wallace showed me the many gifts he had received in China and Russia. He was particularly proud of his large collection of ostrich fans and the two mammoth porcelain stools from China. "All throughout my trip local groups wanted to print original poems. I always had them to give, and they wanted to pay me for them. But I didn't feel I should accept money. Actually, I should have, because every one of them insisted instead that I take a gift along with me to Canada." He then showed me copies of Chinese and Russian literary magazines which were still printing his poems. "I can point out to you my poems in the Russian magazines," he said, "because I recognize my name in Russian. But in the Chinese magazines, I have no idea where they are."

With that he sat down and finished the game of solitaire he had played throughout the interview. "Aren't you going to ask me what game I'm playing?" he said quickly. I explained that I didn't know the first thing about cards but that I thought he was playing ordinary solitaire. What I hadn't noticed was that all the cards were face-up.

"This is a new game I've perfected," he said. "You play it just like solitaire except that with the cards right side up it is more interesting. The game isn't all chance then." He paused. "I often write short verses while I play," he continued. "It helps me to relax. I don't really care if anyone remembers me as a poet. But I wish that people would take note of my game of solitaire, because it's better than the standard game!"

Girl's Volleyball Warmup . . . .

Toronto's loss to Queen's in the W men's Intercollegiate badminton tournament last weekend didn't daunt the spirits of the basketball teams.

Both the Toronto Intermediate and Senior girls' teams won their games. The Intermediate played their best game all year—clean and fast. Jane Dunston and petite, but speedy Shirley Quan were the top scorers, with 12, and 10 points respectively.

The senior game was fast but not quite so clean—a total of 61 fouls were committed. However, many of the fouls were due to close calling and extremely hard diving.

The final score was 54-35 for Toronto. Marg Ann White, with her dead-on jump shot scored 21 points. As usual, the forward line of Joy Mahood, Marg Ann White, and Judy Smith played in pro-style!

Queen's and Toronto volleyball teams played a warm-up match for the Intercollegiate Tournament at McGill this weekend. Queen's showed pretty high spirits in spite of their nine-hour bus trip to Toronto.

They eked out a victory over both the Toronto Intermediate and Senior teams, in two very close matches. The Seniors fell, 14-16, 14-17, but showed a vast improvement in play and tactics since their last game with Western.

Phyllis Hart, a first year PHE stud at, although slow getting started, executed some powerful spikes, as did "D-D" Fitzroy, also of Phys. ed. Queen's blocking was exceptional, however, and many good plays by Toronto failed to gain points.

The team looks good. When Viliu Kanep has recovered from her leg injury, the team should have the spirit combined with their skill to win the Intercollegiate Tournament.

We hope they will—good luck to them!

Turk And Snider Win Indoor Track

Mike Turk's record time for the Junior three-quarter mile run highlighted last night's chapter of the University Indoor Championship Meet in Hart House. Victoria took the honours in the other races as perennial winner Jim Snider captured the Senior three-quarter mile and helped his relay team to victory over four other entries.

Vic are pulling further away from the field in the points race, despite Turk's stranglehold on the Junior events. After five weeks Vic have a 15 point lead over UC and look to be winners.

Results of University Championship Track Meet:

Senior three-quarter mile run—1. Jim Snider, vic. Time 3:16.8; 2. Jim Griffin, trib; 3. Pete Watson, vic; 4. Nels Van Loon, uc.

Junior three-quarter mile run—1. Mike Turk, uc. Time 3:29.9—Record. 2. Ed LaHay, uc; 3. Gerry Stewart, vic; 4. George Jaszhke, vic 4 by 2-lap relay: 1. Vic (Al Brereton, Bill Dauphinee, Pete Watson, Jim Snider) Time 2:31.5. 2. SMC; 3. SPS; 4. UC.

Point standing after five weeks of competition vic 61, uc 46, smc 26½, meds 20, trib 18, sps 16½, pharm 9.

What the Critics Say About SAC's Musical

Christopher Jones

Hart House Theatre — February 8-13 — 8.30 p.m.

"... Christopher Jones is worth doing and worth seeing. "It has some lively numbers, some bright lines, an energetic and handsome cast and a kind of rough-hewn honesty in presentation which gives it an edge, in my book, over many slicker college shows."

—MAVOR MOORE, Telegram

"Christopher Jones... follows a promising line... Marrying the boss's daughter is the main concern of Christopher Jones, not the accidental happy ending it used to be in musical comedies."

"James Doris, who has composed its attractive and happily melodic score, shows he is aware of current trends in musicals..."

—HERBERT WHITTAKER, Globe and Mail

"The basic theme of the 'executive jungle' is a worthwhile idea... I could believe in most of Mr. Mattole's dialog..."

"Of the performers I liked John Morley the best — very consistent in his characterization. John Harasti, in the title role, and Bryan Neale, as the blackest of villains, were also believable."

—BLAİK KIRBY, Toronto Daily Star

TWO PLAYERS Varsity coach Jack Kennedy will be expecting much of are Bob Giroux (left) and Howie Roth. Giroux is the league's leading goaltender at present, while Roth is the team's leading goal getter. He has two hat-tricks to his credit.

Blues Face Destiny In Weekend Games

Varsity hockey Blues will meet their collective destinies this weekend when they travel to Quebec for a vital two game stand against the University of Laval on Friday night and the University of Montreal the next evening.

The situation is this:

Varsity trail the Laval squad by eight points with three games in hand. Although one of those games is a four-pointer, a clean sweep would still leave Varsity in a tie with the Rouge-et-Or.

A loss at any time means finis, and the end of a long winning streak for the proud Blues. In plain cold terms, Varsity cannot afford to lose another game. They must win them all, and most of all, must take their two remaining games with Laval.

A win Friday would be a booster for moral, and would shift a good deal of the pressure onto the first place team.

Coach Jack Kennedy was anything but happy after last Saturday's "effort" against Montreal. On that showing, Laval are likely to run Varsity right back to Toronto on the short end of a big score.

But all is not lost, Blues still have a few aces up their sleeves. Harry Neale will probably rise to the occasion and play the solid hockey we have come to accept as routine from him.

The "big" line of Murchie-Roth-Gatten has been dormant for four games now and must be ready for an explosion that will mean victory for Blues.

Bob Giroux is still the best goalie in the league.

Kennedy summed it up best when he said, "If we're on, we're in; if not, well . . ."

—DG

in the 135 lb. weight. There will be plenty of opposition in his class as Almquist of Queen's, the defending champion, is entered again.

The Blues are looking for a good performance from first year man Jim McManus. At 150 lbs. he has shown promise in exhibition bouts. Another newcomer to the team is 175 lb. Emmett Neary who will face a tough opponent in Ed Schamerhorn of Queen's. Paul Wilton in the 145 lb. class is an experienced performer for the Blues as are Velasquez Spring at 140 lbs. and Fred Johnstone at 155.

Although many of the Toronto squad are untried in championship competition, Coach Canzano has them in excellent condition and he expects them to give a good account of themselves.

Boxers Favored To Win Intercollegiate

Coach Tony Canzano will take a nine man squad of Toronto boxers to McGill University this weekend to compete in the Intercollegiate Championships which will be held on Friday and Saturday evenings, February 12th and 13th. The Blues are defending college champions but have only one titleholder left to send in against Queen's and McGill representatives. Art Vachon will defend his 130 lb. crown which he won last year. He will be favoured to win again this year.

Bob Dodds now fighting 165 lbs. was a senior finalist in the 155 lb. class last season as was Mike Chykaluk in the heavy-weight. Ozzie Hutchison, a former McGill boxer, ineligible last year because of the transfer rule, will wear Toronto colours

by noel bates

Some of you may have noted recently the furor raised over veteran defenceman Roger Cote. This player was recently involved in an ice accident with a 17 year old player who had just entered the Junior 'A' ranks. The "clean check" resulted in a concussion to the boy and a five minute penalty to Cote.

Mr. Stafford Smythe, Co-owner of Toronto Marlboro Hockey Club, Maple Leaf Gardens.

Dear Staff,

Having read the following in a local newspaper, Sir, I could not help but write you.

Q:—"Is he (Cote) a credit to hockey?"

Smythe:—"Yes he has drawn more people into the rinks than any other player."

Staff, how could you! After your Dad had worked so hard to keep it a secret. When will you learn that it's not the money your interested in; it's only the game.

How could you allow the Star to print in bold letters:

IS ROGER COTE AS BAD AS THEY SAY?

and then urge out your paying fans to see this 'hard rock' defenceman in action.

After all, Staff, this is not promoting a good, clean, healthy attitude towards sports and that's what your really interested in, aren't you?

The coach of a pro team once said: "This is a contact sport and it's played for pay, by huge, finely-trained animals. Rough play is what every coach wants."

"You get penalties when your caught and you score when your not."

Oh but I'm sorry Staff your teams' players aren't like that are they? I mean the Marlies are amateurs!

I agree with you, it seems reasonable that for a young man who chases a piece of rubber around a rink for about an hour each day and needs living expenses of about $50 a week the label of 'professional' is unfair!

Well anyway Staff, enough of my rambling. It's good to see that you disobeyed your old man again, and let the secret out that your interest is not in the sport but in the money.

If you want a hint though, next time you disobey him why not say something like this:—

Smythes—"Aww come on fellows, Cote's good for the gate receipts. I'm going to go out of business if he doesn't keep up the rough stuff."

Yours sincerely,
Noel Bates

Blues Seek Revenge On Mac Marauders

Hart House will be bustling with activity on Friday night when the University combines with the Physical and Health Education Alumni Association to present a special Athletic Night.

The major event of the evening will be the basketball game at 8.30 which sees the Varsity Blues taking on the McMaster Marauders.

There will be a preliminary game which precedes the big one, and it sees Port Credit and North Toronto Collegiates (both leading their respective leagues) in action.

Gymnastics will also be on the list of events. It will be an important meet for the Intercollegiate Championships will be decided as teams from Toronto and McGill will be the main competitors.

Following this there will be an exhibition of Estonian Folk Dancing. All this takes place in the upper gymnasium.

In the pool we see a display of ornamental swimming as performed by the girls from Oakwood Collegiate. In addition there will be fancy diving displays and for all those who want to learn how to paddle a canoe there will be a demonstration in an event that will certainly end upsidside down.

Fencing is the last of the events in the Athletic field. Again there will be a championship decided. Varsity will have a strong team to foil up the works.

There will be a dance that follows the game in the main gymnasium.

Science Professor Denies Scientists' Morals Special

A University of Toronto professor last night denied the moral responsibility of scientists to society.

Dr. D. G. Ivey of the Physics Department was guest speaker at a Hart House debate on "The Responsibility of the Scientist is Solely to Science."

Prof. Ivey said it was scientists as individuals who have a moral duty to mankind. "As individuals, they have the same status as ordinary citizens, no more and no less," he said.

Dr. Ivey used physicist Edward Teller and chemist Linus Pauling as examples of diametrically opposed scientific opinions: "You can't lump scientists together as a group," he said.

Prof. Ivey defined scientific freedom as "the right to think at random" and to check the validity of "wild guesses" by experiment.

"In this sense the individuality of the scientist cannot be applied to government," he said. "Science deals with things, not people."

First speaker for the Ayes, G. M. White (ApSc III), claimed there is a mistaken idea the scientist has responsibility.

"It was this mistake that that led to the persecution of Galileo, Einstein, and Oppenheimer," he said.

D. R. M. Jones (ApSc III), first Noes speaker, said the motion was indicative of the modern world. "Scientists have the power of life and death," he said, "and in science there is no innate idea of good and evil, of right and wrong."

W. J. Morris, U of T graduate in Anthropology, and second speaker for the Ayes, spoke about "the eminent tranquility of assumed superiority" under which may scientists labor.

Final Noes speaker, P. T. Saunders (III UC), insisted that scientists be held morally responsible for their work. "Scientists are not superhuman," he said, "but they do have greater knowledge (of some things) than the average citizen."

The resolution was defeated, 51-39.

Karvanague Disaffiliates

Start New Beat Agency

A corporation formed by two Trinity College students announced yesterday that University of Toronto students will no longer be limited to renting beatniks as special party guests.

John Boundy and Bev Williams said they are annoyed by the "crassly commercialistic" renting of disaffiliated Rie Karvanague and now have a large number of "individual individuals" for hire.

"It originally started when I decided to rent out Bev," Boundy said last night, "but we expanded it because we felt beatniks are things of the present."

Their list of "individuals" includes "a girl with bathroom eyes who wears blue leotards and a green dress, a Spanish-speaking dancer, a saint and a female theology student."

The last on the list is available only for seminarian parties. Fees for the personalities range from 02 for a pseudo-beatnik to $300 for a New York City actor.

The authenticity of all persons rented is personally guaranteed by Boundy. "It's all strictly legal and purely moral," he said.

Gellellyn Ignatzio, well-known U of T 10-percent man and Rie Karvanague's manager, has added his name to the list of persons available for rent. Rie refused to join the new organization.

Twenty-five percent of the fees collected goes to the corporation, consisting of Miss Williams and Boundy.

Surprise, Surprise

Students Blast Bookstore

There are too many cook books, real ones, in the University of Toronto bookstore, according to a brief presented at Wednesday's Students' Administrative Council Meeting.

Mike Sherman, mandated by University College, told the council the store is filled with "such stalwarts as The Child's Book of Trees and Cook Book Display." He said the store was "totally inefficient."

"There's big trouble in the bookstore," Sherman said, and a committee will be authorized to investigate the complaints.

The brief says the purpose of the University bookstore is to "provide the widest possible selection of academic books at the lowest possible prices."

It complained that while the Victoria College bookstore offers a 10 per cent discount to students, there is no discount at the U of T store.

A case was cited in the brief. A student said until the last week in January, the price of Principles of Phase Equilibria was $5.25. He said the book was assigned to a course in February, and that the price promptly rose to $6.30. The student says he bought the book at $6.30 and has the sales slip to prove it.

Two weeks later, when most of the students in the course had bought the book, the price dropped back to $5.25.

The brief complains that what is "out of stock or out of print according to one clerk is readily available from another."

Michael Sole (II UC) claims he ordered a copy of Inorganic Chemistry several weeks ago, which was "not available." Two weeks later he saw the book in the bookstore, and bought it. A week after that he received a notice saying the book was out of print.

Sole noted that a larger book by the same author, General and Inorganic Chemistry, was then available. It costs twice as much.

Dave Rosner (II UC) claims he bought the inexpensive book a week later from the publisher, who told him it was still in print.

Tim Thompson (III UC) eventually got the book he ordered, but what are you going to do with two copies? He ordered the book in October. A month later he gave up and bought it elsewhere.

Late last month he got a little notice from the bookstore. His book is in, and will be please come and pick it up.

Glen Palmer (III UC) ordered a book, and after two weeks went in to encourage the bookstore staff.

The clerk "bawled me out" for coming in without the slip and told him the book was not in. Palmer went to another clerk, asked for the book, and she dug it out of the stock room.

As an anti-climax, three days later he received the customary note from the bookstore. The book was in too.

The brief raised a lot of questions, such as "why does it take two weeks for a book to arrive from Spadina Ave.?" and "why do some people never receive any notification of books the ordered?"

Another source of complaint was laboratory books. These are bound volumes containing 100 blank sheets of paper. Every science student uses about three of these every year.

The books cost $1.90. Exam papers came under the axe too.

Under the old system, three or four students could band together and buy a complete set (Continued on Page 6)

Prayer

The University of Toronto will join with students in 57 countries this Sunday for the observance of the World Day of Prayer for Students.

Organized through the World Christian Federation, of which the campus Student Christian Movement is a member, the U of T service will be held in the Great Hall of Hart House at 11 a.m.

The preacher at this service will be the Rev. Allan M. McLachlin, general secretary of the Toronto SCM for the past four years. He is widely respected among staff and students for his leadership work on campus.

Mr. McLachlin's topic will be "Fanaticism." The Hart House Glee Club under the direction of Rowland Pack will sing an anthem and lead in the worship.

unrussrace

Education should be considered as a Canadian problem and not as a race with the Soviet Union, said Dr. E. W. R. Steacie, president of the National Research Council of Canada on Wednesday.

Dr. Steacie was speaking at the official opening of the $2,500,000 physics and mathematics building at the University of Waterloo in Waterloo, Ont.

"Canadian university graduates should not be considered more units of military armament," he said. "The whole manpower concept is quite foreign to the real purpose of a university."

Open House

One of the few buildings already in use among those going up in the current University of Toronto expansion campaign will be scene of an open house this weekend.

The Dentistry Faculty will show off its new building at 124 Edward St., just south of the Sick Children's Hospital and a block east of University Ave.

Students will be seen doing work on models — but not people — in displays designed to illustrate the dental curriculum from the pre-dental year right through to fourth-year dentistry.

Staff and students are invited 1-6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday Feb. 13-14. The building will also be visited by high school students Saturday and friends and relatives of dental students Sunday.

Officials connected with "Christopher Jones", this year's All-Varsity Revue, announced last night that only a few seats remain for tonight's and Saturday evening's closing performances.

Good houses were seen on Monday and Tuesday and the theatre was almost sold out on Wednesday and Thursday evenings.

Tickets are available at the Hart House box office at $1.25. Performances are at 8:30 p.m.

Ross Requests Schooling Study

Dr. Murray G. Ross, president of York University, yesterday proposed that a board of advisors be set up to examine overall needs of higher education in Ontario.

The board would be made up of leading educational authorities, and would make recommendations to governments and universities.

As an example of one possible use of the board he suggested one university might decide it needs a medical school. Any of the other universities might decide it also needs a medical school, he said. "If all did so, we might have too many medical schools," he said. The board could see the entire situation and recommend the establishment of medical schools where needed.

In an address to the Empire Club of Toronto yesterday, Dr. Ross stressed that York, whose classes start next fall, will provide a general and liberal education before specialization.

"Far too many university departments have never adjusted to the modern world. They exist as beautiful monuments to a way of life that has disappeared," he said.

The new university will also try to provide variety in its courses he said. "Canadian universities today . . . almost all follow the same design, providing much the same pattern of courses in arts and science, and endlessly duplicating their professional schools. This is true in Canada as a whole; it is particularly true in Toronto."

He hoped the vigor and freshness of York's views would occasionally influence the University of Toronto. "We would gain by finding ourselves in a friendly competition for excellence with the University of Toronto," he said.

Tar Heel Hangover

The Tar Heels have gone home, and are now recuperating in various infirmaries along the route back to North Carolina.

Weekends Chairman Virginia Lomax told the Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night, "They aren't usually used to living the way we do up here".

Miss Lomax said when the group of students from the University of North Carolina, at U of T for exchange weekend Jan. 29-31, got home, several of them headed straight for the infirmary.

"Every stop they made on the way back somebody got sick," she said.

Miss Lomax said the Tar Heels just didn't have the ability to hold their liquor that the U of T students obviously had.

The Last of the Big Spenders

The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday refused to accept some entries in SAC President Walter McLean's expense account.

At the tenth meeting of the Finance Commission last Thursday, a motion was passed refusing to accept McLean's bill for two Hart House Theater Subscriptions and a transportation fee to the Caledon weekend earlier this year.

The total refused amount which McLean will have to pay is $14.25.

The Finance Commission also said a bill of $75 entered for meals should have been accompanied by "specific dates and prices."

Regarding the Caledon expenditure of $4.25, the commission said since all other members had paid their own way, it was only fair that the President should also pay his own expenses for the trip.

Council member Ed Osler suggested several McLean's expenses appeared too high, and gave as an example a bill of $25 for "meals, missed and entertainment, in UBC, of the UBC President."

McLean defended his expense account, saying he was under the impression that his account was given to him "to do as he thought best and to get around campus as the Council representative."

That's How The Cookie Crumbles

This was a key motion Wednesday night at the Students' Administrative Council meeting.

The Students' Administrative Council acknowledges the fact that man cannot live by bread alone, and whereas this council realizes that variety is the spice of life, and whereas this council feels that there can never be too much of a good thing, and whereas a survey conducted by certain dutiful council members over the past 13 weeks has proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that chocolate chip cookies are the overwhelming favorite of the council;

be it therefore resolved that the duly established investigating committee, under the capable leadership of Messrs O'Rourke and Little investigate the possibility of increasing the proportion of chocolate chip cookies offered at council meetings and that failing this, in any case, raisin cookies be stricken from the record.

Moved by Mike Sherman
Seconded by Carol Jones
The motion was passed with two opposing votes, O'Rourke and Little.

Runneth Over

OTTAWA (CUP)—Two petitions for the control of nuclear weapons were presented to Prime Minister Diefenbaker this week by delegations from Carleton College and the University of Western Ontario.

Circulated by two professors, the Carleton petition was signed by more than one-half of the faculty. Carleton students did not sign the petition, but there is another more strongly worded petition being prepared by some students and faculty.

At Western, petitioners, 700 students and faculty, asked that Canada proclaim it prefers not to accept independent control of nuclear warheads, no matter where located. The petition pointed out an accident or miscalculation may start a war, if too many nations are given individual control.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (University Press Service)—the end of an era of discrimination seems to be in sight for the Rutgers University fraternity system.

In a campaign of education and tolerance, campus leaders have helped end discrimination at three more fraternities this year, making over half the Rutgers fraternity system integrated.

Initiating the educational program, students' council president Harry Morgan spoke to an assembly of freshmen urging them not to be afraid "to break the discrimination barrier", and join one of the houses which is trying to integrate. He said the solution to fraternity discrimination would be the attitude of the rushees toward segregation.

OTTAWA (CUP)—The newly-elected president of the Progressive Conservative Student Federation has called for the expansion of party activities in the nation's high schools.

Robert Amaron, studying for his MA in political science at McGill University, said yesterday that he is beginning to work at once to organize party clubs in the Maritime high schools. If successful the federation will move across Canada with the scheme.

Religious Presumption

by Barry Zimmerman

A visiting American Humanist yesterday warned members of the University of Toronto Humanist Guild against presuming to be God and speaking for God.

Mr. George Von Hilsheimer, counselor of the American Humanist Organization, spoke on "A Missionary Humanism?" in University College.

"The whole credo of Humanism is to reaffirm a man's belief in his individuality and his right to choose his own creed," he said.

During a discussion period, Mr. Hilsheimer was asked if he believed in God, and he answered, "If the Christian conception of God is correct I will have to joyfully deny Him. Any good man in these circumstances will choose to go to hell."

"The whole message of Christianity is that there is only one way to validity," he said. "One either accepts Jesus or rejects him. I willfully reject him. I cannot see that Ghandi is roasting in Hell simply because his background and heritage does not allow him to accept Christ."

St. Michael's College debaters took no halfway measures in defeating the resolution "A better half is better than none" in the Victoria College Debating Parliament last night.

A Senate Club team threw out the resolution by a 25-15 vote with two abstentions, both women.

"A better half is either a husband or a wife," said Mary Fraser (IV Vic), first speaker for the government. "For our purpose, then, the resolution becomes, 'A husband occasionally so used is better than none,' she said.

CCF

"The best political party in the world is useless without good local organization," Mr. Bill Sefton, head of the political education committee for the Ontario Federation of Labor, told students last night.

Speaking to the University of Toronto CCF Club Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Sefton told members that only well organized constituencies can offset the fact that those opposing the New Party control the means of communication in our country.

"Here's real proof that Canadians are thrifty"

One of those fascinating bits of information that is produced by research came to me the other day: A study has revealed that the average Canadian smokes his cigarettes a quarter of an inch shorter than his counterpart in the United States. Why? Better tobacco? Higher cigarette tax? Personally, I believe it's because the average Canadian is determined to get his money's worth.

In spite of the free-wheeling philosophy of our times, with Canada's rapid economic growth and the rise in personal income, the virtues of thrift and a strong sense of values remain part of our national character. Most Canadians have worked hard themselves for the good things they now enjoy . . . and they are not casual about them yet.

This attitude is evident when Canadians stop to choose an insurance plan. They demand their money's worth . . . and get it, from North American Life and Casualty. Our fast-growing family of policy holders is confident that its choices have been wise. Check for yourself. Our NALAC representative will give you all the evidence you need.

bombdeath

Today at 3.15 a group of students will demonstrate against the French bomb test scheduled for sometime this week.

Some weeks ago the CBC radio series Project 60 carried a program on the effects of fallout. In a quiet, methodical way this program made two devastating points:

1) that each and every nuclear bomb tested causes death and physical damage to people numbered in the hundreds of thousands.

2) that a great many of the men who are in a position to give scientific advice to those who test these bombs are blatantly callous to such human destruction as these bombs cause. Again and again it was suggested that 200,000 people were only .0001 of the world's population and were therefore negligible.

For us there are two inevitable conclusions from even the slightest chance that these facts are true. The tests must be stopped and we must stop them.

The group attempting to stop the French tests today will assemble at 3 p.m. in front of University College. They will move from there in two groups, one to City Hall, the other to the French Consulate at 185 Bay Street.

There is no middle road between these demonstrators and the people who believe that a bit of mutilation is all right under certain circumstances.

If you do not believe this, be with the demonstrators this afternoon.

VE3UOT

Ed Barrick flipped a string of switches.

The huge, electronic jungle of radio equipment sitting in front of him whined to life, buzzing and beeping.

A light flashed on the panel. He pressed the mike button.

"Calling VE-5 US, VE-5 US, VE-5 US, Victor, Echo, number five, united, sugar. Here is VE-3 U O T at the University of Toronto. VE-3 U O T calling VE-5 US and VE-3 U O T is standing by for VE-5 US."

The set cried some more.

Then a voice crackled through the receiver. Its origin: 2,000 miles away on Canada's West Coast at the University of British Columbia. The voice: that of a fellow student.

"VE-3 U O T, calling VE-3 U O T. Here is VE-5 US. Read you. How's the weather there?"

Ed smiled. "Like Toronto weather always is, pretty rotten." Conversation began.

For Barrick and 50 other U of T students, the four corners of the earth are literally at their fingertips.

They're members of the U of T Amateur Radio Club.

People call them hams.

And talking with an eskimo at the North Pole, a kaffir in India, a soldier in Timbuctoo, a weather agent in Outer Mongolia, or you name it, can be a routine matter.

Club headquarters are located at the North End of Hart House in a reconverted tool shed.

The 'shack', as hams label it, is the size of a large kitchen nook. It's crowded when six people are in it. The walls are grass green, steam pipes line the ceiling, and a 'Playboy' picture of a semi-nude woman hangs on a partition near a cluttered bulletin board.

Three pint-sized, shanty houses three expensive pieces of equipment; a radio transmitter, a thunderbolt linear amplifier, and a receiver.

High above Hart House is a multi-band antenna, which can be controlled from the ground, to bring in those far away places.

It takes time to become a good ham. A certain amount of know how is needed. Morse code, call signals, and a multitude of details on the theory and practice of radio systems have to be mastered before the neophyte goes on the air.

At the moment three-fourths of the radio club members are non-hams.

But they're learning — and in the process they enjoy themselves thoroughly.

Each year the club graduates a number of qualified hams. They have access to the shack, radio, equipment, and are awarded a listing as first stage amateurs.

In other words they can call any ham radio zone in Canada by mike, while European, Asiatic and African belts are open to them only by morse code.

When the amateur eventually reaches the highest plateau he can muster any ham in the world by microphone.

This is designed to provide an incentive for the ham to become proficient with his equipment and call signals before wielding his mike on international bands.

The U of T Radio Club has had its moments.

One of them was an electronic romance.

A Latin American ham was touring Toronto a while back, when he was suddenly struck with a lethal dose of love sickness for his fiancée.

She lived in Brazil.

And one thing stood in the way of a phone call — an empty wallet.

U of T's hams learned about the young man's plight.

They decided to lend a helping hand; a long hand that stretched all the way to Brazil, by way of radio band.

Cupid triumphed with the aid of tubes and an antenna. The Brazilian visited the shack, talked with his gal, and closed love's gap.

Cute? "Maybe," says Paul Drolet — club member for over three years — "but it goes to show that hams always take care of their own."

These are good days for University of Toronto hams.

Recently the club received a call card from a ham in Outer Mongolia confirming that a U of T radio message had been received there — one year ago.

The message was a long time coming because of Soviet red tape.

It made the U of T radio club, one of the first ham organizations in Canada, and one of the few in the world, to have wireless liaison with around the globe.

Contact has been established with each American state, incans, the poles, and

At the moment, for once of hams, the way into 40 international zones.

And making contact one is grinding work, skill, hard work, and Weather conditions, static, jammed radio, pheric layers, plague, a barrage of magnetic and often frustrated reach the areas.

The Radio Club files QSR or call acknowledgment from every nation to tune a radio. No law to send a card to the foreign transmission, international courtesy.

Many call cards are. They range in design, chamber of commerce, surrealist.

Often hams draw own cards. Others buy from the state.

The U of T Radio Club 12 years ago. It was a group of engineers. Bations then was Ajax, munity on the outskirts. The war was just over, ing difficulties forced to take their classes of on campus.

Growth has been steady. Besides this, always remained a. Members admit a small asset because of limited equipment.

Regular meetings held in the Hart House. Some of the club's also stored there.

theatre

Crest Theatre—The Schoolmistress—Arthur W. Pinero's "classical farce", circa 1885, illustrating all the problems of rendering something that amused Victorians funny to a 1960 audience; it is still, however, good fun. Closing performances today and tomorrow 5:30 p.m. and 9 p.m. each day; students $1.00. Heartbreak House—George Bernard Shaw's comedy, starring Powys Thomas, Charmion King and Norm Renault; direction by Royston Morley, who is senior Producer of the BBC Television Service; opening Wednesday next, February 17th, with nightly performances at 8:30 p.m. and the usual weekend arrangement.

Lansdowne Theatre—Tunnel of Love—The Broadway success about sex and suburbia; executed with suitable irreverence by Jack Creley, Austin Willis, Pamela Hyatt, Antoinette Bower and Dawn Greenhalgh. Nightly at 8:30 p.m., with Friday and Saturday performances at 5 p.m. also; tickets worth a $1.00 discount can be obtained for the asking at the SAC office, good Monday to Thursday. (On Lansdowne just above Bloor.)

West End Studio—The Lower Depths—Maxim Gorky's play set in the Russia of 1902, which sometimes seems to be an argument for the virtues of illusion, but which is at all times good drama; Stephanie Willis, Roy Passano and John Ward are in the leading roles; skilful direction by Walter Balay, complemented by the resourceful sets of David Corfield. Nightly at 8:30 p.m., students 75c. (248A Brunswick Avenue.)

Eaton Auditorium—Brigadoon—The one-week run of this old war-horse, under the guidance of the Eaton Operatic Society, ends tomorrow night; the performances are at 8:30 p.m.

Convocation Hall—The Inter-Varsity Choral Festival—A concert by choirs from Western, McMaster, Ontario Agricultural College and the University of Toronto Chorus. This is the first appearance of the U of T chorus this year. Admission free, at 9:00 p.m. (See also page 6.)

Massey Hall—Toronto Symphony Orchestra Pop Concert—Guest this Sunday will be the brilliant young French-Canadian conductor Jacques Boudrey in a program of popular works by Berlioz, Debussy, and Tchaikovsky. Admission free, at 2:30 p.m.

Hart House Great Hall—Harry Mossfield—The Australian lyric baritone now settled in Toronto will be the guest artist at the Sunday Evening Concert. Program will include works by Handel, Richard Strauss, Giordano, Mozart, Leoncavallo, Carpenter, and Copeland. Tickets are free and may be obtained from the Hall Porter, Hart House. Women must be escorted by a member of the House.

TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY

Massey Hall—Toronto Symphony Orchestra—Guest conductor is that vigorous champion of Delius, Sir John Barbirolli. No Delius, however, is being offered. The program consists of works by Kabalevsky, Faure, Debussy and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony which was played here last week by the Moscow Symphony. Tickets available at the box office.

THURSDAY

Massey Hall—Erroll Garner—An evening with the renowned Jazz pianist and composer, with bass and percussion accompaniment. The program is made up of three spontaneous groups of music. Tickets available at the box office. Casa Loma, The Library—The Pro Arte Orchestra—The third of its 1959-60 concert season under the talented Victor Di Bello. Program is: Boyce, Symbiolini, Oboe Concerto Op. VII No. 3; Corelli, Grosso, Op. VI No. 1; Hindemith, Five Pieces. The guest artist appearing with this justly orchestra will be Perry Bauman, oboist. The students' rate for tickets: $1.00 per concert. Box office.

Wynmlwood Music Room, Victoria College—A chant of Spanish songs. Presumably free, at 8:00 p.m.

art

Art Gallery of Toronto—The Venetian Exhibition—Titian and Paolo Veronese with a group of the Venetian drawings. This is the first major exhibition the AGT has organized on its own; the previous last Wednesday's Varsity bear little relation to which must be seen first-hand to be appreciated free to students. Dundas and Beverley Streets. Hart House Gallery—Viktoras Brickus—Although still-lives on view, this artist is most successful in vigorous and powerful landscapes. Brickus brings life to the medium of watercolour. Women Sunday and Wednesday afternoons.

Laird Galleries—Old Master Drawings—A varied collection of drawings dating from the early 18th century. Mostly minor "masters", mostly well-known names among the collection. More as a sort of auxiliary to Tintoretto and his colleagues at the AGT. Gallery is at 194 Bloor Street West.

Roberts Gallery—Albert Jacques Franck—The artist on a tour of the back streets of Toronto, with a warm and intimate charm. Most of us are washed by picturesque city-scapes of Paris that good to see Toronto in a light that is not too companionate. On Yonge Street just above Bloor. Isaacs Gallery—Michael Snow—Opening tomorrow exhibition of paintings by this Toronto jazz musician and painter. Bay Street below Gerrard.

MONGOLIAN PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC international signal call book, which is published annually.

The U of T call letter is VE-3 U O T. VE stands for Canada, and the three for the regional territory.

U of T hams have a dream.

They hope some day to see an interuniversity radio net-work, a net-work that would link every university radio club in the country on a national hook-up basis.

Toronto is spearheading plans in this direction. University conferences are being called to smooth out the difficulties.

If the plan materializes, a university network could be invaluable in helping promote activities of the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

It could also mean Canadian University Press dispatches would be relayed to other campus dailies across the country with greater speed.

But these are plans for the future — and that future is a long way off.

Possibly the day may come when student hams play a vital role in inter-university communication.

But once again this is a dream — a hope.
Ed Barrick signed off his conversation with British Columbia in the usual ham lingo — "seventy three".

He flipped the string of switches again.
A light blinked off.

The radio died.

He rose, recorded the U-of BC call message on the cluttered bulletin board, glanced at the Playboy nude, pushed open the shack's heavy oak door, and left.

U of T was off the air . . .

Gorky At West End

It is a rare opportunity to see a production of a Maxim Gorky play. It is even rarer to see one sensitively directed and produced. Walter Balay and Aubrey Forbes have succeeded in both respects with their Canadian premiere of The Lower Depths now showing in the Studio of
The West End Players at 248A Brunswick Ave. ("Call Boy" — RO. 6-2376).

The play itself takes place in the decadent Russia of 1902. Into a hovel of thieves, alcoholics, consumptives, and dissipates, which include an ex-student, ex-actor, ex-baron and other assorted down-and-outs, stumbles an old man to preach with deeds and anecdotes the dignity and value of each and every man.
His maxim in life is simple:
"Whatever you believe in, that's what there is."

He tells the story of a man who lived only for his dream of finding the land of milk and honey. But a scholar with his books and charts showed him the land did not exist. The disillusioned traveller struck the learned gentleman and destroyed himself. If pipe dreams were all that there were left to the degenerates in Russia at the turn of the century, then the old man would feed their illusions. To the dying he comforts, "Death smooths out the wrinkles of life". To the living he quietly preaches, "Man is born to make life better". But the comfort, compassion, and charity of the old man disappeared with him when he leaves to renew his pilgrimage. The disintegration continues unabated.

This cannot help but compare this story of the meaning of life in the midst of degeneration and illusion, with O'Neill's "The Iceman Cometh", which was produced by the Arts Theatre Group in the fall. Both as a play and as a production, O'Neill's suffers in comparison. If O'Neill used the Gorky play for his inspiration (as I strongly suspect), his neglect of the positive tone of compassion produces an extreme and unreal situation.

Maxim Gorky in The Lower Depths teaches the necessity in life of compassion for illusion.
The failure of the characters to realize this emphasizes the depths of their dissipation. The juxtaposition of the positive doctrine and its lack of realization also strengthens the message of the need for love of one's fellow men in a social era of hatred and bitterness epitomized by the Russia of 1902.

David Corfield, who designed the set, provided an atmosphere of dust and decay for the rotting humanity of Czarist Russia. The effect of walls, caked with sput, made the consumptive cough of Stephanie Wellis as Anna even more contagious. Similarly, every item in the costuming conveyed to the minutest detail the time and place of the action. The delicate use of Russian music for background was effectively timed.

Most of the cast captured a professional quality so necessary for the successful performance of a masterful work. Anna

Hughes as the tirading adutress, the only character to face the grim exigencies of the situation, was an outstanding success. She provided a combination of power and infidelity in her facial expression demanded in the ruthless, sadistic role of Vasilisa, whose cruelty was directly motivated by her scorn for illusion.
Roy Passano gave a sensitive portrayal of the alcoholic actor, who could not live when the dream of the past had faded in his memory, and his "poisoned organism" could not retain the hope of a future recovery. John Ward acted with restraint and humility in the compassionate role of the aphoristic old man.

At the other extreme, only the skill of the director saved the scenae in which Fay Bluestein as Vasya played the significant part. Her performance was shallow, stiff, and indecisive.
Another negative distraction was the lack of comedy necessary to relieve and emphasize the depression. Vlay Handera as the clown, Vioshka, never realized the potential available to him.
This, along with some faulty pacing, especially as the beginning of the fourth act, provided the only disappointing moments in an otherwise rich evening.

ELEVENTH MEETING OF THE FINANCE COM-MISSION:

"AVR: $50.75 (has been spent) for food and coffee during rehearsals."

And it came to pass that the Finance Commission poured forth $50.75 worth of beer unto the AVR cast and the return was great, and the report of it was taken down in the scriptures.

And Stan was disturbed by the report. And there were set before Him six cases of O'Keefe's and He answered unto them and said "Fill up the beer bottles with coffee." And the servants did so. And the ruler of the feast had tasted the beer that was made coffee.
and knew not from whence it was, but the servants which drew the beer knew.

I got a letter from a reader who complained about my spelling of Nietzsche. Although Nietzsche scholars throughout the world have finally mastered the spelling of the man's name, I am not one of them. Actually I firmly believe that Nietzsche's untimely death was brought about by pure colessness, or the inability to cope with his own name.

The reader should have looked more carefully at an article in the last (sniffle) issue of Otherside, Nietzsche, Nietzsche and Nietzsche. I spelled it Neitzsche.
which managed to spell the name three different ways.
Or was it Neetski . . .

It's amusing to notice that in a couple of months, magazines and newspapers will be carrying pictures of Brigitte Bardot with the copy reading "now the secret of the Bardot look is yours." The Lovable Brassiere Company has struck, with a "Bardot Bra."

The company called in a psychologist, who said the recent birth of a child to the French sex-kitten would "further humanize her and make identification with her more readily accesible to the average woman."

The president of the company said "psychologically our approach is not the invalid one that says 'we will make you into a Brigitte Bardot', but the highly valid one that states that we are providing an essential secret to the over-all look of Bardot-glamor."

Who says St. Michael's is isolationist? Victoria College has apparently gone so far as to build a moat around their college to discourage outsiders. The TTC is ravaging the streets around the college, and students going in or out have to navigate a three-inch-deep muddy stream.

U of T Chorus Revived

To the accompaniment of College St. traffic, a small but determined group of students is rebuilding the University of Toronto chorus.

Every Tuesday night in the Royal Conservatory of Music, 25 students meet to tackle an ambitious and extensive repertoire of choral works.

Until 1951 the chorus was student-run. As membership declined, leadership of the group was assumed by a Faculty of Music professor, thus linking the chorus' name with the Conservatory.

Previously, Faculty of Music students obtained credits for attendance at either the U of T chorus or orchestra. Participation in one was compulsory. While this resulted in a large chorus of over 90 students, virtually all the members were from the Faculty of Music. As such the chorus was not representative of the entire University.

This year attendance is purely voluntary. Although the chorus membership has dropped to 25 students they are drawn from 14 faculties on campus. Walter Kemp, post-graduate student in charge of the group said, "now it has become the choir it was supposed to be, representing all faculties".

The group is run purely on student effort, with no support from the Faculty of Music. The music ranges from the traditional works of Handel to the contemporary works of Bartok. The aim of the group said Kemp, "is to try to keep up the traditions of good music."

This Sunday at 9 o'clock the chorus will host the McMaster University, University of Western Ontario and Ontario Agricultural College choirs at the 12th annual inter-varsity choral festival to be held at Convocation Hall.

A wide range of music will be heard including excerpts from Mozart's Requiem, and compositions by Mueller, Stanford, Elgar, Mendelssohn, Weigl and Williams. The U of T chorus will sing two motets by Stravinsky and four Slovak folk songs by Bartok. To close the programme the 150 voices will combine to sing three anthems.

The U of T chorus is only a fragment of its former size. But the spirit of the students is strong. As one member said, "We started from scratch with everything to gain and nothing to lose".

Sunday night the chorus will be exhibiting the result of five months of enthusiastic practise and work.

bookies

of exam papers for only about 30 cents a student. Then each student could have a set of papers to each of his courses.

"Now under the nominal price to ten cents each, the student may buy only three papers for his 30 cents," the brief says.

Peter Dembski suggested the situation was "clear exploitation by a small group of capitalists of the masses of the U of T." He suggested the bookstore be nationalized, but was ruled out of order by Chairman Claude Brodeur who said he was a share-holder.

The Canadian Press Style Book, King James Version, is the guide The Varsity news staff follows in its copy. The book spells labor, honor and color that way, i.e. without the letter "u". However, the AM&D staff of this paper refuses to follow the guide, claiming correctly that what they print isn't news to anyone. Hence the paradoxical spelling throughout the paper. Incidentally, in the column "Odds and Ends" you will find theater spelled theater, and occasionally words like "thru" and "foto" because wkr believes in the ultimate Americanization of the English tongue.

sac at a glance

Besides learning how to spell "aye" and "noe", the Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night:

—congratulated Peter Dembski because he allowed the puck to pass through the chink in his defences only once;

—suggested The Varsity's account of the SAC-Varsity hockey game was not all it should have been;

—insisted that the players loaned to the SAC by The Varsity only hindered the SAC's playing;

—learned that Prof. Koppel Jones will make the trek to Toronto to lecture the University of Toronto on race relations. (The lecture will be Mar. 8, 4:30 p.m. in Trinity Convocation Hall);

—heard a request for $2,000 for the University Settlement to buy, among other things, another pool table;

—tabled for two weeks a motion to establish a permanent U of T debating team, and to start a "vigorous training program" for novices;

—named Mar. 2 and Mar. 3 as tentative dates for the student-staff symposium;

—decided to accept an administration offer to split the cost 50-50, because, as Vice-President Barbara Leaman pointed out, if they asked for more money from the administration they would give the administration "a controlling voice;"

—heard Chairman Claude Brodeur vigorously deny he was a Platonist;

—tried to understand what Milton Houtp meant when he said "I'd just like to remind the council of something they may not even know anything about;"

—and heard President Walter McLean reveal his intention of visiting the remains.

Women's Pool Refused

The Second Annual Water Carnival will not be able to use the new pool in the Women's Athletic Building on March 5th and 6th. Ron Walbank, chairman of the Water Carnival committee, made public correspondence last night in which the request was turned down.

The original request was made to the Women's Athletic Directorate in a letter on January 14th, in which it was pointed out that the new pool afforded considerable advantages both for spectators and participants.

A reply, received four days after the request, termed the reasons for wanting the pool "inadequate", despite the fact that other co-educational events are being held in the building.

A further request by two divers on the U of T swimming team, for use of the three-metre diving board at a time when the male coach is instructing the girls on the one-metre board, was also refused.

The request was made because both divers need practice for a meet between Canada and Mexico a month hence.

Africa

"Can Africans Rule Africa Now?" will be the topic discussed at the open meeting of the United Nations Association in Canada in the Hart House Great Hall at 8 p.m. tonight.

J. B. McGeachy, associate editor of the Financial Post, will deliver a commentary following the question period.

Interviews with African students from Ghana, Kenya, Liberia, Nigeria, Tanganyika, and Uganda will highlight the programme.

In Which Wilson Is Attacked

Dear Sir,

It is a pity that you had to send a boy to do a man's job! Surely you could have sent some other, less jaundiced reporter to write a review of the AVR production, "Christopher Jones".

It is obvious that Mr. Wilson has never learned one of the basic rules of journalism—never to let personal grudges enter (or take up entirely) a review. If Mr. Wilson wished to publish his scathing denunciation of Mr. Callaghan in The Varsity it should not have been necessary for him to disguise it as a review.

I am sure there are many students on campus who would like an appraisal of the AVR. Can you find anyone to do it?

Something For Everyone In Saturday's Big Athletic Night

The Varsity Blues handily defeated Ontario Agricultural College Aggies 80-57 last night in an exhibition basketball contest at Hart House.

For the Blues it was just a warm-up game for the big Athletic night coming up on Saturday night.

The Toronto team didn't really start to move until the second half, having only a five point lead at half time. However, Mike Muir, Peter Potter, and Jim McGuire started to click in the second half, and the Blues poured the points in.

For O.A.C. the top man was Murray Atkinson with 14 points.

The game gave Toronto a chance to work out a few new plays before they meet McMaster Marauders, in the big game on Saturday night.

The Hamilton team, which beat Toronto once before, is currently in third place. By defeating them, Toronto could move into a tie with the visiting team.

Notable absentees from the Toronto lineup for the game will be Norm Menzies and Doug Wyles. However, with Mel Cohen and Dan Norman as well as Potter, McGuire and Muir all in the starting lineup, Toronto's chances look good.

In addition to the basketball game there will be a full slate of Athletic activities in progress. Gymnastics in the upper gym to be followed by the exhibition of Estonian folk dancing.

Downstairs there will be the Intercollegiate Fencing Championship, of which Toronto is the defending champion.

In the pool, the events will range from canoe paddling to clown and fancy diving.

A dance will be held following the senior game in the main gym.

Altogether it will be an interesting evening, and one well worth attending.

Boxing Prospects Good

Yesterday afternoon eight U of T boxers and coach Tony Canzano left by train for Montreal where they hope to retain their Intercollegiate Boxing Crown in a two day tournament to be held on February 12th and 13th.

Canzano was forced to fill three last minute vacancies because of late injuries.

155 pounder Fred Johnson was compelled to withdraw because of a torn ligament in his ankle. Rookie Robert Turner, a rugged battler from University College, replaced Fred.

The 145 lb. class will be represented by an American, Tom Aman, 11nd year student at SMC. Aman, incidentally, is also a wrestler, replaces Paul Wilton who injured his back in a workout last Monday.

Heavyweight Mike Chykaliuk did not make the trip because of a recurring shoulder injury which may sideline him from all competition. No heavyweight replacement could be found, therefore, that division will not be contested by Varsity.

Despite these last minute developments the defending champion Blues still have a very strong team.

Boxer like Art Vachon, last year's Intercollegiate champion, Ozzie Hutchinson, champion in 1958, Jim McManus the finest fighter on the team, and Emmet Neary, an experienced puncher, are all expected to do well.

Addition of polished performers like Val Spring and 1959 Intercollegiate champion Bob Dadds make the University of Toronto Blues a very formidable team indeed.

comment by gene glisky

When the new Women's Athletic Building, in all its gorgeous splendour was officially named ready for use by female personelle last fall, everyone was pleased.

University of Toronto, that cheerful community of lovable scholars, had itself another concrete edifice to keep one quarter of its population happily building bigger and better muscles or toning up the big built muscles they already had.

As one sports chick blithely put it, it was the thrillingest thrill.

And everybody was glad. And everybody loved everyone else and smiled. Big smiles.

Then somebody goofed. Someone decided people were needed to run the WAB. And where people run things they are in charge. And where people are in charge they consider themselves in power. And when people are in power, there seems to be only one positive way they assure themselves they are the "big guns". Directly or indirectly they tell someone to go to hell.

Things, in our opinion, are not very happy anymore.

The all experienced, all inspired advisory committee of the Women's Athletic building, in their first opportunity to further a little goodwill and to grant a small favor have flaunted their newly discovered power. In their first dry run have refused consideration for men, just to hear themselves say NO.

The facts of the case are a little too numerous to mention in detail, but we'll try to review them.

As all who were here last year may recall, the U of T swim team held a highly successful and entertaining swim Carnival last March. The first of its kind on campus, the carnival presented to Varsity students the finest names in North American swimming.

Swim records were broken, diving such as we have never dreamed existed was exhibited, water ballet, skin diving and just about every water act possible was shown to the enthusiastic crowd that jammed Hart House.

The amazing part of the whole program was the fact that the Varsity swim team did all the work to make this show a success.

Extra seats were hauled all the way from Varsity Stadium, through the Hart House corridors, locker rooms showers and to the pool sidelines. Decorations, officiating and publicity were all initiated by this amazing group and to a major extent carried out by them.

This year even a bigger and better (if possible) carnival is planned. It is bound to be successful.

So the Varsity swim team, made one request. They wanted to use the WAB pool for the two night show and for two days of preparation.

They gave excellent reasons why the new pool would be invaluable in improving in improving the carnival.

A three-metre diving board (for top flight Canadian and American divers) and a depth to coincide, underwater lighting (for water ballet and skin diving), a better view for spectators in a larger and pillar free gallery and several other concrete reasons why the new pool is superior were given.

The fact that it would require only a fraction of the work to set up extra seats in the WAB appears reason enough. Lest we forget, no other Varsity team would think of doing all this work just for the privilege of playing the game.

And let us not overlook the fact that the proceeds of this carnival are not destined to go into the coffers of the team, but towards sending Canadian swimmers to the Olympics in Rome.

And now Mr. Ripley, believe it or not (and you may suspect by now) the advisory committee said NO. A big, fat, incredible, unanimous NO.

The reason the swim team gave were inadequate says the cryptic little note.

Hogwash! Ladies and gentlemen of yon illustrious senate. You claim co-educational activity exists at the WAB by invitation.

Then you should have been the first to invite this ALL UNIVERSITY function to your wonderful new building, and the first to give a helping hand.

For we are all proud of OUR new building, and we would all like to see it, boast about it and see a University function in it.

We believe it is our building and not the shiny property of the advisory committee.

And before we are accused of not seeing your point of view O worthy governors, let us explain that we did request an interview with Miss Jackson to ascertain the real reason for the refusal, and to try to understand your point of view.

But, Miss Jackson, you distinctly told us there was nothing to add. Your decision was final so please don't confuse the issue with facts, my mind is made up—No, No, NO.

We don't intend to change your minds, unanimous ones, but we do cry out "FOR SHAME". Your decision, we strongly fear was unfair, unwise and unjustified.

You can do with publicity for the WAB. Don't blame us if by your selfish, unreasonable attitude it is all bad.

THE WOMEN'S ATHLETIC Directorate would have us believe that this pool and gallery (above) has nothing that Hart House hasn't got. Anybody who has seen the Hart House Pool can see the error of their ways. The New Women's pool is air-conditioned, has underwater lighting, is two feet deeper than Hart House and has two diving boards. Hart House has none of these. —Roberge

Atom Trek Stirs Police

A few hours before France exploded her first baby atomic bomb in the Sahara, 25 University of Toronto students staged a protest parade in front of the French Consulate and City Hall, Friday.

The group of students gathered in front of University College Friday afternoon. They wielded placards reading "Stop the S a h a r a Tests", "Every Test Kills", "Act Now for Peace" and "French Glory Will Cost Lives."

The students left UC in cars and moved on to the French Embassy, marching there for an hour.

Highlight of the two hour and . . .

Encouraged by Friday's demonstration against the French atomic explosion, and by the U of T Faculty Disarmament Committee, a U of T graduate student is organizing a "Student Peace Union" on campus.

Norman Johnson said last night the organization will be composed of students and young people who have "joined together to study the causes of war and to seek constructive alternatives for the present international situation".

Johnson said his organization was meant to coordinate the work for peace among students "rather than as an attempt to formulate their policies".

Although there is no direct connection, Johnson's group is affiliated with Don Roebuck's organization, responsible for last Friday's French Consulate march.

The organizational meeting of the SPU will be Wednesday at 4:15 p.m. in room 10 of University College.

erratum

With reference to the article entitled "Tar Heel Hangover" which appeared in the Fri., Feb. 12th issue of The Varsity, we wish to retract the following statement which was attributed to Miss Lomax, Weekends Chairman, in her report to the SAC.

"Miss Lomax said the Tar Heels just didn't have the ability to hold their liquor that the U of T students obviously had."

We wish to apologize to Miss Lomax and to the members of the Weekend Exchange Committee for any inconvenience or embarrassment the error may have caused.

exhibition came when French-speaking Varsity photographer Jacques Roberge slipped into the consulate and learned no one there was aware the student demonstration was going on outside.

He first spoke to one of the secretaries in the front office. "She became very excited when she was told about the protest, began talking a storm of French, and disappeared into another office," he said.

Begin HH Nominations To Fill 44 Positions

Nominations begin today for positions open on five standing committees and the squash rackets committee of Hart House.

Eight new members will be elected to each of the five standing committees. Three members are carried over from the previous year. Four new members are elected to the Squash Rackets Committee with two carry-overs.

After elections each committee elects a secretary who sits on the Board of Stewards. The eleven-member committees are then divided into sub-committees.

This year the House Committee paid much attention to House food services. Results of a Great Hall questionnaire showed only one-quarter of the students favor women in the Great Hall during lunch-hours. A suggestion put forward by Tony Ip to set up FM radio background music in the Map Room was crushed by the present committee.

The Debates Committee this year has been loath to allow women to attend their functions.

The Library Committee selects the books for the House Library and periodicals for the Reading Room. "To become a member of the Library Committee you do not have to have an expert knowledge of books—all that is really necessary is an interest," says Derek Hayes, this year's Secretary.

This was the first year the Music Committee has arranged a jazz concert in the Great Hall. Oscar Peterson and his trio were brought in by the Jazz Subcommittee for the students' entertainment.

"The biggest and most interesting facet of the work of the Art Committee," says Secretary Scott Richardson, "is the organization of the exhibits that are shown in the Art Gallery throughout the year."

The Art Committee also maintains and/or makes additions to the permanent collection of Canadian paintings, the Art Library, the art classes, talks, the Arbor Room "Picture of the Week", and the weekly film showings in the Music Room during the winter months.

Hart House uses the Hare-Spence system of election tabulation to ensure that membership is representative of all the colleges and faculties submitting nominations.

Top man from each faculty having a candidate in the Committee election is automatically elected providing his total vote is at least thirty per cent of that of the leader and no more than three members are elected from one faculty.

Undergraduates in their graduating year are eligible to be candidates for committees if they are proceeding into the Faculty of Law, the School of Social Work, the Ontario College of Education or the School of Graduate Studies where they retain an undergraduate status.

Nomination forms may be obtained from the Undergraduate Office, Hart House during the following. They must be filled out and returned by Friday, February 19.

U of T Boxers Win Third Title

By DAVE GRINER

Montreal, Feb. 13—A record tying performance gave the University of Toronto Boxers their third consecutive Intercollegiate Championship in the final matches held here tonight.

Placing seven men in the nine bout finals, Varsity walked off with six championships, tying their own previous high. Queen's also placed seven men in the finals, but by the time four of the nine final bouts had been decided, Varsity were the team champions as the U of T lightweight's came through in fine style.

Chances of a clean sweep of the seven Varsity finalists disappeared when Jim McManus lost a dubious decision to Jim Day of Queen's in the 150 pound class.

McManus took things slowly for the first two rounds, and then when it appeared he had his opponent "out on his feet" in the third, the referee stepped in to tie up the laces of the Queen's fighter. Day recovered during the breather and held on to win.

The win was particularly gratifying to Varsity coach Tony Canzano, as he had only one defending titlist on his squad and did not have an entry for the heavyweight division.

Quickest win of the night was recorded by Art Vachon in the 130 pound division. He needed just two punches and 20 seconds to knock out his opponent.

Another interesting performance came from Val Spring in the 140 pound class who gave the best exhibition of boxing while easily outpointing his opposition.

In contrast to this polished display was the wildly enthusiastic attack mounted by Bob Turner of Toronto against Harry Combe of McGill.

The success of the Toronto boxers was in a large part due to the superior technique that Canzano had drilled into his pupils, and was very noticeable during all the bouts.

Hazen Argues Schooling Bad

OTTAWA, Feb. 11, (CUP) — Canada's present education system is one of class privilege, which is both foolish and immoral, Hazen Argue CCF leader said here today.

Mr. Argue said, "The present system which forces many talented but under-educated young people to seek work in their early teens to support their parents and families is a system of class privilege."

He was commenting on the theme of yesterday's National University Student Day, sponsored by the National Federation of Canadian University Students. The theme was, "Education, the Nation's Greatest Asset."

Leaders of the other two major political parties were also unanimous in stressing the importance of higher education for Canadians.

Prime Minister Diefenbaker said, "Education in all its broad aspects is a keystone in the building of a better Canada for all."

Lester Pearson endorsed such a feeling: "No democratic nation can become truly great if every citizen has not been given the maximum opportunity for self-development through education."

However, it was Mr. Argue who voiced the strongest opinion on today's system, calling it, "an immoral system since it prevents the full flowering of the personalities of so many people, indeed, of the majority of our youth."

"It is a foolish system since it is notorious that while thousands of ill-educated men and women remain unemployed, jobs go begging for those with higher technical and professional qualifications."

He said, "Education is not a privilege; it is a right," and added, "every person in Canada should be afforded the full opportunity of being educated to the limit of his or her capacity without the slightest regard to the person's financial means."

The 70,000 member student federation was congratulated by Prime Minister Diefenbaker "on its efforts to bring the importance of edu-

UofT To Bleed Again; Set 1600-Pint Target

The University of Toronto starts bleeding today as the Red Cross Campaign begins its second drive of the year.

The campaign continues to Feb. 29, with a target of 1900 pints to be used for free transfusions in Toronto hospitals.

Red Cross officials stress that students who gave blood to the first campaign, in October, can give again, since the minimum interval between honored pledges is three months.

Nancy Davison, SAC Student Services Commissioner, last night predicted a favorable outcome for the campaign. "A large number of pledge cards have been signed already," she said. "And if the pledges are fulfilled, we will make the quota."

Seven Red Cross clinics will be set up on various parts of the campus during the drive.

Clinics operating this week are: School of Nursing, Feb. 15-19, from 10 a.m.-1 p.m. and 2:30-4:30 p.m.; Engineering, Knox College, Forestry, Architecture, Pre-Meds, and SGS; Sir Daniel Wilson Residence, Feb. 15-17, 9-11:30 a.m. and 1:15-4 p.m. for UC, PHE, P&OT, first Year Pharmacy, and the U of T Press; and Trinity College, Feb. 22, 9:30-11:30 a.m. and 1:30-4:30 p.m. for Trinity, St. Hilda's, Wycliffe and the Royal Ontario Museum.

U of T Prof Blasts Anti-Suburban Bias

University of Toronto political economy Professor S. D. Clark last week blasted anyone responsible for creating a bias against suburbia.

"Whereas a generation ago it was the big city which was seized upon as symptomatic of the sickness of our society today it is suburbia," he said to a Royal Architectural Institute of Canada committee.

Residential development and environment is undergoing a cross-Canada research program by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Although not idealizing suburban living, Prof. Clark said the idea held of it by sociologists is very slight.

He admitted there are many ugly features in suburban living.

Prof. Clark has lived in a storey-and-a-half grey brick house in Agincourt village for the past ten years and commutes daily to work.

In his own research, Prof. Clark has discovered suburbanites have a tendency to conform to the values and ways of thinking or behavior patterns of the group.

New Leaks

OTTAWA—Carleton University's ultramodern new buildings battled with the elements last Friday and lost.

Premier Frost presided at opening ceremonies, during a day of heavy rain which caused minor damage of library books in the new Maxwell MacOdrum Library. Officials said the building had sprung leaks in the roof.

There was also minor damage to the university's administration offices. The third building opened was the Henry Marshall Tory science building.

of a bomb" and asked Roberge what he wanted. The staffer told him.

Then, just as the official was about to make a statement, the secretary poked her head through the door, and "dramatically announced" French Ambassador Lacoste in Ottawa was on the phone, Roberge said.

The official vanished.

Then the group left for City Hall via Bay Street. There, in front of a small crowd, news cameras and popping flash bulbs, the students launched the second phase of their demonstration.

They ran into trouble with authorities when police learned the group did not have a demonstrator's permit. It was also rumored a detective from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was in to the crowd taking pictures of each student "for future reference."

Last night leaders of the demonstrators, Don Roebuck, and Pete Horbatiuk said the small turn out showed "the whole campus is apathetic."

Horbatiuk called U of T students "a dull grey mass."

Roebuck said "it has been shown over and over by scientists that the world is spinning around with sure death if nuclear bomb tests continue. Radiation will spread. First North Africa, and eventually the world."

Cold weather bit into the ideals of one demonstrator.

Complained a female marcher. "Can't we go home. Gee, it's cold."

It was rumored last night that police have been in contact with University College authorities over the march.

Panel Argues Prospects For African Self-Rule

A leading Canadian journalist told a Hart House audience Friday night if the peoples of Africa want to reach western standards of living "they will have to work like hell."

Financial Post Editor James B. McGeachy, taking part in a panel "Can Africans Rule Africa Now", said the amount of effort required for "the peoples of the Dark continent to arrive at our present degree of welfare freedom is stupendous."

He urged that Africans "preserve their own culture" and added "it was better to maintain individuality in a country, rather than seeing it bow down and worship a form like the Western invention."

Nevertheless he admitted that without benefits of Western technology Africa will be doomed to perpetual poverty. "But let me remind you I am not to sure our prosperity has been good for us."

Best selling author (Bush and Boma) J. C. Cairns told the group "no continent, such as Africa, should be isolated in the mainstream of its history. To humanitarians, the conditions that have existed there for hundreds of years are appalling."

Another member of the panel, Dr. Ronald Cohen, University of Toronto Anthropology professor, said in his trips around Africa he had been fascinated "by the traditionalism and astounded by the changes; for in the field of economics, African costs of living have shot up 100 percent, but incomes have risen 600 percent."

A speaker from the audience

Amphro Bandoh (III Meds) said Westerners commonly confuse legitimate "tribal medicine" passed down from the olden days, and that practice of fetish priests is the one idea of witch doctor."

H. Kanyiki, Uganda, a student guest of the Toronto Branch of the United Nations Association, said the "West is overlooking the fact that every African student is a spy. Everything we see, we note and report back."

"Africa is neutral in the cold war and as a result it is treated too condescendingly by Western countries."

Kanyiki told the Great Hall audience the "West should leave Africa alone to govern or misgovern as we see fit."

"Please keep your paternalism away. We would rather have your sympathy and friendship," he added.

Art Prof Dies in La.

John Alford, first professor of fine arts at the University of Toronto, died Wednesday in New Orleans, La., where he was an art lecturer at Tulane University.

A native of England, Prof. Alford was head of the U of T's fine arts department from 1934 to 1945. He later taught at the Rhode Island School of Design, Providence; Mirriebury, Vermont; Birmingham - Southern University and Indiana University.

Prof. Alford wrote a book of poems, and many articles on art, art history and aesthetics.

His daughter and two sons in Toronto and Ottawa survive.

Panel Will Tackle Modern Advertising

The University of Toronto Commerce Club will sponsor a panel "Truth, Taste and Waste in Modern Advertising", on Wednesday, Feb. 17, in the Hart House Debates Room.

Club president Michael Berger last night announced "a controversial panel on a controversial issue"; Pierre Berton, associate editor and columnist for the Toronto Daily Star, will speak to the open meeting along with the vice-presidents of an advertising agency, and a national brewery and two university professors.

Berger said "We will kick off from the statement of Professor Kiersted, in the U of T Quarterly 56-57, that the techniques of modern advertising are "very evil attempts, the most corruptive of our age, corruptive of tastes, morals, religion and subversive in the most direct and effective manner, of the conventions and traditions of our constitutions."

The panelists are: D. G. Hartle, Department of Political Economy; Berton; J. C. Balson, McKim Advertising Agency; and J. P. Kemp, Molson's Brewery.

The moderator will be Dr. M. G. Taylor, also of the Department of Political Economy.

Pageant For WISA Gala

A historical pageant will highlight the annual celebration of the West Indian Students' Association Friday.

The celebration will finish with a dance. It begins in Howard Ferguson Hall in the University College Men's Residence at 8 p.m.

The federation will present a seminar on "West India and World Affairs" in Trinity's Convocation Hall at 2 p.m. Saturday. Speakers will include Prof. Tobje of the Geography Department and Prof. N. Keyfitz of the Political Economy Department.

Council Rejects Bid To Hold AVR Over

The Students' Administrative Council executive committee Saturday voted down a proposal to hold over the SAC-sponsored All-Varsity Revue, Christopher Jones.

The committee disagreed with the AVR Production staff over merits of holding the show over Monday and Tuesday.

The Hart House theater was available and the theater was packed the last four nights.

Lee Richardson, AVR Publicity Director, said last night the show deserved another couple of nights.

"The audience exhibited a reaction that would have warranted a held-over bill in many places," she said.

"Director Barry Callaghan did an exceptional job under the circumstances."

"Regardless of his limited experience, Callaghan came up with the most enthusiastic cast I have ever seen. He did many hours of hard work."

Newspaper columnists being basically lovers of justice, often paradoxically find themselves wishing that someone would commit a grave offence before their eyes.

They think these perverse thoughts only because the kind of stupidity and brutality that they are interested in attacking very seldom reveals itself tangibly yet undoubtedly exists. They want the violence, the hate, to come out into the open where they can take a crack at it.

Last Friday a little of it showed itself to our columnist wkr.

It gratifies our justice-starved souls to see him typing it for you with his one uninjured hand.

Pete Seeger — Folksinger

by Peter Brawley

It was in Le Cabaret last Monday night; some seven people, mostly radio and press types, sat about two tables, eyes glued on the reason for them all being there—Pete Seeger.

Now, if you were until just now completely out of touch with society and all that—say, in jail, or looking for a book in the bookstore—you may have to be informed that Pete Seeger is, to understate the case, a folksinger. In fact, he is really a kind of combined encyclopedia and performer of the music of most of the peoples of the world, although you'll never get him to admit it. When he was with the Weavers, Carl Sandburg wrote that "when the people of America are singing, the Weavers are there." Edith Fowke, CBC folk music consultant, has him pinned and wriggling on the wall as "America's greatest folk singer."

THE WEAVERS

"The Weavers wanted to go on extensive tours," he said, "and I just could not afford the time for that. In the first place, I have my own concerts and tours; then there is the film work I am trying to do; and with that alone, I rarely see my family. So I suggested that they replace me with Erik Darling, and they did."

What appeared from this answer was a reference for one performing medium, and when he began to talk about how he became interested in folk music, the man began to take shape. Listen, he observed that Seeger seems to be both and what's more, more effective on his own. When he began, he was on his way imaginable.

A MUSICAL FAMILY

Seeger was born May 3, 1919, in City. His mother was a violinist, his father a noted musicologist, but despite this, he never intended to study music. "You know," he says, "if your father is a minister, then you make up your mind you're not going to be." Still, when he took up the ukulele, and in a high school he played the tenor banjo—an instrument later described as probably more suitable than to music.

He had developed an interest in painting, and for a year he rode about on a bicycle, painting people's houses for a night's lodging. In the course of this he met a woman in the back hills of introduced him to the five-string banjo, many of the songs he sings today.

A CALLING CARD

For the next year, then, he discarded the colours and the bicycle, and hitchhiked town to town, using my banjo as a calling card. He spent some time with Alan Lomax in the Library of Congress, where he listened to many of the recordings that had made of the songs of America, and through the southern and midwestern he saw and heard the people who live in the valleys, mountains and plains.

From 1942 to 1945 he was in the army where his musical talents were first put to the benefit of large audiences. When "Daddy, what did you do in the war?" he answers, "I played the banjo."

POLITICS

He has probably been asked thousands of times about his political affiliations; the rumours and fairy tales about him to the effect that he is tired of trying to be straight. "They will persist in making it not really very important."

In 1949 he helped form the Congress for Cultural Freedom.

MORE LETTERS

fourth or fifth

Sir:

Please inform Martin Stone, who reviewed the Moscow State Symphony's performance for the Varsity of Feb. 10, that he has Tchaikovsky's Fourth and Fifth symphonies mixed up. So far as anyone knows, the Fifth Symphony does not have a "fate" theme. The Fourth does; as Tchaikovsky himself explains in program notes that he wrote for this symphony. In fact, the Fourth is the only symphony for which Tchaikovsky made program notes. In addition, the third movement of the Fifth is not entitled "scherzo" but "valse." The third movement of the Fourth symphony is, however, entitled "scherzo."

By the way, the Fifth was played.

Sincerely,
Jack Abella.

algerians again

Dear Sir,

It is not my aim to enter into a war of ideology with Professor Frederick Deloffre concerning the appalling killings perpetrated year after year in Algeria by the French soldiers, but I cannot help but observe that his views in Varsity of Feb. 8 regarding the current request for scholarships by the Algerians were either biased, elusive, or a calculated old-fashioned colonial way of trying to evade the truth.

He claims that France is willing to give every Algerian student free education in the spirit of "complete freedom and liberalism" and blames the FLN, the Algerian National Liberation Party, for using threats to prevent these indigent students from taking that chance — according to Professor Deloffre some students defying these threats have answered with their lives. Anyone caring to read between the lines will understand the desperate position in which these students have been caught. They must either go without education or appeal to sympathisers for help. The irony which Professor Deloffre tries to hide is obvious. France has forced these students into this hopeless situation by her obstinate refusal to face the inevitable — witness her recent destructive and futile wars in Indochina, Morocco, Tunisia and Egypt.

What sort of freedom and liberalism does Professor Deloffre speak of? Has he forgotten that France, in pursuing her colonial ends has banned UNGEMA, the Algerian National Student Union (Continued on Page 6)

High School

SWAN LAKE has been seen at the Varsity. SWAN LAKE has been reviewed. SWAN LAKE has been danced many times. Unfortunately this was all too apparent during the National ballet company's day night. "Ho-hum . . . here we go again," they seemed to say as they mechanically repeated the oh-so familiar steps. The ballet lost all its original spontaneity, its freshness that made it once so exciting. The orchestra sounds precise and dull, on one level, the dancers have no "joie de dancer", and even the costumes are as garish as ever, look tired!

The first act is the worst of the evening. The peasants danced accurately the past, but the Prince, was pleasant but ineffectual. Of ballet-hoo, one might say!

The second act gave us our first glimpse of the future.

High School

Christopher Fry's modern classic, Not For Burning, will be presented at the Collegiate Auditorium on February 19. This is one of Fry's strange and wonderful plays, and a most ambitious undertaking. It has been directed by John Goodman and will be played by Douglas Blackwood, Jeannette will be Gail Carter and Thomas by John Goodman. Productions of Fry are rare at the Varsity and should not be overlooked. Tickets are only 75c, this is an excellent bargain. Reservations can be made by calling Howard 6-4323.

PROFILE

Extraordinary

more than anything else made him famous — the Weavers. They recorded and toured extensively until 1952, when, as he says they "took a sabbatical, which stretched into a monical and tuesdical."

Seeger and his wife are now working on a study project delving into folk music's instrumental techniques. He uses an old barn on his property near Beacon Hill, N.Y. as a location for making 16 mm. films, which some day will probably find their way into the Library of Congress.

PROJECT FOR LIFE

Seeger, in the words of Paul Little, is "a sort of reincarnated troubador who has the genius to make us laugh or cry or think nostalgically. He is an American tuning fork." Most important to him is that the enthusiasm of making music should grow and grow. He told of receiving a letter from a young man in Los Angeles who had bought a copy of his book, "How To Play the Five-String Banjo."

"You will be interested to know," went the letter, "that I have gotten together with a couple of friends, and we have been doing a bit of work in college and in nightclubs. We call ourselves The Kingston Trio."

It was a treat to watch the man think out the answers to questions which must surely have been asked him hundreds of times. He always appeared to be thinking of his life as something about which he could not just rhyme off an answer.

"I have a theory," said Seeger out of the blue. We could form a "Toronto Folk Choir", say with about 200 members, sell memberships, and they could sit on either side of me during the performance and lead the audience in songs. He then went into an elaborate explanation of the technical niceties of microphone placement.

"Then you could go to Massey Hall," he said to Bockner, "and say, 'Isn't it a good thing that you wouldn't let me sell those seats on the stage, because now we have the Toronto Folk Choir to perform with Mr. Seeger.'"

But it didn't work.

To try to roll Seeger up into a ball and hurl him, like Eliot's Prufrock, towards something all-embracing, is impossible. "I am incorrigibly interested in other things . . ." he more or less apologized, and this was apparent from the number of topics he touched on in answering questions. He showed a talent for turning the tables on the interviewer:

"Why," he asked as we were leaving, "are you interested in folk music?" Some people never tire of enquiry.

A Farce For Trinity College

Arsenic and Old Lace, Joseph Kesselring's farce about the problems of committing an adequate murder, will be presented by the Trinity College Dramatic Society from Feb. 18-20 (that's this Thursday through Saturday). The play is the second major production undertaken by the group this year. The first was the eminently successful.

Murder in the Cathedral last fall. Arsenic is directed by John Douglas who was awarded the Dale Award in 1957 and a German government scholarship to study the theatre arts in Europe. He is directing this play during a holiday from these studies.

The play features Jane Ross as Abby Brewster, Helen Scrivin as her sister Martha, Malcolm Shiner as Teddy, and Chris Riggs and George Baker as Mortimer and Jonathan Brewster.

Tickets are on sale at Hart House Theatre and at Trinity College at $1.25 for students and $1.75 for others.

Healey Willan On Film

It comes as a pleasant surprise to see a film such as Man of Music playing in a public theatre. Perhaps Toronto isn't hopeless after all.

Man of Music (at the Odeon-Carlton) is a rather good National Film Board production. It does have its faults, however, there is something essentially faulty with the photography, and there was a lack of continuity in the presentation. The mediocre technique, however, is more than evenly balanced by the excellence of the content.

This film affords a good insight into the musician's mind. It examines the executant and conductor, the composer, the learned theoretician, and the executant is relegated to the background, which is as it should be (a refreshing occurrence, in this day of record-jacket heroes). No bravura or scintillating pyrotechnics here; rather, a picture of the creative faculties at work.

The most interesting moment in the film occurs when Dr. Willan extemporizes a four-part fugue on a subject given him by a group of students. Any pedant could do the same, but only a true artist could make this music come to life and sing. It reminds us of a remotely similar incident which took place, a little over two hundred years ago, in Potsdam. It was there that an obscure cantor also extemporized a fugue this one on a subject given him by a king. It was reported that this feat astonished and delighted all those who beheld it. Dr. Willan manages to achieve much the same effect (the cantor, of course, was Bach; we may safely assume that his music also sang).

To sum up, then: this film has one major fault; it is all too brief.

The other film on the bill, the one which is featured, is Happy Anniversary, advertised as a comedy and starring David Niven and Mitzi Gaynor as two people who reveal for the purposes of high comedy that they have been "married" one year longer than anyone suspected. The entire thing is embroidered with in-laws and alcohol, and the effect is on the whole not quite so amusing as the producers intended. If you are there anyway to see the Willan movies, you might enjoy this sketchy comedy.

Dive Into Swan Lake

Jocelyn Terrell as the Swan Queen. It was in 1955 that Miss Terrell first appeared in SWAN LAKE—as a lady-in-waiting who carried the Queen Mother's train! In five short years Miss Terrell has developed into a dancer of beautiful lyrical quality, has become one of the National Ballet's soloists, and has been hailed by critics everywhere as one of their most promising dancers. However, the role of Odette, the queen of all roles for the ballerina, requires a maturity that Miss Terrell has not had a chance to develop. She has not yet achieved the inner assurance and technical confidence necessary for a truly regal bearing and commanding presence. Miss Terrell displays a lovely line and ethereal quality but needs to increase the fluidity of her movements with a greater softness in her arms. But Miss Terrell's greatest shortcoming was her lack of emotional and dramatic expressiveness in both her face and body; she must learn the importance of the back and shoulders in the expression of feelings—love, fear, sadness—and solve the dichotomy between body and soul. But Miss Terrell showed much promise that, with just a few more years of experience, she will become a very fine Swan Queen.

The third act gave Earl Kraul an opportunity to display his dancing ability which shows a marked improvement. Mr. Kraul has gone ahead in leaps and bounds! Angela Leigh, as Odile, by far the most technically accomplished performer in the production, has also improved tremendously. But the softness that we were so pleased to see her introduce into her previous rather angular style has no place in this role; Miss Leigh lacked the brilliant brittle quality necessary for the wicked Odile. If the company has advanced this year, it can only be in spectacular individual achievements. The corps de ballet continued its mechanical mediocrity in the third act which descended to downright sloppiness in the Spanish Dance. The only spark of life briefly occurred in the Czardas.

The fourth act shows the corps to best advantage. But even here the ballet did not rise to its heights. Bad lighting destroyed the dramatic moments of the storm and the apotheosis. SWAN LAKE has lost its magic.

If the National Ballet continues its presentations of SWAN LAKE (now in its sixth year) because of its intrinsic value as well as its box office popularity, it should not do so without giving it a thorough spring cleaning!

Few At Intervarsity Choral Festival

The University of Toronto's new chorus made its debut last night at the twelfth annual Intervarsity Choral Festival at Convocation Hall.

The U of T chorus opened the program last night with two Motets by Stravinsky. In the first of these, the Pater Noster, the choir was quite disorganized; this was probably due to nerves, since the second, Ave Maria, was much more successful. The second group they selected was Four Slovak Folk Songs by Bartok. These are short, pithy songs which the chorus performed quite effectively. Their intonation was not always secure, and their diction ranged from very good to very poor, but they sang these songs with a zest and liveliness that were conspicuously lacking in the more experienced choirs.

At the present time, however, the chorus needs to achieve a feeling of unity, and a better blending; they tended to be rough and uneven in tone.

The next choir was the Union Philharmonic Choral Club from the Ontario Agricultural College. This was a well balanced choir with nice full tone, but they didn't sing with much insight. They opened with The Poet's Hymn by Dyson. The words were sometimes difficult to catch, and there wasn't a great deal of feeling in their singing.

The next selection was an arrangement by Vaughan Williams of The Turtle Dove. The choir never attained the required feeling of love and tenderness; the soloist was ponderous and the turtle dove seemed more like a fat hen. Their last song was Down in the Valley arranged by Kurt Weill. The basses were impressive in this number; they took their very low notes easily. The sopranos, however, tended to shrillness; the arrangement didn't seem very inspired, and the choir as a whole got completely disorganized.

The Mozart Requiem K. 626 was sung by the McMaster University Choir. There are only about 50 singers but they gave the impression of being a much larger group. They attacked the Dies Irae with spirit, and in the Lacrymosa showed themselves to be a disciplined and well-trained body. They handled their crescendos and diminuendos very smoothly. In the Sanctus and the Agnus Dei, their entrances

Something Here For Everyone

Tuesday night saw the first performance in Toronto of another new work choreographed for the National Ballet by David Adams—namely Pas de Six, to the music of Tchaikowsky. With considerable more practice and polish, this lively number could prove a good addition to the repertoire but until that time, it is hardly a successful curtain-raiser.

The other night, this ballet proved embarrassing, due to technical imperfections and a lack of co-operation between the dancers. There are some good moments choreographically however, with considerable variation throughout. Colin Worth and his partner, Lorna Geddes, achieved the most success in their first dance together.

The second performance of Death and the Maiden was danced by Leila Zorina as the maiden. Although not as technically accomplished or as graceful as Jocelyn Terrell who performed the role last week, Miss Zorina has a much greater sense of emotional communication through facial expression. It was most encouraging to notice this trait in a young dancer.

The Fisherman and his Soul proved most successful despite the illness of the leading lady, the above mentioned Jocelyn Terrell. Her dancing gave the effect of ease, assurance and control which would have been complete had her features expressed the emotional experience she was presumably portraying with her body. Although a ballet in the standard repertoire of the Company, some of the costumes have been re-designed, the result being a definite improvement.

Special praise must be accorded to Angela Leigh who was convincingly bewitching as the Sorceress who aids the Fisherman to cut himself free from his Soul. Her lithe movements together with her tall, slender presence made a superb contrast to the pathetic love scenes between the Fisherman and the Mermaid.

To complete the evening, Offenbach in the Underworld, choreographed by Antony Tudor, once more won the favour of the audience. This frankly robust ballet is performed with such verve and abandon by the Company that one cannot help catching the enthusiasm of the corps. Moreover, the music of Jacques Offenbach is equally lively and well known, maintaining a good fast pace which prevents the dancers from committing any time lags.

Lois Smith danced the role of the Operetta star, formerly executed so well by Colia Franca, the director of the Ballet Company. It was with great delight and pleasure that one realized what a genuine sense of humor is possessed by Miss Smith, linked with an equally convincing ability to act. Her ad-libs and asides added much to complete the flirtatious atmosphere of a 19th Century café. Having thus shown her considerable abilities in this ballet, one feels she is apt to hide her communicative expression under a bushel in the more classical character roles.

(Moslem), the voice of most of the Algerian students? Is he aware that all Algerians (non-French) in France, students included, are suspects?

Even if an Algerian student took risks to study in France, how could he, unless he had no moral conscience, fully reconcile himself with those who are killing his people and trying to deny their aspirations for self-government and independence? Could a French student in Germany enjoy his or her studies while the Nazis were ravaging his country in 1940? Professor Deloffre would agree with me when I say that this would have been fiddling while Rome was burning.

Professor Deloffre's contention, "who is right, or wrong, I cannot say. That is the matter of conscience," reminds one of a 19th century jingoism. "Right or wrong, my country! by jingo!" He is entitled to his own opinions, but it is wishful thinking to try to be so impartial while concealing the undemocratic views held by the French colonial administrators in Algeria.

A drowning man will grasp a serpent. Some colonial powers in Africa today are trying to put the clock back even if it means doing away with democracy which they daily preach. It is a pity to see people employing their intellect to corrupt themselves. Nature — by allowing them to taste the fruits of democracy in their home lands — has been kinder to them than they to her.

were sometimes ragged and uncertain; the arpeggios were handled gracefully. Unfortunately, the ending lost its punch as half the choir went off pitch in one way or another.

The University of Western Ontario Choir presented something of a mixed bag in their selection of songs. They opened with Mueller's Great God and God of our salvation. The choir seemed rather lackluster about the whole thing. Nor did they let one spark of enthusiasm about Mendelssohn's How Lovely are the Messengers escape them. They sang The Blue Bird by Stanford with a great deal of delicacy, and handled the staccato passages in Elgar's Serenade easily and gracefully. In the Negro Spiritual Little David Play on your Harp, the choir showed some spirit. This choir didn't seem to make any mistakes, but they didn't do anything inspired either. They were also too well integrated.

There were many things that were enjoyable about this concert; the choirs all showed pleasing tone and chose songs which showed this to good advantage. There should have been more people out to hear them.

ODDS&amp;ENDS

By Alan Walker

a dubious stand; wkr gets his

A small smiling tornado ripped down the stairs to The Varsity office last Friday. I've seen enough movies to know what is supposed to happen to "courageous" newspapermen who print nasty things about powerful people. Now I believe it. In the middle of a staff meeting he arrived, the influential SAC commissioner.

"She never said any such thing, and I have 26 witnesses to prove it," he shrieked.

Relations between politicians and newsmen being what they are, I couldn't resist saying, "Naturally you can get 26 witnesses."

Those were the magic words. He stood there quivering with rage. His chattering gleaming teeth blinded me. Suddenly he lunged, and before I could move he was holding me down on a table, preparing to batter my head in.

"I've taken all I can from you, Walker," he screamed hysterically, spraying me with foam.

Then he paused, apparently becoming aware of the remnants of the staff meeting, who were just standing there, witnessing around.

"If it wasn't that I never hit a man with glasses . . ." he mused, slightly loosening his death grip on my sweater.

This statement puzzled me somewhat, because the glasses had fallen off immediately after he grabbed me, and were now lying safely on the table. However I started clutching for them frantically, thinking that if I could get them back on; (a) I might prevent myself from becoming permanently affixed to the table and (b) if he did hit me, I might have some chance of finding him to hit him back.

I couldn't reach them. He had that extra surge of power granted only to Marshal Gilles de Raiz by a full moon. Two reporters pulled him off.

I put my glasses back on, watched the maddened SAC man wipe his chin and took them off again. I'd seen enough.

As he proceeded to list all the names he could think of, I checked to see that all my ribs were in position, replaced my epiglottis, and tried to keep my repartee down to "yes" and "no."

He made several remarks about general character, muttered something about a "perverted mind" and left, white with rage.

As soon after the shocking ordeal as possible, I comforted myself with my criminal code.

230: A person commits an assault when, without the consent of another person or with the consent, where it is obtained by fraud, (a) he applied force intentionally to the person of the other, directly or indirectly, or (b) he attempts or threatens, by an act or gesture, to apply force to the person of the other, if he has or causes the other to believe upon reasonable grounds that he has present ability to effect his purpose.

231: (1) Every one who commits a common assault is guilty of (a) an indictable offence and is liable for imprisonment for two years, or (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

However, after reading the sections dealing with temporary insanity and irresistible impulse, with the beautiful phrase "place of safe keeping," I have decided action would be a waste of time.

In the next issue of Mad, which should hit the newsstands in a week or so, the public will be introduced to a fascinating new game which I predict will replace tic tac toe. It's called MAD YOX. For instance,

"Somehow a military wedding frightens me, Herman."

It's always the O that does the talking.

O

"Darling, about your bad breath . . ."

There are sick MAD YOX's too, naturally.

"I swear I'll jump if you come any closer."

Go ahead, doodle some on all that lovely white space on the rest of this spread.

Girl's Volleyball Team Finishes In 3rd Place

By SALLY BAMBRIDGE
Montreal, Feb. 13—The train trip to Montreal by the girl's Intercollegiate Volleyball teams looked (and sounded) like a six-way university sing-song mixed with a marathon bridge game. By Friday, however, this spirit of camaraderie turned into keen competition.

Western practiced briefly—then sat confidently at the sidelines watching the other teams work out mistakes. Western was the team to beat.

In their first game, against McGill, Toronto could do no wrong—they were in high spirits, and played accurately. The McGill team was disorganized and "punch-happy", leaving themselves open for Toronto's winning plays. The Blues won the match 24-11, 15-11.

Toronto easily defeated OAC in their second match. Viuu Kanep, in spite of her ankle injury, showed her usual form in those unreturnable spikes, set up perfectly by Mary Lou O'Hagen and Mary Lowther.

Toronto suffered a disconcerting loss in their first game with McMaster, but didn't show their "discouragement complex"—they forged ahead to win the next two games and the match, 25-4, 21-10.

At the end of Friday's matches,

Toronto and Western were tied for first place, with Queen's two points behind. Queen's had lost their match, a very close one, to the Western team.

It took a bit of chasing on the part of the Toronto coach, Mrs. Vernon, to round up the exuberant team members, and convince them to go to bed that night (Happy Birthday Norma.)

They had to play Queen's, then Western on Saturday morning—and it looked tough.

It was, in the first game with Queen's, the Toronto gals seemed nervous and a bit tired, although Judy Cansfield's powerful overhead serve started them off well. They fell to Queen's, 19-9, but began the second game with the urge to win. In spite of Queen's happy attitude on winning or losing that seems to pull them through so often, Toronto made a great comeback.

This game, and the tie-breaker that followed were the most exciting ones of the tournament. It was a fine exhibition of teamwork, sportsmanship, and good volleyball on both sides.

Viuu Kanep, Phyllis Hart, and "D-D" Fitzroy pulled the team out of many tough spots with their accurate spikes. Queen's squeezed out a victory over Toronto by two points in overtime to win the match.

Western, in the final match, provide to be much for Toronto, and easily won both games. Western's team played like a well-organized machine. Even Toronto's best blocking combinations could not stop the spikes of Yvette Walton of Western. Toronto fought hard, but Western really was invincible.

The final standings of the six universities were: Western 10, Queen's 8, Toronto 6, OAC 2, McMaster 2, McGill 0. Congratulations to the Toronto team, and their coach, on good sportsmanship, and fine play!

Defeat Macmen Cagers In Tie For 3rd Place

Marauders' superior ball handling and accurate shooting by guard Mike Schertz gave them an early period lead that Varsity snipers failed to overcome in the first half. McMaster lead 21-17 at the ten minute mark of the period and 33-29 at the half.

Blues stormed over the Marauders' defenders early in the second half to take a lead they never relinquished. Blues led 64-54 with five minutes remaining, sparked by fast breaking layups by guards Peter Potter and Mike Muir.

Time ran out as a McMaster rally threatened to tie the contest in the final seconds of play.

Marauders' lanky Doug Marshall topped all scorers with 22 points while Robert Raphael added 12 to the McMaster cause, Master cause.

Muir scored 16 points for Varsity, Potter, Dan Norman, and Jim McGuire each contributing 13.

The victory puts Varsity into a two way tie for 3rd place with McMaster in the Western division of the Intercollegiate league.

University of Toronto Blues, came from behind three times to edge McMaster University 70-68 in an Intercollegiate senior basketball contest at Hart House Saturday night.

Blues Fall 6-2 As Laval Near Hockey Title

By DAVE GRINER

Quebec City, Feb. 12—The end of an era came here tonight as Laval University Rouge et Or all but ended the title hopes of the Varsity Blues by defeating them 6-2 in a Senior Intercollegiate Hockey game at the O.T.J. Arena before a standing room crowd of delighted fans.

Varsity, winner of the title for the last five years running, were never in the game after the first period as the "best ever" Laval team finished strong with three third period goals to all but clinch the championship.

As it was, Blues were unlucky in the first period when incompetent officiating helped Laval score two goals. The first was off-side, and the second occurred when the referee, standing at centre ice, lost sight of the puck and decided that it had entered the Varsity net.

Blues managed to notch two of their own by Jim Simpson and John Gatten to end the period at 2-2. Laval went ahead 3-2 with four minutes left in the second period and never looked back.

Leo Bourgault was the Laval hero as he pumped home three goals including the winner in the second period. Other scores were by Claude Duguay (2), and Bob Landry.

The key play in the game came early in the third period when Varsity defenceman Harry Neale made a brilliant end-to-end rush, followed by a perfect passout only to see his mate fail to capitalize on the opportunity.

Laval were full value for the win, flashing a fast, well-organized offense. Although he failed to get in among the goals, Michel Lagace was the games outstanding rusher. Several times he went end-to-end, to the accompaniment of frenzied cheering, only to have a Varsity defenceman or the goalie foil his effort.

Bob Giroux was brilliant in the Varsity nets, his efforts to keep Toronto in the game behind a panicking defence were beyond praise. He could not be faulted on any of the six goals that passed him.

Blues were far from their best for the game, the so-called "third line" of Jim Simpson, Gord Gow, Ev Rush and/or Al Orcheson were the pick of the forwards, while only Harry Neale and Ian Sinclair were up to par on a leaky defence.

The loss meant the virtual elimination of Varsity from the title hunt, although it was not until the loss the next night to Montreal that the humiliation was complete.

Carabins Win By 3-2 Over Varsity Blues

Montreal, Feb. 14 — Bob Tremblay scored the tying and winning goals Saturday night as University of Montreal Carabins edged University of Toronto Blues 3-2 in Intercollegiate Senior Hockey League play.

It was the first win of the season for last-place Carabins and Toronto's second defeat in two days.

Friday night, Blues lost 6-2 to Laval University in Quebec City.

Bob Tremblay scored at 10:11 and at 11:00 of the third period to give Montreal the game after Toronto had run up a 2-1 lead.

Harry Neale and Jim Murchie scored for the Blues and Claude Duguay for the Carabins.

Jean Louis Bourget played a standout game in the Montreal goal.

Thirteen penalties were handed out, eight to Montreal, including majors to Gord Epp of Toronto and Jean Paquette for fighting at 6:28 of the second period. None of the penalties figured in the scoring.

First Period
1. Montreal, Duguay
Paquette, Mongeon) ..... 19:59
Penalties: Gatten 3:18, Duguay 5:37, Neale 8:36.

Second Period

(Sinclair, Murchie) ..... 14:44
Penalties: Allan 2:36, Epp (major) 6:28, Paquette (minor and major) 6:28, Dionne 16:08, Neale 16:38, Robert 16:38.

Third Period
3. Toronto, Murchie (Epp) ..... 8:35
4. Montreal, Tremblay ..... 10:11
5. Montreal, Tremblay
(Roussy) ..... 11:00
Penalties: LeGault 3:13, Hicken 11:16, Bourget 17:05.

JIM MAGUIRE (25) jumps for a rebound with an unidentified McMaster player during Saturday night's game at Hart House, won by Varsity 70-68. Blues are now tied with McMaster for third place in the Western division. Maguire was one of Blues' top scorers with 13 points.

comment by dave griner

Varsity Blues finally met their end this weekend, an end that in my mind has been inevitable since that 4-2 loss to McGill in January.

There can be little doubt that the shift of title from Toronto to Laval will prove a tremendous boost to the morale of the other schools. Varsity have lost at least once to every team they have played and the myth of invincibility has been destroyed forever by the double loss this weekend.

Watching the game in Quebec, I could not help but be impressed by the tremendous enthusiasm of the Laval fans. One of them kept calling me a "chicken" while another referred to me as a "maudi cochon."

Every goal scored against Varsity was greeted by hoots of derisive laughter on one hand and rapturous cheers on the other.

The O. T. J. rink where the game was played (I never did find out what the initials stood for) must rank with the freaks. It seems to be almost as wide as it is long, and spectators are accommodated on only two of the four sides.

The disappointing factor was the manner in which Varsity lost. At times they appeared to panic before the Laval attack, and only the skill of goalie Bob Giroux brought them through some of the attacks unscathed.

Despite the obvious bias of the refereeing, it had nothing to do with the outcome. Laval had too many "horses" for this edition of the Blues. Many officials connected with the Rouge et Or consider this their best team ever, an opinion shared by Varsity Assistant coach Jack Wheldrake who played against them when they first entered the league.

Testimony to Varsity Boxing Coach Tony Canzano's popularity is seen when you count half a dozen out of town visitors who had come to Montreal expressly to see his fighters in action.

AT A-NIGHT

TWO TITLES Blue Squads Capture Fencing, Gymnastics

University of Toronto won two Intercollegiate titles at the Physical and Health Education faculty's 20th anniversary athletic night celebrations at Hart House Saturday night.

Varsity fencers, under the guidance of fencing master Julius Alpar, captured their sixth consecutive Intercollegiate fencing crown and the Charles Walters trophy by winning 36 bouts in the foil, epee and sabre events. Runner-up McGill University claimed 25 victories while University of Montreal won 20 bouts.

Sandy Bell of U of T won the individual honors in foil with a 5-1 won lost record.

The epee event ended in a three-way tie for individual first place. In the final play-offs George Nagy of McGill defeated Varsity's Paul Nightingale and Marty Nash to win the honors.

Courtesy, Ery., of McGill gained the individual crown for the sabre event.

The George Tully trophy, awarded to the fencer showing best in sportsmanship and style was awarded to Jean Carriere of University of Montreal.

Varsity gymnasts upset defending champion McGill, winning all six gymnastics events to bring back the Caron trophy to U of T.

Pal and Barry Brooker of U of T tied for individual honors and the Werry trophy, amassing 50.9 points each.

Fencing: Foil—Toronto 7, McGill 2; Montreal 5, Toronto 4; McGill 6, Montreal 3. Epee—Toronto 5, McGill 4; Toronto 8, Montreal 1; Montreal 2; Toronto 7, Montreal 2; Toronto 5, McGill 4.

Blood Drive Near Crisis Hospital Supply In Peril

The lethargic start to the University of Toronto Red Cross Blood Campaign which opened Monday has drawn an urgent plea from city officials.

J. B. Prendergast, Volunteer Chairman of the Free Blood Service said yesterday: "Toronto hospitals are depending on U of T students for blood during the next two weeks. If the 1,900-pint target is not met, blood deliveries will have to be cut and operations postponed. Unless individual students respond to the urgent need for blood donations this week and next, the Blood Bank will be in a state of emergency".

Only 336 pints were collected in the first two days of the campus drive which runs to Feb. 29. At least 600 pints were expected during that period, Red Cross officials said last night.

Students who do not honor their pledge cards are proving the major deterrent to the success of the campaign, officials added.

Nancy Davison, SAC Student Service Commissioner notes the U of T blood drive run last October also started slowly: "However, this time the need is urgent," she added.

She urged all students who have made appointments to keep them. "Those who don't have pledge cards can go to any clinic during the drive. Clinics are at the Sir Daniel Wilson Residence today, and at the School of Nursing tomorrow and Friday," she concluded.

Mental Health Chief Says Maturity Rare in Wedlock

The chief of the Mental Health Division of the Ontario Government, last night told a University of Toronto marriage course audience, there is "probably not one mature person in this group including the speaker."

Dr. J. S. McNeel told the Knox College marriage course that maturity is a goal to which we all attain and most likely never reach. "It consists in partly accepting the traits as they are and in predisposing one's self to adaptability."

He said, "Marriage is a harmonious relationship between two people with different roles and common goals who share common experiences and support each other, eventually passing on life to other generations."

"Working towards maturity is itself a maturing experience; so is having children although this is a pretty rugged way to mature," he said.

Speaking of the passing on of life and love he said "sex education does not mean the knowledge of the human anatomy, but is the sum of attitudes we have retained since childhood. We should pass on the ability to live in a creative relationship."

"Many people," he said, "are afraid to examine the emotions of marriage. They simply want to experience the thrill, but there is a time and a place to let thrill and emotion hold sway without question, yet one should not refuse to question and attempt to understand these feelings."

"A young person knows best if this or that is the better person to marry; and their parents know best if this is not the person to marry. Do not ignore a mass of opinion if it is all in agreement."

Dr. McNeel concluded, "To those on the threshold, I say enter marriage with a spirit of adventure and an expectation of growth."

Donation

McGoey Dries Up...

By John McGoey

They drained me yesterday.

I was among a group of blood donors at Howard Ferguson Hall, University College yesterday, who went through an experience many others on this campus are expected to share soon.

I've given blood before, but I had forgotten what it's like, so it was with considerable timidity I faced this news assignment. For some reason, News Editor Terry Bourke could not go himself.

As I waited in the lineup, three charming ladies from Physical and Occupational Therapy told me a number of students in their faculty had the same trouble—

Peace Union

A group of students are forming a Student Peace Union at the University of Toronto.

Spearheading the organization are Don Roebuck (II UC), Pete Horbatiuk (I Vic) and Norman Johnson (SPS).

First meeting is today at 4:15 in Room 10, University College. Johnson said last night: "To be against war is not enough; we must be actively for peace."

The SPU expects to work in cooperation with the U of T Faculty Committee for Nuclear Disarmament.

Membership is open to students of all political opinions—pacifists and non-pacifists.

"We welcome everyone who still believes there are constructive alternatives to war and military preparedness in the present international situation," Johnson said.

business too pressing to allow them to donate.

We were among many yesterday who remembered the University of Toronto must donate enough blood to supply Metro hospitals for the next two weeks.

A soft-spoken girl prepared me for the next stage. She fired some rapid questions to see if I qualified to bleed. I did. She suddenly grabbed my hand and pricked my finger lightly to test for iron content and blood type.

Then we were lined up against the wall to wait our time. The room was full of long cots. Squads of ladies in blue gowns were helping people, hurrying people, and comforting first-time donors.

My comforter was a pretty brunette, about 22 and 5'9"; that's a lot of comfort.

While she asked me a sneaky, diverting question, her companion, a registered nurse, quietly introduced the needle to my left arm.

This was quite painless, but she should have given me time to complain. At the same time, I was trying to take notes.

They tried to talk me out of this three times, for apparently the average donor doesn't take notes.

Now there is nothing as boring as lying there while the blood bottle slowly fills up. I turned to the girl on the bed next to me and asked brightly, "Does it hurt?"

"No! It doesn't hurt. It doesn't feel sore, and I don't feel like fainting," she said. I later heard a nurse mention the gal had no nerves.

The bottle was full, and the bandage applied.

Students of technique should study these blood officials: they're the smoothest needlers in the business.

I found the POTS girls again, and we all sat around a table drinking coffee and munching cookies.

Some wanted to smoke, but we were told, "Not for one hour, dearie."

Blood drained, acquaintances made and numbers taken, I went home.

Try it gently. It's almost painless, and the girls are awfully friendly.

... and donees

IT TOOK THIS MUCH BLEEDING to put Jane Maroos, a Toronto office employee back in the pink again. During the next two weeks Red Cross authorities will be looking to U of T students for blood bank contributions. At the moment the U of T blood campaign is in a slump as it aims at a 1900-pint target.

Predict Winners In St. Michael's Catholic Election

St. Michael's College has launched its election campaign to pick next year's student government representatives.

Two newly created offices are being contested for the first time: permanent men's rep to the U of T Students' Administrative Council, and Women's rep to SAC.

The offices were recently separated from the Vice President's chores by a SMC referendum and constitutional amendment.

Nominations run from Friday at 9:00 a.m. to Sunday 9:00 p.m., Feb. 19-21.

And those nominated face the polls Feb. 25. Voting is in the rotunda, Carr Hall.

It's expected to be a close race for all 14 offices this year. For the first time SMC graduate students will be able to vote on the office for the professional and graduate rep.

This is because recent legislation demands society fees from anyone connected with the college.

In most Canadian and American universities graduates are separated from the undergraduate body. The result is no control can be exercised over the graduate who uses facilities paid for by the ordinary student.

The SMC legislation will bring graduates into line with the wishes of the council. At the same time it has opened all undergraduate activities.

Anglicans Blast Racism, Bombs

Latest in a wave of anti-nuclear protests by university groups has come from a conference of Anglican university students in Toronto.

Delegations to the second national Canterbury Council from the University of Toronto, Carleton University in Ottawa and the University of Western Ontario Saturday signed a resolution calling for a nuclear testing ban.

Delegations from 18 other universities unofficially approved this resolution and one on South Africa's race policies, making both resolutions unanimous, but must get their position confirmed on their own campuses.

The resolutions will then be forwarded to the federal government.

The first resolution condemned the recent French atomic blast on the Sahara which, it said, broke an unofficial ban on nuclear testing, and urged the Canadian government to influence France and other nations towards stopping further tests.

The second condemned South Africa's racial policies and Canada's failure to take a stand against them.

CTB In Windies

West Indian writers, like those of Canada and Australia, dissatisfied with their homelands and contemptuous of native standards are migrating to foreign countries, University of Toronto Claude T. Bissell said Saturday.

He was speaking at a graduation of the University College of the West Indies at Ocherios, near Kingston, Jamaica.

Dr. Bissell said it's up to the university to counter this migratory movement by providing outlets for the publication of artist's work.

"Universities can give to national feeling and pride a reflective character," he added.

Hart House Candidates Would Bar All Women

Women may be banned completely from Hart House, including the Arbor Room, if some members running for this year's house committee are elected.

This ban would mean the exclusion of university women from the art gallery in the House on Wednesdays, the only day they are admitted, and from special functions such as jazz concerts and official openings of clubs.

"Any such move would raise grave constitutional problems," a member of the present house committee said last night, "since it would have to be ratified by the board of stewards."

The candidates proposing the ban also want to assure there will be no infiltration if Hart House expands with a new wing in the next few years.

Feminist forces on the house committee and among those already nominated are said to be rallying against ban.

Nominations for the March 2 elections of five committees close this Friday.

Grave Robbers

Rumors of attempted break-ins at the Anatomy Building, and suspicious nocturnal activities in its many cemeteries have been attributed to the production crew of Trinity's Arsenic and Old Lace. It seems that this charming piece of Hart House fare is in need of a number of cadavers in time for dress rehearsal tonight. The macabre plot of Arsenic and Old Lace involves a display at several points during the play of a number of corpses in various stages of decay.

The director, John Douglas, could not be reached for comment last night and the producer denied responsibility for the alleged thefts. He said properties were not his department.

Metropolitan Police see no connection between the two incidents officially but witnesses' descriptions of the grave-robbers tally with those of the Anatomy Building burglars.

spu

Among the dozens of extra-curricular activities that fight for our attention every year, some do so simply on grounds of fun, or comic relief from the academic struggle, others on the grounds that it is "the responsibility of students to do so-and-so."

Some, such as the student exchange weekends try to combine both reasons, offering an outlet both for student high spirits and the sense of student responsibility.

The appeal to student responsibility is in part, we feel, an illegitimate appeal. It always becomes painfully obvious at about this time of year, that as students we really have only one responsibility: to study; not to consort with other students, not to hold "student seminars" that communicate to us a minimum of insight and a maximum of sociability, but to learn.

But over and above our responsibilities as students as human beings. These call on us simply to act when circumstances demand of us that we act.

A recent example of this is the Nuclear Testing Petition, a movement to meet a specific problem by mobilizing the opinions of those who happen to be gathered here. The movement did not prove that university students are wiser, or more moral, or more peaceful, or even more intelligent than anyone else. It only proved that the young who just now happen to be students have as much to say when necessary as anyone else.

The demonstration at the French Consulate was similar. The demonstrators could have been any group that hates murder. They happened to be students.

A third example comes today at 4.15 with the organizational meeting of the Student Peace Union on this campus.

In spite of its name, your responsibility to this group and through it to yourselves is not primarily as students, but as human beings who are here now.

The meeting today is one of the few events on this campus outside of lecture-rooms that exists to meet a present and disturbingly vital problem. It does not have to manufacture topics for discussion. It has one.

Nor is it presupposing a solution. It is waiting for you to offer one. There has possibly not been a more important meeting on campus for a long time, even if the results are not immediately tangible on a large scale. Please go to it.

CAMPUS PROFILE

The University's Mo

by terry bourke

Phil Fairman stared hard at the chess board. He took a long drag on his cigarette, exhaling the smoke in a lazy elliptical ring around one of the plastic chess men.

Then, reaching across the board, he picked up a knight and saddled it on a new square.

"Checkmate, like I have you boq," he called.

There was a round of coffees. It was Phil's sixth straight that morning. He balanced the steaming mug precariously close to the table's edge at the end of the line of five empty cups already sitting in front of him.

Someone offered to play cards.

Phil dealt.

And amidst the slap of cards, mumbled bids, and the ring of coins hitting the table we talked with Phil Fairman, a second year artsman who tags himself University of Toronto's most "Unangular Student."

During the hour Phil's conversation ebbed and flowed on girls, anthropology, roulette wheels, the future of paperbacks, girls, weather zones, bus fares, music, girls, chess moves, psychology, cigarette, filters, girls, religion, the perfect martini, instant matches, discrimination, and oh yes, girls.

Phil rarely leaves the Tuck Shop, a coffee sanctuary nestled quietly in a corner of Hart House, off limits to females.

And chances are anyone dropping into the shop between 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., any week day, any week, any term has seen Fairman.

As a matter of fact, Art Lebrocq, the man who pours coffee in the Tuck Shop, will tell you Phil is as permanent a fixture on the premises as the floor.

Phil, a tall slim student, with a face well sprinkled with freckles and a head topped with shorn, wavy, auburn hair, has made the Tuck Shop his own personal "alma mater."

This is his private mecca.

And it's here he manages to surround himself continually with a harem of friends who pass in and out of the coffee shop during the day. It's here he entertains, and occupies himself with a list of activities he labels "positive, concrete, down to earth, and intellectual."

We wondered about the word "intellectual."

"Well, boq," he said, fingering his chin and contorting his eyebrows, "maybe intellectual is a little too strong. How 'bout social? Yes, that's it. Social. I look at it this way. Most students spend three laissez-faire years at university and never acquire delicate savoir faire . . . in the social graces. You know. Like cards, dice, the right way to hold a cigarette, and stir a drink."

He set his cards on the table and at a moment, to light a cigarette.

"I like to think now that I'm preparing those out of town business trips, you know, let's face it, the wheels of business don't steam to roll from the front office. The signs are made at parties and out of town trips."

Phil never calls anyone by their first name. Everyone is a "boq." Nobody knows just what a "boq" is. Not even Phil. But he sounds of the word. There doesn't have to be a reason.

"What about lectures?" we asked. "How do you average a week?"

"The odd one, boq, sure the odd ones are particularly like classes you know. They really pain me. When you get right down to it they're a nuisance. In Arts that is. I Spanish the other day."

"Why Spanish?"

"You see, boq," he grinned, "there's I was hard up for a date and I wanted to know. There was something else. I wanted to know my term mark was high enough to pass it."

He scratched his head. "Now that I think of it I was curious to find out if I had a term."

We said nothing.

Phil drinks coffee like an addict. He is a smoker. In one day he puffs his way through several packs of cigarettes and downs "too" coffees.

A typical Fairman day would make you wonder. He described one for us, something like this.

Phil rises at 11 a.m. He always rises at 11 a.m. He says he was even born at 11 a.m. never able to "quite kick the habit."

His early classes suffer. He can't remember he last went to an early class. But he's not.

At 12 o'clock sharp (he times himself by hour factory whistles), Fairman trots into the Shop, orders his first coffee, and sits down at his favorite table — the green one with the red hair.

The red he points out because it's a quiet easy on the "early morning nerves."

With a coffee in his hand, and a hanging from his lips, he is ready to go to work. He reads the Globe and Mail from cover to cover. He reads The Varsity. He reads French poetry. He carefully examines the nude on his Eversharp pencil. He

I am absolutely sick, sick, sick of hunting for hours on end (namely, 4 1/2 minutes) through the Varsity hodge podge for various articles. Man, this could really get a guy. Art reviews on the sports page, sports on the editorial page. Assimilation is great, but really . . .

Let's get a bit of organization. I mean, you don't have to wear button-downs and all, if you know what I mean, but . . . like, I'm confused.

protest

Dear Sir:

I am writing this letter to stop, if possible, a trend in campus attitude to the activities of the SAC-EAC Weekends Committee this year; an attitude which I found best and most cruelly expressed in your recent article entitled "TarHeel Hangover".

It seems that there is an impression generally held, and most particularly by your newspaper, that the two Weekend Exchanges sponsored by the SAC; namely, the Carabin Exchange with L'Universite de Montreal and the Tar Heel Exchange with the University of North Carolina, are nothing but wild "party" weekends, whose ultimate purpose is an all-out binge. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

The purpose of both Weekends is to promote mutual understanding and better relations between Toronto students and the students of two other universities whose cultural and social background is different from our own.

Each Weekend exchange consists of two weekends, one a visit and one a return, in order that all participants may examine the truth of the differing backgrounds personally. Discussions, both formal and informal, are the most important and most memorable part of the exchanges, and the main criterion for selection of participants is thinking and discussing ability.

Frankly, I am disappointed that the wrong impression has been taken. Ask any Toronto Carabin or Tar Heel, and he or she will corroborate the opinion that the Weekends are highly worthwhile, and indeed invaluable to the life of our university.

In particular, I should like to point out that statements attributed to Miss Virginia Lomax, this year's Weekends Chairman, which talked of "liquor" and "hangovers" were entirely false, and in fact not made by her or anyone. What Miss Lomax deserves is not a subtle insult, but a sincere "thank-you" from the university for all her hard work and sacrifice which made this year's Weekends the most successful to date.

If an apology is not forthcoming, as indeed it should be, then I hope that this will serve as a full denial of statements attributed to Miss Lomax, and also as a truer picture of the activities of the Weekends Committee.

Thank you for your attention,

Yours truly,

John R. Wood, II Victoria
Co-Chairman, Weekends Committee

Dear Sir:

You and the staff of The Varsity are to be commended for the keen foresight you displayed in publishing this year's first twelve page edition of The friends. Sometimes he may play a fast hand of poker.

TODAY'S ISSUE: John McGoe and a story about John McGoe drying up by guess who — John McGoe, Fearless, fluffy, Fredrick Fred minus two dollars host, Fran Maine in love with blubs, Pam Thompson, a divine Doukhobor, Divine Doug Peppiatt who says he is not only handsome, rich, talented but a really very nice guy, gee, Barb Salalaika Amiel funny, funny, funny, Lee Richardson gone forever, an orchid for Jack Giles, crispy, brown, golden, homogenized bacon, a rifle bolt for lover bunny under the table, and the craziest, funniest, talkingest, coffeest, chessiest, sittingest, un-readingest, earthquakingest, sock washingest, rum drinkingest, girl chasingest, card playingest, verrest, lankiest, sleepiest, chess cheatingest, sock washingest, easteriest, whipped creamingest, god blessingest, muffingest, Hart Houseingest, the most up to datingest guy in the whole wide world, PHIL BOQ FAIRMAN. Thirty. Snapping away behind the little ole' lens this issue: Little Ole' George Harper, and the most love writingest photographer in the whole universe, Jacques Passional Roberge. "Suffer yourselves to be blamed, imprisoned, condemned; suffer yourselves to be hanged; but publish your opinions; it is not a right, it is a duty."

Rain, hail, earthquake, snow, hurricane, this is daily routine for Phil. He never breaks it.

1 p.m. and Phil moves up stairs to the Hart House Common Room for the regular noon hour sing song.

"I like to sing, boq," he says, I like to sing loud, very loud. I can express myself in a creative way and at the same time blow off any hidden inhibitions. You know."

We didn't know about "inhibitions."

After the sing song, Phil rests. He finds an empty chesterfield in the common room or House Library, stretches out, and rests.

An hour later he's back at his table. Friends come and friends go. Phil is always there.

And until the shop closes he talks, plays cards, chess, and drinks more coffee.

Chess is a constant challenge for him. He started playing last year. He's never stopped. Once he played 28 games in a row, beginning early one night and winding up late the next day.

There have been many odd moments in Phil's life. Somehow Fairman has always managed to be smack in the middle of them. His friends remember.

"It was a while ago," says Bill Rudy, a long time pal of Phil, "and we were on our way to the bowling alley. We were waiting at the corner of a busy intersection for the lights to change. Phil was impatient. He marched into the middle of the traffic and began doing the Charleston. The traffic halted, one cop was very puzzled, but we crossed."

There were other times. There was the time in high school Phil decided to have a quick smoke in the wash-room. A "No Smoking" sign hung on the wall. The principal walked in. Phil ditched the cigarette by cuffing it up his sleeve. But the principal wasn't fooled. Fairman's suit caught fire.

Horse races used to fascinate him. He bet regularly, lost often.

"Those were the days. The good days. But with the high tuition fees and the long distances to the track I decided to postpone the ponies until I graduate."

"You must study at night," we queried.

"When I have time, boq. You see I have string quartet Monday, orchestra practice Tuesday, bridge Wednesday, theater Thursday, pool Friday, a dance Saturday, and poker Sunday. Sometimes I have poker Wednesday and bridge Sunday. It depends. You know?"

When Phil studies is his secret. He wants to keep it. We let him.

Phil has met many girls. Some have liked him; others have slapped his face. Nevertheless he likes them all. He has taken many out. And to make sure he never forgets any of them, he's drawn up an elaborate index system.

This female "Who's Who" inventory, records when he met the girl, the day, the time, her birthday, age, middle name, the number of times he took her out, when he stopped taking her out, why he stopped taking her out, her phone, address, measurements, nationality, and color of her eyes. It's a big catalogue and it fills many pages.

There were highlights in our conversation with Phil Fairman.

On Women: — I'd like good girls, but the good die young, and who wants dead ones.

On Chess: — When I see I'm getting beat — I cheat. Or — let's have a republican game, like no kings.

On Poetry: — I prefer blank verse—like nothing written on the page.

On Religion: — I don't want to go to heaven. I want to go where all my friends are.

On Drinking: — Ooh, favorite is chocolate with crushed pineapple coke, plus a dash of tobasco sauce, two fingers of Demorsky dressing, a jigger of diluted vanilla, and one drop of V-8, all vegetable juice. Serve piping hot.

On Hart House Coffee: — Our socks are always well washed.

On Marriage: — For couples . . . I guess . . .

On the U of T Bookstore: — In promulgating my esoteric cogitations and contemporaneous decantings, I find it expedient to refrain from enunciating my reflections on that (censored) bookstore.

But don't get him wrong.

He respects the university and academic life. He admits that he studies — when it's absolutely necessary.

"Some people plug, plug, plug all the time. This is the extreme. I just happen to be at the other extreme. Life is too short for details," he says.

Such is Phil Fairman, U of T's easiest going student. He has a philosophy, "Don't worry. It gets you nowhere." At 23, Phil lives up to his philosophy—in a very perfect way.

Phil Fairman may be a little eccentric. We don't know. If he is, it's an eccentricity even the angels must smile at.

The last verse of Fairman's favorite song "Saint James Infirmary Blues", tells of the feelings of a man whose love just perished.

"Let her go, let her go, God bless her, Where ever she may be She can search this wide, wide world over, But she'll never find another like me."

We know it . . .

Arsenic!

Arsenic and old Lace, Joseph Kesselring's famous farce, provides the excuse for the opening of another Trinity College production tomorrow in Hart House Theatre. It continues Friday and Saturday nights.

The plot is, in a word, murder, thus the allusion to arsenic.

Tickets are at the Hart House Theatre Box Office, and to students they are $1.25.

how now brown cow

In coffee shops and restaurants around the campus, gallons of something called "chocolate drink" are consumed every day. Some people have been wondering, if it isn't milk, what is it?

Well don't worry, it's milk. Admittedly the carton looks a bit suspicious when the words "chocolate drink" are forgotten among sentences such as "milk is the chief form of calcium", etc.

But the key to the problem lies in the words "not less than two per cent milk fat." Under the ruling of the Milk Industry Board of the Ontario government, any milky product containing less than 3.25 per cent milk fat cannot be called milk. And if the chocolate syrup were added to pure milk, having a fat content of about four per cent, the drink would be too rich.

So it's called drink, and it's just as fattening, and it's pure and all that. Drink it in good health.

living off the land

Do you remember the university student who is living in a couple of rooms north of U of T and is existing on $20 a month, which he gets from various places including running copy for The Varsity?

He had a good meal yesterday. He captured a pigeon which was wandering around on the fire escape of his apartment.

alcoholics persimious

There is an old piece of folk-lore that says Vodka can be drunk without anybody noticing, unless of course you happen to pass out. This is a lie.

Just to find out, last night I had a small quantity of a well-known brand of the Russian alcohol. (It was excellent.) Then I sallied forth to meet my colleagues.

"You've been drinking, I can smell it," I was immediately told. I denied this.

But after this happened twice more, I was finally convinced. Maybe I couldn't smell it, but my non-alcoholic (at the moment) friends could.

So this accounts for today's rather disjointed column. But if any SAC members have any ideas, they will have a hard time proving I drank it in the office.

like, how free can a press be?

The Victoria College newspaper apparently doesn't believe in letting the students know what is going on. In the issue of The Strand which appeared just before the Vic elections, there was no list of candidates. Instead there was a column, written by "Three Blind Mice", plugging contestants for four specific spots.

Anyway, the Vic students thought for themselves, even though faced with some opposition. Only two of the columnist's favorites made it.

born thirty years too soon

It's fun to watch senility set in at the age of 21. Walking foggily to the office yesterday morning, I watched a U of T medman creating a snowball. By the time I got near him he was bouncing it up and down in his hand, getting ready to throw it at something or someone. When he saw me he looked sheepish and tried to conceal the chilly sticky mass between hands.

I walked past him, and then turned around just in time to see a fiendish grin break over his face. He reared back and threw the snowball at a tree as hard as he could. All the frustrations of his life were in that toes. Then he put his hands in his pockets, hunched his head down between his shoulders and became a student again.

as a matter of fact

This sick joke has been making the rounds of the newspaper industry lately. A young reporter had the habit of writing his stories too long. An editor suggested he write them as short as possible. The next item the reporter handed in was this: "Rodney Fenster looked up the shaft at the Royal Hotel this morning to see if the elevator was on its way down. It was. Age 25."

Photo Winners Named

The results of the Hart House photo contest were announced last night.

For the next two weeks, 84 prints will be hanging in the Hart House Art Gallery.

Top winner in the junior division was Joe McKenzie (SGS). Runner up was Riho Pild (III UC).

Dr. D. A. Sprott took the senior championship with "Winter Mood." Bill Kantymir took the runner up position with "Submission".

Kantymir also took first place in the photo essay division with "This Sport Curling", and also nabbed the runner up position in the same event with "Hula Hoop Contest". Terry Shaw received honorable mention with "Flood".

For the third year in a row, Ron Carr took the Karsh trophy with "Campus Cossack", a photo from the Meds show "Daffydil" of a student several feet in the air, doing a Russian dance leap.

Carr also took second place with "Between Classes". Honorable mentions went to Terry Shaw and Moishe Reiter.

There will be a meeting of the Group of Five, starring Ladd Vornitig with a new set of snaggly teeth, in the Odds and Ends Office sometime today. Guests will hear an address from the well-known Welsh paranoid, Carmedd Llynant Paenmaen Mawr.

POTS Open House

The Undergraduate Association of Physical and Occupational Therapy, Faculty of Medicine, University of Toronto, is holding its fourth annual "Open House" Feb. 18 and 19.

Practical demonstrations of many techniques and media used in both Physical Therapy and Occupational Therapy will be part of the program.

There will also be displays of equipment used in electrotherapy, and each display will be explained.

"The aim of the Open House is to educate the public as to the role of Physical and Occupational Therapy in rehabilitation," Nancy Dolphin (P&OT III) said last night.

The Open House will take place at 6 Devonshire Place from 7-10 p.m.

Ross States Education Still Over-Aristocratic

York University President, Murray G. Ross, said Saturday at an Ontario Federation of Labor education conference that higher education in Canada is directed at the aristocracy.

He said our education system is obsolete and unless the west changes its attitude, Communism will dominate the world within 40 years.

"The attitude is that higher education is for the aristocracy and serious consideration is not given by students to go to university. This is a 19th-century attitude that we should stamp out."

"Education is geared for persons with an IQ over 125 who want to follow one of the established professions."

He told the conference the Soviet Union considers education a means for developing the nation but the West holds it up as a means to individual development.

Unless Canada becomes more imaginative, Communism could be the dominant force in the world before the year 2000.

"Russian advantages in the field of education far outnumber ours," he said.

Russian research is carried out in large scale with abundant funds. Professors rank high in pay and prestige in the Soviet Union, he said.

Soviet students of ability are supplied with financial support, there is no shortage of teachers on public or secondary school levels and large funds are available for fields of study essential to international relations, Dr. Ross said.

He said the student attitude is feverishly directed towards catching up with the rest of the world in the Soviet Union but Canadian students regard progress as inevitable.

The most powerful force that Russians have on their side is their inferiority complex, he said.

He also said Canadian Universities are too far removed from the conditions and realities of the modern world. "We still graduate students who still believe they are the chosen few," he said.

Ladies' Aid

Free courses in judo are being offered to University of Toronto women.

Tom Fortner, a former military and police judo instructor, is "appalled" by the number of assault cases in Toronto. He feels five judo lessons would be sufficient to teach women to protect themselves.

Mr. Fortner decided to offer the free courses after conducting a survey among women who had previously been attacked.

"The majority of attacks," he said, "occurred between 9:30 p.m. and 4:30 a.m., in lonely, poorly-lit areas." He said the assailant usually grabbed his victim from behind.

"It is also interesting to note that the number of attacks is greatest in the early winter and spring," he said.

Anyone desiring further information can call Mr. Fortner at RO 3-1664.

MONTREAL, Feb. 15 (C.P.)—Two French photographic magazines and a $10 bill are the basic tools in determining the university potential of the male student, a leading Canadian educationist said last week.

Dean D. L. Thomson is head of the Faculty of Graduate Studies and Vice-principal of McGill University. Speaking at the Students' Executive Council banquet, he said, "Exaggerated emphasis is being placed on marks."

In an impromptu speech, Dean Thomson described a test used in American Colleges to weed out applicants:

Copies of "French Photographic Art, Male", "French Photographic Art, Female" and a text on Marcus Aurelius are placed on a table. A $10 bill is half-hidden in the same room. The applicant is led into the room, unaware that he is being secretly observed by the Dean.

The student's actions determine his university potential. If he studies the Female Art book he has "some chance". If he returns the money he is "probably no good", but if it goes into his own pocket, he is rated "OK".

"Turn out the lights and see what develops," said Dean Thomson.

In the annual faculty-student hockey game at St. Michael's College last weekend, the good Fathers trimmed the students 8-0.

"We had a good goal-keeper, and the students weren't very well organized," Father Knowlton said.

Big scorers for the priests were Father Gibbons, who tapped in three goals, and Father Orsini with two. Fathers Principe, Gato and Waligore scored one each.

Coaching the Priests to victory was Father Mallon. The name of the student coach, and for that matter the names of the players, will be protected by The Varsity.

The vice-chairman of the USSR Students' Council wished Canadian students "success in exams" in a recent issue of a Soviet news publication.

Igor Biryukov was writing in USSR Illustrated News, published by the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa.

Mr. Biryukov visited the University of Toronto last term. In his open letter, Biryukov said he believed Canada and the USSR can "live as good neighbours".

"I told my Soviet colleagues about the cordial meetings in Canada," he said, "and about the tireless activity of your National Federation of Students (NFCUS)."

Windies Seminar

Students and faculty will take a long hard look at the new West Indies Federation in a seminar Saturday.

Guest speaker at the seminar will be Prof. N. Keyfitz of the political economy department who will discuss the impact of the world's new nations on international politics.

In the Seminar's first session, of the new Federation, Victor Reid, famous West Indian novelist, will discuss the Federation's cultural search for identity.

In the second, Prof. A. Tayeb of the geography department will compare economic development methods in India and China.

The Federation seminar, chaired by Canadian student Ken Wyman (IV UC), will also feature a discussion of the federation's political background by a McGill delegate and one of the new country's economic possibilities by Victor Callender (SGS).

The new nations seminar, led by J. Peasah (SGS), will hear Selwyn Ryan (IV UC) ask: "After independence what?" and George DeLaGrenade (IV UC) discuss the problems of white minorities in multiracial societies.

Seminar is in Trinity's Convocation Hall. The Federation discussion begins at 2 p.m., the new nations discussion at 3:15 p.m. and Prof. Keyfitz' talk at 4:30 p.m.

Seminar chairman is Owen Jefferson, West Indian Students' Federation president.

PETER POTTER dunks one in practice. The veteran guard and captain will lead the Basketball Blues against Queen's in the last Athletic night of the year this Friday. —Burns

Last Chance To See Cagers This Friday

Varsity Blues will play host to the Queen's Golden Gaels on Friday night, in their last appearance at Hart House this year.

It will mark the final Athletic night of the current season and it will be again a busy night in the Athletic wing.

The Blues will get their chance to avenge a defeat which was inflicted upon them earlier this season by the visiting club. Queen's coach Frank Tindall who revels every time he beats Toronto, will have veteran Denny Bozic as his mainstay in the guard position. He scored 21 points against the Blues in their last game.

Other Queen's players who are relatively unknown but seem to be a nemesis for Toronto players are Jim Pando, Len Price and Bob Laughton.

Toronto on the other hand has yet to recover fully from the slump that so disastrously hit them at Queen's two weeks ago.

Since then, the Toronto team has been lucky not to have lost any more games, but fortunately the competition was not rough.

At the present, Toronto is in a deadlock for third place with McMaster University. They have three games left one each against Western and Assumption and the game on Friday night.

The Blue and White team will have veteran guard Peter Potter, Danny Norman, Jim McGuire, Mel Cohen and Mike Muir as the probable starters.

Muir has been shooting exceptionally well for the Blues netting 34 points in the last two games.

In addition to the basketball game there will be a swimming meet for the University Championships. Judging from past performances the swimmers could easily establish several new records.

In the upper gym their will be a meet between the Toronto team and members of the Niagara University.

The squad of grapplers will feature Rod Carrow, Roger Doner and Joe Fama of Toronto. The Niagara team will present a strong lineup, virtually the same team that defeated Toronto last December.

Just Notes . . . the preliminary match will be between the Queen's Comets and Osgoode Hall . . . the evening will start at 7:00 . . . Norm Menezel is hoping to be able to play in the games against Western and Assumption next weekend . . .

George Spanetz seeing that the Blues were bound for a second or third place berth has deserted the ship and will no longer be trainer for the Blues . . .

Vic And UC Continue Their Winning Ways

Jim Snider and Mike Tork picked up their fourth and fifth wins respectively in the sixth night of the University Indoor track meet at Hart House last night.

Snider won the senior 1½ mile race and as this is the first time this race has been run, his time of 7:09 stands as a record. He has also helped Vic to victory in a relay race, and his efforts have been instrumental in helping Vic to a fourteen point lead in the overall competition.

Turk won the junior 1½ mile race and now has now every distance between 880-yards and 2-miles. His team, UC, are in second place behind Victoria.

Bill Crothers of Pharmacy won the senior 440-yards with

Hockey Blues Play Queen's And Laval

The University of Toronto Blues return to home ice for the first time in two weeks when they meet league leading Laval University at Varsity Arena Friday evening at 8 p.m. For the Varsity team it is a crucial game as a Laval victory would kill their slim chance of retaining their championship.

The Blues are in the unfamiliar position of having to win every game and hope that Laval loses three of their remaining four games. The Toronto squad play at Kingston Wednesday against Queen's Golden Gaels and then have three consecutive home appearances against Laval, Queen's and McGill. With so much at stake Friday's game with Laval should be one of the best of the year.

It is unusual to see a defenseman leading the team scoring but that is the story with the Blues as Harry Neale has pumped in six goals and assisted on 12 others to collect 18 scoring points. Harry has not only led the attack but has been brilliant on defense in his last season in a Varsity uniform.

Ian Sinclair looks like the player who will eventually take over for Neale on the Varsity defense. The former Marlboro player has shown steady improvement throughout the season as have left winger Jimmy Simpson and centre Gord Gow.

The player to watch for Laval is Michel Lagace. He is at the peak of his form now, and if he shows as well here as he did in Quebec last Friday, he should be worth watching.

comment by mike chykaliuk

Last week U of T hockey Blues waved goodbye to the Intercollegiate hockey championship when they lost both weekend encounters to Laval and Montreal.

This snaps Toronto's successive title streak at five years. "Good thing for the league." "Great moral booster for Laval", "etc.", "etc", were the comments that followed Blues downfall.

Now this would be very fine if Blues tried their best but were not good enough to win. Facts of the matter, however, are quite different.

Varsity started out the season in great fashion. They slaughtered both Laval and Montreal in opening games. Oh, yes, there were a few weak links, but there was nothing hard work could not cure.

What happened?

Despite the loss of the injured John MacDonald and the retired Neil Munro, U of T still had a championship club.

Why did the team not improve?

There is a one word answer to this question—Booze!

In years past Blues have been notorious for their ability to both play hockey and consume alcohol. However, in years past these athletes were capable of doing both, as evidenced by the five straight championships they won.

This years contingent could not cope with both the bottle and the battle.

Before proceeding with this indictment, it must be explained that this charge applies to only three or four team members. It was unfortunate that some of these few were the so-called "key" players.

They did not have enough pride in themselves and enough respect for their coach and University to get into shape. Going full speed they could hardly skate around the rink once and finally they provided the very worst possible example to their fellow teammates by their tardy habits.

Personally I regard Blues as the best team—man for man—in the Intercollegiate Cup. As a personal friend of many, and an ardent admirer of their athletic prowess, I find these words difficult to write.

This seasons' Varsity Blues, I deem, lost the championship, not in Varsity Arena where they should have, but in the pleasant surroundings of that emporium across the street, The King Cole Room.

Though the championship is lost, the season is not yet over. Varsity hosts Laval, Queens and McGill in the not too distant future.

It is hoped that Toronto will not roll over and play dead in these contests.

The joy of watching hockey games is always increased by never say die performances of athletes like Gordy Frey, Bill Griffin, and Ian Sinclair.

The rest of the pack should follow this example. In the remaining games they should put forth a 100 per cent effort and at least partially redeem themselves in front of loyal Varsity supporters.

I received a letter today which brought a further interesting situation to light re that business of the refusal of the request for the Women's Pool for the U of T Swim Carnival.

Al Gallo (II Vic) informs me that the two divers on the Varsity swimming team were forced to drive seventy miles to Guelph last night after school in order to practice on a three-metre diving board.

Why did they have to go all this distance?

First, let me explain why they need this special board. George Huovinen of Varsity is one of Canada's top three divers. If he is to make the Olympics, he needs meet practice on the board used in international competitions.

The forth-coming Canada-Mexico meet, and the trials for this meet could provide this practice. George's opposition is going to come from Canadian divers going to school in the U.S.

They practice five hours a day on a three-metre board. George has had five hours total this year on a three-metre board. He can hardly be expected to compete favourably under these circumstances.

There are two three-metre boards in Toronto. One is unsuitable and the other is in our estimable Women's Athletic Building.

The divers made the request that they be allowed to use the three-metre board when THEIR personal coach is giving the girls instruction on the one metre board.

Their request was flatly refused, and so they had to drive seventy miles on their own time and expense in order to get a few hours practice.

All this when facilities were available within walking distance. My correspondent concludes by asking if something can be done about the situation.

Well, Al, I'm afraid not. The people in charge of the Building choose to sit blindly in an ivory tower, and like the monkey, they do not see or hear anything.

Prof Tired Of Young Men Shaving In Living Rooms

A leading professor of economics at the University of Toronto said Wednesday night he objected strongly to strange men in underwear shaving in his living room.

Prof. B. S. Keirstead told the audience of a Commerce Club forum he felt television advertising was "partially honest, but as for taste, while I like sports events, I do not appreciate that fellow who shaves in my living room on Friday evenings."

He was one of four members of a panel which discussed "Truth, Taste and Waste in Advertising." Other members were Mr. John Kemp of Molson's Breweries, Prof. Hartle of the Department of Economics and Mr. D. W. Case, vice-president of the McKim Advertising Agency.

Toronto Star columnist Pierre Berton was unable to take part because of illness.

Prof. Keirstead accused the modern copywriter of corrupting the English language. "Corruption of the tongue is always in the interest of those who do not wish to speak precisely, accurately and honestly," he said.

He called brand advertising which is aimed at market monopoly, "a corruption of the competitive forces and economical nonsense." Prof. Keirstead was recently consultant for Canadian Breweries Ltd., who successfully defended charges laid under the Anti-Combines Act of Canada.

Mr. John Kemp defended modern advertising techniques on the basis that, "in spite of inflationary tendencies in North America, advertising has made the cost stay down, assured the quality of products and maintained productivity at a suitable level."

He admitted that advertising was "untruthful" but only because "they have always taken the defensive role in justifying their particular brand."

Mr. Kemp said he did not mind "the man who can shave" but that he worried about "the little globules of fat" which he hears about "every a.m. on the radio."

Prof. Hartle said he was worried by "the fellow who dubs Ban on the underarms of that statue." He said competition was forcing the producers to adopt ways that sell.

D. W. Case said, "People today are smarter, harder to convince and easier to bore. Therefore, 100 per cent of the national advertisers are 100 per cent honest, because they want to be selling their product five years from now."

Students Start New Group To Promote World Peace

by Harry Zimmerman

A crowded University College lecture room Wednesday became the birth-place of a new University of Toronto peace movement.

Norman Johnson (SGS) chaired an inaugural meeting of the Student Peace Union. He presented for consideration the constitution of a similar peace organization in the United States.

The union is "conceived as an attempt to co-ordinate the work for peace among students rather than an attempt to formulate their policies," the constitution said.

Johnson pointed out that the movement will not "frame a basis so broad that anyone can belong to it" yet will not stifle the independence of thought and action of its members.

He said there is a possibility of a demonstration march on missile bases in North Bay around Easter.

This proposal was criticised by a member of the audience who felt these marches were "childish" and brought bad publicity for peace movements.

Also under fire was a passage in the suggested constitution reading "to work to build a world society . . . which will suffer no individual or group to be exploited by another, and which will assure to all the means for realizing the best possibilities of life."

Many in the group felt this was similar to Communist and other left-wing propaganda. They added too many peace movements become associated with Communism and people sincerely working for peace are slandered.

The paragraph was replaced with "to work to further the principles of the United Nations declaration of Human Rights."

Johnson mentioned the work being done by student peace organizations in Ottawa and Montreal. He hoped the three units could combine in their protests.

The Union will meet again on Monday at 4.15 in room 10, University College.

U of T Professor Head for 22 Yrs

The former head of the University of Toronto's civil engineering, surveying and geodesy department died yesterday at Toronto General Hospital.

Professor William Manton Treadgold was on the U of T staff for 47 years and department head for 22, and retired in 1953.

Prof. Treadgold, 77, grew up and received his early education in Brampton where he was born.

He entered University College on a scholarship and after obtaining his Bachelor of Arts degree he won a civil engineering diploma in 1905.

He then joined the staff of the old school of Practical Science in 1931 and was appointed head of the department, a post held until his retirement.

All through his career he was active in consulting and contracting work as a director of the John Patterson Construction Co. Ltd. and the Patterson Fuel and Supply, both of Brampton.

Prof. Treadgold is survived by two daughters, one son, and five grandchildren.

Blood Drive Officials Says Response Still "Just Fair"

"Just fair" is the reaction of Red Cross officials to the progress of the Blood Campaign currently running on campus.

"We are counting on the university for blood supplies to city hospitals," Miss Bertha Miles, Supervisor of the Blood Donor Clinic, said last night.

Total collected in the first four days of the drive is 714 pints. The campaign continues until Feb. 29, and is aiming at a target of 1900 pints.

Miss Miles said that if donations reach 200 pints a day, "the Blood Bank should be able to hold its own. We are depending on University of Toronto students for blood for the next two weeks."

She urged students to keep their appointments, and added that donors are welcome at any clinic during the run of the drive, though college and faculty clinics have been organized to facilitate collection.

The only clinic operating today is at the School of Nursing for donors from Nursing, Engineering, Knox, Forestry, Architecture, Pre-Meds, and SGS. It is open 10 a.m.-1 p.m. and 2:30-4:30 p.m.

The clinic will be set up in Trinity College on Monday for members of Trinity, St. Hilda's, Wycliffe, and the Royal Ontario Museum staff.

Hungarian Slaying Verification Seen

Ottawa, Feb. 18—The 13,859 university students who believed 150 Hungarian counterparts were to be executed may have been justified, according to the latest report from the International Commission of Jurists in a recent letter to the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

S. Kozera, administrative secretary of the commission said although there is absolutely no conclusive proof these youths have been executed, there is reason to believe the story is not unfounded. However, Mr. Kozera pointed out that the Hungarian government still denies that any such execution took place.

Last fall students from seven universities signed petitions which said, "We hereby ask Premier Khrushov to use his influence to have the lives spare of the young men and women who participated in the 1956 Hungarian revolution, thereby demonstrating the sincerity of his plea for world peace."

The universities which signed—with number of signatures—were Memorial, 373; Western, 1,491; Ontario Agricultural College-Ontario Veterinary College, 1,089; McMaster, 478; Queen's, 1,364; Toronto, 3,079; British Columbia, 5,985.

Mr. Kozera referred to a British Broadcasting Corp. broadcast to Hungary Jan. 28 which claimed the 150 had been recently executed. There is reason to believe that the accounts of the various executions—and apparently the 150 were not executed at one time but in groups—have some basis in fact.

Reports say there is reliable information in the cases of some of the persons cited.

CCF Elects

Gerry Izenberg (III UC) was elected president of the University of Toronto CCF Club Wednesday afternoon.

Others in the running for the top office were Peter Dembski (III SMC), Marg Brewin (III Trin), and Mitro Makarchuk (II UC).

Jay Waterman (II UC) was elected vice-president. Others on the executive are: Jan Smith (III Vic), Gene Glisky (II UC), Marg Brewin, Mitro Makarchuk, Marc Somerville (II Vic), and Alvin Shapiro (I UC).

Delegates were chosen for the meeting of the Toronto and District CCF Council this weekend. They are Giles Endicott, Alvin Shapiro, Howard Simmons and Mitro Makarchuk.

STAY EXECUTION

Caryl Chessman, under sentence of death for 13 years, received a 60-day stay of execution this morning. Chessman was to have died in the San Quentin gas chamber at 10 a.m.

JOHN R. SEELEY is senior author of the controversial Crestwood Heights, a sociological study of Forest Hill Village which appeared in 1956. Professor Seeley's appointment to the academic staff of York University was one of three announced yesterday.

Vancouver (CUP) — Out of the series of soap box speeches sponsored by the Student Christian Movement has come an idea.

The University of British Columbia, some say, should be represented in the provincial legislature by a student. The suggestion has arisen because of growing discontent among students who feel the university is not adequately represented by the present legislature member for its constituency, Robert Bonar, the provincial Attorney-General.

The initiator of the movement, Allan Rimmer, lashed out against the Social Credit government for failing to keep its promise of matching dollar for dollar to a total of $10,000,000 any contribution made by the public to the UBC development fund.

Rimmer claimed that the government owes UBC $7,500,000 in matching grants.

To correct this situation, Rimmer's UBC Voters' Association suggested that students should nominate one of their number to run as an independent candidate having no political affiliation, who could give university direct representation in the house, as well as draw attention to the needs of the university in a dramatic way.

Like, like your poetry read?

Two University of Toronto types, John Robert Colombo and Michael John Nimchuk announced last night they will be giving forth with the first issue of their "verbal magazine" at the First Floor Club on March 8 and 9.

Nimchuk says "this will be an evening of stories, poems, dialogues and sketches — all read."

They are hoping to eventually have a pool of about 25 writers and performers to aid them with their weekly editions.

Anyone interested in joining the group is invited to 590 Yonge St. at 2 p.m. this Sunday.

"There is truth in the lower part of the spectrum, but I'd say those who complain to them about reading matter, state, the complaint about the 'blue laws'," he said.

Mr. Keenap was asked if part of the "heritage of fine taste which Canadians enjoy was designed to get around Ontario 'blue laws'."

The Canadian Hadassah post-graduate fellowship tenable at the Hebrew University, Jerusalem, is now open for applications.

The fellowship provides for one year of graduate research in any department of the Faculty of Science.

He pointed out advertising of this type had to be approved by a Board of Liquor Advertising, and added this advertising had received an outstanding number of complimentary comments.

"The farmers, fishermen and bird-watchers all like it, but I'm not sure it sells any beer," he smiled.

In a 65 board Tandem Chess Simul at Hart House on Wednesday night, two chess masters showed their skill on the boards.

Frank Anderson and George Berner battled at individual boards to win 55 games, tie seven and lose three games.

Soviet Ambassador A. G. Gromyko will address the University of Toronto United Nations Club next Wednesday in Faculty Convocation Hall on the subject of complete disarmament.

Settlement

The University Settlement House is "desperately in need of money", SAC Settlement House representative, Louise MacDonald (I SW), said last night.

A fund-raising campaign which has been in progress for a week is aiming at a $2,000 goal.

The money from the campaign will be used for three different projects; to send needy children to the Settlement House camp in Muskoka in the summer; to finance furnishings, including gym equipment, for the Settlement House; and to enable the development of a $500 volunteer training program.

Miss MacDonald said "the engineers have made a fairly sizeable donation already". She did not reveal the exact amount of the contribution.

Each college and faculty student government has been approached and asked for a donation.

Within the past two years student governments have donated more than $4,000 for University Settlement House projects.

"Reserves insure against reverses"

Knut Rockne, the famous football coach, devised a system of substituting players that practically insured his Notre Dame team of victory. His strong second team wore down the opposition early in the game. Then the irrepressible first team would move in, fresh and sound, to clinch the victory. Notre Dame ran up a record of victories that has never been matched.

Of course, this system depends on strong and dependable reserves. Unfortunately, most of us can't count on a large reserve to fall back on in the Game of Life, particularly in these days of the shrinking dollar. Only too often, we fall short of our goals because we cannot muster the "shock troops" at the right time.

That's one reason why sound insurance planning is so important, because it does assure you of reserve protection whenever the need arises. You can protect your income, your home, your health, your family . . . so that your struggles for them need never be lost. Call the NALAC representative for a talk. He is part of a team that knows the importance of reserve strength!

happy birthday

Today the West Indian students on campus will be celebrating the third anniversary of the creation of West Indies Federation.

The West Indian Federation is one of the growing list of nations who have recently emerged from the long night of domination by European colonial powers.

Somewhat the traditions these nations have inherited from the European god-parents don't seem to have had much meaning for these new nations.

One after another we have watched them teeter on the edge of economic chaos and succumb to one-party dictatorship or rule by a military clique.

And all the while we have continued to babble drearily on and on about the "western way of life", and "democracy" and the "rights of man" and "free elections."

Nobody seems to be listening to us.

In most of the emerging nations the struggle for independence centred around control of the raw materials in the country. For generations the people of these countries saw their natural resources being systematically plundered by European powers.

When the nationalist movements gained control of the country one of their first objectives was to develop the natural resources as quickly as humanly possible.

They used every means at their disposal.

If a military clique in the Sudan or a monolithic party organization in Ghana could accomplish the job, then the people supported it.

Oddly enough, even though our beliefs have become so threadbare that even to utter them is banal, we still stubbornly retain our belief in them.

We still believe that man is an end not a means, that democracy ensures that end, and that the right to vote is a sacred right.

But we still have the job of convincing the emergent nations of the value of our beliefs.

We have still the problem of overcoming their justifiable suspicion of all "European" and "American" nations.

We must make what we believe meaningful to people who have been fighting for years against everything we stand for.

The West Indian Federation is perhaps the emergent nation closest to us in history and tradition.

This is perhaps the best opportunity for showing that our beliefs and way of life are compatible with the rapid economic development of an emergent nation.

But before we bring any present to a West Indian birthday party, we had better undo the fancy wrapping and make a long headed assessment of what lies inside.

LIKES LACE

Joseph Kesselring's comedy Arsenic and Old Lace has long been a favorite with theatre-goers and Trinity College's production last night was certainly no disappointment. Under the capable direction of John Douglas there was never a let-down throughout the presentation.

One of the outstanding performances in the play was given by Christopher Riggs as Mortimer Brewster. He handles what was probably the most difficult part in the play with skill. Of the feminine leads Abby Brewster played by Jane Ross was indeed a pleasure to watch. She, along with Helen Scriven as Martha Brewster, was largely responsible for the tempo which was maintained at all times.

The comic highlights of the play were provided by Malcolm Shiner in the role of Teddy Brewster. This role provides the greatest potential for comedy and Shiner made the most of his opportunity. His performance was enhanced by some very competent work on the trumpet.

These principals were well supported by all the other players. George Baker, as Johnathan Brewster, was perhaps a little too dignified and composed for a homicidal maniac. Jill Reville, Elaine Harper, carried her part well, as did R. B. Judge, David Gordon, Bruce McQuaker, and Andrew Milne playing Brooklyn's finest. Pat Gossage in the role of Dr. Einstein could have shown more confidence, but still turned in an adequate performance.

The stage crew deserves special commendation for the very fine sets. The scenery for Arsenic and Old Lace is extremely difficult to erect, and the fine job done in this respect contributed much to the performance. The costumes and make-up also came up to the high level of the rest of the production.

Judging by the audience reaction, the Trinity College Dramatic Society has come up with a fine production of an always popular play. There are still two nights to run and there should be no difficulty in filling the Hart House Theatre for both performances.

and now

The West Indian Students Association is inviting all students on the campus to participate in the celebration of the third anniversary of the West Indian Federation.

The celebration will begin with an exhibition of dancing illustrating the variety of cultures in the British West Indies and be followed by a dance.

The exhibition and dance are to be held in the Howard Ferguson Hall of the University College Sir Daniel Wilson Residence.

Admission is $1.00 and the celebration begins at 8 p.m.

On Saturday two seminars will be held in the Convocation Hall of Trinity College beginning at 2 p.m.

They will deal with the future of the West Indies and the role of emergent nations.

The West Indies Today

OUR THIRD BIRTHDAY

The WEST INDIES FEDERATION includes 16 islands spreading over 1,000 miles of ocean from Jamaica in the north to Trinidad in the south. The total area of these islands amounts to about 8,000 square miles and the combined population is just over 3,000,000.

JAMAICA, the largest island forms part of a geographical group known as the Greater Antilles. Its area of 4,411 square miles supports a population of about 1,500,000, more than half the population of the whole Federation. The island is mountainous, well watered by rivers and springs and boasts of wide lovely beaches especially on the north coast. Kingston, (population 350,000), the capital is also the largest city in Jamaica and the island's chief port.

There are two political parties of importance. The People's National Party (PNP) led by Mr. Norman Manley won the elections held last year and forms the present government. The Jamaica Labour Party (JLP) is headed by Mr. Alexander Bustamante and forms the official opposition. Like the rest of the islands Jamaica is predominantly an agricultural country. Sugar, rum and bananas comprise the main exports. In recent years, however, the tourist trade has moved into the front rank and the development of extensive bauxite deposits has opened up another source of income.

TRINIDAD and TOBAGO, the second largest and wealthiest of the islands is about 1,000 miles south of Jamaica and no more than a dozen miles from the coast of South America. About 1,860 square miles in size, its population of 780,000 is the most heterogeneous in the federation. It includes a large minority group of East Indians. Port-of-Spain, the capital of the island is also the temporary Federal Capital.

Of several political parties, only two are important electorally. The recently formed People's National Movement (PNM) headed by Dr. Eric Williams swept the polls in the 1956 election and became the first party to form a government with full cabinet responsibility two years later. The

The Lady Couldn't Be Burn

It is rare enough that one sees a Christopher Fry masterpiece on the Toronto stage; when one is given a facile performance by a mere high school troupe, it is indeed a delight.

Christopher Fry is a poet—his main delights are words and sentences, thoughts and universals. How he came to be a playwright is neither here nor there. At any rate, the prospect of a Fry play staged by a secondary school is a little confusing; one fears a fairly terrible piece of theatre, hopes for no more than an intelligible reading.

What this preamble is intended to convey is just that we approached Riverdale Collegiate's current production of The Lady's Not For Burning with some trepidation. It was largely unfounded. They may be inexperienced but the result would not entirely displease the author.

The Lady's Not For Burning has what you would call a basic plot. A soldier, sick of killing and tired of a painful world, seeks his own death opposite an enchanting woman accused of witchery and facing death by burning. The plot, taken by itself, extricates these two from the dilemma, but the plot as such only provides a situation from which Fry can move in poetry through his central idea.

From one point of view, this is a religious play, a psalm of praise, a celebration of life. Obsessed as he is with the mystery of life he is bewitched into surrender; his compromise stems from his inability to cope with what is for Fry the enigma of all existence—love.

In the Riverdale production, most of the characters show a sensitivity to this theme which belies their years.

Fishermen haul in their nets after day in the teeming Caribbean waters.

other party, the People's Democratic Party, led by Mr. Bhadesee Sagan Maraj.

Petroleum and petroleum products have in some years been the most important source of revenue, amounting to as much as 75% of the value of exports. Other items of export are sugar, cocoa, natural asphalt and citrus fruits.

BARBADOS, the most easterly of the islands is regarded as having the healthiest climate of the islands. With an area of 166 square miles and population of 200,000 the island possesses an amazing population density of 1,380 people per square mile.

Sir Grantley Adams, for a long time the prominent political figure in the island, was the federal government.

Barbados is admirably suited to sugar cultivation on which the island depends almost entirely for its income.

THE LEEWARD ISLANDS comprise the colonies, Antigua, Montserrat and St. Kitts, Nevis, Anguilla and the British Virgin Islands. Their total area amounts to 433 square miles and a population of 128,000.

The islands are administered by a governor who nominally resides in Antigua and who is represented in the other islands by administrative commissioners.

Sugar and sea island cotton are the principal crops.

THE WINDWARD ISLANDS are composed of four islands, Dominica, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and Grenada. Their total area is 826 square miles and their combined population is about 313,000.

St. Vincent is best known for its sugar industry on which it has a virtual monopoly.

Although there is one Governor for the group, each island has its own institutional organization in an early stage of development and the parties tend to be formed only for election purposes and then break up afterwards. The exception is the United Labour Party in Grenada led by Mr. Eric Garvey.

The most outstanding example is Gail Carter, played by Jennet Jourdemayne—The Lady. You may not see her but she would renew anyone's taste for life. The grace of a ballerina (which she is, by the way) and confidence than you might expect she possesses an exacting awareness the bewildered distress of a woman whose perception of the world is beauty, contemplation of uncivilized death at the stake. One could wish her voice carried more maturity—to equal her appearance—one does not quibble over diaphragms in a theatrical production.

As Thomas Mendip, Johannes Kinna gives excellent support, although his diction and physical presence render him less than perfectly suitable as a fool. The others in the cast flit about with some help from actors and actresses they are nothing special but show appropriate empathy with the theme.

The direction is by Louis Goodman, a U of T graduate. Much of the praise must be lavished on him. His handling of scenes, and, handling of unseasoned performers in difficult roles is sympathetic and rewarding. He has taken the part of the chaplain, and here his meanderings are a constant delight.

The technical side of the production, if one is to judge by the sets, and they are imaginative. The costumes, Helen Doan, are at all times in character and well done.

The Riverdale Auditorium is at 1094 Gairdner Road and the tickets are just 75c. It is worth more than the price and the audience receive a fine production.

CRISIS IN THE FEDERATION

by overand r. padmore

The recent Inter-Governmental conference on West Indian Federation has now ended and the general view of this conference is that it has been a failure. Disappointing though this conference may have been from the point of view of positive results it is not quite correct to say that it was a complete failure.

For one thing the two dominant views on federation have now been aired and public opinion will have the opportunity of assessing the rival merits of the two approaches.

One view, as expressed by Jamaica, conceives of the federation as a loosely organized body of independent units with each unit free to determine the full extent of its relationship with the Federation.

The unit of Trinidad and Tobago, on the other hand, is the principle advocate of the "strong federation" idea. This entails a strong and effective central government, capable of shaping and directing the future of the nation.

Jamaica hopes by a loose federation to safeguard her present rapid rate of economic development from federal interference while Trinidad thinks that a strong federal government is essential if we are to develop a dynamic economic policy for the entire federal area.

It was in fact these rival concepts of federation which clashed at the recent conference.

The specific issue around which most of the contention centred was the issue of representation in the Federal House of Representatives. Jamaica took the uncompromising stand that the conference must first accept the principle of representation before any other matter could be discussed. She produced a formula which would give her 32 seats in the House of 65 members, and threatened to secede from the federation if these demands were not met.

Jamaica feels that if her interest are to be properly represented in the Federation she must have greater representation. This to her is a principle that cannot be compromised. In a broadcast to Jamaica while the conference was in session Mr. Manley was very eloquent in his determination not to depart from principle in his attempt to secure adequate representation for Jamaica.

However, the federal idea is a vast one and conflicting aims and objectives can only be settled by compromise. But compromise does not necessarily involve a retreat from principle. Mr. Manley insisted that the principle of representation must be settled first if any progress is to be made.

The other units were in favor of discussing representation in relation to the other important federal principles, such as customs union, freedom of movement and taxation. They regard these matters as equally important and fundamental to the West Indian federal experiment. Though they were not discussed in the conference of 1954 they will inevitably be raised in 1960.

Let us therefore examine some of the problems facing the federation.

Last year Jamaica entered into an agreement with Esso Standard Oil for the establishment of an oil refinery. The government of Trinidad objected to some of the provisions of the agreement, that they felt struck at the very principle of internal free trade by discriminating against the Trinidad Oil Industry.

Mr. Manley's reply to these objections was, "The Jamaican Government had advised Trinidad of the proposal before it advised the Federal Government for clearance. But Jamaica did not need to clear it. This was a simple matter of courtesy. There was no power within the federation to interfere with the Jamaican proposals. Nothing within the Federal Constitution can stop any territory from subsidizing any industry it may wish to set up."

Very significantly, Mr. Manley's statement has omitted any reference to the real point of the dispute, namely the existence in the agreement of concessions that are likely to discriminate against the Trinidad Oil Industry, and so violate the principle of internal free trade. To state that the Federal government had no power to interfere with the Jamaican proposals was really irrelevant and should never have been raised.

As important as the movement of goods within the federal area is the movement of people. At present, Trinidad has legislation on her statute books prohibiting many categories of workers from the other federal units from entering. Trinidad has intimated that she intends to use this legislation as a bargaining counter to secure the quick introduction of customs union. But if Trinidad and Jamaica, the largest, wealthiest and most populous of the units pursue such policies, then the federation as a whole will inevitably suffer.

So we see on all important federal issues, Jamaica's views are at variance with those of the other units. As we said earlier, these disagreements represent basic differences concerning the nature of federation. Yet it is important that we try to understand the position taken by Jamaica.

This unit considers the achievement of Dominion Status as the basic reason for federation. She thinks she is quite capable of solving her economic problems on her own.

If this appears to be selfish remember that traditionally, Jamaica has looked outwards from the West Indies to the United Kingdom and the United States rather than inwards to Trinidad and Barbados. For these reasons, she feels that developments such as freedom of movement of people and goods are likely to entail movements from the Eastern Caribbean to Jamaica rather than vice versa.

Hence she demands a greater voice in the federation, to give greater weight to her views. The demand for representation by population seems to be the most principled way of achieving this aim.

And so we are right back where we started. The conference has ended and committees have been appointed to study the entire question of federal representation. But Mr. Manley claimed that the important principle of representation by population has been secured and so it would seem that the committee would merely be working out the details.

But the view here taken goes much deeper than saying that the conference has failed or committees are working out details.

The true results of the conference are that for the very first time, West Indians have begun to think out the true implications of a regional federation.

For the moment, our traditional isolation from each other seems to be keeping us apart, but the need for regional co-operation in many spheres, not the least of which is higher education, will undoubtedly bring us together.

It is because our leading politicians have recognized these facts, that we can maintain very great optimism for the future of our West Indian Federation.

We Congratulate

●Carola Boehm, secretary to Hart House Warden Joseph McCulley, became a Canadian citizen yesterday. She arrived in Canada in 1954 from Germany.

Scholars

●John R. Seeley, senior author of the controversial 1956 study of Forest Hill Village entitled "Crestview Heights" is one of three professors recently appointed to the staff of York University.

Prof. Seeley was named professor of sociology. The others are: Dr. Hugh N. Maclean, associate professor of English; and Dr. Lester J. Pronger, assistant professor of French.

Liberals

●Ontario Liberal leader John J. Wintermeyer will be guest speaker at the Sixth Annual International Speech Festival at St. Michael's College this weekend.

The contest is sponsored by the Basilian Fathers and the St. Mike's Senate Club to encourage Canadian and American high school interest in debating.

Fourteen American and Canadian high schools are expected to participate.

●University Liberals are ahead of university Tories by seven to three in campus model parliament elections so far this year, although both parties were defeated by the CCF at the University of Toronto recently, a student Liberal said yesterday.

This was announced yesterday by Canadian University Liberal Federation president Phil Goulston (II UC).

Of the 13 elections at different universities so far, the Liberals took seven, the Conservatives took three, and three went to other parties.

Splat!

Amid piles of garbage tossed by University of Toronto Engineering students at a medical debating team, the resolution "To be an Engineer is Human; A Medsman Divine" was thrown out Wednesday.

Sam Izenberg (I PreMeds) speaking for the ayes said, "All of us in our childhood wanted to build bridges and engineer trains. But Mr. Speaker, just because these engineers have never quite outgrown those cute, childish ambitions, should we label them inhuman?"

A large orange splattered on the blackboard behind him. "I see your course in geometry has not helped you plot the trajectory of a missile," he quipped.

A second orange got him.

George White (II ApSc) quoted the maxim, "To err is human; To forgive is divine," and referred to a mistake in a bulletin printed by the Medical Society.

David Higgins (II ApSc) said, "If Medsmen are divine, then my whole concept of heaven and hell is reversed and I would rather be down there with my friends."

PEOPLE MAKE THE DIFFERENCE...

SIR FREDERICK BANTING

The man who discovered insulin vividly exemplified a profound truth: that people matter far more than machines or methods. He had nothing to work with, the young doctor. No glossy equipment, no dream laboratory—not even the applause of a sympathetic public. But he had the things that matter more—energy, devotion, and abiding faith in the value of his own ideas.

So he did without the trimmings and set himself to the hard, heavy task of doing what he had to do with hardly any tools at all. And in the end the victory was all the greater, because it wasn't just the victory of science over disease, but the triumph of the human spirit over hardship and frustration.

In an age of formulated judgements and machine-made decisions, it's always wise to remember that people . . . individual men and women . . . make the significant differences. This is a fundamental part of our business philosophy. We are proud of the many young men and women at "The Bank" who have done so much to make Toronto-Dominion the respected institution it is. Our people are our greatest asset.

Should you be considering banking as a career, you will find our booklet "New Horizons At THE BANK" both interesting and informative. It outlines the many rewarding opportunities that are yours when you choose a career with Toronto-Dominion. For your free copy simply write: The Personnel Superintendent, The Toronto-Dominion Bank, 55 King St. W., Toronto. It will be sent along to you by return mail.

Prof Argues Civil Defence Prolongs Nuclear Agonies

By BARRY ZIMMERMAN

A University of Toronto professor last night warned members of the U of T Socialist Forum that planning for nuclear war is futile and Civil defense is psychologically undesirable.

Professor David P. Gauthier, of the Department of Philosophy, spoke at a meeting sponsored by the Socialist Forum in conjunction with the Toronto Labor Forum on the subject of 'Nuclear Disarmament'.

Prof. Gauthier said "if people are told to do this, this and this in case of attack, nuclear war becomes more acceptable".

He felt people must realize "that all Civil Defense will be doing is keeping them alive to live in weakened condition in a devastated land."

"People can be put in shelters," he said, "and they will survive. They will live a shortened life—some sort of life. They will probably not be sterile but will be able to produce children—some sort of children."

Prof. Gauthier warned his audience against becoming alarmists and exaggerating the dangers of radioactive fallout. He suggested this would give opponents of disarmament the advantage of pointing out these exaggerations and condemning the whole argument.

He said, "We have to show testing does not lessen the possibility of war but increases it."

"It seems unlikely that at the present time one can wipe out the entire human race in a nuclear war. This may not be true in 5 years," he continued.

"The rather dismal picture envisioned in 'On The Beach' could not happen today because fallout would not be lethal for any great length of time."

He stressed the importance of an international control to inspect and enforce real penalties against violators of a nuclear disarmament pact.

"I want to emphasise the impossibility of obtaining nuclear disarmament with out total disarmament. No nations as long as it is maintaining military forces will allow full scale inspections of its military secrets," he said.

Prof. Gauthier thought if the conventional methods of carrying ordinary weapons, such as bombers and submarines, were abolished there would be less chance of nuclear weapons being redeveloped and transported.

He suggested outbreaks of conventional wars would put an end to inspection and control of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Gauthier mentioned that, even though it will entail a loss of sovereignty, we will have to find the solution to world problems through international co-operation.

He cautioned his audience against expecting a defense for nuclear war to be developed. "Any sort of warning device will fail at some time. You may remember when all the safety devices at Chalk River failed simultaneously."

The professor also expressed doubt as to the effectiveness of nuclear weapons as a deterrent.

"If nuclear weapons are as horrible as they are supposed to be no one will use them but instead will attack each other with ordinary weapons."

"If a limited war breaks out there might be a great temptation for the losing side to introduce limited nuclear weapons. Each side will reply with slightly larger nuclear weapons. This is the theory of 'escalation'," he added.

He outlined three basic steps for nuclear disarmament: a ban on testing, enforced agreement on production, and enforced agreement to prevent the spread of any nuclear weapons to countries which do not already possess them.

Windians' Ideas Moderate Over Caucasian Minorities

West Indian students at a seminar Saturday called for a moderate compromise solution to the question of Caucasian minorities in emerging African natives.

The seminar was part of celebrations on campus marking the third anniversary of the West Indies Federation. West Indian students also sponsored a pageant and dance Friday night.

Science Down South

Interested in colloid and surface chemistry?

If so, will you still be a "regular undergraduate on April 1, 1960"?

A publicity release which has come into our hands, announces that students of chemistry, biochemistry and chemical engineering at all accredited colleges and universities of the United States and Canada are eligible to enter a contest sponsored by the Continental Oil Company of Houston, Texas and Ponca City, Oklahoma. Contestants have a choice of entering either a report on a research project conducted by themselves, OR an essay on the subject, "The Importance of Ultracentrifuge in Colloid Chemistry".

The best essay and the best report will each receive prizes of $500 and the second best $200 each. Honorable mention prizes of $50 each will also be provided. Deadline for submitting entries is July 1, and entry blanks may be obtained immediately by writing to Professor K. J. Mysels, Chemistry Department, University of Southern California, Los Angeles 7, Cal.

The seminar dealt with the West Indies Federation and the future of emergent nations.

George DeLaGranade (IV UC), a West Indian student, said he felt strongly a compromise solution between Caucasian and African populations could be reached in such countries as Kenya, Tanganyika and even Algeria.

Such a solution, he said, would involve the surrender by the white minorities of much of their socially and economically privileged position.

Prof. N. Keyfitz of the political economy department, guest speaker, said the world's emergent nations are playing a greater role in the East-West world power struggle.

Neither side in the power struggle wishes to found its policies on nuclear war, he said, and this has lent greater importance to moral factors.

The new smaller nations, he said, are thus able to play one side against the other as they have been doing.

Discussion on the Federation centred around the question of a strong central government.

Jamaica, which is comparatively big and wealthy, panelists pointed out, is against a great deal of central control whereas the smaller, poorer nations favor a strong federal government.

A West Indian graduate student from McGill who said he inclined towards the point of view of the smaller islands, said moderation should be used in trying to get Jamaica to accept strong federal government.

Victor Callender (SGS) said it is essential that co-operation on this matter be achieved.

During the discussion on the role of white minorities in emergent nations, one West Indian read a letter from a British planter in the West Indies whose views on the feasibility of self-government in non-white nations had been altered for the better by the West Indian experiment in self-government.

Victor Reid, a famous West Indian novelist, told students West Indian writers were searching for a national identity but hadn't found it yet.

New Buildings Make Canada Now More 'U'

Canada's universities are now going through the greatest wave of building in their history, according to figures released in Ottawa last week.

Canadian universities put up more than $77,000,000 for new buildings and equipment in 1959. They plan on spending more than $83,000,000 in 1960, but as recently as 1955 and 1956, they were spending only an annual $25,000,000.

The reason for this mass building program is given as the unprecedented number of children approaching college age. Five years ago, prophecies said university enrolment would be doubled in 10 years.

The universities then began to make preparations for this increase. The Gordon Commission said there would be 133,200 university students by 1964-65.

If even the most moderate predictions of university enrolment are accurate, university building costs will go up substantially. Universities, who presently get most of their money from the provinces, may soon be looking to Ottawa for more funds.

This is especially true of maritime and prairie universities who are now exporting quantities of their graduates to central Canada, many of them to jobs with the federal government in Canada.

By BARBARA AMIEL

"I thought today would just be an ordinary day like any other day. I didn't expect this fuss."

Seated at her desk was Miss Carola Boehm, secretary to Hart House warden Joseph McCulley. In front of her a bowl of red, white and blue flowers and above a Canadian Ensign.

Miss Boehm had just become a Canadian citizen.

"In Germany I was secretary to the America Consulate in Hamburg. I worked in many different departments including the citizenship department, she said.

"I arrived in Canada October 15, 1954. I remember it very clearly. It was the day of Hurricane Hazel.

"I didn't go straight to the job at the Warden's office since all my introductions were to German firms.

She hesitated. "But I didn't see why I should have to work for specifically German firms now that I was in Canada.

"I ended up in an insurance company. Then, one day I discovered a tiny advertisement for an English-German speaking secretary at the University of Toronto. The position was already taken, but they told me about a job at the Warden's office."

Miss Boehm looked at her fellow office workers and said: "Remember, I was so worried. I thought I would never get the position and then I was so happy when I did."

What does Miss Boehm think of Canadians?

"The people are so friendly. I've never understood why foreigners should experience discomfort. I've never felt I was looked upon as a stranger.

Life at U of T is different from that at German Universities, she said. There is nothing like a Hart House in Germany. Nor do we have the federated system of colleges; Canadian students are more easy-going than their German cousins and participate in more extra-curricular activities.

Veteran Torontonians might disagree with some of Miss Boehm's general impressions.

"The summer here is lovely and your traffic is so well organized. Besides that people stop for you. They're so courteous.

"The cost of living is cheaper in Canada. The wonderful chain stores with a big choice in foods is something we haven't got in Germany."

The citizenship ceremony presented no difficulties to Miss Boehm.

"They asked me many questions on Canada—political, geographical, and historical. I brought the questions to the Warden's office and some of the people in the office couldn't answer them," she smiled.

Miss Boehm's mother came to Toronto in December, 1958.

She was amazed at the attention that was showered on her daughter when she received her citizenship papers.

"It could only happen in Canada," her mother said.

Miss Boehm is now persuading her sister to come for a two-month stay this summer.

Was becoming a citizen a difficult decision for this attractive young secretary?

"It never occurred to me I would do anything else but become a Canadian as soon as I could."

'Graduated with honors while in jail.'

This is just one of the past events in the life of M. N. Krishnaswami, president of the Asiatic Branch of the World Assembly of Youth (WAY), currently in Toronto on WAY business.

Mr. Krishnaswami comes from a middle class Indian family. After leaving public school he became a mathematics student at the University of Madras.

There he became an ardent supporter of Mohandas Ghandi's Congress Party.

Three months before his graduation, Mr. Krishnaswami was jailed for taking part in a demonstration.

By JACQUES ROBERGE

He wrote his examinations in jail and graduated with honors.

After his release late in 1942 he continued to work with Ghandi for the liberation of India.

Mr. Krishnaswami was present at Ghandi's assassination.

He seemed sad as he recalled it, and he did not care to talk about it.

Mr. Krishnaswami's next position was that of confidential secretary to Mr. Dagbar, President of the Indian National Congress. Shortly afterwards, Mr. Krishnaswami was asked to help in organizing the youth of India. From there he rose to his present position. His territory stretches from Lebanon to Japan, as far south as Australia and New Zealand.

WAY is not a political or religious organization, but some of its members are political and religious groups. It has no membership in the communist countries because "These are not free countries as we know them," Mr. Krishnaswami said.

This is Mr. Krishnaswami's second world tour.

He doesn't do very much sight-seeing in the countries he visits. He prefers to meet people.

"After all, I'm interested in people, not places," he said.

out of touch

For 40 years, it has been presumed that membership in Hart House which the men of this university automatically hold is something of a privilege.

Last week was Nominations Week in Hart House. It was advertised that 44 positions were to be filled in the March elections, and that any male student in the university was eligible.

The response was practically subliminal. From 8500 members of Hart House, there came a total of 52 nominations. For three of the six committees involved, there were not enough nominees even to have an election.

If this were to happen in one of the colleges or faculties, it would not, perhaps, be very disturbing. One has only to observe a year's student politics to realize the pointlessness of attacking students' apathy towards them.

But in Hart House, we have come to expect something different.

Here, we are told, is no ordinary students' union. Its purpose, it is insisted, is not only to provide restaurants and facilities for those who have no other place to eat lunch. The Prayer Of The Founders, carved in stone outside the Great Hall, aims at something higher than that, and in 40 years, Hart House has in some measure approached that dream.

Why, then, does a Hart House election evoke little more than a yawn from its members?

To answer that it is only laziness, or self-centeredness, or apathy, or whatever you choose to call it, is to explain nothing. There is no organization on this campus which consistently draws as proportionately low representation in its elections as Hart House.

Some will say that Hart House has outlived its usefulness to this university — that there is no place on this campus for a men's club such as this. The idea that some areas of education and recreation are better conducted in the company of men only may some day disappear entirely; when it does, Hart House will be obsolete.

We prefer to think, however, that Hart House is not yet obsolete.

The alternative answer is not much more encouraging. But the answer lies in this fact — for all its ideals about the education of men with men, about a government that combines the best of professional administration with the best in "student democracy", Hart House still stands alone and to a great degree isolated from the rest of this campus. Students have, for the most part, a very hazy idea about what Hart House is, or what it does, and in some cases where it is. It is idiotic to lay the blame for this at the feet of disinterested students; the point is, why are they disinterested? If Hart House was designed for students, and if for years it was used by students — more than now — then the students can hardly be blamed.

Hart House is isolated. But what is unfortunate is that in large measure it has isolated itself. Publicity about Hart House comes, usually, in small, discreet notices arranged surreptitiously in campus publications. Committee members are lost in a fog of anonymity.

And the result, apparently is that last week only 52 members of the House were interested in being committee members. They extended the deadline to Tuesday — a compromise, not a solution.

Heartbreak In An Old

"Heartbreak House is leisured, cultured Europe before the war . . . the house in which Europe was stifling its soul." Thus Shaw describes the play which opened at the Crest on Wednesday.

I am not quite sure, however, that the play is worth bringing back, although it is certainly one of Shaw's better ones. The action of the play takes place in an English country house during the early war years of the First World War, though Shaw had begun work on it before 1914. The English house, together with the civilization which it housed, has largely disappeared as the result of the social changes consequent on that war and the one which followed it, and Shaw's invective against the "Napoleons of industry" has lost some of its point now that Fabian Socialism is safely buried in its grave. One wonders if anyone could now write with a straight face that "the nice people could read, some of them write; but they shrank from contact . . . with our politicians. They did not wish to realize Utopia for the common people."

If some of the moral point of Heartbreak House is lost, its dramatic sparkle is there nonetheless, and delighted New York audiences this year during what was otherwise a rather dull season. Presumably that is why the Crest decided to do it, and one would be hard put to say that they have made a mistake in the choice.

The main thing wrong with the production is the direction, particularly in the first act. The play, as Shaw himself points out, is Chekovian; characters troop into the country house of retired sea-captain Shotover, and their souls at each other. The result is a deliberately static situation which focusses all attention on the brilliant, brittle, bitter dialogue of the characters. Particularly during the first act the dialogue treads the thin Shavian line between the comic and the deeply significant. The direction brought it nearer to farce. When Shaw's captain, ably played by Powys Thomas, says, "At the age of eighty-eight, a man has long since ceased to make any distinctions between one fellow creature and another, he does not mean that his eyesight is failing. The audience thought he did, and laughed. That was not their fault; apparently the director thought so too."

Ellie Dunn, played by Marigold Charlesworth, has her heart broken right at the beginning of this act by dashing Hector Hushabye, played by Geoffrey Alexander, the husband of one of the Captain's Bohemian daughters. Mr. Alexander gives his role the requisite man-of-the-world qualities, but Miss Charlesworth's supposed change from ingenuous girlhood to unprincipled womanhood as the result of her disappointment is not as clear as it might be, due to the excessive coyness of her ingenuousness. Still, the part is a difficult one, and one cannot require perfection.

In the second act, the play picks up considerably, and sustains its new-found direction right to the end of the last act. Miss Charmion King brings a delightful cigarettes and whiskey tone to the part of Lady Utterword, the Captain's other daughter. . . . and Horseback . . . Heartbreak House . . . The prime minister . . . between barbarism and . . .

In this act, Shaw's tone comes through speeches. Some of the put in the mouth of Webster, who proves tence that the imper world are ultimately view it realistically.

I have saved till the bye, (Norma Renaud witty, sophisticated and indiscriminately with eyed tone which is the tion's answer to the quality of the old Cap. Amelia Hall, Lester and John Vernon all well in the minor part ing to his part of the

Seeger Sings Everything

The stage lights of Massey Hall went up, and an angular looking gentleman hesitated his way across the stage to the microphones. He wore a black suit, which despite its slim cut managed to look baggy at the knees, although one didn't notice this until one got past a brilliant yellow tie. Under one arm he carried a five-string banjo; under the other, a twelve-string guitar. He looked nervous.

Pete Seeger has said often that his main interest is in making songs available to all that will listen to them, so that they can take the songs away with them and in that way keep alive the folk process. To do that, he has to make an audience sing. Saturday night in Massey Hall, it took him about three minutes to get his audience singing, and about five minutes later we had forgotten the nervousness—his, and ours.

Seeger opened the concert with a few bars of his familiar "Goofing Off Theme", then moved into ten minutes of the jazz tune "Love", during which he pleaded, cajoled, and made the audience join in. He then, to fill up the first half of the program, a potpourri of English, American, Scotch, Irish and Yiddish songs, along with watered exercises on the banjo and the guitar. frequent assists from that audience of his of the songs were unfamiliar, which for a welcome change, but which for some distinctly something of a disappointment, commented at the beginning of the set that there had been requests for more songs. Perhaps these were the devotees groups as The Kingston Trio; I had complaints Seeger's choices.

The second half did, however, include songs more familiar to the audience, and action had Seeger attacking his banjo that he often lost a steel finger pick to a live stage.

It would be impossible to even list comment on anything like all the songs formed. A few highlights should be mentioned. His rendition of "Oh, What A Friend" (Continued on Page 6)

ARTY LETTERS

Dear Sir,

John Robert Colombo was far too lenient in his profile of me.

One example is where he repeats my question "Who is Norbert Frye?" He assumed the question was rhetorical and buried a barb. Actually it arose out of my ignorance.

Norbert Frye has a perfect right to state I'm a "Competent poet deliberately indulging in harmless doggerel" as I have a perfect right to disagree with him. Readers of The Varsity can judge the issue on the basis of my poems accompanying the Profile or others in my various books.

Whatever the verdict I think John Robert Colombo and The Varsity may be congratulated for being pioneers: this profile of me is the first to appear in a non-leftist medium. There was one grudging review of a book of mine in the Winnipeg Free Press, one in the London Free Press, a reference in Saturday night over the last 18 years. The rest is silence.

One place I seem to have slipped during the interview: my failure to express my enthusiasm for Wilson MacDonald, a great poet if ever there was one.

realist an intensity which is as marvelous as the North Country accent in which he conveys it.

The sets are generally good, though they did not bear much resemblance to the poop which Shaw describes, and the third act, which should have taken place in twilight, took place instead on a set lit up like a Christmas tree, making some of the lines ludicrous.

No words are sufficiently harsh to condemn the misguided musical director who gave us an overture and two entr'actes which were a medley of such old favorites as It's a Long Way to Tipperary and Somewhere Over the Rainbow, presumably for World War I "atmosphere."

Mixed praise goes to Mr. Royston Morley, the director who almost sank the play in the first, and masterfully fished it out again in the second.

This is a competent production of a very good and very difficult play. See it!

LECTURE

George McCowan, well known Canadian actor and director, will be this year's Dale lecturer.

The Earnest Dale Memorial Lecture will be in Hart House Theatre today at 5 p.m.

Mr. McCowan has directed at Stratford at the Crest Theatre and on CBC television and has toured with the Canadian Players.

His career began with the Canadian Repertory Company in Ottawa. Later he joined the permanent company of the Crest Theatre performing with the Straw Hat players in the summer.

A graduate of Victoria College, Mr. McCowan appeared in several Hart House Productions while at U. of T.

a strange odor...

A good criminal lawyer is one who can get his client acquitted whether the client is guilty or not.

Edward Clarke was such a lawyer. When he saved Adelaide Bartlett's neck in 1886, he proved once again that the combination of a slight doubt as to guilt coupled with a jury's subconscious desire to acquit a woman is almost always successful.

Thirty-one-year-old Adelaide married a man of some wealth, who was considerably older than herself. She married him purely for greed.

Soon after the services, the couple moved to a new neighborhood and eventually met the local parson, Reverend George Dyson. Adelaide fell for him. Between the two of them they got poor old Edwin Bartlett to permit the Reverend to tutor Adelaide privately in "academic subjects."

The young parson fell into Adelaide's net, but tried to save his conscience by going to Edwin and confessing everything. "Perhaps I'd better stop seeing your wife," he stammered.

"Nonsense," replied Edwin happily, "I have confidence in you."

Reverend George continued his duties, and simultaneously Edwin began to be ill rather regularly.

This was unusual. Edwin had always been healthy, but he now became steadily worse. A doctor was called, and diagnosed the cause of the man's illness as mercurial poisoning. The doctor decided the mercury had been administered by accident, and went away peacefully while Adelaide and George made further plans.

Edwin died. At the autopsy the attending pathologists noticed a strong odor of chloroform when they opened the man's stomach.

Trial evidence showed the vicar had bought a large bottle of chloroform under another name. The bottle was handed to Mrs. Bartlett. The bottle was never seen again.

The Reverend spilled the beans, and told a coroner's jury his part in the affair.

So our lawyer Edward Clarke was in an extremely difficult position. He could not challenge the findings of the pathologist. He could not challenge Dyson's statements, because Mrs. Bartlett accepted them. The only chance he had was to try to convince the jury that the chloroform had not caused Edwin's death.

In return for his co-operation, apparently, the attorney-general announced he intended to bring no evidence against Dyson. Later Dyson learned the real reason behind the crown's move. He made a wonderful witness against Adelaide.

The next day the crown carefully brought out his puppy-like devotion to the young woman.

"She asked me . . . she told me . . . I did what she wanted . . ." he stammered.

Before the prosecuting attorney was finished with the man, every member of the jury had Adelaide pictured as a clever woman, clever enough to make a man crawl before her, to forget his conscience completely.

The crown was disturbed, but rallied to the extent that they brought out the almost impossibility of suicide or accidental death caused by chloroform. One expert testified liquids, even irritant poisons, could be poured down a man's throat easily, if the man was under the influence of an anesthetic.

The crown attorney, Charles Russell, breathed a sigh of relief, but Clarke wasn't licked.

He succeeded in getting the admission out of the crown's expert that pouring chloroform down a man's throat would be a "very delicate" operation.

Clarke called no witnesses, presented no evidence. His job was to sew a seed of doubt, sprinkled with pity, that would save his lovely client.

He painted a pitiful picture, this was certain. By the time he had finished, the jury believed that Adelaide had spent sleepless nights trying to nurse her husband back to health. Adelaide helped out as best she could by allowing flickers of adoring gratitude flicker across her pale chalk-white (chalked?) face, from her place in the dock.

Realizing that the jury would not be happy unless they had an alternate solution, Clarke then moved onto thin ice. He cataloged all the evidence that seemed to suggest Bartlett might have committed suicide, and the jury took it all in. They were with him now.

The verdict came.

"Although we think grave suspicion is attached to the prisoner," said the foreman, telling the court how close the verdict was, "we do not think there is sufficient evidence to show how or by whom the chloroform was administered."

His persuasive voice had done it.

Indians Sing And Dance

But there were some important differences. The items on this year's program were picked to provide a sort of pageant of the history of the Caribbean islands.

And one item on last year's program, a short West Indian play, was not repeated. Dropping the play was probably a good idea, since the West Indian accent combined with the heroic acoustical defects of University College's Howard Ferguson Hall made much of last year's play's dialogue incomprehensible, especially to non-West Indians.

The songs and dances the groups performed recalled the islands' original inhabitants, the Spanish and French visitors, the African slaves who were brought there and the freeing of these Africans from slavery.

The program finished up with more contemporary calypso songs and dances, including a couple of original calypsos by the group led by Lords Roach and Cooper and a carnival-scene finale in which members of the audience were dragged on stage by the performers.

The whole show was extremely well staged.

The best parts in the show were undoubtedly the dances, ranging from the passionate sensuality of the Afro-Cuban "Babalu" and the dance "Contoulay" recalling the freeing of the slaves to the still sensual comedy of "Tobago Love" telling the story of how two men flirt with and fight for a woman—until her husband appears.

The songs were also pleasant although sometimes the singers did not succeed in making themselves heard. Comic highlight was undoubtedly Lord Roach's calypso solo about his sister's brain being exchanged by a surgical error with that of a cat.

All in all, director Anita Dubois is to be congratulated on a fine show.

The hall Saturday night was packed with both West Indians and non-West Indians who were obviously enjoying themselves. It may be that the campus is beginning to realize that another and a happier way of life, as so well represented in this sort of show by the West Indian students on campus, is something well worth having a look at.

Barbirolli Is Best

Sir Edward Elgar began his fantastically difficult Second Symphony in Venice, 1910, and finished it a year later on the Cornish coast at Tintagel, the legendary seat of King Arthur. The work shows no apparent influence from either locality; rather it is Elgar all the way through, and just about Elgar at his best.

This symphony was played last Friday night by the C.B.C. Symphony Orchestra under the demanding baton of Sir John Barbirolli, guest conductor from England. The occasion was one we hope never to forget, for the orchestra was in top playing condition and superbly met the demands of the master on the podium.

Barbirolli is one of the venerable, even formidable tradition of conductors who are born with a baton already in their grasp. Confidence, absolute mastery, complete absorption in the matter at hand govern every move, every slight gesture. He draws or drives the music out of the orchestra with such conviction that they have no choice but to obey. No looking back, no regrets; and furthermore, no need for regrets. We hesitate to use the tired expression "definitive performance," but perhaps the point is made.

What more really can one say? We were completely satisfied; even our former doubts about this symphony have now been abandoned. Its nobly striding first movement at no moment lost consistency, in spite of the tempo changes in almost every bar. The deep spiritual mood of the Larghetto was conveyed because of the articulation, and again the myriad nuances of Elgar's genius, were moulded into the performance with a style that can only be described as right.

The precipitate Rondo looks impossible on paper, and in actual sound it left us breathless. Yet this movement also, in addition to each of the others, boasts one of Elgar's most sonorous and convincing themes. It is simply, we expect, an obvious example of the variety inherent in Elgar's almost stubborn singularity of purpose, matched in his day only by Sibelius.

The final Maestoso, with its grand 'cello tune, sent more warm tingles up and down our spine than most music ever does. To this reviewer that purely physiological reaction is a sort of barometer-reading to the effect that perfection was in the making. Sir John Barbirolli and this orchestra were meant for each other.

Other works on this wonderful program were Malcolm Arnold's Tam O'Shanter and Barbirolli's own arrangement of a suite of Elizabethan dances. We had never really noticed before the sheer satire in Arnold's dramatic retelling of the old Scottish tale; here was a real Tam, a sort of Till Eulenspiegel in kilts. Whenever we managed to stop laughing, we marvelled at the technical skill of the orchestra in meeting all of the conductor's exhausting demands.

The Elizabethan Suite, of course, we love for its madrigal for massed horns (four of them!) in the last section. In his arrangement Barbirolli has not set out to reproduce Elizabethan style, but rather to reinterpret it in the light of two-and-a-half centuries of further growth in compositional technique and orchestration. With this understood the result is legitimate, and proved on Friday night a most suitable interlude before the fearful greatness of Elgar's symphony.

Seeger continued

In Congress" saw him at his best in song and political comment. His "Summertime" was a thing of beauty. A song treating the quiz show scandal of last fall did its job of demonstrating that folk music is alive so long as people will write songs about the things that happen to them and around them.

Throughout the concert, Seeger managed to use simultaneously his voice, personality, instrument and the audience to incredible advantage. The 2300 people in the Hall were made to feel happy, sad, melancholy, angry and delighted, they clapped and stamped, even as they sang. One of the more remarkable examples of this was the song about the D-Day Dodgers", the melody of which may be more familiar as Lili Marlene. Coming out of the concert, I heard several people ask the same question: "Where can I get a copy of the song?" Seeger had done his job.

In general there were several aspects of Pete Seeger which stood out in this concert: his international repertoire, his appreciation of what is authentic and what is not, his extraordinary musical versatility, his social preoccupations, and above all, his stature as an artist. Folk music, and music in general along with it, received a boost in Massey Hall Saturday night. P.R.

Garner Disappoints

A tinkling right hand, a heavy chord-thumping left; a unique talent for stylized piano interpretations, and a strong sense of swing have created for Erroll Garner a secure position on the jazz popularity charts. Regrettably the worst elements of his playing were evident at last Thursday's concert at Massey Hall. Garner exhibited the limitations of his talent, and the monotony of his unique approach.

The effort on the part of Hurok Attractions Inc. to create a sophisticated concert setting detracted from the warmth of the music and created a stiff formal atmosphere, although no titles were announced or listed on the "program". The music was not up to the starched shirt nor the pretentious billings, (i.e., Kelly Martin, Percussionist) Erroll's efforts to add "style" to his selections with ponderous structures of chords, and in meaningless introductions, was in the main self-conscious and heavy-handed. These lapses of taste added nothing to the form or content of the music.

The more rewarding moments, particularly in the second half of the program, were delightful musical doodlings. Garner's unique approach consists of a re-interpretation of a standard, tune in sets of thematic variations. He cleverly improvises around a melody, discovering new facets of the original, and adding humorous developments of his own. Unfortunately, even here total monotony and predictability tended to creep in.

Repetitious devices, grotesque percussive effects and witty inventions alternately oppressed and delighted this listener. Some of the tunes performed in this manner were: My Funny Valentine, It Could Happen To You,

I Get A Kick Out of You, The Nearness of You, Will You Still Be Mine, I Didn't Know What Time It Was, and a selection from My Fair Lady.

The weakly co-ordinated rhythm section consisted of Edward Calhoun, bass, and awkward Kelly Martin, drums. Martin's ability to give full support to Garner's improvisational changes may improve with time and practice.

If Garner could control some of his love for the elaborate and romantic, and instead focus more attention and time on the swinging and happy elements in his playing, the resulting jazz would be a more communicative and compelling music.

A radical religion combining what the founder calls "the best of Zen Buddhism and Druidism" has sprung up on the University of Toronto campus.

The first meeting of the Zen Druids was held last night and early this morning in Queen's Park around a huge oak tree.

LONE ZEN Druid sits alone under a great oak tree after all the dilettantes have gone home. An alert Varsity staff photographer heard him mutter: "What is life? Reality? Am I real? Me, I am only a figment of Wkr's imagination."

The members, only about ten of them, solemnly arrived shortly before midnight and began the two-hour ritual of their adopted faith.

Sesiyu Ethelbred, a former student of the U of T, gave a brief address to the assembled students, who had turned out in response to an advertisement placed in last Friday's Varsity.

He welcomed the participants, and outlined the basis of the religion.

Ethelbred said Zen Druids are mainly concerned with the worship of trees and the sun. Because the faith has not been officially recognized in religious circles, Ethelbred said the members would stick to tree worship for a while, under the cover of darkness.

After a briefing, the recent converts took part in the most important Zen Druid ritual—that of approaching the oak tree. The members walked up to the tree with great reverence, "bearing in mind that the oak tree contains the spirit and body of the whole religion," threw bits of mistletoe at one another and sat down in the Zen position of meditation.

Then in a chorus, the Zen Druids moaned the word "omoon" very softly, four times.

After a few moments of silent prayer, the students walked up to the tree, wrapped their arms around it and said affectionately "boq".

A planned cannibalistic feast had to be cancelled because of Board of Health regulations. Ethelbred said he hoped to obtain a special permit before the next services are held, next Sunday night.

A fertility rite was also to have been held in the University College quadrangle, but this was also cancelled because "the women just weren't interested."

All our fertility rites will be held with the strictest morality," Ethelbred said. "The coeds have nothing to lose."

He said his new religion has many advantages to college students including "moral orgies" and "reverse blood bank service". He did not explain exactly what the latter was.

INSTANT LETTERS

Dear Sir:

With an outstanding piece of luck, I found a copy of your newspaper, to wit, The Varsity, lying in the bottom of the monkey cage at Riverdale Zoo, and upon reading it I noticed your ad. I would like to know if you have to be a student to join your Druid group. My wife and I have been druids for nearly 200 years back in our respective family trees. In fact that is where she and I practice our fertility rites, in a large oak tree about fifty feet off the ground.

CAGERS GET REVENGE ON GAELS

Muir Hoops 25 In 80-76 Win Over Queen's

By NOEL BATES

Varsity Blues successfully held off a last minute attempt by the Queen's Golden Gaels to win their third game in a row by a score of 80-76 in an intercollegiate basketball game at Hart House on Friday night.

The game, played before about 200 fans, was not particularly an exciting one as Varsity clearly dominated the play from the first quarter on.

Toronto was down 3 points at the 10 minute mark of the half, however, they put on a scoring spurge and maintained a 10 point lead from then until the dying moments of the game.

In the first of the game Toronto was experiencing a great amount of difficulty getting the rebounds but as time passed they improved.

The only Queen's player who was any real trouble to the Blues was Denny Bozic. Bozic was the main reason that Toronto lost a previous game with the Gaels (with the exception of Toronto's terrible shooting). And he tried to pull a repeat performance on Friday night. He constantly grabbed rebounds from much taller men and led the Kingston team in scoring with 25 points.

Mike Muir was the outstanding Toronto player for the evening. He played equally well on offence and defence and matched the Queen's player by netting 25 points also.

Toronto displayed some of the finest playmaking of any team that has played at Hart House all season. It's only unfortunate that their shooting was not a little more accurate.

Norm Mencej who returned to the Blues after a two week lay-off was Toronto's next high man with 13 points.

The game became close in the last minutes when Queen's came within four points and looked as though they might just catch the host club. However, the Varsity team used ball-control to run out the clock and win.

Coach John McManus said after the game he was not too enthusiastic about his team's playing. He was pleased to win though.

Just Notes . . . the Blues take off for a mid-week game with Rochester Tech on Wednesday . . . next weekend Toronto will be at Western and Assumption for a back-to-back series . . . it will be interesting to see if the Hart House clock will be fixed this year . . . three times already it has broken down

Laval Clinch Ice Title Defeat Varsity By 7-1

By GENE GLISKY

Laval University Rouge et Or became Intercollegiate hockey champions for the first time since their entry into the league in 1950, breaking Varsity Blues five year hold on the Queen's cup by humbling the defending champions 7-1 at Varsity Arena Friday night.

To the 2,000 some odd, Varsity hockey fans and the handful of whooping Laval fans at the Arena, this Laval squad were a far cry from the ineffective lot Blues trounced 7-3 in the league opener last November.

Rouge et Or carried themselves with the cocksure aplomb of champions. They skated fast and hard, broke out of their own end with a furious rush, clutched, grabbed, fell in front of the puck with gay abandon, and most important of frustration. They did not mistake the Varsity puck-chasers condescended to make.

For Blues, this was a game of frustration. They did not deserve to lose by six goals. On their spirited play, particularly in the first two periods they did not deserve to lose at all.

Blues roared to the attack from the opening whistle. In concentrated fury they threw all but the proverbial kitchen appliance at Laval net-minder Maurice Grenier. In their eagerness to score goals Varsity gave Laval sharpshooters several break away scoring chances but Bob Giroux came up with three sparkling saves to promise a close defensive battle.

That Grenier was going to prove a nemesis was obvious early in the first period. Blues were awarded that rarity in hockey—a penalty shot—when a Laval forward assumed goal keeping responsibility.

At 6:15 of the period, veteran defenseman Harry Neale was awarded the puck at the blue line. He wound up. He dippy doodled his way to the solitary Grenier. He shifted once. He shifted again. He shot and was beaten cleanly. Grenier would not be fooled.

It was Jim Murchie who finally put Varsity ahead. The big right wing, playing his best game of the season, drove one home from a scramble in front of the Rouge et Or net. Center John Gatten assisted on the play.

In the second period, the pattern of play was much the same. Blues did everything but score. Four times Varsity snipers hit the post on the charmed Laval goal.

Laval scored twice. Leo Bourgault climaxed a Laval ganging attack to beat Giroux. Jose Michaud pounced on a sloppy Varsity clearing pass to put Laval ahead.

The roof caved in, in the final frame. League scoring leader Michel Lagace and bespectacled veteran Claude Duguay rubbed the salt into the Blues wounds.

It took Lagace five minutes to rap three consecutive goals past the helpless Varsity defence. Duguay scored both his two minutes apart.

It was almost unbelievable Blues outshot Laval 46-36. They also played one of their finest games of the season. They never gave up. They tried and tried and tried. Gatten, Murchie, Gord Gow, Jim Simpson, and Neale gave it all they had and then some, but that little black rubber *-&* would not go in!

Only three minor penalties were called by referee Gord Fyevreau, two to Blues one to Laval. The grapevine has it, both coaches were adamant that fisticuffs would not be tolerated. An odd twist to the old adage "If you can't lick 'em on the ice you shouldn't lick 'em on Philosophers walk."

Congratulations to coach Jean-Paul Poulin and his merry Red and Gold Champions. Wait till next year!

4 Records Fall At Hart House Swim Meeting

Four University swim records were broken at the Hart House pool last night as School of Practical Science amassed 79 points to become University of Toronto Intramural swim champions and holders of the Fitzgerald cup this year.

A four-man team defending champions Faculty School of Medicine shaved 11.8 seconds from the 400 yard medley record with a time of 4:20.7.

Mary Chapelle also of Medicine posted a record time of 23.9 seconds in the 50 yard free style event, while Bill Yorzyk of Medicine set a new mark of 2:19.7 in the 200 yard butterfly event.

In the 100 yard free style, Chapelle garnered his second record of the night with a time of 52.4 seconds.

Medicine were runners up with 54 points while Trinity College gained 46, University College 28, Victoria College eight and School of Architecture earned five points.

400 yd. medley — 1. Medicine (Unger, Gossage, Yorzyk, Ashenburt), Time, 4:20.7 (record), 220 yd. freestyle — 1. Yorzyk (Med.), 2. Richardson (Trinity), 3. Thompson (SPS), Time, 2:19.1, 50 yd. freestyle — 1. Chapelle (SPS), 2. Moore (Trinity), 3. Doyle (Vic), Time, 0:23.9 (record), 200 yd. individual medley — 1. Fisher (Trinity), 2. Deacon (UC), 3. Unger (Med.), Time, 2:30.2, Diving — 1. Huovinen (SPS), 212 points, 2. Logan (Vic), 3. Sims (Med.), 200 yd. butterfly — 1. Yorzyk (Med.), 2. Jany (UC), Time, 2:19.7 (record), 100 yd. freestyle — 1. Chapelle (SPS), 2. Richardson (Trinity), 3. Ashenburt (Med.), Time, 0:52.4 (record), 200 yd. backstroke — 1. Fisher (Trinity), 2. Thierry (Arch.), 3. Otto (Trinity), Time, 2:17.3, 400 yd. freestyle — 1. Thompson (SPS), 2. Unger (Med.), 3. Wilson (SPS), Time 5:12.9, 200 yd. breast stroke — 1. Deacon (UC), 2. Jany (UC), 3. Gossage (Med.), Time, 2:38, 400 yd. sprint relay — 1. (SPS) (Machael, Wilson, Thompson, Chapelle), Time, 3:56.5.

a 45-degree angle

Yesterday four young socialists were selling, logically, "The Young Socialist" on campus.

This example of slanted reporting puts other newspapers to shame.

"BERKELEY, Calif. — Slate, the student political party at the University of California at Berkeley, was rather badly defeated in the recent election for student government. The fraternity-sorority 'know-nothings' were able to march their members down to vote by means of social pressure."

"deutschland uber alles"

The disgusting lines "I simply won't Cause the Pi Phi's don't" express all too truthfully the attitude of the sororities formerly connected with the University of Toronto campus. When girls join the social group, all their human rights to think for themselves remain outside of Sorority Row.

Alpha Phi has an even more superwoman-complex rallying cry:

"We're Alpha Phi

We bow to no other one."

and:

"Get up you bally blokes, let Alpha Phi sit down."

Religion is brought into these touching little ballads from time to time:

"We wandered up to heaven to see the angels there.
And they were all a-standing around a golden chair,
And some were talking picture shows, and some were talking teas,
When in walked old St. Peter, saying, 'Here's to Alpha Phi's'."

If you aren't already retching helplessly, try and wade through this advertisement for Alpha Omicron Pi. You too can nab a wealthy husband.

He wore his little frat pin<sup>1</sup>
Right above his heart,
And with that little frat pin
He swore he'd never part.<sup>2</sup>
Four long years at college<sup>3</sup>
The pin held firm and fast
And he wore his little frat pin
In honor of his frat.
Oh, along came a pair of big brown eyes,<sup>4</sup>
Smiling A. O. Pi,
She took that little frat pin
Right off that little guy.<sup>5</sup>
And now they live in a bungalow,<sup>6</sup>
With welcome on the mat,<sup>7</sup>
And they pin the babies' diapers,<sup>8</sup>
In honor of his frat.<sup>9</sup>
Oh little Psi, oh little Psi,<sup>10</sup>
Oh we know he'll go to college
By and by, by and by.
And we know there's one decision,
He'll make without revision,
That his frat pin, his frat pin
Will go to an A. O. Pi — Hi — 11

Action painting, performed by the free application of paint to a large surface to produce a pattern, will be used for charity in England today.

People who think they have something to say with large blobs of paint will be able to hire a complete wall of a building for the evening. They will try to use their free expression of color and form.

There's only one catch. Whatever they paint, no matter how good it is, it won't be around for posterity to admire.

The building will be demolished immediately after the contest.

Hart House had a few qualms before letting Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity (in no way connected with the university) use Caledon Farm last weekend. But it was decided that as the members were undergraduates of the U of T, they could use the farm.

Anyway, the members of the frat (in no way connected with the university), were snowed out.

Varsity Staffer Dies After Tragic Mishap

Varsity Managing Editor and columnist Alan Walker died in hospital early this morning as the tragic result of a student joke.

Doctors said his death was caused by head injuries sustained when he fell in Varsity Stadium last night.

Walker was photographing a mock "Zen-Druid" ceremony being staged by about 20 students. Witnesses said two of the students grabbed Walker and attempted to pull him towards a bonfire they had kindled.

Ironically, the students got the idea for the ceremony from an advertisement Walker had placed in The Varsity last week. Last Monday an article by Walker described an orgy which was supposed to have taken place Sunday night.

However, he knew nothing about last night's ceremony until he received an anonymous phone call at The Varsity about a half hour before the fatal accident.

When he got to the stadium he saw the students prancing around the fire. He took one photograph, reproduced on this page, and closed in for a second shot.

Grant Taylor (III UCR) who had been attracted to the stadium from his nearby home by the noise, said he saw the accident.

He said two of the hooded students pushed Walker towards the fire, and that the columnist fell, hitting his head against a log.

The laughter slowly died away as Walker failed to get up.

The participants suddenly dropped their parts as tree-worshipping Buddhists, and gathered around the fallen man. Blood was rushing from a deep wound in his temple.

An ambulance was called which rushed Walker to hospital. He died shortly after 1.30 a.m.

Police said last night they were holding three students for questioning, but they added they doubted charges would be laid. They did not release the names of the students.

Walker joined The Varsity last year and has been writing a popular column ("Odds and Ends") since November, 1959.

Campaign to Help World's Refugees

Fifty boxes will appear on campus next Monday and Tuesday. They will be collection boxes, placed in prominent places to receive contributions from University of Toronto students for student refugees.

The two-day World Refugee Year U of T blitz is expected to raise one dollar from each student, WRY Committee Chairman Tony Jennings said last night. A goal of $100,000 has been set for the total to be collected from all Canadian universities.

He said that Canada has given moral support to the WRY but so far contributed very little monetary aid. "Norway's average contribution per capita is 80 cents; Canada averages about 4 cents per capita."

WRY was conceived by four Englishmen, one of whom was the former distance runner Chris Chataway, as a humanitarian year to correspond to the International Geophysical Year. Its aim, as listed in the United Nations resolution, is to encourage additional financial contributions and increased opportunities for a permanent solution of the refugee problem. More than 60 nations are participating in the program.

At least 15,000,000 refugees remain as victims of World War I and succeeding wars.

Rusuncums

The Soviet Ambassador to Canada, Mr. Aroutunian, who was to have spoken at a meeting of the University of Toronto United Nations Club, will be unable to be present today.

In his place, Professor Tayyeb of the department of geography will speak on "Russian, Indian and Chinese Relations." The meeting is at 4:15 p.m. in room 4, Trinity College.

Mr. Aroutunian will talk on Nuclear Disarmament at a meeting of the UN Club on March 18.

There will be a meeting of The Varsity masthead staff in The Varsity office at 1 p.m. today.

Elections Past and Coming

Hart House

Members of Hart House running for five standing committees and the squash rackets committee have posted their election platforms in the house rotunda, and their proposals are as varied as their reasons for wanting to join the committees.

Stirred by the recent refusal by officials of the Women's Athletic Building to allow Varsity swimmers to use the WAB Olympic-style pool facilities, a member has suggested that the Great Hall of Hart House be "converted into a swimming pool with a three metre board, for the use of Varsity swimmers who are potential Olympic material".

A member running for house committee wants Hart House to "be maintained as a bastion of male dominion. However, the privileges now extended to women should be conserved, but not expanded."

He is opposed by a member who is also in the running for house, who says "any policies to keep women out should be initiated".

"There should be increased sleeping facilities in the library, with lazy boy chairs, pillows, and all existing chairs should be softened," said one student campaigning for the library committee.

Another member is hoping to be elected to the music committee because he wants "to be in on the 'in' group".

Speeches by the candidates will be made in the East Common Room of Hart House at 1.30 p.m. today.

Elections are next Wednesday, March 2.

Engineers

Engineering Society election campaigns are now in full swing in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, with voting on Friday.

Over 600 signs, free blotters and sporadic speeches characterize this year's campaign. Students were arriving late at lectures yesterday, as they paused to study the candidates' posters. John Brant, Howard Malone and Teaser Teasdale are running for the presidency of the society, the job with final control over Skule's $70,000 per year expenditures.

Dave Rutenberg, Ken Falkner and Ron Benson are campaigning for the post of director of professional relations.

Wycliffe

Wycliffe College Literary Society elected its officers for next year last Thursday.

Senior student, intermediary between the society and the college authorities is William Moore (II Theology). Treasurer is Robert Reid (II Eng-Phys) and social director is David Buck (III Arts).

Election of the new government of the society and for the executive of the Athletic Association will be held shortly.

Forestry

The Faculty of Forestry held their annual elections yesterday, with well over 80 per cent of the Foresters voting.

Bruce MacDougall was voted into the presidency. Other officers are: vice-president, F. J. Rice; secretary, J. P. Page; treasurer, I. H. H. Jennings.

SAC rep, E. J. Yates; social director, L. Lewis; second year rep, W. J. Clarke; fourth year rep, G. R. Unwin; editor of the Annual Ring, L. S. McCoy.

Also elected were the athletic executive: president, K. P. Campbell; vice-president, Carl Lovenskild; secretary, J. P. Stronach; treasurer, R. M. Morzon; second year rep, W. D. Wardle.

Space Club Missile Orbits Our Planet

By TERRY BOURKE

Downsview Airport, Feb. 24—University of Toronto Space Club students successfully launched a rocket into orbit at 11:37 p.m. last night.

With a thunderous roar, the gleaming 30-foot missile left the launching pad in a ball of orange flame, and streaked into the western night, high over the city of Toronto.

At the moment the one-stage rocket is whirling around the globe, 120 miles above the earth's surface, in an elliptical pattern.

Meanwhile members of the U of T David Dunlop Observatory said last night they had picked up faint signals from the rocket on their scanning equipment.

The rocket, which circles the earth once every 90 minutes, will pass over Toronto again at noon.

The Space Club said last night it's expected the missile will remain in orbit at least four days. Then it will plunge earthward, burning up as it passes through the atmosphere.

Only instrument on the flight was a radio transmitter, designed to relay signals back to earth.

Early this morning congratulations poured into rocket club headquarters from across Canada and around the world.

One of them was from the head of the Physics Department at the University of Moscow, Rosimaylin Vlodikerslaw.

The telegram, datelined Moscow, said: "The students and the faculty of the U of Moscow send congratulations to U of T for their achievement of a great technical triumph. We are sure university students enrolled everywhere in science faculties will recognize your victory as a tribute to the genius of the university mind."

A wire from Canada's Governor-General George Vanier read: "My sincere congratulations on your very noble accomplishment."

The rocket's launching came as a surprise. Work on the missile was kept under wraps during the past because according to Wayne Postiva, club Staff Secretary, "we didn't want a big publicity build-up and then have our whole venture flop".

The huge rumbling booms of the rocket motor were heard for miles around North York.

Many of the residents in the district became panicky when they heard the noise and saw the sky light up as the missile soared into the black night.

By the time North York police arrived to investigate the disturbance, about 75 people clad in a various assortment of underwear and pajamas, were standing around the edge of the field, waving their hands, pointing in the direction of pad.

At one point the police were ready to arrest the whole club for causing a disturbance of the peace. But when they learned what had happened they provided the members an escort back to club headquarters at the U of T Aerophysics Building.

There at 4:00 this morning a colorful victory celebration was staged.

Club President Burt Morrison, in an interview during the party described the Space Club as an "unique experiment in campus extra curricular activities".

"We're the first club of its kind in Canada. There was one at the University of British Columbia, but it was outlawed by the Students' Administrative Council there."

We asked him if much information had been collected from the flight.

"It's hard to say," Morrison replied. "All we were interested in was just putting the rocket into the air. It was, as a matter of fact, the foremost thing from our minds that the rocket would actually reach orbit."

Stan Kijelberb, 1st Vice-President of the Space Club said: "Boy, am I happy. I mean really happy. This is the greatest, man. We put a lot of work on this rocket. And now the pay off—outer space. Beat that."

Work on the rocket began last summer, with Morrison laying the groundwork. When General Electric and Westinghouse heard about the project they willingly supplied much of the electronic equipment needed for the experiment.

The Hamilton Steel Company picked up the tab for the rocket's fuselage. Rest of the money for material came from an anonymous benefactor.

A Toronto construction firm built a small launching pad at Downsview Airport, and for three days a city contractor loaned Club members 42 workers to assist in rocket construction.

The missile was completed early this week at Caledon Farms. The RCAF provided a transport truck, and the rocket was hauled to Downsview Airport.

BLAST OFF! U of T Space Club rocket leaves its launching pad at Downsview Airport last night in a cloud of white smoke. The missile is now circling the earth. (ASTRO-BUB)

Violence and mass demonstration, are essential to its anti-capitalist cause. This is the idea put forth in the Young Socialist Appeal Bulletin which has been sold at the Queens Park entrance to Hart House yesterday.

Pat Bain and Jeffrey Eutton, two members of the Young Socialist Alliance, were hawkling the paper at "only ten cents a copy."

They told us the aim of the Young Socialists is "To expound the ideas of socialism to university and high school students."

The paper has a good four pages to why World War II started in an article called "German Socialist Youth Fight Way Against Hitler".

"American and English Capitalists were far from hostile to Hitler when the only people he was bombing on the German borders and Jews only when he realized that even the socialist revolution had destroyed them."

Suspend Students With Late Essays

Seven students have been asked to leave their courses because of overdue assignments, it was announced last night by Mr. Robin Ross, the University of Toronto Registrar.

Mr. Ross declined to name the students but said that letters had been sent to inform them of their expulsion. Three of the students are in University College, one is in Trinity, two are in Victoria College and one is in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering.

The assignments in question had been due since the fall term," Mr. Ross said, "and the students were warned by their professors before school was closed."

Mr. Ross admitted that other lists of students with overdue assignments had been sent out, but that this time he would be asking for non-payment of fees.

When we received the word last night that Alan Walker had died, someone in the office said "serves him right."

We don't understand what goes on in such a person's mind. But Walker did. It was just a bit too ironical that the kind of insensitive subhuman that he liked most to attack in his column should have been around to pronounce so miserable an epitaph on him.

In case this judgment is being pronounced on him now in various places around campus, we would like to at least try to set the record straight by talking about some of the things Walker was trying to do and thought he could accomplish.

Every crusader—and on a level that may appear to be and perhaps is small, Walker was a crusader—gravitates around a single pet peeve, chooses one folly among the many follies of the people around him, and attacks it.

The general folly that Walker was most interested in attacking was stupidity, the kind of willful stupidity that refuses to apply intelligence to the world and its relationships.

He found this stupidity in many forms. One of its most frequent forms for him was undue respect for authority, the kind of respect for authority that in his view made sorority girls who wanted to pledge Negroes take orders not to from alumni associations, respect for authority that makes so many of us slaves to advertising and the printed word, respect for social authority that makes us condemn out of hand the perverse or the different, respect for authority that makes so many of us superstitious enough to want our bodies preserved six feet under ground after whatever made those bodies human have left them, respect for moral authority that makes us exalt the letter of the law over its spirit and keeps us from investigating our relationships with those around us. These are only a few of the themes of his column.

It may be argued that he carried the "nothing sacred" attitude to the point where any respect at all for authority was "undue" respect. Probably this was true. We do not feel he had to apologize for the extremes in what he wrote.

We do not feel even that he need have apologized for attacking one of the most fundamental and fundamentally abused sacred cows; so called "good taste."

That is why, among the ordinary reasons, a statement like "serves him right" was so horrible to us.

There was no reason in his death, retributive or otherwise. The idea that there can be reason in such things is the worst stupidity of all.

BOOKS BOOKS

The Way It Was, Harold Loeb. Criterion Books.

The Years With Ross, James Thurber. Little Brown.

Writers At Work, The Viking Press.

The 1920's have become a legend, but now, forty years later, the sad young men and women are growing old. Many of the romantic figures of that age are dead and those living are now as old as the twentieth century and are beginning to look back, sometimes in anger, sometimes sadly. Several members or contemporaries of the lost generation have recently written or been quoted on what it was like then.

The Way It Was is Harold Loeb's revelation about his past and his relationship with Ernest Hemingway. The title is part of Loeb's attempt to get even with Hemingway, for Harold Loeb is the original of Robert Cohn in Hemingway's novel The Sun Also Rises (and on the basis of Loeb's new book, it seems to me that Hemingway's use of him will be his chief claim to fame). The last section of Loeb's book is a retelling of the events of The Sun Also Rises from the point of view of Cohn-Loeb. The way it really was.

Harold Loeb was a member of the Guggenheim family; i.e. he was rich. He awakened to culture, founded a "little magazine" called Broom and went to Europe to get lost with his generation. This is the ground covered by the first two sections of Loeb's autobiography, and a dull business they are. But the third section has all the fascination of watching the worm turn and attack the robin. Harold never says anything overtly nasty about his old friend Hem, but by implication, he portrays him as a humourless, cowardly bully. This Hemingway may have been, but ironically, Loeb as portrayed in his own book, comes out even a less sympathetic character than Hemingway's portrait of him, partly because of his spite.

The original of Lady Brett Ashley, a scottish girl named Duff Twitchell, really did run off with the best man at one of her weddings, according to Harold Loeb's report. His first real meeting with Duff was in a Paris bar; he looked in the mirror and met her eyes; they murmured sweet nothings and made arrangements to go to Spain together. They had an idyllic short love affair by the sea before Duff had to return to her regular boyfriend.

Then came the fiesta at Pamplona. Duff's boyfriend was jealous of Harold. Harold was jealous of Duff's boyfriend. Hemingway was jealous of Harold's idyll with Duff. After a few days of the fiesta, they quarreled, and when they separated, it was with superficial amicability. Hemingway went off to write his novel; Harold Loeb went off to become an economist, and Duff went back to Paris. According to rumours I have heard, she ended up in Mexico or New Mexico where she died. At her funeral, the pallbearers had to carry her coffin down a long hill. They dropped it.

James Thurber's The Years with Ross is a loving biography of the "professional lunatic" who founded The New Yorker and edited it for 26 years until his death. There is no bitterness in Thurber's book and no spite, although Thurber does once or twice seem to feel that Ross did him an injustice by maintaining for twenty years on no evidence that Thurber was "a man who lost things". But there is a quiet nostalgia for the days when the New Yorker was smaller, funnier and took the world much less seriously. Thurber's progressive blindness is a tragic chorus in a very funny book, for he is left unable to draw and the last of his dogs has had his day. For Years, Harold Ross would unleash his wrath and profanity at anything "grim" that crept into his magazine, but by the end of the 1930's Ross was beginning to wonder if his magazine was "important" enough. A depression and a war drove a lot of the devil-may-care humour out of the writer and the magazine.

Harold Ross himself often seems to belong in the fiction of Sinclair Lewis. He was a provincial and a prude from Aspen, Colorado, whose knowledge of literature, art, music, drama, and almost anything else but his magazine, was minimal. His uncanny editorial intuition and his fanaticism for correct grammar were the main tools with which the New Yorker was built.

In spite of his idiosyncracies which were many and large, Ross had the best American writers of a generation writing for him. One of these was Dorothy Parker, and she is the last of those who remember how it was that I want to consider. In a recently published collection of interviews called Writers at Work, hers is probably the saddest. The interviewer asked her if the "lost generation" attitude had a detrimental effect on her work.

"Silly of me to blame it on dates," she said, "but so it happened to be. Dammit, it was the twenties and we had to be smart. I wanted to be cute. That's the terrible thing. I should have had more sense." She isn't good enough to be called a humorist, Dorothy Parker says, and her reputation as a wisecracker makes her "sick and unhappy". She is a typical product of the twenties, but with the intelligence to look back and see her own limitations and those of the era. Perhaps romantics should die young so that they don't have to look back on their clever youthful accomplishments. The twenties were like a child prodigy who grows up to be a pretty ordinary sort of man. Scott Fitzgerald wrote about it in the Crack Up.

"It was terrible about Scott," Dorothy Parker said in her interview, "if you'd seen him you'd have been sick. When he died no one went to the funeral, not a single soul came, or even sent a flower. I said, 'Poor son of a bitch,' a quote right out of The Great Gatsby, and everyone thought it was another wisecrack." Perhaps that is a good last word on the twenties.

Volte

Recent developments in Quebec standing feud with Ottawa on ungrants have illustrated anew the validity of pragmatism as a guiding principle in Canadian politics. In one of the greatest ironies of modern Canadian history, Quebec's Union Nationale has the guise of a professed conservative, repudiated the doctrine of their ancient chief and process needlessly endangered the control of its own finances. For it are that the Sauvé and Barrette have been willing to accept the conditional of all conditional grants previously sacrosanct area of education.

The strict federalist interpretation of Confederation has always remained important to les Canadiens. While the growing problems of social and of the insecurities in the world day have long since weakened the spirit amongst English-speaking Canadians, the preservation of a distinct culture in Quebec has seemed to necessitate a continuing opposition to greater centralization at Ottawa.

It is not that French-Canadians remained totally unaware of the end of twentieth century industrial life in an uncertain world, but that they have a far greater value than have other Canadians on the preservation of a national identity, on what the Tremblay Commission in 1956 suggested was the association not assimilation, diversity, uniformity, the vitality of all the groups in the state and not their centralization.

What are known as "conditional grants" by the federal government of necessity, multiplied in social purpose in the war and post-war years. Of the more than half a hundred different kinds, many, such as those relating to health services and old age assistance have been accepted by Quebec along with the other provinces. But M. Dupré has never been willing to permit federal grants relating to construction of the trans-Canada highway or to the crucial area of social assistance.

Subsidization of Quebec's universities with federal funds has been seen as a danger the very stuff of French-Canadian culture and thus, with the exception of the first year the grants were offered in 1951, Quebec's universities have been forced by the provincial government to refuse the proffered, and had to contribute from Ottawa.

Liberal governments have always been particularly sensitive on the question of conditional grants, and in 1957 the Laurent administration tried to change the formula in order to meet the

JERRY GRAY AT HH

This afternoon's 5 o'clock concert in the Music Room of Hart House will see JERRY GRAY, five-string banjo and all, singing an hour of folk songs.

Gray is best known as banjoist and tenor in The Travellers, a Canadian group which has a few years' successful tours and two long-playing records to its credit. Much of the current revival of interest in Canadian folk music can be credited to them. Gray is known to a smaller group of people as a practising dentist — he graduated from Toronto in '59.

The concert is open to men and women alike, no holds barred, without discrimination, on an equal basis, with no hard feelings, and all that. There aren't any tickets: just come.

Three theatre openings

HART HOUSE THEATRE

Importance Of Being Earnest — Oscar Wilde's farce about a few men called Earnest is the choice for Director Robert Gill's fourth and last production of the year. Michael Davidson, Terry Miranda Davies, Vals Echlin, Brian Vint, and Pauline Gillam do most of the work — and, of course, for the indefatigable Mr. Gill. This Saturday and continues to the following day.

HACH HOUSE THEATRE

Way Of The World — A comedy by Wm. Conger, produced by the University Alumnae Drama Club, with James Mainprize, Norman Edmond, David White, Judith Teague, Frances Hal, Patricia Brown, and many others. Direction by Polly Golby. Opens tonight, even though this is a busy issue, runs Wednesday to Sunday inclusive. Ticket and next. Phone Mrs. J. B. White, HUDSON 3-1111 for reservations.

DOOR ST. UNITED CHURCH

Boy With A Cart — By Christopher Fry — one of the most enchanting early works. It is being produced at the Church tomorrow night at 7.15 p.m. on Sunday at 7 p.m., by the Emmanuel College Dramatic Society, which has just gotten into the business.

"I hope your hair curls naturally" is the unlikely piece of dialogue which fits this scene; it belongs to Oscar Wilde's The Importance Of Being Earnest, opening at the Hart House Theatre Saturday at 8.30 p.m.

-Face In Quebec

by Allan J. Barry

cial objections to federal largesse. After agreement with Quebec's major universities had been reached, the act was amended in such a way as to (a) double the grants, (b) eliminate the federal government as the distributor of funds and substitute the non-governmental National Conference of Canadian Universities, and, (c) allow for the accumulation of a university's grants in the event of temporary non-acceptance. The latter provision was made retroactive to 1956.

Quebec's university administrators had not bargained on M. Duplessis, however, and the provincial premier's adamant opposition to even the new formula was sufficient to cut short the courage of the university rectors and principals. A few classical colleges have since accepted the grants, without dire consequences, but the big institutions have remained unwilling to bring down the wrath of Quebec City.

Public sentiment, nonetheless, has shifted radically towards an awareness of the needs of education, and in the 1958 federal election the Liberal party found that one of its most popular proposals in Quebec was that offering greater assistance to higher education.

Thus it was that a solution to the vexing problem of university grants was sought following the death of Duplessis. But a complete volte-face, even in response to great public pressure, is a highly unpalatable prospect for any political party. The fact remains, however, that Quebec's new leader felt no bond of principle tying him to the position of Duplessis.

The long-standing provincial demand for greater taxing power seemed to provide a way out, and agreement has presumably been reached on a remission by the federal government of one per cent in the corporate income tax, in favour of the provincial tax. The key to the federal offer, however, remains the stipulation that such money must be used for university grants on the decreed formula, with any receipts in excess of $1.50 per capita being returned to the federal government. Anything less than the $1.50 would, in turn, be made up by Ottawa.

In reality, then, in spite of Quebec's attempt to create the impression of imposing conditions on Ottawa, the provincial government has accepted rigid and irrevocable conditions imposed by the federal government, thus becoming merely the fiscal agent of the central government. That such a departure from Duplessis's demand that Quebec have complete control over education within the province should be possible, is merely an indication of the total unreality of the previous position.

Quebec's Liberal party has no intention of letting the Union Nationale get away with such a semantic smokescreen, and could quite conceivably make his abdication of provincial sovereignty a major issue in the coming election. It is not that the Liberal party opposes the grants; on the contrary, Liberals in the province have fought for them consistently. It is merely that the Quebec government has accepted a rigid form of conditional grants when the perfectly simple and palatable formula devised in 1957 lay readily at hand.

Solution of the annual grants issue, of course, does not by itself solve the related questions of disposing of the $25 million accumulated by the NCCU for Quebec universities and the $16 million held by the Canada Council. The former issue has, according to recent, rather vague announcements, been solved on the basis of a federal recall of funds and their disposition by the provincial government for the purpose of guaranteeing capital loans to Quebec universities. The Canada Council capital grants will prove a much thornier problem, as the funds are no longer under the control of the federal government, and any attempt to revise the Canada Council Act for this purpose would be a virtual denial of the national principle underlying the formation of the Council.

By way of a postscript, it is interesting to note that one of the three pieces of legislation on education now before the provincial House will provide for the re-introduction of free textbooks for primary school students, a Liberal measure which M. Duplessis threw out on his return to office in 1944.

Thus it would seem that, although both the authors of the Tremblay Report and the late M. Duplessis would cry out in anguish, the Union Nationale, solid though the face it tries to turn to the public may seem to be, has responded to the dictates of expediency. In so doing, it has tried to keep free by needlessly binding Quebec to the docile implementation of policies determined by Ottawa.

What will be the public reaction? We will have to wait and see.

Our Readers Write

with deep regret

Dr. C. T. Bissell, M.A., Ph.D., L.L.D., President, University of Toronto,
Dear Dr Bissell:

I would like to comment, if I may, on an article by Alan Walker, entitled "Corpses", that appeared in the January 18th, 1960, issue of The Varsity.

My comment is as a Canadian citizen rather than as publisher of "Canadian Funeral Service" or as Executive Secretary of The Funeral Directors Association of Canada because we are not particularly concerned with opinions on embalming, individuals having every right to proclaim their beliefs on this or any other subject.

I am most concerned, however, with two statements incorporated in the article, viz: the fifth sentence in the second last paragraph, which says: "Until society has learned to break its ties with the ancient religions which stressed that the soul, after passing through various stages, would return and inhabit the body, etc."; and the second sentence in the last paragraph: "Eventually perhaps society will accept cremation to destroy its corpses, as they must be destroyed."

The University of Toronto has acquired some notoriety as an atheistic institution, a fact that is deplored by myself and some other local citizens whose children must attend this higher seat of learning. The two statements quoted above, in my opinion, are of the rankest atheistic nonsense. I believe them to be extremely dangerous reading for our young and impressionable Christian students. Surely we admit and believe in our Christian heritage and recognize our obligation to uphold it! The Bible clearly states that our souls will reinhabit our bodies on the Day of the Last Judgment and Mr. Walker's emphasis on the destruction of the body is only an atheistic device to make readers doubt the immortality of the soul and our eternal destiny.

I regret exceedingly that such statements should emanate from your student body and more so that they should be given prominence in your University publication. I cannot help but wonder if this may be one of the reasons why The Varsity does not attain the same degree of eminence among University papers as the University of Toronto has attained among Canadian educational institutions.

Sincerely yours,
James O'Hagan, Jr.

with great good will

Dear Sir:

I have made, just recently, a most revealing discovery. This revelation to civilized man will completely readjust the standards of etiquette in our modern society, it provides the means for improving human relations throughout the world, it is the answer to our quest for world peace.

I assume that everyone includes a bowl of soup in their dinner often enough to sympathize with me in what I am about to say. It is very likely that at one time or another you deem it polite to partake of your soup silently. You find, of course as I do, that this is almost impossible. If by chance you do succeed, it is accomplished only by introducing the bowl of your soup spoon entirely into your mouth, clamping your lips over it, and then clumsily withdrawing it, taking care it does not clatter on your teeth or that you do not dribble soup down your chin. Even if you have a dexterous control over your soup spoon, and can execute the action without clatter or dribble, your appearance to your dinner partner conceals your sincere attempt to observe the proprieties and bespeaks awkward eating habits and a lack of dining manners. As a result, any graceful attempt to partake of soup is naturally accompanied by 'slurping.'

Having observed early this devastating defect in the etiquette of our society, I set out in earnest quest for a solution to improve the dining decorum. To include 'slurping' in the proprieties would of course be the easiest solution. However, I readily realize, as I am sure you do, that the time it would take for 'slurping' to become accepted as etiquette, would be almost equal to the amount of time it has already taken modern man to establish his unwritten rules of society behaviour. The revulsion with which we meet the inevitable 'slurp' convinces me of this fact. We must, therefore eliminate the 'slurp.'

Many years have been spent in my search for the elimination of 'slurps' from the dinner table. I have deliberated the problem for lengthy periods of time, studied the shapes of spoons, viscosities of many varieties of soups, and the line of meeting between the lips. Even mathematical equations representing the curve of the spoon entered into my solution. The pressures of the many muscles involved in prehension and the nature of the mucosal lining of the inner surface of the lips were all considered. Many hours were spent at banquets and restaurants studying the eating habits of many people, before I was able to arrive at the following conclusion: the soup spoon does not fit the mouth! This will become obvious to you when I explain. The spoon, we all know, is curved with its concavity upwards. But with the aid of a looking-glass it is easily seen that the line of union between your lips is in a slight curve, with its concavity downwards. When the lips are parted slightly, as when something is introduced into the oral cavity, this concavity is increased. Just as a square peg cannot fit into a round hole, neither can a spoon be expected to fit properly into the mouth without leaving spaces through which rush air and soup in a 'slurping' manner.

Historians of our day have long realized the reasons for the disagreements between rulers of different countries, and as a result, the causes of our world wars. Picture the stately, aristocratic dining atmosphere during a summit conference. Imagine the thoughts of each ruler as he watches the others drink their soup. One dignitary sees another across from himself make a face at him while withdrawing his soup spoon. The president to his left makes a disgusting 'slurping' sound, while to the right, the leader is continuously wiping his chin with his napkin. How can this dignitary help but feel he is dealing with barbarous, primitive peoples?

My solution to this problem will appear a little more obvious to you now that its implications have been hinted. It is evident that our soup spoons must be reshaped, that is, shaped to fit our mouths. I am convinced that a soup spoon shaped with its concavity downwards will eliminate 'slurping', will dissolve the hard feelings between man and his neighbour, and will pave the road to peace, security, and human understanding throughout the world.

Learn A New Language

A consensus of 65 American college advisers that students studying abroad should learn the language of the country they plan to visit.

College juniors, graduates, and teachers, members of the Scandinavian Seminar met at Transberz, Glovik, Norway to add up and report results of their first five months in Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden.

"Pick a program that gets you into the language quickly and is then designed to bring you into continual close contact with the people and forces that shape their daily lives and gives them their color and character," they said.

These American students speak with some authority. Under the seminar plan, students accepted into the program begin the study of the new language, with language records supplied by the seminar, three to five months before leaving the U.S.

On arrival in Scandinavia, language learning is accelerated by a series of week-long courses given by Seminar faculty, which alternate with two family stays of three to four weeks each. Language learning develops partly by formal instruction and partly the "natural" way . . . by living it.

Within two months after arrival in Scandinavia, seminar students are ready for enrolment in one of the famous Scandinavian residential adult schools.

The seminar member takes courses in the humanities and social sciences, lives with a Scandinavian roommate, and participates in the life of the school. After New Years, the American student is able to initiate an independent study project in a field of special interest which may involve field trips to other institutions and meeting authorities in the subject matter area.

The Scandinavian Seminar will welcome inquiries about its program. Some vacancies are open for the 1960-61 program. Those eligible include college juniors, graduates, and any now in professional work who seek such special experience.

Closing date for the 1960-61 program is April 1. For details, write: Scandinavian Seminar, 127A East 73 St., New York 21, N.Y.

Annual Inter-University Judges' Debate Result

OTTAWA, Feb. 24 (CUP)—The contested results of the Inter-University Debating League finals between McGill and Ontario Agricultural College—Ontario Veterans College—McMaster were annulled today by a special National Federation of University Students committee.

The debate, held at McGill, was protested by OAC on the grounds that three former McGill debaters were judges for it.

The problem was referred to the National Secretariat of Nfcs who appointed a committee consisting of A. L. Foote, common law professor at Ottawa University; Fred Cogan, past president of the IUDL, and Andre L'Heureux, executive secretary of Nfcs.

The committee nullified the debate on the topic, "Resolved that the Canadian government should take steps to curb the growing power of labour unions in Canada" on the bylaw of the IUDL constitution which states, "The judges should not be alumni unless absolutely necessary".

It was felt the onus was on the host university to show it was "absolutely necessary". The finals will be held again this Saturday in Ottawa.

Lack Of Money To Cancel Trip

By NOEL BATES

Varsity Blues Basketball team will be forced to dig into their own pockets or default their last two games.

This decision was the result of the Athletic Directorate meeting held last night.

It was the decision as announced by Mr. Warren Stevens that was so shocking. Mr. Stevens, the University Athletic Director, said that there were insufficient funds to allow for the basketball team to make the road trip.

The estimated cost of the road trip to London and Windsor is well over one thousand dollars.

Mr. Stevens said that because of the poor gate receipts from the football games, and a consequent overbudgeting on these anticipated receipts has caused the cutback.

The effects of a default of these two games would mean certain expulsion from the senior intercollegiate league.

The only other alternative is that the Blues pay their own way on the trip.

Coach John McManus, when told of the decision, was quite upset. He said that he had heard rumours to this effect but had not paid any attention to them.

"The decision", he said, "will be discussed and voted on by the team at tomorrow's practice. I feel that the boys really want to play Assumption again to show them that they are the better team."

Mr. Stevens was contacted by The Varsity and asked for a statement as to why the Basketball team and not the Hockey team should be penalized.

He replied, "It was the decision of the Directorate that the hockey team had tried much harder over the season than the other teams and consequently deserved to have its two remaining games.

"In addition they feel that it is their duty to the faithful fans of the Hockey team."

Victoria Still In First Place In Track Meet

Victoria College continued to increase their lead in the weekly editions of the University Track Meet. After seven weeks of competition they stand twenty points ahead of their nearest rivals, UC.

Bill Crothers, the one-man team for Pharmacy, picked up his third win of the season when he dashed home first in the Senior 300-yard race in the fast time of 34.5 seconds. Vic picked up a second and fourth place finish in this race.

St. Mike's dominated the Junior 300-yard event, capturing first place and having two of their runners tie for second. Bruno Bertolin was tops while Gord May and Jim Beingsnessner were close behind.

Vic also captured the relay, the team of Al Brereton, Peter Watson, Gary Logan, and Jim Snider finishing well ahead of runner up School of Practical Science. Trinity was third and UC fourth.

Vic are so far ahead in the team totals that only UC have a chance to catch them and that is slim indeed.

Senior 300 yds.—1. Bill Crothers, pharm. Time 34.5; 2. Al Brereton, vic; 3. Bob Sparks, uc; 4. Jim Snider, vic.

Junior 300 yds.—1. Bruno Bertolin, smc. Time 36.7; 2. Gord May, smc and Jim Beingsnessner, smc; 4. John Van Iterson, sps.

4 by 1 lap relay—1. Vic (Al Brereton, Peter Watson, Gary Logan, Jim Snider). Time 1:11.8; 2. SPS; 3. Trin; 4. UC.

Point standing after seven weeks of competition—vic 80, uc 60, smc 44½, trin 24, mids 24, sps 22½, pharm 19.

In Monday's review of the West Indian show, the name of choreographer Earl Timothy, who put the production together, was omitted.

Varsity Are Third At Intercollegiate Squash Tourney

The University of Toronto Squash Team, the defending champions, placed third in the Intercollegiate Squash Championships at McGill last weekend.

The Toronto team did not show as well as expected with only one player winning all of his games.

Keith Acheson, although a fifth-seeded player, was the top man for the Varsity team. Winning both his matches against Western and McGill, Acheson was the only bright spot on the Toronto team.

Of the other four players for Coach Ralph Rimmer's squad two of them, Harry Malcolmson and John Ireton the second and third seeded players respectively won one match each. Malcolmson split his matches winning one from Western and losing to McGill while Ireton took his McGill match and dropped his game with the Mustang squad.

The final results of the fifteen-game tourney were that McGill won six of the matches and took 1st place; Western won five and placed a close second and Toronto placed third winning only four games.

Ross Adair and Lony Lafleur were the two McGill players that won both of the games and helped McGill to their title.

THIS JOVIAL CHAP is the one member of the Varsity Hockey organization who cannot be charged with inconsistency after this up and down season. His name is Howie Ringham, he is the trainer and that look of rapturous delight on his face is evidence that Varsity are not winning during their last game at Quebec City. Never mind Howie, we've got to lose some time and Warren Stevens says we were beaten by a better team. —Griner

Things In China Fine, Says Red But PC Won't Believe a Word

Nelson Clark, editor of the Communist Canadian Tribune, neatly parried a critic from the floor at last night's University of Toronto Communist Club meeting, and discussed his recent visit to Red China.

Progressive Conservative campus leader Dave Crane angrily stood up and said, "I would challenge the accuracy of some of your statements. Your use of statistics is confusing and misleading."

In his speech, Mr. Clark had mentioned that he had noticed very few sewers in China, and said that although there was still a shortage of meat, there was adequate rice and vegetables. Mr. Clark was in China for five weeks.

Crane, who has never been to Red China, suggested there were still serious shortages and that open sewers abounded. Another member of the audience yelled, "how many open sewers are there in Toronto?"

Mr. Clarke said he had gone to China "as a sympathetic observer," but that he had expected to see a worse degree of poverty than he actually saw.

He admitted much of the housing is still poor, but said there was a high degree of sanitation.

As far as the folklore that there are no flies in China, Mr. Clark said he had seen "perhaps half a dozen", but added that he had helped kill them immediately.

He said the children were well-fed and happy, and that 85 per cent of them are in school. "Of course there will be 100 per cent very soon," he added.

The Communist journalist said he was very surprised at the tremendous industrial growth of the country, and that "in some respects it is ahead of Great Britain.

"Here is a country that is becoming a first-class industrial nation, and is moving ahead rapidly," he said.

He praised the Communist methods of organizing large quantities of labor, and said such progress in Red China was only possible under Communism.

He said the people of China, starving in the past, have now seen the possibilities of Communism and that "the Communist party of China enjoys tremendous prestige among the people".

The Communists were successful, he said, in leading the people in a complicated struggle "against foreign imperialists, first the Japanese and then the Americans", and the "feudal landlords".

Mr. Clark said the assistance from the other socialist countries had also contributed greatly to Red China's rapid growth. He said aid to under-developed countries from the capitalist countries offers food and immediate aid, but rarely does anything to help industrial growth.

"Russia wanted to make China an industrial power as soon as possible."

He said Red China has a friendly attitude towards Canada, even though Canada has not recognized that country, and said the Communist Chinese were willing to trade with Canada in spite of the non-recognition.

However, he said trade was not possible on a wide scale without recognition.

"Foreign policy is best based on reality," he said. "There are 650,000,000 people in Red China who have permanently changed their way of life."

Members of the 20-man audience included Don Roebuck and Peter Horbatiuk, leaders of the recent protest march on the French Embassy, and Pat Bain, who Tuesday sold copies of the "Socialist Youth" around the campus. All three denied being members of the Communist club, which was officially recognized by the Caput at its last meeting. The membership is estimated at eight.

SAC Censures Varsity "Taste"

The Students' Administrative Council last night voted to censure The Varsity for the poor taste considered to have been exhibited by Wednesday's "gag" issue of the paper.

Approval of the censure motion, which was unanimous except for two abstentions, followed defeat by a fairly wide majority of a motion to cancel The Varsity for the remainder of the academic year and replace it with a mineographed news bulletin.

Walter McLean, SAC president, introduced the censure motion as he had been mandated to do by the Knox College Missionary and Theological Society which he represents on council.

The motion McLean originally put before council called for censure of The Varsity for both Wednesday's issue and general editorial policy this year.

But Peter Dembski, St. Michael's College SAC representative, successfully introduced an amendment striking criticism of editorial policy from the censure motion.

A letter which accompanied the Knox society's censure mandate, referring to the Feb. 10 Varsity, which contained articles on student life in Cambridge and Munich and an interview with "banned" poet Joe Wallace, said The Varsity "should fulfill its responsibility as a newspaper rather than a cultural commentary."

Publications commissioner Clive Chamberlain was one of the two who abstained from the censure motion. When University College representative Mike Sherman asked why he had done so, Chamberlain said he did not want to set himself as a judge of taste.

Dembski said the emphasis on on feature material in The Varsity was a step in the right direction.

The defeated motion to cancel remaining issues of The Varsity, introduced by Desmond O'Rourke, Law Representative, said the editorial staff was consistently unwilling to co-operate with SAC and was not providing a service to students.

Defending the motion, O'Rourke said Varsity editorial policy should be representative of the opinions of the student body.

Council also approved a proposal that James Micklin, a Globe and Mail employee, be asked to investigate Varsity organization and policy and report to the publications commission with recommendations by Mar. 8.

Producer Charges "Stupidity"

AVR Loses $1,500

All Varsity Revue Director Barry Callaghan last night attacked the "honestly stupid" attitude of the Students' Administrative Council in refusing to allow Hart House to present this year's AVR for an extra to nights.

The show lost more than $1,500.

Callaghan said he felt much of this could have been made up by the extra two night's run. He also said it would have down wonders for AVR prestige.

"The naive collective stupidity of student politicians never ceases to amaze me," Callaghan said.

The executive council of the SAC killed the idea the week-end after the show closed. AVR Chairman Jim Little presented the idea to the committee, and told the committee he was very much in favor of it.

The show was sold out for the last two nights of its run, and Callaghan said the cast voted to have the run extended, after the Hart House Theater suggested the idea.

"When Jim approached the executive committee, we thought we had the whole thing sewed up," Callaghan said. "Then they killed it. I was disgusted."

He said a loss of $1,000 had been planned, but when he learned the losses would go over that, he thought the extra two nights were a good idea. "We couldn't have helped but make money," he said.

"If we had gone on Monday and Tuesday, all we would have had to do was have 100 people in the house each night to break even."

The Hart House Theater holds almost 500 people. Only a handful of seats were empty closing night.

"Here was a chance to boost AVR prestige for next year," Callaghan said. "That's what killed us this year, for the first two nights anyway."

"But when I heard what the SAC had done, I just threw up my hands. I said, 'here's another group of run-of-the-mill student politicians.'"

Callaghan also attacked this year's lowered prices, from $1.50 to $1.25. "This shows the unrealistic approach of the SAC," he said. "The AVR has had a bad reputation. Their idea was not to try to improve it, but to pessimistically lower the prices by the grand sum of 25 cents, hoping to encourage students to go to the show."

"They parade as experts, but they never make it," he said.

New Party Vital Need HH Debaters Decide

A CCF member of Parliament from Port Arthur told University of Toronto students last night a new party is needed to inject a shot of life into the Canadian political body.

Douglas Fisher was speaking at a Hart House debate posing the resolution "Canada Has No Need for a New Political Party". The motion was crushed 64-29.

Mr. Fisher said the only differences he could distinguish between the parties in Ottawa is that of personalities. "And that isn't enough," he said.

Phil Goulston (II UC) first speaker for the ayes called the proposed CCF-CLC merger "extreme idealism". He contrasted his attitude with the "tempered realism" of the Liberal party.

"The proposed new party has proven to be the least democratic of all the parties on the Canadian scene," Goulston said. The merger saw its birth in the "fuzzy fifties", but its realization will move us into the "scandalous sixties".

No's speaker Gerry Caplan (IV UC) said: "The failure of the present parties was that they failed to come to grips with contemporary problems".

A believer in a distinct two-party system, Caplan said: "No real distinction has existed since John A. Macdonald sobered up enough to sign the B.N.A."

Jim Banks (II UC), second speaker for the ayes, said, "the locals of unions are not sufficiently intellectually aware to warrant the existence of a new party."

"There are both union and non-union members who are opposed to the new party," he added.

Striking a moralistic note, Steve Lewis (IV UC), for the noes, gave the "regeneration of our society", as the "fundamental reason" for the creation of the new party.

Lewis described our society as having a "twisted sense of values, where the almighty dollar is all powerful. These are sufficient reasons for the creation of a new political party," he said.

Walker Still Kicking As Protests Mount

The annual Varsity gag issue, headlined by a bogus story on the death of Managing Editor Alan Walker has set off a violent reaction across campus.

Published in Wednesday's issue the hoax drew a storm of complaint spearheaded by a wave of charges of "poor taste" levelled at the paper.

But student reaction was mixed. Most failed to catch references to the gag issue on the center page, both in the lines of a poem below the list of Varsity staff and in the publicity blurb for "The Way of the World."

One thing was evident. Walker's column was widely read and his so-called "death" was a personal issue for many people. Remarks varied from sorority girls' "Too bad it's not true" to the worried "Is he O.K.?" of his friends.

The Varsity office was still receiving telephone queries about the hoax yesterday.

Although the issue contained several gag stories—about a U of T space satellite, threat of student expulsion over late essays, and a phony story—none produced any strong repercussions.

Meanwhile the official rebuke was hurled at The Varsity Wednesday night at a Students' Administrative Council meeting on the grounds The Varsity showed "lack of good taste" in the gag issue. A motion of censure was passed against the paper.

Irate Engineers Foam

A group of irate engineers threw out the resolution "Engineering is basically an art, not a science" at a faculty-student debate yesterday.

First speaker for the ayes, Dave Rutenberg (III ApSc), named co-operation, communication and leadership as qualities which the engineer must have. "These are the arts of engineering," he said and was greeted with loud hissing.

"Engineering consists of knowledge of physics and chemistry," he said, "but the engineer must have the ability to use them and integrate them in life. Science in itself is useless."

Dr. G. D. Scott of the Department of Physics opened for the noes by quoting Rutherford's enumeration of sciences: "physics, chemistry and stamp collecting."

"Art involves inspiration, dreams and visions," he said. "Engineers can dream as human beings not as engineers. We hope engineers are at least human beings."

Dr. I. H. Spinner of the Chemical Engineering department second speaker for the ayes, said art comes in the application of science.

"The engineer must pick out the variables, the things which matter. He must have an experienced knack to see how one approximates physical reality."

Phil Brown, last speaker for the noes, asked why we come to university.

"Is it not to get a background in maths and physics—the basic essentials in engineering?" he asked.

"We must throw out the nonsense that art is a basis of engineering."

The motion was defeated.

Propose EAC's Abolition And SAC Reorganization

The Students' Administrative Council last night approved an amendment to its constitution which would abolish the External Affairs Commission and replace it with a committee of the SAC.

The proposal, introduced by council national affairs chairman Mike Sherman, must now be approved by the University of Toronto Caput.

The move would set up a national affairs committee under a national affairs chairman. A National Federation of Canadian University Students chairman would be selected from council and would sit on the committee. The would be a new position.

Also on the committee would be the weekends and World University Service chairmen. These positions already exist in council along with the national affairs chairmanship.

Sherman said it is difficult for the national affairs, WUS and weekends chairman to function now.

The only people they have to work for them, he said, are students who volunteer at the beginning of the year for some vague sort of national affairs work.

It was also suggested that EAC does not now seem to be fulfilling any legitimate function.

The External Affairs Commission now is made up of representatives from faculties and colleges. On it sit NFCUS, weekends and WUS chairmen who co-chair their respective committees along with the corresponding chairmen who sit on SAC.

Under the new set-up these EAC co-chairmanships would be abolished along with EAC while the SAC national affairs chairman would have a committee.

Roughly corresponding to the present EAC faculty and college representatives would be two students elected or appointed from each college or faculty, one of whom would serve on a WUS sub-committee, the other on a NFCUS sub-committee.

U of T's orchestra and chorus this year should be re-appointed for next year to help build on a changeover this year from professional to student leadership.

—approved in principle the establishment of a scholarship to send a U of T student to the Soviet Union, and —heard but did not vote on a motion that the embattled Varsity be congratulated for lending its support to the chocolate chip faction in crushing the idea of serving raisin cookies at SAC meetings.

comment

memento mori

Reception of Wednesday's gag issue of The Varsity in many quarters seems to have been one of some sort of horror and of extreme disapproval. This attitude is exemplified in the motion censuring the issue which the Students' Administrative Council passed Wednesday night.

In the office when this issue was being written and party to the hoax which has drawn the protests — that of Alan Walker's pretended death — were a fair number of Varsity staffers of both sexes and, one would think, representing a considerable variety of tastes and sensitivities.

We think it can be said, in all fairness, that the thought the issue was in any way an example of "bad taste" never occurred to any of them.

They were genuinely astonished to learn that the attitude of perhaps most U of T students was that the issue was in "bad taste."

The objections can not have been based on the fact that the paper hoaxed the students, for Varsity gag issues for several years have been hoaxes. Nor can it have been based on the idea that the hoax was somehow a dirty trick on Alan Walker, for strong objection has come from those who were aware that Walker was a party to the hoax.

The objection was probably best expressed by a student who was rather more sympathetic to The Varsity than many. "I always knew death was a taboo," he said, "but I didn't know it was that much of a taboo."

In that connection, the question arises as to why this taboo didn't have the same sickening effect on Varsity staffers that it seems to have had on its readers.

Perhaps this is because things like this gag are seen from a different perspective by their creators than by their spectators. Perhaps, although, we like to think not, it is because several years in The Varsity may serve to somehow harden one more than the less, as it were, existential life of the rest of the campus.

Perhaps this last idea could be confirmed or refuted if it were possible to compare the issue's reception in a faculty such as medicine where death must be an accepted thing to think about with its reception in colleges and faculties which generally teach matters at a somewhat greater remove from reality.

It is surprising to note that Wednesday night's censure notice came from representatives of Knox College, a Christian divinity school.

One would think that death would have rather less sting for potential Christian ministers than for notoriously heretical Varsity staffers.

We fear, at any rate, that there may be subconscious feeling among many of those who disliked our gag issue that if they avoid thinking about death they may be able to avoid having to experience it. We would assure them that this is not the case.

We understand that medieval monks used to keep a skull on their desks to remind them of the inevitability of their death. We would commend this healthy practice to those who disliked our gag issue.

On the other hand, we always try to avoid publishing offensive material. If we do so knowingly, it is because we believe there is some reason for publishing the material which outweighs our repugnance to print it.

The reception the gag issue received indicates to us that there may be a need for students to be told things about death that will offend them.

But the gag issue was not an attempt to tell them. Had we known the offence we were to give, we would not have considered the hoax was worth it.

We did not consider the material in the issue offensive.

If you did, we apologize.

The Student In Germany

In my last letter I promised to write something about the "serious" things. So today I should like to write about "serious" German students and their universities. At first sight one may observe that the German student takes his academic work more seriously than his Canadian counterpart, at least in his undergraduate career. By this, I mean that he does not place as much emphasis on the social activities on his campus. This is partly because there is no campus, just two or three huge buildings, located in different parts of the city.

He cannot establish friendships as easily and as casually within the university because he is not tied to a system of classes to which he must go every day, and where he could be certain to meet the same people again and again. As he is free to attend any lectures he wishes the human contacts which would be made by daily repetitious visits in Canadian classrooms cannot flourish so well in a German University.

One must not forget that the university in Germany has quite a different tradition from the university in England or in Canada. I remember the freshman address given by Dr. Jeanneret when he was principal of University College. The principal comparing the universities of France, England and Canada said, at that time (1955) that in France, Universities exist for the sake of the state, in England for the sake of the universities and in Canada for the sake of the students.

Today I would like to add to his statement that German universities exist for the sake of the professors. I know that I may be grossly exaggerating but it could be said that the German professor stands on a pinnacle so high that few students dare to approach in on a non-academic matter. This great, or rather grave distance between professor and student is caused partly by the scarcity of professors and the multitude of students. Professors have no time to devote to non-academic problems. But this distance is also traditional. It accentuates the academic aspect of a society of some people are "more" academic than others, thus may command a certain amount of respect from their inferiors. This respect reminds one of the respect of a higher class society, where "differences still matter."

There is another reason why students concentrate more on the academic here. They have no time to "fool around." The opportunities for individual German graduate are much smaller for the corresponding graduate in Canada. Germany is overpopulated and a much higher percentage of her population goes to the universities than in Canada.

This means that the more doctors a university puts out, the better a doctor must be to get a job. This sharp rate of competition causes the individual student to spend most of his available time on the books. Moreover, German students have a greater economic problem than Canadians. They do their part-time work, although available jobs are not as well-paid as in Canada.

One meets many students who try to get a job not only during the holidays but during the semesters as well. I was surprised one night to meet a jazz-pianist who was a doctor-of-Law, without a job. Half an hour later a girl of about 25 entered the restaurant, selling newspapers. She was a student.

The absence of any "social activities" on campus-organized sense as we know it, and over-emphasis on dry, academic work might prompt the Canadian observer to conclude that the German student has no sense of humor.

This is partially true, if we accept the fact that for the moment German humor is something quite different from Canadian humor. The German student takes himself and his life more seriously, he is living in a Europe where not even the rich of his friends may sit down complacently on a divan without becoming suspicious of some political party nearby.

I think there are few Canadians who were born and raised in a society where political and economic extremes have been so marked as in Germany from 1933 to 1960. The young German today is aware not only of his personal experience as a child in Nazi Germany and after, but also more so of the past of his country — and its future.

He is more aware than a Canadian of what might constitute a danger to the nation, mainly because the dangers to Germany today are numerous and imminent than the dangers threatening Canada.

(To be concluded Monday)

Coppelia Highly Polished

It has often been said that artists are born, not made. On Tuesday evening, after seeing Miss Judie Colpman dance Swanilda, the lead role in the ballet Coppelia, I began to doubt this statement. Miss Colpman is the only member of the original company, the Canadian National Ballet formed in 1951, who has not been given recognition as a soloist over the past eight seasons. She is perhaps the only member of the company who could fill any minor role on a moment's notice and over the years she has danced almost all of them, proving herself one of the companies most valuable members. This season, in the role of Swanilda, she has most admirably proved that many years of intensive study and a wide range of experience make a more than competent soloist. Miss Colpman will never be a brilliant soloist in the sense that one calls Lois Smith "brilliant" as she is not physically of that calibre. However, she gave a sparkling and easy performance capturing most convincingly the dramatic subtleties of the role. I shall look forward to the time when the company has enough high calibre soloists that they will be able to give several years of "Back row" experience to their younger dancers rather than, by necessity, giving them solo roles for which they are not quite prepared.

Apart from Miss Colpman, the remainder of the company must be given recognition for a completely enjoyable evening. The mazurka and czarda were danced with abandoned enthusiasm and the dolls were most convincingly mechanical. Special praise must go to Earl Kraul, who danced the role of Franz, and Grant Strate, who was Dr. Coppelius. One recalls, with reluctance, Mr. Kraul's shaky and unspectacular performances and complete lack of stage presence a few years ago. Nothing more can be said than that he has improved beyond all recognition in every aspect. Grant Strate is one of a few dancers who in his portrayal of an old man does not look like a young man trying to be an old man. He was completely at ease in the role of the doddering toy-maker, his most oft-repeated fumbles never failing to give the audience delight. Miss Kay Ambrose must be congratulated on her sets and her superb costumes, Jack Kelly for his lighting in the second act, and George Crum for keeping an often unruly orchestra with the dancers at every instance.

Special praise must be given to Celia Franca, the artistic director and founder of the company, for carrying on in spite of enormous financial difficulties, disappointing audiences and critical failures, not to mention the lack of trained dancers. If given the full support of the public, she should be able to produce many other ballets of the same high polish as Coppelia within the next few years.

theatre

Heartbreak House — Crest Theatre — One of Shaw's longer conversation pieces about war, and love, and family, and life, and England. Charmion King, Powys Thomas and Norma Renault scintillate in three very Shavian roles, and a half-dozen others give eager if not always solid support. Unfortunately, director Royston Morley seems to have an overvalued idea of still life, which nearly extinguishes the first act, and softens the second and third, but Shaw survives at the end. (Nightly at 8:30 p.m., Friday and Saturday matinees at 5 p.m.; students 75c on weekdays, $1.00 on Saturdays.)

The Importance of Being Earnest — Oscar Wilde's

most famous farce is the vehicle for Robert Gill's fourth and last student production of the year. (Opens tomorrow night, continues to the following Saturday, nightly at 8:30 p.m.; students $1.00)

The Way Of The World — Coach House Theatre will be playing Wednesday Feb. 24th to Sunday Feb. 28th, from Wednesday March 2 to Sunday March 6 and from March 9 to March 13. Congreve's restoration comedy is one of the masterpieces of English literature and if the University Alumnae Dramatic Club can achieve the smoothness and polish necessary for Congreve, this should be a show well worth seeing.

democracy

Dear Sir,

Every day we, as Canadians, proclaim to all nations the wonders of our democratic system of government. We tell the whole world about it, but do we practice it at home? Shouldn't Democracy begin at home? And especially so in one of Canada's largest Universities?

On Feb. 24, at 4:15 p.m. in room 4, University College, several students from various faculties and colleges of the U. of T. were gathered to elect the executive for the Italian Club for the year 1960-61. The purpose of the Club was outlined as being to foster a better knowledge and understanding of the Italian culture and language. Yet as soon as the nominations started it was ruled that one of the nominees was ineligible because he was not at present taking any Italian course at U. of T. When it was asked that the constitution be quoted with regard to this matter the constitution was found to be non-existent. A precedent contradicting the said rule was pointed out. On the basis of this a vote on the ruling was asked for. Immediately a member of the Italian Department rose and with curt, dictator-like remarks, indicated that neither the precedent nor the result of the proposed vote would be acknowledged lest "a bunch of pharmacists" come over. When asked how could it be possible that people could become members of the club and yet not be eligible to be elected to office the staff member replied that undergrads not taking Italian at present were not obtaining membership but "just a cheap seat". And then the so-called elections took place...

With time a mould imposes its shape; let us make sure that our mould is such that the shape of the future will be better, greater, and healthier than that of today. If we distort what our forefathers have striven to achieve we are truly regressing and undermining the welfare of our entire society.

and socialism

Dear Sir:

The Toronto Young Socialist Alliance wishes to thank you for the prominent coverage that you gave to our sale of the paper the "Young Socialist" on the campus, February 23. We commend the extensive quotes from our paper used in the "Varsity" article. We believe that this contributes greatly to the accuracy of your reporting.

We do however have one bone of contention with you. In your final paragraph you claim that Pat Bain and myself "confessed" that we did not know who the "leader" of the YSA was. You claim that all we knew was that we "had been told to take some copies of the "Young Socialist" to the University of Toronto and sell them."

That is not in accordance with the statement that we made to the "Varsity".

Young Socialist Alliance members, including ourselves, are well aware of the nature of our "leadership". The YSA is an autonomous marxist youth group, centred around the paper, which discusses and takes action on those issues which the majority of its members see fit.

As we stated to your paper, the only officer in the group is the organizer. The leadership of the club is in fact its total membership. The membership decides on any resolution submitted by an individual and acts according to the result of the vote. In this sense there is no single individual who can be termed the "leader".

Toronto Young Socialist Alliance,

Geoff Button.

CONCERT

and a ravished reviewer

required a second time within one week to view of a thoroughly enjoyable concert, is than this observer cares to tolerate. The reviewer can bask in his happiness undisturbed, reviewer (supposedly the listener par excellence) to hand in some copy to his editor, and headline at that.

However dream-shattering it may be, it is measure to report on the first of this season's concert by the York Concert Society in Massey Hall on Wednesday night, Dr. Heinz Unger, in as precise as directed the Toronto Symphony Orchestra in Unfinished Symphony and Mahler's The Song of Elena Nikolaidi, contralto, and David Lloyd, who sang the Mahler work. The occasion was a centenary of Gustav Mahler's birth.

will probably be taken to task by some of the tempos used in the Schubert symphony. They were a bit faster than has generally been our experience. But in our opinion the music from it; general habits of conductors do not right. This interpretation had all the bite and, yet somehow it was an early nine-minute bite. The orchestration received fullest of times (as did Schubert's almost experimental strings), and even though the trombones were prominence when necessary, Unger kept the melody in the foreground; this Schubert most had done. Consequently over-all volume reach the decibel level that is customary.

Soundness of interpretation, who can deny that in the Schubert and in the Mahler, knew times what had to be done and how to do it? which that man can create with his left hand. All the little strains of sound are greatly place, trills wiggle off the fingertips, loud punched out of the brass and woods, broad described almost in linear form, sudden are almost stuffed under the podium to make them quiet enough, and bold ensemble work is challenged to show its true colors.

The TSO played better than we have heard them play all season (although we are told they were excellent under Barbirolli on Wednesday night of last week). The subtleties of Mahler's writing are more in evidence in this work than perhaps in any other, yet the players worked for a clarity that is rare. If now and then the instruments covered the vocalists (the chief defect of the first three sections of the work), it was not because the orchestra was playing too loudly. Parts of Mozart and Wagner operas call for greater dynamics from the players than Mahler does here, yet no one seems to object. We feel justified in insisting that the vocalists should have tried for greater projection; if Unger had cut the volume of his orchestra down more, there would have been no soul left in the music.

Indeed, our only objection to Mr. Lloyd's work was that his volume was often simply inadequate; but he was the better interpreter. Miss Nikolaidi had more power, relatively speaking, and yet her warmth and conviction in what she was singing at first did not manage to reach us.

The last three sections of the Mahler work fared better vocally than the first three. The whole symphony is extremely difficult to sing, what with Mahler's characteristic figurations and the unusual intervals in his melodic lines. Gradually, however, the singers warmed to the task. The final section, The Farewell, was superb; it was here that everyone, orchestra, singers, and conductor, were in absolute co-operation all the way. Perhaps quoting the last few words will give an idea of the wondrous mood sustained: "Quiet is my heart and waiting for its hour. This beloved earth always will blossom up in spring and green anew. Always and everywhere will shine a blue light in the distance. Ever... ever..." These are Mahler's own thoughts, his own deep belief. By the time he came to write the Song of the Earth, his art had reached that degree of polish and spontaneity which makes this music new and absorbing every time it is heard played well.

how to break a spirit

There is one sure way to break a book-lover's spirit and that is to break the binding on one of his favorite tomes. This requires careful preparation, agonizingly prolonged to create every subtle nuance of horror and hatred.

First you single out the man's favorite book. This must be an expensive leather-bound volume with glossy, ever-so-white crisp pages. Then you start to leaf through it. But this is not done in any ordinary way. You lick your thumb carefully each page you turn, and draw it across the full width of the page, right in the middle, leaving a dark, damp trail. While you are doing this, manage to tear a few pages slightly. By this time the owner is quaking in rage, but being polite, says nothing.

Next you find an interesting part, and set the book down on a table. You search for a pen, and naturally the book won't stay open, so you grab it tightly in both hands and bend it open as far as it goes. The sharp crack coincides with a gnashing of teeth from across the room.

Then you mark a passage carefully, in large letters so you can find it again.

As a final soul-crushing misdeed, dog-ear a couple of pages. But not in the ordinary way. You must carry out that devastation of a book known as a two-fold place marker, in which the page is folded longitudinally on a slight angle, twice, leaving a triangular tab above the normal level of the page. Crease it with your thumb-nail.

That'll do it.

poetry readings and such

when u of t poet john robert colombo appears, with other writers, at the first floor club march 11 and 15, maybe he'll read a few of the poems on his latest broadside, soon to be sold in the u of t bookstore. these 13 poems, entitled "lines for the last day" are printed on a huge page about two feet square, surrounding the poems is apocalyptic artwork by canadian artist william kurelek. the artwork is "purposely gruesome", colombo says. a typical poem is called "31 december, 1999" and is meant to be accompanied by bongoes and jazz ensemble. the best poems are four in a series which describe the approach, the presence, the actual second coming, and, finally, the beginning of a new cycle. such a large broadside, 50 cents worth, can also be used to cover cracks in plaster, but they should be read carefully. remember, we've only 39 years left.

their loss is our gain

Now that fraternities and sororities have been booted out of Torontonensis, Editor Sandra Whittall has had an opportunity to use the space for something of interest to a wider group than the members of the Greek-letter organizations.

There will be new faces this year. In the first of what Miss Whittall hopes will be a yearly tradition, profiles on eight well-known members of the U of T staff will appear. Into the bargain there will be an eight-page spread on expansion and the blitz.

here a goof there a goof

News items: "Police said the window was broken on both sides."

"Mr. MacDonald said nearly 200 volunteers were planning a blitz campaign tonight when they would cover every home in the area with pamphlets."

"Bob-Lo Island is Canadian owned, but is leased to American interests and is normally reachable by public transportation only from the United States side of the border."

"The final compromise was decoded by company and union officials this afternoon."

"The 'gang rumble' occurred last night. Detective-Sergeant Dave Cowan jumped from his car and leapt between two youths fighting a sidewalk duel armed with homemade switch knives and four howling teenagers."

And as a postscript, another example of skid-talking. This shows the phenomenon is not necessarily caused by modern neuroses. It is taken from a newspaper published in 1894:

"I am not as bad as I was before I was as bad as I am now."

SAC gives thumbs-up*Whitewash Bookstore

A Students' Administrative Council committee delegated to investigate the University of Toronto bookstore gave it a clean bill of health at Wednesday's SAC meeting.

A report of the university committee read by committee chairman Milton Houtt said charges made in a recent brief sent to council by University College students were groundless.

The committee had met with bookstore officials, Houtt said.

The report said the university bookstore cannot be compared with Toronto stores deriving profit mainly from other types of merchandise such as records or with stores on United States campuses selling everything "from women's lingerie to television sets."

A student discount on texts is generally not feasible, the report said, because of the small difference between wholesale and retail prices for texts compared with other types of book.

The report attributed delays and seeming inconsistencies arising from the ordering of books to the actions of the book publishers.

In addition, the report said, delays are caused by professors neglecting to supply the bookstore with estimates of how many books their students will need in the coming academic year.

The report flatly denied several concrete examples of inefficiency which the UC had mentioned.

In answer to the brief's suggestion that the store was full of "cook books and garden manuals", the report said the bookstore stock in this type of book was worth $161 compared with a total inventory of $200,000.

The report re-emphasized earlier statements saying the selling of old examinations at 10 cents an exam instead of $1 for an annual set ought to allow students to buy only the exams they want.

Exams are still being sold at a loss, the report said.

The bookstore, the report said, stocks about 15,000 titles and orders about 10,000 more in the course of a year.

Unangular Fairman Beefs As Coed Gives Freeze

By TERRY BOURKE

Who says The Varsity doesn't influence people?

Phil Fairman was dealt the wrong cards by at least one University of Toronto co-ed, after a Varsity article appeared last Wednesday labelling him U of T's most unangular student.

It was a bright, sunny day last week and Fairman decided to take one of his rare treks across campus to St. Michael College's Co-Op, a coffee shop where he says "you can drink the brew on long, low, chester-fields".

Just as he was entering the shop, a young co-ed jumped from her seat, rushed over to Fairman, and excitedly stammered "Say haven't I seen you somewhere before?".

She paused for a moment to catch her breath, then said: "I know. Didn't I play cards with you last night?"

Fairman said he felt "very proud" he had been finally recognized by SMC, but at the same time assured the young lady he had never seen her in his life before.

"As a matter of fact," he added, "I told the charming miss, and she was charming, that the night before I had been attending a seance in a darkened room on the third floor of Casa Loma's north tower."

Nevertheless the young lady kept insisting she had seen him somewhere before.

Suddenly Fairman quipped, "Read your Varsity lately." She said no.

That would have been it, but Fairman knew a good thing when it was staring him in the face.

Just as the girl was turning to leave, Fairman asked her for a date.

"She evidently thought I was a pretty nice guy, which I am, so she went along with my suggestion and agreed to go to a dance with me Saturday night."

But the whole thing never happened.

Fairman said he dressed up for Saturday night. He combed his hair for the first time that week, pressed his pants, shined his shoes. He was all set.

Then the phone rang. It was his date. She told him coldly she had read the article, and it was no dice on the date.

More than anything she disagreed with what Fairman had to say on women in the story, quote: "I'd like good girls, but the good die young, and who wants dead ones."

Smiled Fairman. "Well it wasn't the first time boq. You know."

Meanwhile Hart House, possibly influenced by the story, has decided to tighten up its rules by disallowing card playing anywhere on the premises except the bridge room.

Fairman, an avid card player, has retaliated by drawing up an elaborate petition which he intends to send to the House Rules Committee as soon as he finds someone to type it.

Part of the petition reads: "... we feel that there is a legitimate desire on the part of a sizable percentage of the members of the house, that some additional facilities be arranged for card playing."

"Additionally it is felt that certain members would appreciate the opportunity to drink coffee whilst they are enjoying a card game."

The United States defeated Canada 2-1 in Olympic hockey last night in spite of Noel Bates' skiing to the office to tell us about it.

Swim Team Chances Slim For Intercollegiate Meet

The O.Q.A.A. Intercollegiate Swimming Championship will be held at University of Western Ontario, this Saturday, morning and afternoon. U of T has won this meet for the past three years, this year due to graduation and failures the swim team has been considerably weakened, but swim coach Marius Van Nooten, has built up a strong squad which will surprise the opposition.

Bob Fisher is the only winner defending his title from last year. Bob is Canadian 200 yards backstroke record holder, other members of the team who will contribute are Marvin Chapelle, the sensational freestyler who might provide the upset of the year by beating one of the McGill flashes.

Captain Wally Unger will provide depth by plugging up any holes during the meet, being an outstanding swimmer in all strokes. The supporting cast includes: freestylers, Pete Richardson, Kirk Thompson, Alex Ashenhurst, Ernie Wilson; breaststrokes Harvey Armstrong and Joe Jany; backstroke, Nick, Thierry, and our almost champion divers George Huyninen and Gary Logan.

Western is favoured to win this meet, this year they are looking forward to their first title. Varsity has been defeated twice by them this year, but each time it was a very exciting and close meet. McGill has two of the outstanding sprinters in the Country with Cameron Grout and Richard Pound but they lack depth in other events. It promises to be a very close and exciting meet. Time: 2 p.m. at Thames Hall, London, Ontario.

Golden Gaels Invade Arena

By GENE GLISKY

Queen's Golden Gaels' splendid in their multi-colored shiny costumes, tonight invade the confines of the sumptuous Bloor Street Ice Emporium to do battle with Varsity Breeze for the dubious distinction of who in tarnation is the second BEST team in the Intercollegiate hockey league.

This will be the first game, the last game and the only game Gorgeous Gaels play at the Arena this season. Since this is their first season (after an absence of several years) in the Big Intercollegiate league, Queen's play only half the games anyone else does, each encounter counting as two games (four points) in the league standings.

The reason for this is fairly obvious. Any body can see why it is so. I mean everybody does it these days, so why shouldn't Queen's.

At any rate, if you've never seen tri-tone hockey trousers before, Golden Gaels are the laddies to spy. Dazzling!

Varsity and Queen's are currently tied in the league standings, with 16 points each. A victory for either club will mean unchallenged hold on second place behind the champions from Laval.

If Varsity continue to play with the same gusto they exhibited in the game against Laval last week, the contest should be a rip-snorter. Let's face it, no other goalie in the league is capable of kicking out 46 shots, lead the charmed life Maurice Grenier did last Friday and have such stout hearted, puck eating defensemen in front of him.

Gael's scoring punch is pretty well centered around their big production line of Billy Colvin (ex St. Mike's Major), Ken Linesman (ex Varsity Blue and MVP winner) and Bryce Sanderson.

Blues will go with much the same lineup as was witnessed last week. George Hicken will center John Macdonald and Li'l Bar Roth, John Gatten draws Jim Murchie and Bill Griffin, while Gord Gow has a choice of Gord Frey, Al Orcheson, Dan Cherepacha, Pete Warren, Ev Rush and possibly Bob Giroux if he may wear his mask, as his choice of line-mates.

Ice Chips: Thanks to the Blue and White Band Blowers for their post Goal toots, but fellas was it necessary to play nothing but, Little Brown Jug, The Drinking Song, The Whiffenpoof Song, and The Cellars of Old KCR all night? How about rehearsing I Love You Truly, just for a change huh? Game time 8 p.m.

Score prediction: Varsity 6, Queen's Golden Gallopers 2. (Since Blues won 4-3 in Kingston it makes sense No?)

Lifetime results: 386 right, none wrong. Average 1.000.

Blues Chances Slim In Wrestling Meet

The U of T Wrestling Blues left for Kingston yesterday to defend their Senior Intercollegiate Title in a two day tournament to be held on February 26 and 27.

Coach Jack Amos took only eight men with him, the heavyweight division will not be contested by Varsity. Members who made the trip are: Joe Fama, John Stephenson, Ken Brown, Bill Polito, Marv Flancman, Hugh Cooke, Fred Ludvinka, and Herb Brown. This year's team is considerably weakened by graduation and ineligibility.

But wrestlers like Brown and Polito are all expected to do well. Team prospects to retain the crown they won handily last year, are not too bright, but with a bit of luck the Blues may be able to scrape through.

WATER CARNIVAL TICKETS

Tickets for the 2nd Annual Water Carnival sponsored by the University of Toronto Swimming Team are now available at the following places: The Engineering Store, Hart House Athletic Office, Wymilwood Box Office, SAC office, and from the following members of the swimming team: Alex Chiu and Nick Thierry at Architecture, Gary Logan, Victoria; John Deacon, U.C.; Ron Walbank, Trinity; Kirk Thompson, S.P.S.; Bill Yorzyk, Meds, and Cynthia Hare, Nursing.

The Carnival is being held at Hart House on the nights of March 4 and 5. Last year 27 Canadian swimming records were set, many of last year's performers will be back with the addition of most of the Canadian hopefuls for the Olympics. From the USA, Jeff Farrell, one of the fastest swimmers in the world, has accepted an invitation. Don Harper and Ron O'Brien from Ohio State University, both American Champions will perform clown and fancy diving.

Proceeds of the Carnival will go to support the Canadian Olympic swimming trial in Winnipeg this summer.

Cagers Play Pair On Last Weekend

Varsity Blues have managed to scrape up "well over a thousand dollars" and thus will be taking to the road for their last two games of the season.

Mr. Warren Stevens went into his own pocket and agreed to pay the cost of the trip (sic).

The team will go down to London tonight for the first game with Western. For both teams the outcome is important.

Western, who are now tied with Assumption for first place must win if they hope to remain in contention with the Lancers. Toronto, on the other hand, although it cannot now place higher than second, is in the convenient position of being able to mess up Western's hopes for a title.

The Mustangs will have a strong team with three year veteran Ron Hodgins, last year's leading scorer, as the top forward. In addition the converted-Queen's player now wearing purple and white Greg Stone will be at centre. It would be most fitting if Toronto could beat the Western team thus cheating them out of a title as we were in football.

Having played this game the Blues will leave for Windsor the next morning to play Assumption on Saturday evening.

This game will be a fitting end to the season. The Blues can count on playing as they never have before if they intend to win.

When the Blues return to Toronto they will have finished their season. It would be nice if they could end it with two wins. But win, lose, or draw there should be a good party after the game Saturday night.

AVR, SAC Agree Canning Was Prudent

All-Varsity Revue director Barry Callaghan and the Students' Administrative Council decided to "kiss and make up" last night.

The peace came in the wake of a roar of protest caused by Callaghan's accusations in Friday's Varsity of "stupidity" on the part of the council.

The council authorized Walter McLean to make a full statement of its reasons for squashing plans for an extended run for AVR. The statement said in part the council had decided the extra run would be a "great financial risk."

Meanwhile AVR Chairman Jim Little issued the following statement written in collaboration with Callaghan:

"I felt that we would make $200 (on the extended run). However the committee, including myself, bearing in mind my report of Mr. Hozack's (Hart House Theatre business the risk involved outweighed the possible advantage of cutting the AVR deficit.

"As for myself, I was glad to be able to sit back and relax for the first time in three months, as I know Barry was too. But our personal feelings were not important at that time."

Little said he presented the council's executive with "the arguments for and against. The only one for was the chance of making money. If we could have made up the deficit I would have done it."

AVR publicity chairman Lee Richardson said last night: "It (the extended run) would have been tremendous publicity to have built on for next year. Aside from the possibility of making up the deficit, that's a really big point."

"It was my understanding that Jim Little was enthused. Had I thought otherwise, I certainly would have tried to convince him," she said.

Little said Hozack had advised him that "to close on a full house was good publicity. Selling more tickets than last year was good prestige."

sac statement:

The Facts Re AVR

THE VARSITY of Friday, February 26th, ran a front page article under the headline entitled "A.V.R. Loses $1,500" in which All Varsity Revue Director Barry Callaghan "attacked the 'honestly stupid attitude' of the S.A.C." in refusing to extend the AVR for an additional two nights, i.e. Monday and Tuesday, February 15th and 16th.

Since this article was misleading, I have been authorized to issue the following statement on behalf of the Students' Administrative Council:

In making the decision not to extend the A.V.R. for an additional two nights, the Executive Commission of the S.A.C. was acting upon the advice of A.V.R. Chairman Jim Little, who has been charged by the Council with the responsibility for advising it on A.V.R. policy. Mr. Little advanced four reasons in support of his recommendation:

1. Because he had found, upon canvassing the cast of the A.V.R., that only the leads were enthusiastic about extending the show's run;
2. Because of the great financial risk involved in that there was no guarantee of an attendance sufficient even to make expenses, much less turn a profit on the extra performances;
3. Because of the advice tendered by officials of the Hart House Theatre, who pointed out that, in their opinion, it would be extremely difficult to publicize the additional performances; and
4. Because the theatre officials further pointed out that Monday and Tuesday nights are the poorest days of the week insofar as ticket sales are concerned.

WRY Blitz Opens; $100,000 Goal Set

The World Refugee Year blitz whirls into action today at the University of Toronto. Each student is being asked to contribute $1.

WRY committee chairman Tony Jennings said last night a goal of $100,000 has been set for the total to be collected from all Canadian universities.

There will be 50 collection boxes at prominent places on the campus during the two-day blitz. They will be in the UC rotundas, residences, libraries, the Economics building, and Hart House.

World Refugee Year was born from an idea of four Englishmen, one of them former distance runner Chris Chataway.

At least 63 countries of the United Nations are taking part this year.

WRY has three aims: to focus interest on the refugee problem, to encourage additional financial contributions from governments, voluntary agencies and the general public, and to encourage additional opportunities for permanent refugee solutions, said Jennings.

One quarter of the total sum raised will be used to help clear refugee camps in Europe, while the remaining money will be divided among projects to help refugee students and professors from Algeria, Hong Kong and Korea.

Fairman Blasts Catholic "Index"

By TERRY BOURKE

The University of Toronto's "most unangular student" took a verbal pot shot at the Roman Catholic movie index last night at a debate in the basement of St. John's Presbyterian Church.

Phil Fairman was speaking at a meeting of the Young Toronto Youth Association on "The Effects the Cinema have on Society Today."

"The Catholic Church," he said, "has given me the opinion, and many other of my unreligious friends, that all movies are bad and harmful."

"I think that motion pictures on the Grade D rating, or the so called 'immoral movies' as the Catholic Church labels them, are in fact not immoral."

"As a matter of fact, bog," he continued, "I think they are fit to see. My friends think they are fit to see. My mother, and I have one, even thinks they are fit to see."

"I suppose this is the old cliché way of looking at it," he added, "but if the Roman Catholic Church goes to all this attempt and length to print up these little circulars, and pass them around to all the organizations in Toronto, the bog there's just one conclusion I can come to."

They're trying hard to hide something. I know it.

"And let's face it. We are all aware what it is. Like sex. You know."

Fairman switched to the Catholic Book index.

"This has disturbed me for a long time. The way I look at it all people, no matter what faith they are should be allowed to choose their own reading material. And the Catholic Church is trying to frustrate this inherent liberty."

"This is what I call for bog. I call for the Catholic intellectual to stand on their own two feet, on their own two flat heads — like intellectuals the world over and decide for themselves what their reading material shall be."

During the night Fairman held the spot light in the discussion group as he described the attributes, qualities, and "unknown truths" about some of Hollywood's biggest stars.

Phil said he is not in the habit of visiting churches too often. But last night he decided to look in on St. John's after a beatnik friend told him about the free coffee, sandwiches, and controversial topic.

"As you probably know bog, Sunday is gin and poker night for me. But because of my continuous winning streak for the last 24 weeks, my friends ostracized from the club," he said.

Fairman's appearance at the church function caused a flurry of excitement. "I've been a member of St. John's for seven years, and last year was a sort of return to innocence," he pointed out.

Meanwhile Fairman said last night he is still busily working on his position to get the Hart House Rules Committee to withdraw its ban on card playing in the Tuck Shop, a coffee hideaway in the east end of the House.

Last week Fairman almost landed in serious trouble with House authorities when he threatened to rip down the sign on the Shop bulletin board warning students not to play cards.

Fairman was quietly dealing away his 31st hand that day when suddenly a HH janitor stormed into the shop and ordered him to put the cards away.

Phil turned five different colors. But he pocketed the cards.

The janitor left. Fairman leaped from his chair, rushed to the board and was just about to tear the sign down when several of his friends restrained him.

"There will be another day," quipped the red head.

No Aristocrats At Old Frontier

Frontier College is looking for rugged University of Toronto males interested in accepting the call of Canada's wild.

Each year Frontier representatives visit U of T to find students who would like to become outdoor teachers to men in logging camps, mining communities, and railroad gangs across Canada.

The students set up school on the spot, and during the summer teach the men, many of them immigrants, English and various other subjects.

It may sound simple, but there's more to it than that.

There are no aristocrats at Frontier College. Before the student can teach he must get to know the men. This involves a lot of hard work.

The student must become one of the men, by working along side them.

And it's only after sweating an eight-hour day swinging a sledge hammer, digging a ditch, or hacking ore out of the ground, that the other men will begin to gradually accept him as one of them.

After the ice is broken, the student takes over an abandoned railroad car or mining shack for his class room. Books and motion picture films are channelled to him from the college.

If he has proven himself to the men in the open, he will find his make-shift class gradually filling up with workers anxious to learn.

Not all of the applicants chosen by the Frontier College staff succeed. But this is the exception rather than the rule.

A top rate staff is on hand at interview time to weed out those they feel incapable of handling the job.

The wages a Frontier College man makes are those he earns on the job. It is usually enough to pay his tuition.

Interviews are being held in Hart House tomorrow.

Justification For Petition

OTTAWA (CUP)—The 13,859 university students who believed 150 of their Hungarian counterparts were to be executed may have been justified, according to the latest report by the International Commission of Jurists.

In a letter to NFCUS, E. S. Kozera, administrative secretary of the commission stated, "... although there is no absolutely conclusive proof these youths have been executed, there is reason to believe the story is not unfounded."

However, Mr. Kozera said the Hungarian government still denies any such executions took place.

Last fall students from seven universities signed petitions which stated, "We hereby ask Premier Khrushchev to use his influence to have the lives spared of the young men, and women who participated in the 1956 Hungarian revolution, thereby demonstrating the sincerity of his plea for world peace."

The universities which signed were: Memorial, 373; McMaster, 478; OAC-OVC, 1,089; Queen's, 1,364; Western, 1,491; Toronto, 3,079; and UBC, 5,985.

Mr. Kozera referred to a BBC broadcast to Hungary Jan. 28 which claimed that the 150 had been recently executed.

A regular bulletin of the commission published earlier said a trial in camera, "of a large group of young people under the age of 20 took place in February and March." Eight of those sentenced later were shot in August, the bulletin said.

Athlone Fellowships For UofT Students

Five University of Toronto students are winners of the Athlone Fellowships, for two years' study in Britain, it was announced Monday. They are all in their graduating year in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering.

The five are: B. C. Gregory (Eng-Phys); C. M. Woodside (Eng-Phys); S. H. Chisholm (Eng-Phys); R. B. L. Ross (Eng-Phys), and F. E. Collins (Eng. and Business).

Brian Gregory, past winner of such scholarships as The First Wallberg Undergraduate, The First Spruce Falls Power and Paper Co. Ltd. scholarship and a third year Wallberg Undergraduate scholarship, plans to do post-graduate work at Cambridge in electronics.

Murray Woodside plans to do post-graduate work also at Cambridge, in electrical control systems.

Hugh Chisholm previously attended the University of South Carolina. He plans to attend University College, London, for training in the field of microwaves.

Bob Ross plans one year in British industry after a year of Production Engineering at the University of Birmingham.

Frank Collins, president of the Engineering Society, has won several awards in the past. He will do graduate work in management for one year at the University of Birmingham, and spend one year with a firm of management consultants.

Minister Wants Humane Poetry

A Unitarian minister last week exhorted humanists to write poetry communicating the ideals of humanism.

Reverend John Morgan of Toronto's first Unitarian Church, spoke to members of the University of Toronto Humanist Guild on "the poetry of Humanism".

He said, "it may not be great poetry but it is humanist uttering and someday it may become great."

Mr. Morgan suggested there is a need to communicate humanism to the non-intellectual "who has not been blessed with a university education".

"Approaching the humanist viewpoint in an intellectual way handicaps one seriously," he continued. "It is the kind of difference between reading a text book on love and making love."

Rev. Morgan read some poetry written by a humanist group, of high school age, at a Unitarian conference. He felt that while the poems did not show extremely good craftsmanship, they did show a great deal of thought.

UBC Students Want Own Rep In Legislature

VANCOUVER (CUP)—Out of the series of "soap box" speeches sponsored by the Student Christian Movement has come a proposal that UBC should be represented in the provincial legislature by a student.

The suggestion arose from growing discontent among students who feel that the university is not adequately represented by Provincial Attorney Robert Boner, the present MLA for its constituency.

Allan Rimmer, initiator of the movement, lashed out against the Social Credit government claiming it had failed to keep its promise of matching dollar for dollar, to a total of $10,000,000, any contribution made by the public to the UBC development fund. Rimmer said the government owes UBC $7,500,000 in matching grants.

The Student In Germany

I once had a discussion with a history student about Germany's position in Europe early in 1960, just when the anti-semitic scrawls began to appear. After talking at length about Germany's problems, he asked me briskly "And what about Canada's problems?"

I told him what I knew about United States infiltration, economic slumps, immigration problems etc. After I had finished he exclaimed "You call those problems? God are you lucky!"

I thought about what he had said and then I realized that these young men and women very soon have to face tremendous tasks and assume immense responsibilities. Some day they will have to solve the "Hauptstadtproblem" (the by now almost legendary Berlin Question) and they will have to reunite their country. Other problems will be: to see to it that the "Economic Miracle" lasts on and the ugly devils of the past, militarism per se, democratic failures, totalitarianism, do not rise again.

This awareness of the instability of the world in which they live has made the German students more politically conscious than the Canadian ones. It is significant that the University of Munich has no student newspaper as we expect to find it in Canada, but that they have a number of papers, each representing some political conviction. Several papers are either very rightist, or very leftist, but each editor is careful to conceal the actual ideology his paper represents, in order to attract as many readers and potential converts as possible.

If you pick up a paper which features nothing but long articles denouncing fascism in Spain and Portugal, you may say, "What a sensible paper!" It is quite possible that you are, in fact, reading a Communist-sponsored brochure. But nowhere will you find any admission of that by the writers.

A young aristocrat whom I met several weeks ago gave me a copy of a paper which called itself "Student Im Volk" (student among the people). As I read it, I discovered this to be a German nationalistic paper, which did not necessarily mean that it was edited by Neo-Nazis. But it was not hard to see that the paper sympathized with certain aspects of Neo-Nazism.

"We do not wish to revive Nazism in Germany," said my friend, "but we need a nationalist-oriented body among the students in order to come to grips with the "all-German problems."

He and many others have told me that German students are becoming increasingly critical of the Government's ever-lasting tendency to hold on to the West, while they have always been opposed to any associations with the Eastern Block.

"What Germans need today to solve their big problems are parties which, free from any conventional ideology like socialism, and free from the illusions of Western pacts and alliances begin to concentrate on Germany alone."

To my question whether this might mean the rise of another Nazi Party, my friend only shook his head. "All we know is that we cannot agree with any of our present student political parties," he said. "None of them suits our ideals. There is something wrong with all of them."

And then he added, "Only in Germany will you find so many movements so radically far apart. But only in Germany will you find the problematical conditions that warrant such violent political extremes."

GOINGS ON music

tonight

The Netherlands Chamber Choir returns to Toronto for what is hoped will be a repeat of their highly successful concert January 27th at the Conservatory. You might think that with just 18 members, the choir might not be exactly a sensation, but that isn't true; they have been drawing rave reviews here and everywhere, which may be somewhat connected with the presence of some of Holland's most distinguished singers in the choir. Their tour has taken them to, among other places, the Edinburgh Festival, Sainte Chapelle, the Sagra Musical in Perugia, and the European Choir Festival in Vienna. (At the Auditorium of the International Institute, 709 College St., at 8:20 p.m.; tickets $1.50 and $2.00.)

Rosalyn Tureck, one of the world's foremost exponents of Bach piano, gives an open concert in the Women's Musical Club of Toronto series. Said Howard Taubman of the New York Times about Miss Tureck, "Bach is a universe, and it is a rare interpreter who can seize on his diversity, vision and humanity and spread it before an audience." Huzzah! (At Eaton Auditorium, 8:30 p.m., and if you are in fact or fancy a student, you can get a ticket for 50c from the Concert Bureau at the Conservatory.)

tomorrow

The Toronto Symphony Orchestra, Walter Susskind conducting as nearly always, continues its subscription series with works by Tchaikovsky, Beethoven and Freedman (a Canadian, no less). Soloist is Erica Morina, violinist. (Massey Hall, 8:30 p.m., also on Wednesday night.)

the little match girl

AVR Publicity Director Lee Richardson was more or less surprised when she found a few infidels in her collection of Christopher Jones matches.

Somehow several folders were distributed with a picture of a luxurious lounge and the caption "Ser-geant's (sic) Mess, RCAF Station, St. Hubert, P.Q."

Most of the matches got to St. Michael's.

It is the Sabbath. Myer cannot be buried on the Sabbath. Myer is a Jew. The body lies in state, waiting for the night to pass. What an ideal setup for a horror movie.

The lid of the coffin slowly creaks open. The bloodstained rag is whisked inside. Myer appears, grinning like a sheepdog, as the audience roars with laughter. Puzzle: what's wrong with this scene?

Sunday night thirty or so people watched the premier of a color-sound horror movie in a house north of the U of T. They laughed, not because the movie was funny, or because it was particularly bad, but because they knew the actors. They were amateurs.

Bob McCaldon (IV Meds) and Paul Weingarden, a U of T graduate, filmed the production "just for the hell of it." They also wrote it.

The story surrounds Myer, who learned the easy secret of immortality while in Europe — become a vampire. After his rising from the coffin, the audience is subtly informed of his position.

In a recent issue of the Reporter Magazine, Mr. George Steiner dealt with the problem of the German language after the Hitler "Era."

Mr. Steiner's thesis is that when words are used for demagoguery, for deceit, for brutality and murder that the words are subtly and permanently altered.

It frightened us to think that the sins our fathers found names for would be visited upon us, but we realized that Mr. Steiner's thesis was almost irrefutable.

We are not familiar enough with the German language to test the accuracy of the examples in his article, but when thought about certain words in the English language, we began to see dimensions of the problem.

We found it impossible to use the words "war" and "peace" and know precisely what we meant and what the difference between them was. When we spoke of "bourgeoisie" and "proletariat" we found such a host of stereotyped images springing to mind, that we no longer knew what we were talking about.

Even when we spoke of "revolution", of "order" and "chaos", we found that no one quite understood what we had said.

Why has this happened?

Why are there now words in our language—words which are of the utmost importance—words which can be found daily in the editorial columns of every newspaper—that have such a plethora of meanings that they have no meaning at all?

It is because these words have not merely been subtly shaded by the context in which they appeared, but they have been twisted and brutally distorted to fit into sentences for which they were never intended.

It is difficult to know what a "brink" is after Mr. Dulles teetered on the edge of one. It is difficult to know who the people are when the people are seen in the streets of Budapest shooting at the representative of the "People's Government".

And it is difficult to know what democracy and friendship mean when the democracy of the United States extends its benevolence to Franco Spain and the Dominican Republic.

And the saddest part of it is, that when one attempts to clarify the language, when one attempts to attack the propagandists, one is subtly enmeshed in the sticky web of the meaningless words.

Who now, after Dr. Goebbels, would care to define race? Who after Nuremberg would like to discuss Justice? Who after Khrushchov's repudiation of Stalin would care to discuss Truth.

And who, again, after 1945, would presume to offer his life for a better world?

For in attacking a lie, one is faced with the bitterly ironic problem of admitting the existence of the lie. And then there is no language with which to even begin a discussion but the language of the liar.

And with each new "cause" we are left with fewer and fewer words in which we can place any faith.

As Bertolt Brecht, the German poet who had cause to know said in his poem, To Our Successors.

"Hatred, even against degradation,
Distorts the features.

Anger, even against injustice
Makes the voice hoarse."

CAMPUS

by Jayne Nesbitt

The University of Toronto is said to maintain a high standard of education. Its graduates are rated highly in all fields. We strive, however, to be angular, angular we are, in at least one facet of on-campus life.

Our males at the four affiliated colleges and in our many professional faculties are among the most angular dressers anywhere, and their angularity varies with the coffee rooms they inhabit daily.

Perhaps the best-dressed are the men. Their faculties demand that they wear a white shirt and tie for lectures. They complete their outfit with the dully dull blue U of T blazer, or similarly sedately dull sports jacket. They are usually grey flannels, or dull dark trousers. They are found between the hours of nine and four p.m. in the Medical Building's Duncan Room, where they drape themselves appealingly in chairs, engaging the freshe Therapy students in typically dazzlingly dull talk.

At Victoria College, male students are to be undecided in their form of angular dress. Jackets usually approach the League look, pants are cords or khaki and a reversible dark brown and khaki topcoat completes their costume. Polished brown or black shoes, or occasional desert boots are footwear. Students congregate for long hours on the bridge in the Wymilwood coffee shop.

Trinity College students are of the school. They favor skimpy suits of grey and bold houndstooth checks for jackets. Trousers again are dull, matched jackets. Shoes are dark, highly-polished oxfords. For lectures, the Trinity wears a cunning, divinely-inspired, black academic robe.

St. Michael's students are to a large extent, imports from the United States. These US students continue their American heritage in their apparel. The Ivy League is in and will probably always be in as long as there is an Ivy League. Everything is buttoned down, with brass of course. Pants are olive-green cords or khakis. Jackets are dark tweeds. Shoes are white bucks or desert boots, and with spring, white sneakers will no doubt make their appearance in the Coop, the St. Mike's coffee shop.

If the above faculties seem varied in dress, University College is made up of the most individual male dressers on campus. Color is the command of fashion, and it is carried to every extreme imaginable. In the Junior Common Room at UC, on a good day, preferably between the hours of 10 and 12 a.m., you can see every shade and color invented or imagined.

The heavy, crew-neck sweater is favored, in bright yellow, stripes of olive and grey, or grey and red. There are the striped innovations of course, ranging from bumble-bee shadings of brown down sleeves on a plain-fronted sweater, to the prison stripe verticals of back and white. Shirts are button-downs of bright paisley, often lined at the collar with a matching green or gold. The loose cardigan of red or beige, with contrasting stripes as binding is another favorite.

Pants are cords of green, gold, or brown, with the occasional black. Black cords are usually reserved for matching black turtle-neck sweaters, which are worn on the traditionally 'beat' day, Monday. Shoes are desert boots in beige, grey, black, or a new and arresting orange-tan shade.

The Engineers have an angularity of dress which is theirs alone, a standard blue windbreaker, of varying shades, according to the year and consequent wearing. This is enlivened by a yellow blazon "Engineering" across the back. The Engineers were almost forced into attire similar to that of the other professional faculties last year, but they have persisted, and continue to wear checked and plaid sport shirts, open at the neck. Shoes vary, from standard oxfords, to the heavier boots preferred for across-the-front-campus travel.

This survey seems to indicate that we are not going to see any substantial changes in male attire on the U of T campus this year.

When the first woman was made, out of a spare rib without benefit of barbecue sauce, there came this little fig leaf wifing and waiting in the breeze and nestling where all good fig leaves nestle. Thus women's fashions began.

Since then women's fashions have come a long way, for now there are clothes for every function madame wishes to perform except for taking a bath-in-ensembles.

As you may have guessed, we are going to discuss women's clothing. Not just any type of woman's garb, but the togs of one special type — the campus sweetheart, the U of T Co-ed.

This is not going to be a treatise by an expert, if by expert one means the sophisticated type who indiscriminately spouts technical jargon. Lady, we don't even know if that halter-like affair that you wear and which resembles a double barreled sling-shot, has one or two S's, but we're still old fashioned enough to believe a woman dresses to please the eyeball of an ordinary male with tongue in starboard molar, we write.

We will find it necessary to generalize quite a bit, although to our surprise, we found that by visiting the common-rooms of the four major Arts Colleges, where females abound in plenty, there were enough differences to be able to categorize.

The first port of call was the jolly little dungeon, Trinity's Buttery which boasts the only unfinished mural on campus dutifully sticking to the wall.

Uniformity seems the byword here. About three-quarters of the co-eds were dressed in pullovers and skirts with the rare one garbed in a starched blouse with a button up sweater.

Skirts were primarily of the practical, tweedy type of material cut to a modest below-the-knees length. There was also a profusion of the plaid, pleated type of skirt (some reversible) and although these make for a pleasant twirl when the wearer is in motion they also tend to create an impression of hippiness and swayback. The bulky sweaters, visible here and there, were of a comfortable roomy cut giving the impression that the wearer took three paces before the sweater decided to tag along.

Very neat, very prim and proper, very unimaginative, rather drab and quite dull should sum it up for Trinity.

At Victoria's Wymilwood, where the chairs are held together with little chains, a slot machine spews flat orange crush but the coffee is quite edible, there were two prominent features. At Vic the bosom is in, that is, it is in if it is out — if you get what we mean.

With this anti-Dior movement, as may be expected, the sweater and skirt were in prominence. Unlike Trinity, however, the sweaters were a good deal more colorful in fine wool and orlon knit, a good deal better tailored to fit in the right places and much more varied in style. They varied from short sleeve batwing to V-neck to modest round-neck. There was a substantial profusion of color and shape.

The skirts were of a modest length, but tended toward a tighter fit. This may hamper running a bit, but then why should a well knit girl run — and where — and from whom?

Interesting, if true was the consensus of opinion at Victoria.

At St. Mike's lush Coop where we received a receipt after purchasing a coffee (an experiment in Socialism we guessed) there was a surprising amount of variety in women's attire. Here, for the first time, we saw evidence of the famed leotard, a good deal of colorful jumper style skirts, full length dresses and a few print frocks.

There was also an aura of sophistication. There were evidences of smartly tailored two piece suits in a profusion of pastel shades. Here and there nylons and high heels were worn, as was a bright red and black lumber-jack type of blouse.

At the Coop jewelry was worn with a good deal of consistency. Most of it, however, was of the shiny brassy variety, tuned to match the clips on the co-eds' clip boards.

St. Mike's did not lack for imagination or style. Perhaps the soft leather couches and the TV set had something to do with it, but we were forced to remark — very smart, very smart indeed.

The University College JCR proved to be a real headache. As we fought our way past plastic garbage cans, square wash tubs, empty bottles and old gargoyles (paper ones), we were met by an awesome display of dimpled knees, garish colors, costumes bordering on the weird, outfits outlandishly expensive in appearance; and more variety of costume than can be described in one long breath.

The UC co-ed must be complimented on individuality and imagination. Sweaters varied from unbelievably tight and fine to spectacularly colored bulky ones. Skirts were consistently above the knee, varying from heavy buckled wrap-arounds to short kilt like plaids. Knee socks and leotards were colorful to garish in designs resembling both cross-stitch and Japanese embroidery.

There were even occasional be-nylone, be-tailored dolls who looked like they had just stepped from out the other side of the fireplace in an Esquire magazine.

Words and space cannot do justice to the femmes at UC. They must be seen to be believed and appreciated.

If the editor permits, our next survey will be something in the nature of "What goes on beneath the wraps of a U of T co-ed." Should physical stamina fail, we're sure it will take four undertakers two days to get the smile off our puss.

Gill Makes The Most Of Wilde Play

Robert Gill, for his fourth and last theatrical presentation of the year, chose Oscar Wilde's The Importance Of Being Earnest. Saturday night, his student performers made it a wise choice. More than in his other productions this year, he has succeeded in melding the demands of his play with the capricious supply of student talent he must rely upon, and the result, with perhaps one exception, is a high and even standard of university theatre.

The Importance Of Being Earnest offers to a theatre company opportunity for a great deal of fun, but the fun is there to be enjoyed only after mountains of work. Obviously this is true of practically any piece of theatre, but it seems especially to apply to this play. At bottom there are but two themes. One is an unending pun which begins with the title, and the other is Wilde's taste for inverting ideas, feelings, and social norms to suit his dialogue. To transform this into two and one half hours of titillating theatre, even given Mr. Wilde's facile dialogue and solid construction, is quite a chore—for the director, mainly, but also for the cast.

In the Hart House production, however, it all comes off with incredible ease, and one of the main reasons for this is the smooth performance given by Terry Sheils as (Ernest)

John Worthing. He is always at ease, forceful in delivery and highly sensitive to the cue, which makes him admirably suited to this Wilde role.

Opposite him, Michael Davidson as Algeron Moncrieff meets with less success. He gets across the basic fact of his character—that is, that he is a slob—but he does it with such concentration that one sometimes loses interest in him completely; perhaps his is the most difficult role, in that the humour in the role is liable to be directed at the performer rather than at the stage character if he is not perfectly convincing. Mr. Davidson's delivery lacks sufficient variety, and his department is to some extent contrived and stereotyped. Still, his portrayal is strong enough to maintain the play.

As Lady Bracknell and her niece Gwen-dolyn, Miranda Davies and Mariel O'Neill are positive assets to the play. Miss Davies bustles about the stage with suitable comic energy, and Miss O'Neill takes every possible advantage of her role to set off the other characters. Vals Echin as Cecily gives a delightful performance as the peculiarly wise 18-year old ward of John Worthing; the scenes combining Miss O'Neill and Miss Echin are the best of the evening.

The finest single performance of the production is provided by Brian Vincent as the whimsical, slightly doddering and still romantically inclined Canon Chasuble. His portrayal of aged sprightliness is far better than one would expect from any student actor. Pauline Gillam as the equally elderly and equally obstreperous Miss Prism is almost as convincing about her age; she obviously enjoys the role. The two butlers are played by Kim Cassell and George Appleby; their performances suggest that in future years we will be seeing more of them on the Hart House stage.

Director Gill deserves much—or perhaps, most—of the credit for the consistently high quality of the production, which, of course, is nothing new. To say that his direction is of professional calibre would only be to say that he is doing what he is paid to do, but to say that he has brought each individual performance near professional quality would be to speak the truth. He has been aided by Martha Mann's resourceful sets and some intriguing costumes supplied by the Crest Theatre and Adams Costumes Rentals.

It is not hard to ruin an Oscar Wilde play, but it would be well nigh impossible not to enjoy this production.

More Than Mortal Skill

"It is worth your while to listen, you who do not wish adulterers to succeed in their understandings." And it is well worth anyone's while to see the play to which this epigraph refers, Congreve's The Way of the World as produced by the University Alumnae Dramatic Club at their Coach House Theatre.

Molly Golby has directed the play with remarkable flair and appreciation of the complex verbal texture. The plot line was at times unclear, but perhaps a director faced with Congreve's plots, subplots and counterplots could do no more to clarify them. The production was remarkably even. The sets and costumes were good within the theatre's limitations, props were authentic and added to the eighteenth century flavour, and even the sound cues arrived on time.

The best single bit of acting was James Mainprize's prologue, but it is to the production's credit that the rest of the play was not an anticlimax. Mr.

Mainprize as Fainall, David White as the fop Witwoud and Patricia Brown as Fainall's mistress and accomplice were outstanding in a consistently good cast. Mr. White's part (which was played by David Garriek in his eighteenth century production of the play) offered more comic opportunities than most in a play rich with comedy, and to say that he milked the part is flattery. His Witwoud was the very pattern of fatuity.

As Lady Wishfort, Frances Halpenny was perhaps a bit too gross in her portrait of the decrepit nymphomaniac, but her vitality was equal to that of Congreve's society billingsgate.

The charm of Judith Teague's Millamant seemed superficial, even in the beau monde of the play. The girlish affectations were not supported by a real grace. Her male consort, Norman Edmondson as Mirabell, had one technical flaw, a tendency to spoil his epigrams by an awkward pause in the middle while he seemed to search for the last half of the line. But Mr. Edmondson moves well and has a rich voice.

Joan Shaw gave a lively performance as Foible, woman to Lady Wishfort. Her romping of contrition on the stage floor were spirited and amusing. Mrs. Fainall, as played by Barbara Barnett had more dignity than one expects of a character in a comedy, but the part itself is equivocal and Miss Barnett's interpretation is a valid one.

Congreve ends his play with an epilogue that summarizes the reactions of modern audiences and critics as well as it did those in his own day. As he says:

"There are some critics so with spleen diseased,
They scarcely come inclining to be pleased;
And sure he must have more than mortal skill
Who pleases anyone against his will."

Either Congreve and his Coach House expositors had this "more than mortal skill" or we can excuse ourselves the disease of spleen. We were pleased.

"Next stop Russia."
That's the cry George Butterfield and 15 other students will be hearing this summer.
Butterfield, a third year student at Trinity College, is heading for Russia and he hopes to have some company.
He received a wire one week ago from the Soviet government informing him he would be allowed to make a trip to Russia.
This is his fourth summer in Europe. But Butterfield has yet to visit Russia a "vast country which is so important in our lives", he says.
"Most people who visit Europe never get to see this nation and yet it is probably the one we know least about."
Butterfield explained he has received confirmation from "Intourist" the official Russian travel agency to make his trip. Now all he needs is some company.
Butterfield is aiming for about 15 companions. His reasons are two-fold.
First, the cost will be cheaper if more people go, and second because the journey will be much more enjoyable with a bigger group.

The trip is mixed. Several students on other camps have expressed interest.
Butterfield is interested in contacting people planning to be in Europe this summer anyway.
"We leave Stockholm June 17th and return July 3rd."
Butterfield said accommodations will be first class. There are three classes of travel in the Russia.
All transportation is by air. And the students will be guided during their stay there by official state interpreters.
Some of the more important cities the students will hit on their visit are Kiev, Leningrad, and Moscow.
Arrangements for the trip have to be made now, Butterfield said. Therefore he would like all those interested to meet together as soon as possible.

If you want to hear "Next stop Russia" called out this summer give him a ring at WA. 2-3882.

"Mommy, Uncle Myer tried to undress me behind the garage just now," the daughter Lolita dutifully tells her mother. You begin to get the picture.

Gradually Myer sucks his sister-in-law Jean into the life of a vampire. Then they start working on Myer's brother Bill. He isn't so easy. Bill grabs a crucifix from the top drawer of his desk, (although why a crucifix is so conveniently located in a Jewish household could perhaps be better explained to the audience), and takes off after Myer.

After a five-minute chase scene, which ranges all over Toronto from Hart House to Forest Hill to the Brown Derby, with the William Tell Overture as background music, Bill catches Myer.

He waves the crucifix. Myer laughs, and says "What harm can a crucifix do a Jewish vampire?"

From this the plot is quickly resolved, happily, as Lolita and Bill join the troupe. A touching scene ends the film when the foursome walks admiringly past a crematorium, and we are told that Myer is an undertaker, Bill and Jean work at the blood bank and Lolita is in school spreading the doctrines.

The music, taped and painfully synchronized with the film, is mostly rock and roll with a few snatches of a hymn and Mantovani's singing strings.

The creators of the show modestly mention themselves only six or seven times, and are always careful to give other credits where due. ("Pillar Productions wishes to express its reverent appreciation to God for the shots of the full moon.")

Weingarden promised this was his first and last attempt at commercial films, but in case he is overwhelmed by offers, here is a tip: get a tripod.

PQ PM Meets Student Education Delegation

OTTAWA (CUP) — Quebec Premier Antonio Barrette has met with a student delegation in his office to discuss a new brief on education.
The brief was altered two weeks ago at an emergency N.E.C.U.S. regional meeting because of complaints from the University of Montreal about the length.
It now asks for:

- a Royal Commission to study every aspect of education.
  - a criterion of talent rather than finance for university entrance, with financial difficulties looked after by the province
  - a complete scholarship program instead of one whereby the student must repay 40 per cent of loans,
  - an extension of thanks to the province for certain legislation, and to the provinces change of attitude towards education.
- Most universities will send five representatives to the premier's office Friday, but McGill may send only three.

AVR Disks Coming

Members of the "Christopher Jones" cast have formed a small stock company to back the recording made of the show, All-Varsity Revue officials said last week.
"To cover the $250 deposit asked by Quality records and the $40 recording hall rental, certain members of the cast have pitched in and made up the required amount out of their own savings," co-producer Jim Doris, said last night.
According to script-writer Gino Matteo this stock company bears no resemblance to the company satirized in the show "Christopher Jones".
"The distinction to be made is this is a disorganized company. Everyone can maintain his own individuality," explained Matteo.
The records are expected to be on sale the first of next week at a cost of $3 a disk. They can be ordered at the SAC office or by phoning WA. 4-2816.

Athletic Directorate Elections

1960 — 1961

The Electoral Meeting of the University of Toronto Athletic Association to elect representatives to the Athletic Directorate for 1960-61 will be held on Monday, March 7th, at 4 p.m. sharp, in the Debates Room, Hart House (south side, upstairs).
Under the Constitution of the Athletic Association (Article VIII), all Athletic Club Executives and College and Faculty Athletic Associations are entitled to send representatives to this meeting. These representatives must be male undergraduates of the University of Toronto or one of the affiliated colleges, who are proceeding to a degree, are in actual attendance upon lectures, and who have paid the annual fee required (By-law 1). The Club Executives and Athletic Associations are being notified to meet at an early date, appoint their representatives and give them their credentials for the electoral meeting.

PROCEDURE FOR NOMINATION

A student to be elected to the Directorate must, at the time of his nomination, be in the second or higher year of his course, at the University, but not in his final year. The nominations must be in writing on the form provided for the purpose, signed by two male undergraduate members of the Athletic Association, in good standing, and filed with Secretary of the Athletic Association not later than Thursday, March 3rd. The nomination form may be obtained at the Athletic Office.

J. P. LOOSEMORE
Secretary, Athletic Directorate

Whip Golden Gaels 6-3

By GENE GLISKY

A revitalized Varsity Blues hockey squad, utilized a newly found scoring punch to down Queen's Golden Gaels 6-3 at the Arena Friday night and retain sole and unchallenged hold on second place in the Intercollegiate hockey league.

Blues wasted no time in their efforts to demolish Gaels, scoring four goals in the first period and adding insurance markers in the second two.

Versatile Jim Simpson drew first blood for Blues early in the opening stanza only to have defenseman Murray Hampton pull the Gaels even seven minutes later. Hampton's shot from just inside the Varsity blue-line momentarily evaded Bob Giroux, who found himself sitting on the puck inside the goal.

Varsity dominated the scoring in the last five minutes of the period. Jim Murchie muscled one in on an assist from Gord Epp. Gord Gow, who may be cited as the most improved forward in the Blues lineup this season fired the first of his two goals from Simpson and Pete Warren, while John Gatten finally found the range with half a minute left to play in the frame, scoring from Murchie and Bill Griffin.

Gow made it 5-1 in the second period, scoring on a pattern passing play from Warren and Ian Sinclair.

Al Orcheson added insurance early in the final period on a pretty breakaway, beating Gaels' goalie Dave Crowe with a quick flip to the corner.

Queen's finally got to Giroux in the last to minutes of play. Ex Varsity star, Ken Linseman and Sudbury's own Carl Nurmi combined to score two quick markers.

Much of the credit for Blues' victory, despite the fact that the forwards were particularly sharp in the scoring department, must be given agile net-minder Bob Giroux. Gaels' out-shot Varsity in both the second and third periods, forcing Giroux to handle 38 shots to Crowe's 28.

The Varsity defense, continually left Giroux to fend for himself getting trapped out of position at the Queen's blue-line. Mid way through the final period, Gaels' Darryl McKenzie waltzed in without a defense within hailing distance to be stopped in his tracks by the undaunted Giroux.

The abbreviated schedule Queen's play or perhaps the rather hectic pace set in this contest began to tell on Gaels. The big guns, Bill Colvin and Linseman were noticeably puffing before the game was half over, and although Gaels continued to the attack, much of the finesse to their efforts was dissipated clearly through lack of condition.

Tempers flared in the third period, the good natured jostling turned into some petty savage thumping, as referee Gord Fèveau continued to overlook several obvious misdemeanors. Eight minor penalties were called, five to Blues, three to Gaels.

Varsity lost the services of Harry Neale mid-way through the contest, when the all-star defenseman aggravated a back injury and was forced to retire. Up to that time Neale seemed to be handing out punishment with his old-time gusto, something at which none of the Blues seem to be adept this year.

scored on 26 of 86 shots while Varsity could only manage 17 of 54. Western's Ron Hodgins had 20 points on five field goals and 10 for 10 on the foul line, Mike Muir was top man for Varsity with 19 points.

Mustangs Crush Varsity 78-53

London, Ont., Feb. 27—Western Mustangs set the stage tonight for their all-important Senior Intercollegiate basketball meeting with Assumption here, March 4, by crushing the University of Toronto, 78-53.

The Mustangs, accurate from the foul line, and with Bill Lawson putting on a great display of shooting, won their sixth game in seven league starts and now need a win over Assumption to clinch the championship.

Lawson netted nine field goals to crack Toronto's zone defence early. At the foul line, Western cashed in on 26 of 30 attempts to down Varsity, who had upset Assumption earlier this season.

Toronto had one of its poorest shooting nights of the season and was no match for the Mustangs who went ahead 35-20 at half-time and were never headed.

Western's fast break moved quickly against the Blues who did not abandon the zone even when 30 points behind. Mustangs

Lancers Best Varsity To Tie For Loop Lead

WINDSOR, Feb. 28 — Assumption University Lancers trimmed University of Toronto Blues, 78-53, Saturday night in Intercollegiate senior basketball play.

The win sets the stage for the championship to be decided at London on Friday night, when the Lancers meet University of Western Ontario Mustangs in the last game of the season. Both clubs have identical season records of six wins and one loss. Assumption earlier beat Western in Windsor.

Oddly enough Western defeated Toronto Friday night by the same 78-53 score in London.

The Toronto cagers, who won three and lost five, wound up in third place in the league. Assumption, avenging an earlier 78-76 loss to the Blues in Toronto earlier this season, completely outclassed the Toronto hoopers in the return match, clicking on 41 per cent of their shots from the floor.

Single baskets by Leo Innocente, Leo Girard and Dick Szeman and two field goals by Gene Rizak put Assumption into a 10-0 lead in the first 1½ minute mark Assumption led 16-2 and the contest was a virtual rout after that.

Innocente set the pace with eight field goals and two foul shots for 18 points. Rizak got 27 while Girard and Szeman scored 13 points each.

Dan Norman and Jim Maguire got 16, half of them free throws.

Assumption, substituting freely throughout, led 29-10 at quarter-time, 44-22 at the half and 66-36 at the three-quarter mark.

Toronto (53)—Muir, F. (4); Norman, F. (18); Maguire, C. (16); Potter, G. (Menzel, G. (9); Wolchuk, S. (6); O'Neill, S. (1); Assumption (78)—Weir, F. (6); L. Girard, F. (13); Szeman, C. (13); Rizak, G. (17); Innocente, G. (18); G. Girard, S. (6); Moore, S. (1); McCaffery, S. (1); Nickson, S. (3); Gleason, S.

Western's Wrestlers Capture College Title

KINGSTON, Feb. 28 — University of Western Ontario swept the annual Ontario-Quebec amateur athletic wrestling championships, to gain its title Saturday.

Ontario Agricultural College of Guelph and Toronto both had two individual champions, but OAC finished with 71 points to 58 for the University of Toronto. Queen's who had one champion finished with 30 points, while McGill finished a poor last with 24 points.

Western, which was tied Friday after the preliminaries and semi-finals in team standing, with 58 points, marched on ahead in the final events, as their well-trained and conditioned athletes were in no less than six of the final nine events.

The two returning champions from last year, fared just evenly. Bob Pearson of Western defeated Bill Polito of Varsity, last year's champion, in a very close match in the 147-pound class. The only other returned champion, Don Williamson of Western, won easily over George Kosler of OAC in the 167-pound class.

George Gray of OAC, and the new champion in the 177-pound class, was elected by a poll of the five coaches as the best wrestler of the meet.

123-lb. class—Alex Ansell, OAC, beat Joe Fane, Toronto (fall 6:29).

130-lb. class—Bob Crown, Queen's, beat John Stephenson, Toronto (fall 4:05).

137-lb. class—Ken Brown, Toronto, beat Gus Hostawser, OAC (fall 6:33).

167-lb. class—Don Williamson, Western, beat George Kloser, OAC (fall 4:22).

177-lb. class—George Gray, OAC, beat Norm Clements, Western (fall 6:53).

191-lb. class—Herb Brown, Toronto, beat Barry Thompson, Western (fall 5:22).

Heavyweight—Bill Mitchell, Western, beat Doug Rollins, OAC (6-1).

Well folks, it's all over.

Canada's 'amateur' Olympic hockey team has successfully lost the hockey title for the second successive time in four years!

Russia entered a professional team and lost.

There does not appear much more that can be said.

Canada entered a professional team and lost.

United States entered an amateur team and won.

As for the rest of the Olympics, if you could sort out the action from between the multitudinous beer plugs that moved you up to quality, and the ads for the little bugs that were the official Olympic cars, you could hear the announcer, whose vocabulary was unfortunately limited to laudatory and typically American adjectives describe the action.

Canadians distinguished themselves in two counts at the Olympics this year.

First, with the exception of the hockey team, they were all good sportsmen and were good examples of Canadians.

Secondly with an exception this time of the four medal winners they displayed an obvious inferiority to the calibre of athletes who were on hand from the other countries.

Thank goodness the Olympics only come every four years!

Toronto Females Beat Mac 39-22

By LIBBY DAWSON

In a return match with McMaster girls at the W.A.B. last Wednesday, Toronto again came out on top of both the Senior and Intermediate scorers.

Toronto seniors defeated the McMaster girls 39-22 in a rough and tumble game which was sprinkled liberally with fouls. Mac lost two players because of fouls, while Toronto lost one. Both teams lost many points on free shots, the shooting average being quite poor. Close checking by both teams caused the play to bog down at times. Marg Ann White and Joy Mahood managed to penetrate the McMaster defence for 13 and 12 points respectively. Judy Smith and Judy Skene were next with 5 points each.

Outstanding for McMaster was Pat Jonas who got 12 points. Pat played the entire game, switching to guard position for part of the last quarter. The Toronto guard line was steady throughout the game and on the whole played very well. They managed to keep McMaster well out forcing them to rely heavily on long shots and free throws.

The Intermediate game was a great improvement over that played at Hamilton. The passing was much improved and the forwards seemed better organized. Toronto guards again played a steady game but were not as outstanding as in the last match because the pressure was off them somewhat.

McMaster guards really saved the day for their team as their forwards missed shot after shot. Carol Talbot was especially good defensively, intercepting many passes. High scorer for Toronto was Elaine Atkinson followed by Ann McLean, JoAnn Wilton, and Shirley Quan.

Western Swimmers Win College Title

London, Ont., Feb. 28 — University of Western Ontario won the Senior Intercollegiate Swimming Title for the first time here Saturday despite a record breaking performance by McGill's Cameron Grout.

The 20-year-old Grout had a hand in 11 records set during an afternoon of brilliant performances by some of Canada's top swimming stars.

Western, winning four first places and scoring heavily in other events, won the team title with a comfortable 10 point margin over their closest rival, Toronto, the defending champions. Team totals were Western 67, Toronto 57, and McGill 44.

Grout won both the 100 yard freestyle and the 200 yard individual medley setting four records, Canadian Senior, Canadian College, Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association and pool, in each one. He also anchored the winning 400 yard freestyle relay team which also set a new Canadian Senior, Canadian College and O-QAA record for the event.

Grout, who represented Canada in the last British Empire Games, and the Pan-American Games last summer, did the 100 in 51 seconds flat, this was a tenth of a second faster than the record set a month ago by Grout's team-mate, Dick Pound. Grout's other individual mark was 2:10.3 in the individual medley. This was better than two seconds under the old record he set earlier this year.

Timed unofficially by one of the judges at the meet at 50.8, Grout's anchor leg in the relay gave McGill a big edge over Toronto in the final event of the day. The McGill foursome finished nearly a full second faster than the old record of 3:34.4.

Western clinched the meet when the Mustangs took both first and second places in the 440-yard freestyle and the 200-yard breaststroke. Fowler, the Western captain, won the 200-yard butterfly, while Pound, set a new O-QAA record for the 220-yard freestyle.

Today May See Divorce Between UC and Phys Ed

Students of University College and the Faculty of Physical Health and Education will decide today whether to split the student governments of the two departments. The move would mainly affect their interfaculty athletic program.

An open meeting of the UC Literary and Athletic Society will decide on the split. Phys Ed students, like UC students, may vote in UC elections and attend and vote at UC open meetings such as today's.

UC Lit literary director Shelley Godfrey last night said it is hoped the move will bring more UC students to play on UC athletic teams. The Lit, he said, is now paying for the athletic program of both departments.

Phys Ed student president Bert Naylor last night said Phys Ed students will oppose the split because Phys Ed can not afford to support its own athletic program.

Phys Ed students now vote for the UC Lit executive as well as UC's Students' Administrative Council and External Affairs Commission representatives. In addition, they elect a student government and SAC and EAC representatives of their own.

UC Lit president Fred Zemans last night said the Phys Ed students maintain an extra-curricular program of their own except in athletics and the proposed split would affect only that field.

Phys Ed students pay a fee of $3 each to their own student government and $7 each to the UC Lit.

The extra-curricular activities of the two departments have been linked since Phys Ed's founding about 20 years ago, Zemans said. Phys Ed now has an enrolment of about 150 compared to about

Photographer Weds Royalty

By David Lewis Stein

Mr. Jacques Strongarm-Roberge the famous labor society - photographer and Varsity Staffer, announced last night his engagement to Princess Hyacinth, thirty-seventh in line to the throne of Oomoon.

Mr. Strongarm Roberge is the son of the late general Armand Strongarm-Roberge who was awarded the Victoria Cross posthumously when he strangled to death on a piece of cheesecake while addressing his four hundredth IOOE luncheon.

Following his graduation from Lower Canada College, Mr. Strongarm-Roberge served three years with the Baffinland Militia where he was in charge of the Distant Early Warning System against walrus attack.

It was during his tour in the militia the Mr. Strongarm-Roberge submitted his famous design for the Canadian flag which shows on a white background a red white and blue maple tree with one green leaf falling from it.

"It represents our British heritage," he said. "And at the same time our developing maturity and independence. Like, you get it man!"

Following his tour of duty in the north, Mr. Strongarm-Roberge attended correspondence school in Toronto and graduated Magna-Cum-Laude with a key to the men's washroom.

Mr. Strongarm-Roberge emigrated to Toronto where he learned to speak CEC and developed a reputation for his glamorous portraits at the Toronto stockyards.

It was during this period that he was seen often among the fashionable set in High Park escorting Miss Ries Karvanaque.

Many of his intimate friends at the stockyard, thought that "Bicep" (his nickname) had joined the disaffiliates and they all expressed surprise when his engagement was announced in Royal Handwriting on the palace wall.

Mr. Strongarm-Roberge met his Royal bride-to-be when he was called in to make a series of glamour portraits for the Royal Tour of the stockyards.

Since then he and Princess Hyacinth have attended several corner-stone layings together but managed to keep their secret from the press.

Mr. Strongarm-Roberge said that he believes respect for royalty is the best antidote for Miss Karvanaque's philosophy.

"Royalty symbolizes the solidity of the family structure and when solidity becomes unsolid chaos en-

Water Show To Feature Swim Stars

The greatest Water Carnival in North America. This is what University of Toronto athletic fans will be able to see this Friday and Saturday nights in the Hart House Pool.

Top swimmers and diving stars from the USA and Canada will be on hand to entertain the expected sellout crowds. Last year's Carnival saw 28 Canadian Open and Native records set, including one World record that is still standing.

In addition to the swimmers there will be a demonstration of synchronized swimming, featuring shapely ladies swimming to a musical accompaniment.

The proceeds of the evenings will be used 1. For a donation to the Canadian Olympic fund, 2. To send U of T Olympic hopefuls to the Olympic trials in Winnipeg this summer.

American stars will include divers Don Harper and Ron O'Brien and teen-age flash Johnny Collins. Harper and O'Brien will give an exhibition of regular and clown diving (both are US National champions) while Collins will attempt to break more age records. He was a great favorite with the crowd last year.

Canadians on view will include Sara Barber, Canada's best known female swimmer and second in the Pan-Am backstroke event last summer, and most of the probable men's Olympic team.

These include Cameron Grout and Dick Pound of McGill, Denes Svetko and John Shortreed of Western as well as several U of T swimmers.

At Hart House

SMC Types OK

Undergraduate secretary of Hart House Claude Brodeur last night validated the use of campaign blotter 'slates' in individual colleges for today's Hart House elections.

A blotter listing the names of St. Michael's College students running for House committee positions was distributed this week within the college. The question arose as to whether this constitutes a slate, which might be illegal campaigning.

The Engineers have been using such publicity for several years. Brodeur said: "As long as the blotter is distributed only in SMC it is individual campaigning. If it is distributed in Hart House, then it could constitute a slate and a decision on whether or not it is constitutional would be given by the returning officer."

This might lead to the candidates on the slate being considered ineligible for election.

Voting is today in Hart House for all male undergraduate and graduate students. An Admit-to-Lectures card is the only prerequisite to casting a ballot.

Bomb Unappreciated

The misuses of nuclear power are more publicized than its uses, a University of Toronto professor said Tuesday night in a panel discussion at the Jewish Home for the Aged.

Dr. Gordon M. Clark, a biologist, blamed the press for creating misconceptions which incite over-concern among the public.

He was part of a panel composed of Rev. James Cunningham, chaplain of Hart House; Prof. David Gauthier, department of philosophy, and chairman of the Nuclear Disarmament committee; Dr. Kenneth McNeill, department of physics; and Dr. Donald G. Baker, director of radiation research, Best Institute.

"We're getting very adverse publicity," Dr. Clark said. "Without nuclear bombs and the information derived from studying their effects on animals and plant life, we might not have entered into this new area of research with the knowledge we have."

Prof. Gauthier claimed political effects of nuclear bomb testing are more harmful than the biological ones.

"If you must suppose a nuclear war is going to be fought," he said, "then you must continue the tests. But, to carry on testing is to carry on an arms race, which in itself can lead to war."

In calling for a nuclear authority, he said, "We are aware of the dangers. What we have to do is translate this awareness into action to minimize the dangers."

CCF Meets

Gerry Caplan, Prime Minister of this year's Model Parliament and Parliamentary leader of the University of Toronto CCF party, will dominate proceedings at today's weekly meeting of the Campus CCF Club at 1 o'clock in Room 111 UC.

Caplan will address the assembly with a paper on the subject of American foreign policy since World War II, and preside over a discussion on the self-same subject.

The development of Nuclear weapons, and the United States' inability to disarm because of its stand in the cold war, will be the major theme under discussion.

Loyalty Oath

Philadelphia, Pa. (University Press Service).—American students are bitterly fighting the section of the National Defense Education Act which calls for a loyalty oath and disclaimer affidavit as a prerequisite for a loan.

Several universities have withdrawn from the national program which is reeling in the face of widespread criticism.

The majority of protests have been aimed at the affidavit which reads: "I do not believe in, am not a member of, and do not support any organization that believes in or teaches the overthrow of the government by force."

The University of Minnesota student organization passed a resolution calling for the repeal of the oath and affidavit.

Faculties at Dartmouth and Columbia declared their intention of withdrawal from the program unless the affidavit is repealed by Congress.

Education Reforms In Quebec

by Pierre Martin

Quebec Regional President CUP and former editor of Le Quartier Latin

Two events in the last two weeks have brought education in Québec sharply into focus once again, and it now looks as though the province is willing to pay heed to the universities, and students which former Premier Maurice Duplessis once described as, "a necessary evil".

One is the report from Ottawa that the federal government may soon introduce a bill to reduce federal corporation taxes so that the planned Québec increase of one per cent in these taxes will not affect the actual amount paid by these corporations.

The other is the announcement of a meeting this Friday of students and Premier Antonio Barrette to discuss a brief by the Québec universities.

This meeting—a culmination of struggle and frustration—is perhaps one of the most important breakthroughs for Québec students in recent years. On the surface it may appear to be a simple meeting, but to students long accustomed to the deaf ear of M. Duplessis, it could prove to be a vital one.

Hope for a change began to grow during the short time that Premier Paul Sauvé was in office. Now it seems likely that the new premier will not alter the policy of his predecessor. But it has been a long uphill fight.

During the time of the Duplessis government Québec universities were perpetually in financial trouble, and their predicament seemed to be worse than alarming. This situation was especially drastic with the French-language universities of Laval and Montréal, which do not receive private grants from industry or philanthropists, and have been running into the red for years.

The new University of Montréal buildings, built with the aid of a fund-raising campaign throughout French-speaking Canada, still laid unfinished, it was not fully equipped, and it was overcrowded. Research was stalled by lack of funds, and world renowned scientists such as Dr. Hans Selye worked under difficult conditions; no university press could be established for the diffusion of their studies and discoveries. Professors received and still receive some of the lowest paychecks in Canadian universities. They were jammed into tiny offices, overwhelmed by academic work, and had no time for personal studies. Fees were kept to the middle level, but still too high for sons and daughters of workers. Education was a privilege of the middle and higher classes.

"For every student that registers," U of M Rector Irene Lussier, once said at a round table discussion organized by students after the 1957 raise in fees, "the administration has to spend twice as much as what he pays."

Premier Duplessis' policy towards universities was to keep them well disciplined and respectfully humble towards the decisions of the political strong man. Annual "discretionary" grants forced the university administrators to make a yearly pilgrimage to the provincial capital to beg for their financial needs.

I cannot understand why men such as university presidents or rectors can be kept so long in such an humiliating and revolting situation, and still keep silent or show resignation. I discussed this matter with Rector Lussier, and his final explanation was, "If you had known the man."

The Union Nationale policy was to keep in power. Thus any progressive form of legislation was far away from its aims. The party and its leader did not believe that the universities are the most important source of vitality for a nation. And since some university circles, such as the faculty of social science at Laval had clearly expressed dedication for progress, and reform, the Union Nationale was likely to judge universities, and intellectuals as "a necessary evil".

In September of 1957 the fees were raised at U of M. Hit hard, the Montréal students struck out first against the fee raise, then started questioning themselves about how to fight it. It did not take them long to realize that the problem was more complex, and lay deeper than they had believed. A minority group—most of them in financial difficulties, and already conscious of many aspects of the education problem—decided that the action had to be taken. A brief on education was drafted, negotiations were held with government for presentation and discussion of the brief by the students with the premier. A council of university student presidents was formed, and the content of the brief agreed upon by all six of the student union councils representing 21,000 students in the province.

The final recommendations of the brief were not new. The reforms asked for, were the same as those recommended by many groups such as workers' unions and boards of trade. But all previous briefs presented to the government had failed to catch the public eye, and had gone into the waste paper basket without any attention. Therefore, the students decided that education was a public issue. The people of Québec were to be made aware of the problem. Publicity was to be given to the discussion with the premier. But M. Duplessis failed to answer the first two letters asking for a meeting with the student's delegation. Then he bluntly refused. The fat was in the fire.

Student leaders—especially at Montréal and Laval—decided that some action was to be taken. Even after a university press campaign, the majority of students still were not completely aware of the education problem. We felt the only way to enlighten them was to throw them into action, and tell them at this moment of crisis, what they had to fight for. Some major action had to be taken. March 6, 1958 almost all Québec university students went on strike.

the crowning touch

Don't let our gag fool you; we love royalty as much as the next man.

And after some years of observing a student democracy in action we are reluctantly becoming convinced that the best way to govern a community is by constitutional monarchy.

The constitutional aspect would demand a mutual sense of responsibility between people and monarch. The monarch would put absolute power into the hands of one person and do away with the incessant meanderings and interest conflicts of a beaucrocratic democracy.

The constitution by itself however would not be a sufficient guarantee that the system would function without abuse. A further guarantee is needed, and could obviously be provided by the principle of the divine right of kings. This would provide a religious basis both for the responsibility of the king and the co-operation of his subjects.

With such a system we could sit back and get down to the business of graciously reliving the last 300 years. Not a savory prospect, perhaps, but reliving is better than dying, and isn't the prospect of a Louis XIV enlightened by modern social welfare theory more pleasant than either Diefenbaker or Khrushchev?

The only troubles with our divine monarch are (a) that all this vulgar publicity she and her family are getting make it obvious that she is not divine and (b) the way in which her country is governed makes it obvious that she is no monarch.

Next Monday and Tuesday nights a group of poets and writers from the university will start out on a non-linear art form, a Vocal Magazine at the First Floor Club on Asquith Ave. Toronto has heard few coffee house poetry readings, and at that, always as an imported curio. The visits of Langston Hughes (jazz poet from California) and Leonard Cohen (poet from Birdland, Montreal) drew reminiscing travellers who had been to Venice Calif., and Greenwich Village.

Although we have been exposed to plenty of satire on what was dismissed as "beat poetry" our real experience of this new art has been limited to what the sick comedians quote: "We are da yout, ya crumby bastards, we are da yout". Next week's program at 33 Asquith Ave. (1 block north of Yonge and Bloor) has been alternately described as a Treasury of Ribaldry, a venereal farce, or a dramatic monologue about sex.

The Co-editors of the Vocal Magazine, Michael John Nimchuck and John Robert Colombo, have chosen, mainly from their own works, plays, stories, monologues, and poems which will be read with jazz in between. The editors' attitudes to the enterprise, Colombo's "Non-linear form of artistic presentation", and Nimchuck's "Designed for lazy people who can't read"

EMPTY BUT LOUD

From many points of view, this has been a peculiar year for college musicals. In style and content, they have ranged from the very collegiate revue format of Skule Nite all the way to the work of art that University College's Katy Cruel very nearly was. In theatrical merit, there was one that was incredibly good — Katy Cruel again — and one that was almost as bad — Mickities.

That the greater number of shows had little in common one with the other is not much of a surprise. More surprising, though, has been the strange propensity of the parents of some of the less well-matured shows for generating large measures of controversial ballyhoo. In fact, bunk.

In St. Michael's, for example, the SAC President resigned on the grounds that he could not sanction some of the policies that the producers of Mickities had followed. What was seen on the Hart House stage that week didn't seem worth it. This week and last, some of the internal problems that have bothered AVR found their way onto the front page of The Varsity, and everybody got upset all over again. AVR was certainly no flop, but in terms of the money (and conversation) that went into it, it hardly satisfied.

True, it might be pointed out that a good piece of theatre cannot be expected to emerge from a mess of administrative trouble; still, a mess of trouble does not, surely, preclude the presence in the cast and directorate of a modicum of talent. Compared to the organizational mammoth which sat high above AVR, the group that launched Katy Cruel was but an ad hoc committee.

The empty barrel, according to your grandmother and mine, makes the most noise. Here it would not be quite fair to say that it is emptiness of student talent. Rather, the emptiness is of higher things — to wit, student "governing" and "organizing" bodies — and it is an emptiness of the head.

IMAGERY OF LIFE

From time to time, people arrive in The Varsity office, search out the Art, Music and Drama Editor, and hurl at him their life rolled up into a ball in the form of a poem. Many of these works, out of deference to the readers, are better left unpublished, either because they are not poetry at all, or because it seems more appropriate that they should be mailed directly to the person to whom they are directed.

Some, however, are poetry, of a kind. This one has been on my desk for a week:

This Earth Grows Ugly

The dew-dappled hills lie still Flecked with sleeping cattle
As lovers draw close for warmth,
While babies suck their mothers' milky breasts
And this earth grows ugly.

Away from the criss-crossed meadows
Dirty old men dream of former loves
As in their beds they've wrecked their ships
While half-drowned kittens mew
And this earth grows ugly.

Down from the milk-spattered sky
Sailors stumble home to bed
Swaying as the sea and groping for mermaids,
While children howl on empty stomachs,
And this earth grows ugly.

There's a punch line. The author is a sixteen-year-old girl.

From Five Sonnets On Lost Eden

Now Grace, that harmony which once was good
To me in every key, sounds otherwise:
I'm out of tune and cannot blend the cries
Of winds and trees and stars as I once could;
Then I heard singing in the moonlit wood
And choirs behind the studded screen of skies.
A trumpet spoke at every planet's rise
And constellations hailed me where I stood.
But now—oh, that the memory could fail
As quickly as the senses build their bars! —
The change in me has turned the changeless stale
And made a parody that shrieks and jars:
A hollow heaven, woods that sob and wail
And nothing so discordant as the stars.

REGRESSIVE TENDENCIES

By John Robert Colombo

All day long the slaveboy would busy himself extracting slivers from his smooth heel.
Then one day Socrates extracted from his untutored mind
the Theorem of Pythagoras.
Now he calls that mathematician his brother and Archimedes his father.
He is even buddy-buddy with Aristophanes.
But he went too far, that boy:
he has refused to listen to his master.
Now he is out on his own. Ever since Socrates found such wonderful things, like the Theorem of Pythagoras, all wrapped up and barely contained in his tiny skull, he has let his slivers fester with the result that now he can barely walk for the pain.

and academic tenderness

Dear Sir:

If your readers have any interest in my reaction to the poetry of Joe Wallace, as reported by Mr. Colombo and commented on by Mr. Wallace himself, it may be as well to have a somewhat more accurate version of what I did say.

I said that Mr. Wallace's book "looks at first like naive verse, but a second glance indicates that a skilful and astute versifier is only pretending to write naive verse. There is a poem on Dr. Bethune, epigrams, ballads, and a rather striking poem on Burns, all of it fluent, some sharp and penetrating."

As you will see, there is nothing here about "harmless doggerel."
I should explain that "naive verse" is a category I have found essential in Canadian poetry. It means poetry produced by writers who have no conventional literary training. Most of it, in Canada, is junk. Mr. Wallace's poetry is not junk, but it illustrates the principle that on its cultural side at least, Communism is not a genuinely popular movement in the democracies, and that the only people who write Communist-line poetry are converted bourgeois intellectuals.

Yours sincerely,

SACremnant - a fable, not for the kiddies

Once upon a time, many years ago, shortly after the creation of the earth (relative of course), the smaller animals of the earth realized they had reached a certain level of existence. They called it the ability to reason.

So the animals, two by two, immediately formed an "SAC" or Smaller Animals' Council.

The Caput, or Larger Animals' Council as it was formerly known, decided to allow the existence of the new group, and gave the SAC various tasks to keep it out of trouble.

The SAC, meanwhile, drew up a complicated constitution, and promptly set about to find ways to circumvent it.

With a system of free election, inevitably there was some friction. Every year a couple of members insisted on things like fair play, clean living and honest dealings. Naturally something had to be done about such animals.

Usually the Executive Committee of the SAC subtly managed to keep the officiously fair member under control. One year, the last year the SAC was in existence, they weren't subtle enough.

Ferret was one of those fair animals. Whenever he saw the huge impressive den of the Executive Committee being completely renovated, he asked questions like "Who authorized the payment for the painting and furnishing?"

Lemming, an animal of undetermined origin, said, approximately, "None of your business."

This troubled Ferret, and he asked a few more questions. The Executive Committee was quickly called into session, and plans were laid to get rid of the dissenter.

Ferret had made tentative arrangements with outside bodies in connection with his position on the SAC. Suddenly, amid the magic of politics, these became permanent, irrevocable and unconstitutional.

Phrases such as "irresponsibility and conduct unbecoming" were speedily formulated to deal with the problem. A "social" meeting was held at Animal Farm at which Ferret was suspended, with no fuss.

The cleanup session was closed to the public. Only Ferret's fellow animals were allowed. It was a stirring tribunal. They sat around in the huge room and parroted off their phrases. All animals were represented except the lambs and some of the tinier feathered friends.

A week later, Ferret's own little sub-classification held a separate investigation. But their attitude was somehow different. Instead of concentrating on how to get rid of him, they followed the dictates of the Larger Animals' Council, and conducted their investigation in a completely judicial atmosphere.

Lion, a former member of the SAC who had since matured was asked to give his views to the Ferret group.

"There is nothing under the old constitution, under which the SAC was working at the time, on how to get rid of an SAC member," Lion said. "This has always been a bone of contention. The opinion last year was that you couldn't get rid of one. To the best of my knowledge it has never occurred."

An SAC member, called to testify, said "It seemed to Cobra (SAC President) that a critical situation existed.
There was no alternative in the absence of Ferret but to suspend him."

"Ferret was within his rights," Lion said. "Lemming's statement to the contrary is false, she is just unfamiliar with proper procedure."

Phrases culled from the SAC's file of handy suspending excuses such as "incompatibility and indiscretion" were painstakingly examined, and found wanting.

"They have nothing to do with holding SAC office," Lion said.

Eventually the impartial members of the committee got around to the renovations in the SAC cave, and heard Ferret accuse Lemming of refusing to give him information.
Lion helped out.

"It is not fair to refuse information to an individual council member," he said.

Beagle of the committee, pointed out that the furniture had been bought before the opening of the 1959-60 year, and asked Lion whether he thought the SAC had acted unconstitutionally in the purchases. This was the first time the question had been asked anywhere, except deep in the souls of the SAC Executive, deep in their freshly-painted cave.

"Frankly, yes," Lion said. "If you saw the building being renovated, wouldn't you ask what was happening if you knew the council had to pay for it?"

The SAC representative said, haltingly, "It was done this way because it was a tremendous buy," and that it

Letters cont'd and slavery

Dear Sir,

Your editorial of February 22 rightly condemns the apathy evident in the coming Hart House elections, but suggests neither cause nor solution. In my opinion, this apathy is due to the fact that members of Hart House can choose only between candidates; the added interest of conflicting issues is almost entirely absent.

I wish here to propose an issue for next year's campaign. Discrimination on the campus has this year already made the headlines. A far more serious instance of discrimination, however, seems to have been overlooked. This discrimination, moreover, has a legal basis, and applies to fully one-third of the campus population. I refer, of course, to the atrocious exclusion of women from Hart House.

I challenge members of Hart House to run on the platform of pressing for the admission of women to the common rooms, eating rooms, etc., and clubs of Hart House, demonstrating thereby their opposition to what seems to me a form of discrimination no less objectionable than discrimination on the basis of colour. (Since the women now have adequate athletic facilities, the sharing of these facilities is not now a pressing issue.)

There are several arguments for the exclusion of women from Hart House. I have, I believe, been confronted with the majority of these arguments, and have found them either false or inadequate (or both). I will gladly discuss this matter further with anyone who wishes to spare the time.

Man cannot be free while woman is a slave.

ODDs and ENDS

had been done on the condition that the council would approve it.

"The council did not have the authority to buy it," Lion said. "And you can't get rid of the paint and alterations."

Owl, Ferret's counsel, finally laid out what everybody had known all along. "All the facts overlooked, we will come to a point where a charge of incompatibility will be levelled. Now, is a charge of this sort sufficient to warrant the action that was taken against him? Or even if it is, is a clash of personalities sufficient to warrant the continuing attack on his character even after the affair is over?"

Other items were probed. Ferret had entered into tentative negotiations with the men's cave for a banquet. A letter from the keeper of the cave was introduced, saying he had done nothing out of the ordinary. The letter never came up at the original SAC suspension meeting. As a matter of fact, nobody ever asked the poor man.

The SAC representative succinctly summed it up. "The question is not whether the booking was definite or not, but whether he should have seen someone or at least phoned someone on the executive before taking action." He later said "Granted the charges in themselves are relatively vague . . ."

And things like "whether or not the charge was true—did not concern our investigating committee."

Owl congratulated the committee warmly. "Your approach on this committee has been much fairer than that of the SAC. The SAC took a subjective approach, one not based on facts. This committee has had the wisdom to choose an objective approach."

Eventually the committee found Ferret innocent, and that his motives were basically good.

Unfortunately the Smaller Animals' Council sat back on their haunches, trotters etc. and admired their freshly scrubbed faces.

Ferret was still buried enough to be out of their way.

developments. But they keep looking for the good man, the "natural hero" who will appear on the stage like "Harry Truehart" and expose all this villainy.

And when they don't find the "good man" when even the hero, Zilch facing his fellow townsmen, can only muster an admission of guilt as a "good" trait, they are extremely uncomfortable.

We have not yet reached the bitter sophistication of the European audiences who can accept evil without rising to attack it. We are still optimistic and we like our heroes to fight back.

But the more of this type of theatre that is presented to us the more we have cause to doubt our own concepts of "the hero."

MEN OF THE UNIVERSITY ARE URGED TO VOTE
● SUPPORT YOUR CANDIDATES ●

The president and chief executive officer of the National Education and Television and Radio Centre will discuss educational TV at a meeting in the School of Nursing tonight.

John F. White is president of the Ford Foundation established centre at New York and Ann Arbor. This is the most active production and distribution centre for educational television in the United States.

The meeting is sponsored by the Metropolitan Educational Television Association of Toronto and is at 8:15, Cody Hall, School of Nursing.

uc elects

In elections last week Mike Copeland and Brenda Harris (both III UC) were chosen University College representatives to the Students' Administrative Council.

N. David Gershenovitz and Jan Scott (both II UC) were named UC representatives on the External Affairs Commission by acclamation.

Library

A prominent Canadian linguistic researcher will speak at the Hart House library evening tonight on the nature and function of contemporary literary criticism.

Dr. Donald F. Theall has chosen as his topic "Literary Criticism in a Technological Age." He has worked with Maynard Mack at Yale University on eighteenth century criticism and with Marshall McLuhan at the University of Toronto on modern communication theory.

Dr. Theall's doctorate thesis was on the theory of communication in Joyce, Eliot, Pound and Yeats. He is now teaching undergraduate and graduate courses in criticism.

He has been prominent in the work of the Toronto and the Canadian Linguistic Societies. By a fresh linguistic analysis, he developed a new method of teaching adults English, which in controlled experiments with the Hungarian political refugees of 1957 was far more successful than the standard language instruction techniques.

Dr. Theall has pointed out that the "difficulty" of contemporary writers and artists is a function of the increasing complexity of our scientific and technological world.

Tonight he will deal with the necessary development of more sophisticated techniques of literary analysis and the general value of training in this field.

The meeting is at 7:30 p.m. in the library, Hart House. Women are not welcome.

frey said there is "no really good reason for maintaining the present connection" except that Phys Ed "can't stand on their own feet financially."

Referring to the high-quality athletes UC teams get from Phys Ed, he said, "The only reason for keeping PHE is to win games for us," and, "the purpose of athletics in UC is not to win."

Athletics in UC should be part of an "academic whole", Godfrey said. He said the split might alleviate a chronic lack of interest in inter-faculty athletics on the part of UC students.

Phys Ed girls already operate their own athletic program and would not be affected by the split.

Phys Ed president Naylor expressed doubt about whether the split would actually bring more UC men into UC athletics.

A separate athletic program for Phys Ed would cost $1,500-$1,800, he said.

The move would be a constitutional amendment which must be approved at two UC open meetings.

Today's meeting is at 4 p.m. in the Junior Common Room.

Contrary to the usual practice, a staff meeting will not be held today in The Varsity office at 1:15 p.m. or any other time today.

HART HOUSE ELECTIONS

NOTICE

Regarding Elections Procedure

Members are elected to the five standing committees and the Squash Committee by a system which combines the straight popular vote system with a proportional vote system to recognize as many faculties as possible.

Members are elected in the following way:

1. THE 30% RULE Any candidate who receives less than 30% of the number of votes polled by the leading candidate is automatically eliminated from the running.
2. FACULTY REPRESENTATION The leading man from each faculty is then selected.
3. POPULAR VOTE From this point on, if the eight members (four for Squash) are not yet elected, candidates are selected simply by the popular vote received. At this time, the Rule of Three comes into effect. No college or faculty may be represented by more than three men on any one committee. This rule includes the three carry-overs already elected by the Committee itself.
4. If, on completion of this procedure, a full committee is not elected, it becomes the Warden's prerogative to co-opt any member he deems suitable.

Jr SPS In Final Protest By SMC Of Sr SPS Win

Sr Skule Take Overtime Game From St. Mike's

Sr. SPS defeated St. Michael's 5-3 in the second game of their total goal semi-final series in Intramural Hockey at the Arena yesterday afternoon. They thus took the round by nine goals to seven and now meet their younger brothers in an All-Engineering final for the Jennings Cup.

At least, that's how it would run if St. Mike's hadn't discovered a violation of the emergency transfer rule on the part of the Skule team.

Apparently under the assumption that he could bring the strength of his team to thirteen players, the Skule manager brought up Doug Armitage from SPS III as the team roster had dropped to twelve players.

The rules say that you can bring your team to twelve players. Armitage was the thirteenth player. He scored three goals in the game and together with Jack Way, also of Skule, was the outstanding player on the ice. SMC were understandably peeved, and have suggested that a replay would be in order.

Although it has not yet been decided, a replay of the game this Friday is in the works and will take place unless Mr. J. P. MacCutcheon, director of Intramural Athletics, can find a precedent for the thirteenth player.

As to the game itself, SMC fought an uphill battle before succumbing in overtime to a better Skule squad. The first game of the series was tied at 4-4, but by the midway mark of this one, SPS had a 4-4 lead on two goals by Armitage.

Pullan cut the margin to 6-5 when he scored with 20 seconds left in the second period and then SPS proceeded to do their best to give the game away with some horrible hockey for the first six minutes of the last period.

A beautiful play by Way which set up Cumming for a goal which picked Skule up by their boot straps at the 6:25 mark. Jim Morse got that back at 9:54 and then with their goalie out of the net in the last minute of the game St. Mike's forced a series of face-offs in the Skule end.

The SMC captain, Quinn, finally converted one of these opportunities into a goal with only 18 seconds left to force the overtime period.

Armitage won the game for his team when he scored early in the first overtime period.

SECOND GAME

Sr. SPS—goal: Dawson; defence: Hamilton, Diodina, Taylor, Hogan; forwards: Cumming, Donnan, Way, Rush, Armitage, McHardy, Stee, Dawson.

St. Mike's—goal: Bower; defence: McGrath, Markle, Smith, McGilgott; forwards: Quinn, Hornberger, Morse, O'Donnell, Pullan, MacPheron, Auchincloss, Hall, Kennedy.

First Period
1. Sr. SPS, Armitage (Hamilton) ..... 11:55
Penalties—McGilgott 14:36.

Second Period
2. Sr. SPS, Armitage (Bibbin) ..... 4:32
3. St. Mike's, Pullan (Hornberger) ..... 14:29

7. Sr. SPS, Armitage (Cumming) ..... 2:30

Second Overtime
8. Sr. SPS, Way (unassisted) ..... 9:41

DAN NORMAN

Maguire Leads All Basketball Team Scoring

Jim Maguire was the leading scorer for the Basketball Blues over this last season it was announced last night. He totaled 136 points in ten games and edged out rookie Mike Muir for the top spot.

Third place was taken by Dan Norman who had exactly 100 points in the league games, including his terrific 27 point night in the game against Assumption won by Blues 78-76.

Blues finished the season with a 5-5 record, the same as last year's vastly better team managed to post. They can well be proud of their upset of Assumption.

Other high scorers were Boris Wolchuk (85 points) and Peter Potter (76). The latter was a disappointment as it had been hoped that he would be the team leader.

Coach John McManus is lucky in that the majority of his team will return next year, and he will be blessed with the addition of Jim Bordas, a 6'7" center.

Play Redmen In Last Game

Varsity Hockey Blues ring down the curtain on another season this Friday when they play McGill Redmen in the last scheduled game of this season at Varsity Arena.

Blues may be without ace defenceman Harry Neale who aggravated an old back injury during last Friday's game with Queen's. The game is liable to be close and hard fought. The last time Redmen were here, they put a severe crimp in Varsity's championship plans by dumping the Blues 4-2. Varsity got revenge in Montreal, but the score was only 3-2 and it was an uphill battle.

Providing they do not go on to Graduate Work next year, it will be the last game for such stalwarts as John MacDonald, Harry Neale, Howie Roth, Bob Giroux, and Pete Warren.

Game time is 8 p.m. This is the last chance for a skate, the last chance to boo the ref, the last chance to hear the Blue and White band, the last chance to start studying.

Jr SPS Win Weagal Nets 4 In Big Upset

Jr. SPS advanced to the finals of the Jennings Cup competition as they eliminated Trinity with a spirited display in two straight games in their semi-final competition. Skule won the first game last Friday, 5-2, and then Monday added insult to injury by whipping the Panthers 4-2. Total score on the round was 9-4.

Weagal was top scorer for the Engineers, getting three in the first game and then another in the second. Other goal scorers were Sullivan (2), Nightingale, McLean, and McCauley.

Farr, McMurtry, Tim Gibson, and Acheson scored for Trinity. Heaslip was outstanding for Skule in goal, displaying great enthusiasm if not an overabundance of skill while making saves.

On their showing in this round, and they held their own with the more experienced Trinity team in the bodychecking, Skule must be rated as even money for the finals.

Penalties were fairly well spread around, SPS got six minors, while Trinity were assessed a total of nine.

Weagal was the outstanding player for Skule on the two games, he featured the most accurate shot seen in Intramural play this year, although the Trinity goalie was a bit shaky on several of the shots that beat him.

Trinity played badly from start to finish, as the energetic Skule forwards checked their attack to a standstill for most of the two games.

FIRST GAME

Trinity—goal: Deratney; defence: Gibson A., Gibson T., Innes, McMurtry; forwards: DePencier, Roy, Ross, Acheson, Farr, Ingram, Snider, McNab.

Jr. SPS—goal: Heaslip; defence: Regembault, Pick, DeCarli, McCauley; forwards: Ferguson, Sullivan, Weagal, Bowne, Nightingale, Horton, Kutcharski, McLean, Ryan, Gaida, Nakal.

First Period
1. Trinity, Farr (Ross) ..... 1:15
2. Jr. SPS, Nightingale (unassisted) ..... 10:35
3. Trinity, McMurtry (Eby) 11:04
Penalties — McMurtry (T) 1:46; Eby (T) 13:47.

Second Period
4. Jr. SPS, Weagal (Bowne) 0:22
5. Jr. SPS, McLean (Weagal) 3:29
6. Jr. SPS, Weagal (Nightingale) ..... 4:25
Penalties — McMurtry (T) 1:20; Kutcharski (S) 6:25; McMurtry (T) 6:25; Regembault (S) 6:29; Innes (T) 9:40.

Third Period
7. Jr. SPS, Weagal (DeCarli) 9:17
Penalties—Ryan (S) 3:32; McNab 8:35.

SECOND GAME

First Period
1. Jr. SPS, Sullivan (Nightingale) ..... 2:27
2. Jr. SPS, Weagal (McCauley, Horton) ..... 7:58
Penalties — Acheson (T) 11:17; Regembault (S) 13:48.

Second Period
3. Trinity, Gibson T. (unassisted) ..... 3:23
4. Jr. SPS, Regembault (unassisted) ..... 9:35
Penalties—Gibson (T) 4:51; Gibson (T) 14:19.

Third Period
5. Jr. SPS, Sullivan (unassisted) ..... 5:32
6. Trinity, Acheson (Snider) 13:27
Penalties — DePencier (T) 8:53; Regembault 9:32.

comment by mike chykaliuk

October 2, 1959. Varsity Blues are drubbing McGill Redmen in the fourth quarter of a dull one sided night contest at Varsity Stadium. Blues ball, first and ten on their own fifty yard line. Quarterback Nick Sopinka pitches the ball to speedy halfback Joe Foreman who rounds left end, outruns the linebacker and turns downfield.

Only one man between him and the goal line, but this defender has the angle and is forcing Joe towards the sideline. There is a moments hesitation while the ballcarrier decides whether to cut in or race the defender.

Too late. The tackler closes in and drives Joe out of bounds with a vicious tackle. The ballcarrier crumbles, clutching at his foot in agony. He has just broken his ankle.

Notre Dame

Joe Foreman attended the University of Notre Dame at South Bend, Indiana for four years on a track scholarship. While there he had been one of the schools finest sprinters, winning three state and three conference championships.

Joe represented Canada at the 1956 Olympic Games at Melbourne, Australia, competing in the 100, 200, yard races and 400 meter relay.

Last fall, after graduating with a B.A. in journalism he enrolled at the U of T Law School, attended football camp and showed promises of being a great offensive threat for Dalt White's Blues.

In his first game, an exhibition against Western, Joe scored a touchdown on an identical play. Against McGill fate was looking the other way.

After the accident Foreman was taken to the Toronto General Hospital where, with a cast on his leg, he spent the next week.

With his broken ankle he was beyond the help of any of his teammates. No one could run interference for himnow. He was nearly forgotten and left alone to fight his own battle of recovery.

The Road Back

The cast remained with him for an additional seven weeks. After this he walked only with great pain and only with the aid of a cane.

He tried skating, weight training and several other forms of therapy but despite this he still could not run. The road to recovery was going to be a rough one.

Two weeks ago, over four months after his injury, perseverance paid off. Foreman was able to run again.

This run, if one could call it that, looked more like Eddie Arcaro riding a three legged camel than the graceful jaunt of an athlete who once could run 100 yards in 9.6 seconds.

Nevertheless, this was the big step back toward what he hopes will be total recovery.

Optimist till the end, Joe hopes to be able to compete in the Olympics this summer and have another crack at lugging the pigskin for the Blues next fall.

The price some players pay to be a football hero is unbelievably high. You pays your money and you takes your choice.

Joe Foreman chose hope and hard work and for him they are triumphing over pain and despair.

Hats off to a courageous competitor—a guy called Joe—.

Grid Notes

Co-captain Steve Chisholm, Blues most valuable player, last season, was selected for the Athlone Fellowship, awarded annually to Canadian Engineering graduates to continue training in the United Kingdom. Chisholm, an honour student in Engineering Physics, was the first draft choice of Ottawa Rough Riders of the Big Four.

Victoria Continue To Increase Lead In Indoor Track

Only a miracle will prevent Victoria from taking the team title after capturing two first and a second in yesterdays round of the University Indoor Track Championship.

Vic now lead their nearest competitor, UC-PHE, by 30 points and unless their runners lose all form, they are sure things.

Ben Hutzel won the Senior shotput with a throw of 46'5" over Bruce Jackson of SPS and Joe Foreman of Law.

Ron Young of Trinity won the Junior edition of this event with a record heave of 39'11". Vic captured the 4 x 3 lap relay (about one mile) in the good time of 4:02.6. UC was second and SPS third.

Point standing after eight weeks of competition: Victoria 93, UC 63, SMC 41 1/2, SPS 30 1/2, Trinity 30, Meds 24, Pharmacy 20, Law 2.

Junior Shot Put—1. Ron Young (trin), 2. Pete Johnson (vic), 3. Joe Goran (aps), 4. Jeff Jewell (aps). Distance: 45'.

Senior Shot Put—1. Ben Hutzel (vic), 2. Bruce Jackson (SPS), 3. Joe Foreman (law), 4. Bill Crothers (pharm). Distance: 45'.

4 x 3 lap relay—1. Victoria (Jim Snider, Pete Watson, Al Brereton, Gerry Stewart) 2. UC, 3. SPS, 4. Trinity. Time 4:22.6.

LOVE TIME is any time, or so it seems for these two people (U of T students?) caught off guard last night by Varsity photographer Roman Horban. The man chased Horban back to The Varsity office, as soon as he recovered from the shock of the flash bulb, but Horban bravely managed to lock himself in the darkroom. The rest of the staff held the irate lover at Bay until the photo was safely on the way to the engraver. Later it was discovered the car didn't even belong to the male member of the team, but to Jack Selig (III UC). Selig reported no damage to the car.

Da Lip Get Wot He's Got Coming

By GENE GLISKY

Controversial Harry Neale, that lean, mean bundle of defensive ferocity, the inimitable fatman, old elbows himself, teetotaler extraordinaire and occasional defenseman with the Varsity hockey Blues has finally gotten what he deserves and what long has been coming to him.

Tuesday night at a sombre meeting of his teammates, Harry Neale was chosen as this year's winner of the Dr. Bill Dafoe trophy as the most valuable member of the hockey team.

The trophy is awarded annually to the member of the senior hockey team who in the opinion of his team-mates is the most deserving. Neale is the third defenseman to win the award since its inception in the 1954-55 campaign, his name going up in scribe with such Varsity greats of Doug Jackson, Mike Elik, Ken Linseman, Mike Elik, Lorry (Box Car) Stacey and Mike Elik.

Pretty classy company for a kid who only 20 short years ago couldn't even skate.

The award couldn't have been presented to a more worthy competitor.

He is a player of the old school, the want to win college, the rip 'em into the ice, lick 'em in the alleys University. A fierce competitor, Neale's win-at-all-costs attitude has landed him in hot water with the hockey moguls, but lively Harry has bounced back just for the joy of playing the game.

Before coming to Varsity, Neale and Ron Casey (no mean competitor with Blues himself last season) teamed in the now famous "Gold Dust Twins" combination as a defensive pair that was instrumental in bringing Toronto Marlboros a Memorial Cup in 1957.

Assistant Captain with Blues this season, Harry tirelessly tried to put a little spark into a team that continually sagged in the middle, always putting on a tremendous performance for both fans and any member of the opposition who waddled his way to Harry's corner.

Congratulations to one of our favorites, it's been great to have him on our side.

New Group for Peace Beginning Its Activities

With a change of name and a statement of policy, the Student Peace Union wrapped up its first meeting Wednesday.

Officially re-christened Students for Peace, the organization decided its goal was "total disarmament, enforced by the United Nations."

President Norman Johnson (SGS) said the group expects to cooperate with the staff Committee for Nuclear Disarmament, and may seek affiliation with similar organizations at Canadian, American and British universities.

In a statement, the organization said it:

—Advocates complete disarmament by all nations, with appropriate inspection procedures to be enforced by the United Nations;

—Supports measures leading to total disarmament, including a permanent ban on the manufacture and testing of nuclear weapons and on the development of chemical, bacteriological, and radiological weapons;

—Opposes the use of nuclear, chemical, bacteriological, or radiological weapons by Canadian forces and the presence of such weapons in Canada;

—Protests the public deception involved in civil defense programs which make nuclear warfare more acceptable by persuading people that there can be an adequate defense against it;

—Seeks to remove the danger of war by attacking its economic and sociological

Poor Turnout In Hart House Vote

Hart House elections yesterday showed a 25 per cent lower vote than the average since 1954.

Out of a possible 8,500 voters, only 1208 voted. This is 384 votes less than last year.

On the Debate Committee of 11, only four faculties are represented.

Members elected to the House Committee are: G. M. Adler (II UC), R. M. Alway (II SMC), J. W. Earnshaw (III ApSc), G. E. Howey (II Meds), T. E. Martin (I Wyc), S. A. Otto (III Trin), D. P. Rutenberg (III ApSc), A. E. Skeoch (II Vic).

Members of the Music Committee are: M. L. Breen (I SMC), B. R. Corbett (II Vic), C. J. English (III Trin), J. H. Ferguson (III ApSc), J. D. Holbrook (II Meds), M. D. Lester (I SGS), P. W. Pateron (I Music), R. Reiter (III UC), and J. D. Young (I UC).

Elected to the Library Committee are: S. J. Bianco (II SMC), P. T. Gray (II Trin), L. M. Jerry (III Meds), J. K. McSweeney (I SMC), G. A. Scott (I UC), L. H. Shendelman (III ApSc), D. W. Sinclair (I Wyc), and B. C. Stock (II Pre-Meds).

Debates Committee: J. M. Abella (III ApSc), P. P. Dembski (III SMC), J. G. Godsoe (I UC), M. C. McInnes (I Trin), P. T. Saunders (III UC), R. Tan (II SMC), G. M. White (III ApSc), and G. C. Wright (II Trin).

On the Art Committee are: L. W. Belle (I SMC), D. F. Andrus (I UC), S. Gelman (II Law), C. L. Gill (III Trin), F. M. McAteer (II Meds), G. C. Ness (I Vic), L. F. Valentine (III Arch), and J. T. Wilbur (II ApSc).

Members elected to the Squash Raquets Committee are: B. N. Fine (I ApSc), H. Miller (III Trin), S. P. Ponesse (I SMC), and L. M. Smith (I Meds).

UC-PHE Marriage Athletically Saved

University College Literary and Athletic Society voted Wednesday to retain its athletic connection with the Faculty of Physical and Health Education, but resolved to end all other connection with the faculty.

At an open meeting of the Lit, the first of two required votes stood at a 28-28 deadlock on the athletic resolution until after further floor discussion, the vote went 31-24 against. If a second open meeting votes in favor of retaining the athletic connection, UC and PHE will field joint teams again next year.

The defeated resolution said no split would be made unless satisfactory financial arrangements could be made for the establishment of a separate PHE athletic program.

If there were a split, PHE would have to be subsidized in some way to maintain its own program, students said.

The Lit decided to sever "all other connections" with PHE after it was said such connections are unconstitutional. Phys Ed has been allowed to vote for the Lit executive and UC SAC reps in the past.

Lit executive members said they learned only two weeks ago that Phys Ed elects its own SAC rep and maintains its own students' council.

The vote to further the dissolving of this connection was almost unanimous. A second open meeting vote is also necessary on this resolution which involves a change in the UC constitution.

The vote was taken only after protests from the floor forced the splitting of the resolution into two parts to allow for separate votes on the athletic connection and on all other connections.

UN Expert Joins Registrar's Office

A United Nations expert has joined the University of Toronto staff.

Arthur Kilgour, second-ranking officer in the UN division of the External Affairs Department, will become assistant registrar at the U. of T.

Mr. Kilgour was a lecturer at U of T until 1947 when he joined the Canadian government. He served in Paris with the Canadian embassy, then with the mission to the Organization for European Economic Co-operation, then in Indo-China.

He served for a time at the National Defence College at Kingston, and in 1957 was posted to Cairo. He recently returned to Canada.

An official with the external Affairs Department said Mr. Kilgour's decision to take the U of T post was personal, that he wants no more foreign service. The official said the resignation implied no criticism of department policies.

Relief In PQ

MONTREAL, Feb. 29 (CUP)—For the first time in history a major North American University has lowered its fees.

As a result of greatly increased provincial grants, much lower tuition fees are in store for McGill students next fall.

"Everybody is delighted," said Principal F. Cyril James in confirming the news. He revealed that reductions would amount to some $600,00 in all.

Calculations of the McGill newspaper, the McGill Daily, estimated the fee reductions would be in the neighbourhood of fifteen per cent.

McGill University currently has the highest tuition fees in Canada.

Liberal Club Elects

The University of Toronto Liberal Club elected the following for the 1960-61 executive, last night at Carr Hall, St. Michael's College: President: Danny Romanko (II Vic); this year's 3rd Vice President: Gerry Godsoe (I Vic); 1st Vice President: Stig-Due Hansen (I UC); 3rd Vice President: Joanne Spratt (II Vic); Secretary; and John Simmons (I Vic). # Barrette Says No More

QUEBEC (CUP)—The Quebec government can "go no further" in aiding education this year than that already planned in a mass of current legislation, provincial premier Antoine Barrette told some 30 student delegates representing Quebec universities at a meeting last Friday.

The student delegation presented a four point brief to the Premier on behalf of the Quebec region of the National Federation of University Students.

Immediate results of the meeting were: (1) an announcement that McGill University would lower its tuition as a result of the new statutory grants.

(2) an announcement that arts students may soon be rewarded by the province, Legislation granting aid "complementary" to that available for other university students might be introduced at the Legislative Assembly's next session.

(3) Rejection by the Premier of the request for a Royal Commission on grounds that "specialists" had been studying the problems of Quebec education for the past three years.

Premier Barrette noted that statutory grants to the universities were part of a deal arranged with Ottawa to replace federal grants. These would be based on a $1.75 per capita arrangement, 25 cents more than federal grants.

Describing himself as a "friend of the students, maybe your best friend," he said reduced university fees were more important at Montreal than making provincial scholarships non-reimbursable in entirety. He noted also that a bill last year has reduced the reimbursable portion from 50 to 40 per cent.

"We don't claim to do everything this year," Barrette said, "but we are prepared to go to the limit."

Student leaders were generally satisfied with the meeting.

Education Reforms In Quebec

by Pierre Martin

Quebec Regional President CUP and former editor of Le Quartier Latin

Throughout January and February of 1958 Premier Maurice Duplessis refused to see the Québec university students' presidents with their prepared brief on the financing of education and of students. The brief asked for more scholarships to university students, more money for capital expenditure, statutory grants to Québec universities, and democratization of the university system.

Tired of Premier Duplessis' refusal to consider their proposals, the students went on strike March 6 for one day.

The walkout was quite effective; almost 95 per cent of the students at Laval, Bishop's, McGill, and the University of Montréal stayed away from lectures. At Sir George the administration reported 80 per cent absenteeism. But students at the University of Sherbrooke had to withdraw from the walkout agreement under faculty pressure, when the engineering faculty refused to postpone final exams, and some of the Law faculty threatened to quit if the strike was carried out.

The students succeeded in gaining public recognition for themselves as a definite class which has a role to play in society, and in putting forth the idea that education is a right, that universities should be the sources of culture and progress of a nation, that the government is responsible for it.

Later M. Duplessis was to strike out against this "class" when he stated in April of that year that his government would not practice favoritism in education matters in favor "of a class which, unjustly, would like to consider itself privileged".

The strike was a one day climax. Three Montréal students left for Québec where every morning they knocked on the premier's door to ask for an "entrevue" for the student delegation. A public opinion campaign was kept hot by assemblies in rural communities. The opposition parties in the provincial parliament demanded reform, and laid down their own education plans. Newspapers ran long articles on all educational problems. The stress was on education. The public began to think that education was for everyone with talent; that the universities should be developed and that financial aid was the responsibility of the government. But progress was slow.

In April McGill tuition fees went up 25 per cent making education at that university the most expensive in Canada. The student presidents met in September further plans, and another meeting was attempted in November. M. Duplessis assented to receive them in December, and although he refused to budge on the most vital issues he did agree to some minor improvements in an education aid plan.

When Paul Sauvé became premier the publicity for education had been going on for nearly two years. He showed himself to be a reformer; university problems were the first which he wanted to resolve. He had definite ideas about how this was to be done, and he proposed long awaited legislation. In doing this he did not appear as a prophet; he was playing the game of democracy, the people what they were asking for. In a politically-wise new look attitude he offered just about all the reforms that had been asked for by the moderates.

He chose the University of Montréal to deliver his first main speech after his nomination as Québec premier. From that day on he made headlines throughout the province, and kept them until his death. In this brilliant address, M. Sauvé exposed his views on university problems. The audience was promised the long asked for statutory grants. To the university administrations—a Duplessis taboo, and an "anti-Union Nationale" doctrine—went the surprise offer of legislation by which the government would guarantee all borrowings by universities for expansion programs. And of course, students heard with great joy, M. Sauvé declaring solemnly that he subscribed to the principle of accessibility of higher education. It is upon that central idea—that talent should not be wasted, and that no one with a sufficient academic record should be barred from university for financial reasons—that the student action for education reforms had been based. With extra money pouring in, the fees cannot now be raised; hopes are that they will be lowered.

Soon after the tremendous impact of this speech had made its effect, Premier Sauvé made pub-

"Put your prospects into safe keeping"

Picture yourself at the winning end of a sweepstake. You are handed $200,000.00 as first prize. What would you do first? I can tell you. You'd run for the nearest bank to put your treasure into safe keeping!

Isn't it odd that many of us handle a similar prize in a completely casual manner? Look at your prospects. During the course of a normal lifetime, you stand to earn several hundred thousand dollars. If you had that amount of cash, you'd protect it quickly enough. Then, it's only sensible to protect your earning power in the same way.

The fact is, you are more valuable than you think. If you were to lose your earning power, your every asset would be in peril: your family, your home, your car... everything! Yet you can protect your earning power just as surely as if you put it in a bank. NALAC disability insurance guards your prospects by guaranteeing income even when you cannot work. It is the first insurance you should have. Check with your NALAC representative immediately.

tourist business

It seems that President Eisenhower got a little tear gas in his eye when Montivideo Police had to use a little of the stinging stuff on some rioting students.

And on a stopover in Norway, Anastas Mikoyan was heckled by some Hungarian students at a "rally."

It is even reported that some of the Chief "Muzhik's" speeches in India have been coldly received.

We think that it's about time the world's leaders read some of the hand writing on the placard.

The farce of the "goodwill visit" has just about reached its final act.

It should be apparent now to the rulers of the earth that the ruled are pretty unhappy with them.

In fact if they get any unhappier they may just tear their glorious leaders into little tiny pieces.

So perhaps it is time that Mr. Khrushchov and Mr. Eisenhower and all of the proconsuls canned the comedy and returned to their proper business of staying in power for as long as they can.

The "Leader's" place is behind (well behind) the barricade.

Audience Didn't Get It

A friend of ours who is a first-desk violinist with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra was giving a recital in Hamilton last Saturday. Before playing the Romance by Ernst von Dohnanyi, he announced to the audience that he wished to dedicate the performance to the memory of the composer, who had died a fortnight earlier. He had no sooner begun this beautiful work when he heard a subdued rustling through the auditorium, and looking up he saw everyone present standing with heads bowed.

The point of the story is that in our opinion this would never happen in Toronto. We have the coldest, most impolite audience you could hope to find anywhere. And our opinion was verified Wednesday night at Massey Hall, when the TSO played a recent work by a young Toronto composer, Harry Freedman (who is also English horn player with the Orchestra).

Called Images, the work is "a translation in musical terms" of the style of three Canadian painters, Lawren Harris, Kuzo Nakamura, and Jean-Paul Riopelle. In spite of the outstanding performance (for which Susskind and his hard-working musicians were responsible) and the real virtues of the music itself, the audience gave the impression that it wasn't in the least interested. Perhaps this was due to lack of comprehension on their part; the woman sitting next to us had a pathetic look of confusion on her face, and didn't know whether to clap or not. Anyone for a Music Appreciation Course?

Well, the work is good and it is going to be important. Freedman has created music which could be nothing else but Canadian, and yet there is something unique and personal in it as well. The only hindrance to our full appreciation of the variable and fascinating tonal painting was a sluggishness in the brass, particularly the trombones. But they were better in the final section, enabling us to realize the homogeneity of the work's structure.

As for Beethoven's too familiar Pastoral Symphony, we got the impression that by the time the Orchestra had reached the end of the evening they were too tired to do much else than play the notes on the paper. Precision in the opening movement was doubtful, while in the Scene by the Brook we wondered whose tempo would win out.

The centrally placed Scherzo was far better played than the rest of the symphony. Lightness, gaiety, sense of humor, everything contributed to take us out of the general boredom we felt with the performance. Then, with the Storm, this involvement was lost, and the final movement, rather than a swelling paean of gratitude, came out as just a pretty song.

Miss Erica Morini was guest violinist in Tchaikovsky's wonderful Violin Concerto. Critics in the other papers have had the chance to acclaim her great skill and appreciation of the nuances of this work, so we will content ourselves with pointing out that, to be blunt, she has a lousy sense of rhythm. For example, she began the Coda of the first movement so fast that Susskind soon had to slow things up a bit to keep all the forces together. Throughout the concerto she displayed a bad habit of cutting the established pace suddenly to dwell on some intricate figure. Consequently we were left with the impression of a group of sketches rather than one huge canvas.

A glaring flat bass entry and occasional loss of proportion in orchestral balance (as when the clarinet kept losing himself somewhere in the texture of the first movement) disappointed us, of course, but generally speaking Susskind was more or less on top of things; no small feat with such an erratic soloist. The interpretation tended to the superficial, but since we once heard an incomparable performance of this concerto we are content to rest with our memories.

SKULE

Dear Sir:

Having read the Sportolke column in the Wednesday issue of Toike Oike, I wish to comment on what the engineers seem to have forgotten.

In the last paragraph of Jim Thomson's column the suggestion was made that "Perhaps the Varsity should be reorganized to include constitutional representation from all faculties." Now, are we to gather from this that no engineers are allowed to work on the Varsity. It has always been my impression that anyone who wanted to work on the Varsity was welcome to go down to the Varsity offices and do just that. Well now, lets see how many engineers are working down there. None.

So what are they griping about. Everyone knows that engineers are nothing but a bunch of lazy no good shiftless, uneducated, childish, malicious, bums. Furthermore, before they criticize The Varsity methinks they should take a look at their own rag.

Worst of all, I have the misfortune of being an engineer. Ah woe is me.

Dave Robertson.

"TASTE"

Sir:

It is the purpose of this letter to comment on what "The Varsity" prefers to call "taste" in its journalistic policy. We prefer to label this particular incident, viz, the article of Monday, February 29, entitled: "Fairman Blasts Catholic Index," irresponsible.

The charge of irresponsibility is made on the following grounds:

1) the failure of the "The Varsity" to fulfill its role as an integrating force in this university. Such an article, by the admitted fact of the "Varsity" reporter that it was meant to be laughable, cannot by any stretch of the imagination, be considered an effort to promote understanding, and consequently, better relations between the federated colleges of this university.

2) the substitution of "sensational" front-page news for important news. It is quite evident that the article on Page 7 of this same issue, viz., "PQ P.M. Meets Student Education Delegation", was of far more national significance to students than the "haphazard" remarks of a none-

COACH HOUSE THEATRE

The Way of the World — A comedy by William Congreve; its epigraph reads, "It is worth your while to listen, you who do not wish adulterers to succeed in their understandings", and its plot somewhat resembles a dishevelled mosaic but the play, and production along with it, is a gem. Stars James Mainprize, David White, Frances Halpeny, Judith Teague and Joan Shaw, allows many others on stage as well. You can hold Director Molly Golby and the University Alumnae Dramatic Club responsible for the three hours you spend there. (Wednesday to Sunday, 8.30 p.m., this week and next, at 200 Bedford Road; telephone HU. 8-0256.)

CREST THEATRE

Heartbreak House — A very long conversation between Shaw and God through a sometimes flimsy medium of the Crest's cast; Shaw has had better days. Starring Charmion King, Powys Thomas and Norma Renault with a half-dozen others. (Closes tomorrow night; performances 5 p.m. and 8.30 p.m. today and tomorrow.) Opening Wednesday — Honour Thy Father — A new play by Canadian Michael Jacot is a family drama in a Quebec setting. Norma Renault is the featured performer, with Powys Thomas, Geoffrey Alexander, Charmion King and Martha Buhs. (Students get into the Crest for 75c on a weeknight and $1.00 Fridays and Saturdays.)

LANSDOWNE THEATRE

The Tunnel of Love — Final performances tonight and tomorrow night, 5 p.m. and 8.30 p.m., closing a highly successful and extended eight-week run. Opening Monday — "Tis a Pity She's a Whore", which was a sensation even in the gory theatre of the 17th century. The author's name is John Ford; his play has been "adapted" and staged by Van Grona. Ought to be quite something. (Nightly at 8.30 p.m., students $1.00 on weekdays, and it runs for two weeks.)

ROYAL ALEXANDRA THEATRE

The Visit — Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontaine are magnificent, the play is magnificent, the whole production is magnificent, but the prices are also magnificent, and they don't acknowledge the separate identity of students. See it anyway. (Tonight and tomorrow night at 8.20 p.m., matinee tomorrow at 2 p.m., which is cheaper. This is a one-week stand.)

SUNDAY NIGHT

Hart House Glee Club — The final Sunday Evening Concert of the year, as usual featuring this group under the highly trained baton of Mr. Rowland Pack. (at 9 p.m., in the Great Hall, with free tickets available at the Hall Porter's desk; women welcome if escorted, and God bless Hart House.)

WEDNESDAY NIGHT

Claramae Turner — A world-famous and exquisitely beautiful young woman is Claramae Turner. She is also a contralto, and as such she will be in the Great Hall Wednesday night for a CBC Celebrity Series Concert. Women and men, in that order, welcome under any conditions whatever.

GLEE CLUB CONCERT

Evening's concert in the Great Hall will close out this year's season for the Hart House Glee Club, under the direction of Rowland Pack.

This year, the Glee Club has crowded its schedule a Christmas broadcast for a concert for the Empire Club of Canada, an appearance with the Band of the Ontario Regiment in Oshawa, and a concert for the Michigan State University, in addition to the annual Tri-University Concert last fall.

Light of this concert promises to be a treat for Deo by Schuetz, arranged for voice, two trumpets, bassoon and piano. Also on the program is a special arrangement of All The Things You Are, by Duke Ellington, conducted by the Assistant Conductor.

Admission, hear ye, are FREE, from the Hall of the Hart House, or from members of the Student Council. Women get in on men's terms.

Quintet, Tentet, And Orchestra

A few words on some of the more interesting album releases in the current flood of recorded jazz. In the past months we have looked at Horace Silver, Miles Davis, Duke Ellington, J. J. Johnson, Thelonius Monk, Charlie Mingus and others. In our next column we'll have something to say about Dave Brubeck, Jimmy Rushing, Stan Kenton & Co., Thelonius Monk, Glen Gray and the very controversial new name in modern jazz: Ornette Coleman.

Art Farmer Tentet, Brass Shout (United Artists UAL 4047). An imposing line-up of jazz brass men have been gathered under the direction of Art Farmer to record seven arrangements by Benny Golson. On trumpet, Art is supported by fiery Lee Morgan, and groovy Ernie Royal. Curtis Fuller and Jimmy Cleveland are on trombone, and the miscellaneous instruments included are baritone horn, French horn, and tuba. The rhythm section consists of Percy Heath (from The Modern Jazz Quartet) on bass, and Philly Joe Jones (whom we remember from his work with Miles) on drums.

The past experiments by arrangers, such as Pete Rugolo, to orchestrate for brass have usually failed in providing warmth and musical richness. This record however, thanks to the skill of Golson, provides the listener with adequate variety of tonal colours, as well as exploring some of the more subtle effects of brass sound. Incidentally Benny Golson arranged and played on my favourite record of the past year, Blue Note 4003 The Jazz Messengers.

Art Farmer as the leader and featured soloist plays a muted clean trumpet. Perfect in tone and thematic development, but not excessively original in the ideas stated.

Art Farmer and his Orchestra. The Aztec Suite (United Artists UAL 4062). Composed and arranged by talented Chico O'Farrill, who in the past has written charts for Benny Goodman, Dizzy Gillespie, and Stan Kenton, the record presents a large studio orchestra, capable of swinging and of backing the featured solos by Art Farmer. The arrangements are all impeccable, employing the twenty musicians in the full orchestral sense (similar in result to the Johnny Richards' work on Capitol's "Cuban Fire", and Bethlehem's "Something Else by Johnny Richards"), leading them through the varying moods and tempos of latin rhythms and jazz shouts. There are effective polyrhythmic Afro-cuban interplay between the sections of the band, and in parts, lyrical moments of melodic searching.

The Cannonball Adderly Quintet in San Francisco. (Riverside RLP 12-311). A very "in-person" sound characterizes this record, and is definitely the best possible means of presenting an infectious funky group such as this. It was recorded at The Jazz Workshop and provides the optimum best of live performance with some of the inevitable faults. Although Cannonball Adderly is a spirited leader and a driving soloist, his accomplishments fade under the powerful impact of Bobby Timmons' rollicking piano work. Nat Adderly on cornet is a capable sideman, but lacks really creative solo ability.

The favourite of this listener is Bobby's gospel tune "This Here". Here we have all the best elements of modern hard-bop jazz. A hard stride beat imbued with religious fervour, an almost brutally shouting series of solos, and as a bonus a full-fingered solo by Timmons himself which rhythmically and melodically is a fantastic experience. This tune can be compared loosely with "Afterhours" with Rollins and Charlie Mingus. "You'd Better Get It In Your Soul", if not in form then in the overwhelming enthusiasm and power of communication.

Some of the other tunes are: Bohemia After Dark, Hi-Fly, and Spontaneous Combustion. All in all, one of the better albums in this genre of jazz message.

The Modern Jazz Quartet. Odds Against Tomorrow (United Artists UAL 4063). This is the third film score by John Lewis (No Sun in Venice, UN WRY Exploration, were the first two), and this album features the quartet in expanded versions of the sound-track cues.

Modern Jazz Quartet is one of the most consistent organizations in the disciplined form of chamber jazz, always providing low-keyed subtle jazz inside deliberated, almost classical presentations. The group is called "one of the great chamber ensembles of our time" by Gunther Schuller, in the excellent liner notes, and rightly so. This record is again a demonstration of their unique sound and mature musical expression.

There may be some arguments whether the jazz fugue is either fugue or jazz. This applies to Brubeck's music in particular, which seldom swings and often lacks sufficient depth for classical criteria, but in the case of the Modern Jazz Quartet all factions should be happy. The music is at times intense, at times quietly pulsing, at other times freely improvisational in character. The superb interplay between these four top musicians, time and time again develops into fresh and imaginative creativity.

"A Cold Wind is Blowing" is a beautiful structure of sound, just one of the six selections in varying moods.

which the effect that Varsity editorial and news policies should be hushed if there is doubt they might cast a bad reflection on a U of T college. If three priests happen to take part in a Zen Druid ceremony, then the Varsity would have to ignore the whole incident because it would turn St. Mike's into a laughing stock, and integration would be seriously weakened. This is an extreme example. But where do you draw the line? Hush one thing and you end up hushing everything. All editor hushes himself if he tries to please everybody. I don't deny the paper's purpose should be to promote better relations between the federated colleges; but if it involves killing a legitimate news story because that story may have over-riding implications on the honor of one of the colleges, it cannot be done. If it is, then the purpose of the paper, to report student activities, is defeated.

SMC SAC has also referred to the story as "laughable." Maybe it was, and maybe it wasn't. We certainly hope if anybody laughed, it was SMC students. If any U of T students, and especially those at St. Michael's, were to take Phil Fairman's remarks on the Catholic Index as a final or infallible authority on the subject, then we question their right to be in university. The Varsity is not attacking St. Mike's College. The news story merely expressed the opinions of one student. Nothing more.

The SMC letter shows at least one thing: few SAC members have little, and we hazard to say, any experience in journalism. Yet they have taken it upon themselves to judge how important a news item is and where it should be placed on the front page. (By the way, column one rating is top right, not lower left where the Fairman story appeared.) They have also pointed out they feel a four day old CUP story "PQ PM Meets Student Education Delegations" takes priority over the Fairman story which happened the night before. There is something else. The Fairman head (all 48 pts of it) could hardly be classed as a giant headline. We do not condemn SMC SAC for their vacuum of journalistic knowledge. The newspaper business, contrary to what many people may say or think, is one of the most complicated in our society. But we do condemn SMC SAC for questioning the Fairman article, when it is quite obvious they have not taken the time to check the facts in their own letter.

Philosophically speaking Fairman is not a non-entity. He is alive, from U of T, and in full color. Journalistically speaking Fairman is also not a non-entity. He became news as soon as a center page profile appeared on him last week labelling him U of T's most un-angry student. In short he was news; and what he had to say constituted news at the time.

Another thing. The Fairman article was a news story. It was not a feature. And as such we were under no obligation to consult SMC theologians to get the Catholic angle on the Index. Besides this, it is not the purpose of a news story to discuss anything. A news article reports. That's all. So called "discussions" at an "intelligent level" are carried in editorial columns.

Whether or not Fairman's statements were "intelligent" or not has nothing to do with the issue. The crux of the problem revolves on the fact the article reported Fairman's ideas as an individual: not as a spokesman for protestant faiths or any other religion.

Unfortunately SMC SAC, and St. Michael's College in general, seemed to have formed the notion The Varsity somehow is out to get them.

We are not. If they think so, we feel sorry for them.

Terry Bourke,
(III St. Michael's)

REVENGE

Dear Sir:

If Walker wanted to print the facts behind the shocking Nazi-like Garratt case, why did he do it that way? I presume the SAC refused to give him clearance on releasing the material. But the way he handled the story, while interesting and amusing even to those outside the "ingroup" who know what the SAC does to its enemies, could land him in a lot more trouble than handling the facts straight. After all, surely he doesn't expect the SAC to stand back and let themselves be slandered under the names of small, nasty, unclean little animals. He may have gone too far this time. We in the sororities sincerely hope he has.

Quebec from page 3

lie his negotiations with Ottawa about the federal grants to Québec universities. Another "Duplessis autonomy" myth had been hit. Considered by the majority as a deadlock the grants dispute was being solved by Premier Sauvé with amazing determination, and ability. This stand on the question was firm enough to satisfy every autonomist, although the negotiations pleased those who stated that, "we needed money anyway".

Premier Sauvé's policy on the question was indeed simple. He saw that the money Ottawa was willing to give Québec universities yearly, amounted to one per cent of the federal tax on Québec corporations. He proposed that the province should collect this money itself, since Ottawa appeared willing to give it back in any case.

Thus the universities would get the money they needed and the constitution would be respected. The final answer from Ottawa has not yet been given, although Finance Minister announced last week that legislation might soon be introduced to amend the Federal-Provincial Tax Abatement Act. In the meantime Québec is going ahead with its plans to tax the corporations. However, the chances are that Prime Minister Diefenbaker—prodged by his Québec deputies—will agree to gain popularity in French Canada.

Premier Sauvé announced that more money was to be given to educational institutions. Classical colleges for men received substantially raised grants. Classical colleges for women at last were given grants that they had always asked for in vain before.

M. Sauvé's short career as premier probably marks the beginning of a prosperous era for universities, and colleges in Québec. This vital point was just about the only one he had time to take care of before his death. Money will now be available to these sources of life, which are educational institutions. But M. Sauvé's attitude was more than financially generous. He broke with the Union Nationale tradition of despising the riches of intelligence, and knowledge; he treated the university administrators, and educators with respect.

Was his short term in office sufficient to reverse the long established Duplessis practice to consider intellectuals as a "necessary evil"? Premier Sauvé's policy to give the universities a new life probably will be followed by his successor. Eager to capitalize on M. Sauvé's prestige, the new premier Antonio Barrette stated that, "education is number one," on his policy considerations, and the provincial parliament is now discussing legislation drafted by the Sauvé cabinet. Remember too, that this is an election year.

Often democracy has been declared dead in Québec by the student papers in Canada. Irregular electoral tactics still are "in vogue" here; corruption still exists, but we have proof now that genuine democratic action such as pressure on the government through public campaigns still give results. We have the proof that new ideas can be pushed into the public mind by the reformer, and we are sure, more than ever, that the students can play their role in this regard.

Many students will condemn such actions by student unions as political—and of course they are—but these bodies are independent from party directives; and after all where is the evil in serving democracy?

McGill Repeats Debate Win

OTTAWA, Feb. 29 (CUP) — Forced into a repeat performance of the Inter-University Debating League finals, McGill debaters once again out-talked an OAC-QVC-Mac team, earning the right to compete in the national finals this week at Edmonton.

OAC protested the first match held two weeks ago on the grounds McGill alumni and one student were used to judge the finals. The debates were staged again at Ottawa University Saturday, with McGill winning by a unanimous decision.

McGill — representing the English-speaking league of Québec and Ontario—will face teams from UBC, Sherbrooke, and St. Dunstan's to debate the topic: Resolved: Surrender to the USSR is Preferable to Risking Humanity in the Event of War.

Potter Wins Potter Trophy

William A. Peter Potter, one of the most colorful, versatile and outstanding athletes ever to grace the field of battle in the name of University of Toronto was chosen by the basketball team as winner of the Dr. W. A. Potter Trophy.

The trophy, presented for the first time last year, is awarded annually to the member of the senior basketball team who in the opinion of his team-mates is the most worthy member of the team.

It was won last season by Ruby Richman.

Potter has enjoyed a long and colorful career in athletics at Varsity. Now in his second year Dentistry, Peter enrolled at Victoria College in the 1952-53 season. He was a standout track man in that year, winning the Intercollegiate high jump, as well as playing with the senior Basketball Blues. Potter was in his seventh year with the basketball squad this season, having arrived on the scene at the same time as Coach John McManus.

This season Peter was undoubtedly the backbone of the Blues squad. As captain of the team he was a steady influence on the somewhat inexperienced Blues, going all-out on offence and defense. As a guard Potter was the fifth highest scorer on the team with 76 points for the season.

Basketball is only one of the sportily Peter's specialties. Last season, as you may recall, his unerring and steady punting chores as a half-back with the senior football Blues, won two games for Dalt White's charges.

In his career at Varsity (and after so many years what else is it but a career) Peter Potter has been awarded nine first colors for athletic prowess.

In itself it is quite an achievement. Sincere congratulations to a great little guy and a wonderful athlete.

The trophy is a gift to U of T by Peter's father, Dr. W. A. Potter.

Ice Blues Play Last Home Game

By EUGENE PETER GLISKY

It's so long, good bye, farewell, sob-sob or good riddance to Intercollegiate hockey for eight members of Varsity Blues as they play the last game of the season against McGill Redmen in Varsity Arena at 8 o'clock tonight.

Graduating after yeoman service in the Blue and White harness for several years are goalies Bob Giroux and Don Keenan, defencemen Harry (MVP) Neale and Frank Sullivan and forwards Howie Lil Bar Roth, Bill Griffin, Pete Warren and Captain John Macdonald.

There has finally been a complete and thorough shake-up in the hockey organization. Manager Dave Gawley has stepped in with a series of fines and pay cuts against players whom Gawley feels have not been hanging up their equipment.

Not dressing for tonight's contest will be Harry Neale, Jim Murchie, Bill Griffin, possibly John Gatten, Syl Apps, Howie Morenz, Bill Mosienko, Joe Szabadoskiowsky and Dave Gawley. Some of these players are not dressing for obvious reasons while Gawley never dresses anyway, so there.

Neale is out with a back injury, while Murch and cohorts will be replaced by several players who have seen limited action all year.

Should be a good one, maybe, we hope. Drop in to say goodbye.

A WATER CARNIVAL

Emulate 1959's Successful Show

The 1960 Water Carnival will follow the same pattern as last year's sellout hit. Top swimmers from the US and Canada will try to better some or all of the 28 Canadian records set during the 1959 show.

The Carnival promises to be one of the most colorful sporting events on the campus in years. There is no other Carnival on the continent to equal this show.

New comers to the Carnival are the Peterborough Ornamental Swim Club. They are world famous in this graceful but difficult art, and have performed at the 1956 Olympics in Melbourne, Australia.

Highlight of the races will be the 100-yard freestyle between Jeff Farrel and the fastest freestylers in Canada, Cameron Grout and Dick Pound. A world mark is a distinct possibility when these three clash.

Tickets Going Like Wildfire

With pool-side bleachers added to the undersized Hart House pool, seating capacity for the Carnival has been increased to over 600. Some 400 of these will be in the advantageous pool-level positions.

Tickets—costing $1.25 a night—are on sale in the SAC office, the Hart House ticket office and from members of the swimming team.

Ticket sales soared over the 700 mark early this week, and officials are confidently predicting a packed house for both nights. Some standing room tickets will be available at the door in case all seats are sold. All proceeds will be used to send worth-while Varsity swimmers to Canadian Olympic trials, and for a donation to the Canadian Olympic Fund.

The organizers wish to extend their thanks to Miss Phyllis Lea for her help and assistance with various phases of the organization.

CAMERON GROUT

Cameron is the outstanding male swimmer in Canada today. He has competed in the British Empire and Pan-American Games. He holds the Canadian 100-yard freestyle record and will attempt to lower it Saturday night.

JOHNNY COLLINS

A 14-year-old age group champion from New York, Johnny will go after Canadian and American freestyle and butterfly marks. He was ranked second in the USA for 200-yards freestyle in the 13 and 14 age group.

JEFF FARREL

Jeff is the world's fastest freestyle swimmer over a 100-yard distance. He won his race at the 1959 Pan-American Games, and his race with the Canadian freestylers is expected to be the highlight of the Carnival.

Nursing On Top In Blood Drive

Winner of the Red Cross Blood Drive contest is the School of Nursing.

The competition was on a percentage basis. Fifty-two per cent of the nurses gave blood, the highest percentage of any faculty, Nancy Davison, chairman of the campaign, said last night.

Theatre passes may be picked up at the Student's Administrative Council office March 14 by the nurses who donated.

The passes can be used at the Odeon and 20th Century Theatres and the Towne and International Cinemas.

The Red Cross has entered the University of Toronto into the Corpuscule Cup Contest, said Miss Davison. The contest is run by the National Federation of Canadian University Students for all the universities in Canada who are having blood drives. This will be U of T's first year in the contest, and it will be judged on a percentage basis according to enrolment.

"We feel the campaign has been very successful," said Miss Davison, "even though we received 200 pints under the set total."

Miss Davison said there would be two drives again next year. Last year, she said, one drive brought in only 1800 pints.

Search UC Room

A number of University College students said last night they saw a man they recognized as a police inspector searching a student's room at UC's Sir Daniel Wilson residence Saturday night.

The student, Paul Watson (II UC) was not in his room at the time.

The police inspector went to the Hall Porter at the Residence, accompanied by the chief of the University Police, to ask for the key to Watson's room, students at the residence said. He allegedly told the Hall Porter that police had received an anonymous phone call accusing Watson of stealing a number of paintings from the Royal Ontario Museum. Watson is in Art and Archeology.

A spokesman at the police department said last night the phone call may have been from a "crank", but all such calls must be checked as a matter of routine.

Residents told Watson they had seen a police inspector in his room while he was out. Watson reported the incident to the don of his house E. A. Walker, who advised him to send the police to him if they returned.

Later two constables came to see Watson, but he refused to speak to them and sent them to Walker.

Walker said last night the police had not come to see him.

New Sudbury University

The Ontario legislature's private bills committee last week passed bills to establish Laurentian University at Sudbury and the other religious colleges which will be federated with the non-denominational Laurentian.

The new university at Sudbury will practically duplicate the federation set up at the University of Toronto in which religious colleges are federated in the non-denominational university, each with its own theological school. The new university will be as bilingual as possible.

Huntington University of the United Church of Canada, the present University of Sudbury (Roman Catholic) and the University of Lalemant, also Roman Catholic, will be the federated colleges.

The non-denominational board of directors will be made up of 24 members.

The committee gave fullest powers of expropriation to the new university equal to the U of T Carleton and Ottawa Universities and St. Michael's University.

No site has yet been chosen. Charles McTague, who acted as counsel for all the denominations, announced that the Anglican Church would be founding its university later. He said the synod of the Anglican Diocese of Algoma would seek legislation at a later session of the legislature, and would join the federation.

Wycliffe Elects

Last week the new government and the executive of the Athletic Association were elected at Wycliffe College.

John Hayes and Ron Steers will head the new government in the fall as Prime Minister and Deputy Prime Minister. Other Cabinet Ministers are Rev. T. K. George, Bill Smyth, Merv Everall, George Harpur, Jack Blunt, and Dick Sadlier.

The new executive of the Athletic Association are: President Ron Steers, Vice-President, Chuck Montizambert, Secretary Merv Everall, and Treasurer Al Orcheson.

Varsity Planning Literature Issue

For the first time in many a year, The Varsity plans a literary issue.

Exact date for the issue has not been set, but it should be within the next couple of weeks.

The Varsity staff decided to print the issue recently to fill the gap left by the cancellation last month by the Students' Administrative Council of Jargon, the all-campus literary magazine.

Jargon was begun by the SAC only last year. This year's council moved to cancel the magazine about three weeks after its editor, Mark Nichols, resigned.

His resignation followed conflict over Otherside, a magazine supplement to The Varsity which the SAC cancelled after two issues because they had appeared later than schedule.

Nichols last night said he resigned from the Jargon job partly because he had taken it on the understanding Jargon would be an issue of Otherside and partly because he was "disappointed in the SAC's attitude towards publications".

Students wishing to submit contributions to The Varsity's literary issue are asked to leave them in The Varsity office or with any member of The Varsity's Masthead as soon as possible as publication will be in the next week or two.

Poems, short stories, essays and similar work will be accepted.

Against Biased Church For Unions, Business

The principal of Huron College at the University of Western Ontario warned labor last week that the church could not rubber stamp any organization—labor or business.

Rev. W. R. Coleman said, "The church must conscientiously refuse to be shunted into the position of offering unconditional ideological sanction to partisan secular groups whether big business or organized labor."

He was the speaker at the inaugural dinner of the newly-created Religion-Labor Council.

Dr. Coleman warned the representatives present that there is a danger today that individuals would be lost in massive groups.

"There is a vast need today to keep the individual clearly in view in all our planning and organization," he said.

"We need from time to time a year of jubilee during which we might cashier all group names that hide the individual and thereby contribute towards creeping dehumanization.

He pointed out that the church hasn't solved all its problems.

He said it would be a useful exercise for theological students to get first-hand experience in industry and instruction in trade union work, in an attempt to maintain sustained dialogue between the church and labor at top levels and in local religion.

Sherbrooke Wins Canada Debating

Edmonton, March 5—Sherbrooke University's French-speaking team of Julien Aubert and Robert Normand Friday night won the Macdonald-Laurier Trophy as Canada's college debating champions in National Federation of Canadian University Students-sponsored debates at the University of Alberta.

Aubert and Normand defeated Irwin Cotler and Gordon Echenberg of McGill University in the national finals.

Three bilingual judges awarded a unanimous decision to Sherbrooke who took the affirmative side of the argument "Resolved that surrender to the Soviet Union is preferable to the destruction of humanity in war".

Thursday night the University of British Columbia and Saint Dunstan's University of Prince Edward Island were eliminated in the semi-finals.

Sherbrooke's major argument was that life itself is man's most valuable possession. "Life," said Norman, "is the first condition for all others". McGill attempted to counter this argument by saying life is a condition of all animals and that a desire to adhere to ideals should set men apart.

In summing up, Cotler said, "We would rather die on our feet than live on our knees".

Another point which counted for Sherbrooke was that the Western capitalist system is not perfect and that Communism is not as evil as western propaganda suggests.

McGill replied that while capitalism is not perfect it is "fundamentally perfectable".

McGill, whose semi-final victory Thursday night turned largely on the technical definition of "risk" used the same technicality to advantage Friday when Sherbrooke argued that any international war fought today would annihilate mankind.

McGill reminded them the topic concerned annihilation as a risk, not a certainty.

The debate was the first national final ever held at the University of Alberta.

QUALITY PRODUCTS CONTAINING QUALITY INCO NICKEL

New nickel-chrome plated appliances so bright...so right for modern living

Beautiful designs... added conveniences in the new household appliances plated with Inco Nickel. How much easier and more efficient they make your housework. And how satisfying to know that they'll look as bright and attractive years from now as they do today.

That's the beauty of appliances plated with nickel-chrome. And their utility! They add sparkle to your kitchen. Food stains, grease and grime wipe off so easily. They won't crack, chip or deteriorate from rust and corrosion in normal use.

It's the good heavy plating of nickel under the chrome that provides the real protection against rust, corrosion and wear... helps insure lasting beauty in depth.

worthwords

A few days ago we ran an editorial about the way history and social circumstance subtly change the meaning of words. Sometimes though, words keep their meanings but receive in addition an emotional charge that gives them extra although not always legitimate significance. Such a change can be more dangerous than an outright change of meaning.

The process is most dangerous when it gives to words relating to means, an emotional additive that properly belongs only to words that signify ends.

The word "courage" is an example. Courage is generally taken to be a virtue. In fact, though, there is, as we see it, a distinct possibility that courage in itself is a neutral word to be distinguished as virtuous only when it is invoked in the service of a virtuous end. It takes courage after all, to rob a bank. Is it virtuous then?

Such a change can be very useful in clouding issues. For instance, if a man refuses to do something you think he should do, and you wish to avoid the debates that might ensue if you said that he was wrong, all you have to do is call him a coward. Who can question the rights and wrongs of a coward's case?

The frightening thing is that almost all the adjectives by which we typically impute virtue are of this type: courageous, intelligent, charming, strong, well-organized, etc.

What is frightening about all this, is the pre-occupation with means as against ends of which it is a graphic display. The applause we accord to these natural endowments all by themselves is a measure of our amorality.

Our natural endowments are important weapons in our attempts to cope with our surroundings.

It is a bit sad, though that we should find ourselves called upon once more to point the supposed cliché, that by themselves, these qualities have no moral status whatsoever.

Goodness is a different quality from all others, and perhaps a more vital one. All the others deserve applause only insofar as they are used in its service.

Where to find it is another question.

flight of stares

Friday a photograph appeared in The Varsity of a young couple clutching each other in a parked car. This is common—too common.

Surely society can supply a place for such goings on. These youngsters should not be forced to huddle in anything so disgustingly modern and mechanical as a parked car.

We humbly suggest that the Students' Administrative Council set up cubicles in the various colleges as a final place of refuge for people in love.

We Have The Writingest

We have condemned apathy ad nauseam in an innumerable and infinitely time-consuming variety of worthy student activities in which we are urged to participate. It is probably sensible for us to pay only passing attention to all aspects of campus life except those in which we are particularly interested. The result is, however, that anything in which some particular group of students is not expressly interested is completely neglected. Such an item, to all intents and purposes, is the present danger of war. Disarmament was discussed for a half an hour or so in the Model Parliament. The United Nations Club occasionally considers such questions. None of these groups, however, can spend more than a small fraction of its time on this one aspect of its activities. Yet the questions involved in discussing in general the nature and cause of war and in particular the present dangers and current military concepts are extremely complex and hard to define. ## A DISGRACE

Perhaps it is your impression that Canadian art has a friend and supporter in the Ontario College of Art, which you may have noticed on McCaul Street, just a couple of blocks south of the university.

Or perhaps, you even think that OCA is one of the main founts of inspiration and leadership in Canadian art. Perhaps you assume that an art college in Canada's largest city would naturally provide much of the leadership in Canadian art.

Well, perhaps. But if you do, you are wrong.

If there was any doubt on the subject, it has been tidily removed — by the OCA's Board of Governors. With all the wisdom of leaders of Canadian art that they are, they have decided that:

1. All instructors at OCA must now retire at the age of 65;
2. The retirement pension will be $100 a month — that is, $45 more than the old age pension;
3. If an OCA instructor dies, leaving a widow, she will receive $50 a month — if he asks for it.

At this point one might suggest that the instructors at OCA are not the men of stature one would expect them to be. Just to set your mind at ease, they include Jack MacDonald, thought of as the "Dean of Canadian art", Alfson, who has been with the college for thirty years, Geoffrey Coughtree, Jack Nichols . . . well, you get the idea.

Well then, you might think that since their salaries are so generous, by the age of 65 they will be financially quite secure.

The average yearly stipend for instructors at OCA is $4,000.

It might be, then, that the instructors work under such pleasant, convivial conditions that they just never think of money. Convivial they may be. MacDonald, Coughtree and Alfson share one office — and one desk. The office is slightly smaller than that of The Varsity editor, and that, believe me, is small.

The point is, I think, that the sort of "leadership" which operates in this fashion is making Toronto something of an artistic backwash. That may not bother you very much. It may not bother a lot of people. That's the point — it doesn't seem to bother OCA either.

SMALL AND DARK

Considering its size, Toronto is remarkably lacking in out-of-the-way, off-beat night spots. Every year, two or three small "clubs" make their beginning in old stores, or old restaurants, or in the basements of even older houses. Most fail. The survivors — like the House of Hambourg, or the Chelsea Club, soon go on to bigger and better enterprises, soon lose the quaint intimacy that characterized their beginning.

Last week I heard of another such experiment. John Morley, a dark-haired; reticent young man who gives the impression of a high degree of literacy, had opened a small after-hours club on Avenue Road, dedicated to good coffee, relaxation, and folk music. It has been operating for three weeks, and it's very much alive.

The "Village Corner Club", as he has called it, resides at 174 Avenue Road, occupying what was a small store. He has put in some tables and chairs, coloured lights, and a latticed, false ceiling. At the back, an elevated area of the floor serves as a kind of stage for the amateur folk performers he has enlisted for talent.

The object of the place, I was told, is to provide a place where late in the evening you can get a cheap cup of coffee, perhaps a sandwich, while you listen to and sing folk songs.

Friday night, Ted Schafer, U of T student and sometime movie reviewer for The Varsity, was holding the fort with his five-string banjo and a host of American and European folk songs, mostly, it seemed, from the Seeger repertoire. From time to time, others in the place would wander up to the "stage" and join in, and later in the evening he had everyone singing, shouting, humming and clapping to some Weavers and Kingston Trio favorites. Schafer had an accomplice, a young man with a guitar and a resounding if untrained voice. They made a good combination, except that they had some difficulty keeping the two instruments in tune.

Schafer and company are on the premises Friday evenings, from ten till about two, and Sunday evenings, 9 to 12. Saturday evenings are devoted to calypso, under the artistic direction of a Trinidadian called Etain Shrdlu.

What is pleasing about a place like this is that it appears to have been set up in such a way that it cannot expand. Mr. Morley is not advertising. If you drive past at more than ten miles an hour you'll probably miss it. Inside, there are no alcoholic drinks, little in the way of food. You will be sold a club membership, for a dollar, which entitles you to come back for 75c.

I bought a membership card, turned it over, and read this on the back:

CLUB RULES

1. No alcoholic beverages
2. No gambling.
3. No profane language
4. Act with common courtesy
5. Have fun.

The card entitles you to introduce one guest per session. I never did find out why it was thought those rules were necessary.

Tonight is the night for VOCAL MAGAZINE, Part I, at the First Floor Club, 33 Asquith Avenue.

As Elmo Ciprietti explained in his own inimitable style in Wednesday's Varsity, it consists of readings of poetry, plays and such to the accompaniment of jazz. The works are by Michael John Nimciuk, Warren Wilson, John Robert Colombo, David Humphries, Doug Penny and Lionel Willis.

The experiment continues tomorrow night; and also next Monday and Tuesday nights. Hope is that university students will present themselves and see what it is all about. Tickets are $1.00, at the door. It all begins at 8.30 p.m.

SONG FOR HUMANITY

Where do I stand in the bawling of the H-bomb?
Whom do I follow in the West or in the East?
Whom shall I trust for the dropping of the H-bomb,
Raining death alike on the greatest and the least?

Where do I stand with regard to disarmament?
Or radiation from the fall-out of a test?
Must power politics hinder disarmament?
Are we not people in the East and in the West?

I'm for humanity, humanity, humanity!
I'm for humanity, that's where I stand!
I'm for humanity, for love and law and sanity!
End all inanity! —
War must be banned!

(perforated for the sororities)

By Alan Walker

the feast of episkipon

High atop the towers of Trinity College sits a very old man, so old he may even be dead, and two scribes, one male and the other female. The man is Father Episkipon, guardian of the morals of all Trinity College students.

Every year he sends his scribes down to the college and they, assisted by written information given them by Trinity students, make each and every student's sins public in a special and very secret conclave.

Already this year the women of Trinity met and heard themselves ripped apart by the scribe, who read little poems and pieces of doggerel about them, composed anonymously by their friends.

In a week or so, the men will meet in a similar ceremony. The Feast of Episkipon is not widely known. Each member of Trinity is pledged to secrecy at the ceremony each year. Some of them keep the pledge. Some don't.

a girl a girl

Somewhere on the University of Toronto campus there is a girl with a future. If you are the girl in the rather fuzzy photograph that appears here, or if you know who the girl might be, you may be in luck.

Last year, a United States hairdresser visited the U of T campus and met this girl. He took a snapshot of her, and then went home, without her name and address. Now he wants to find her, and use her as a model.

Come and get the good news.

all that glitters is usually goldenrod

Thought for today:

Something cold, inhuman and miserable happens when you send weeds by wire.

like a clear ring of endless light

It was interesting and comforting to learn that the chapters of Sigma Nu fraternity at Wesleyan College and Syracuse University and the chapter of Phi Delta Theta at Dartmouth have dropped their affiliation with the national body because of discriminatory clauses.

Rutgers University has gone even farther. Thanks to the efforts of student leaders, more than half the frats on campus are integrated.

Gradually, it will come.

upcrumple and outthrow

The University of Toronto has practical jokers occasionally. But they aren't very active. All in all, this is a pretty quiet and dull campus.

Take the University of Western Ontario. In two days, these two things happened, at the hands of one residence: Students filled a room with more than 300 newspapers.

It took them three hours. It took the resident four hours to get them out.

Men of the same residence created a piece of snow sculpture they thought would surely win the prize. But the dean didn't like it. It showed a man in deep thought. He sat not on a rock, but on a carefully carved snow toilet seat.

What's the matter with U of T? Mind you, this isn't to try and incite you or anything.

heaps of pepys again

We may be seeing a "Heaps of Pepys" after all! A new edition of the works of the famous English diarist is on the way to the press, unexpurgated for the first time.

In the past, almost one-tenth of the diaries have been suppressed. What does the missing tenth contain? London University's Robert Latham, the translator of the new edition, says "mostly it's just odd sentences, sometimes just odd phrases. They came in two kinds: the first medical, as it were, about his tummy and bowels, and his wife's condition; the second about what he did in bed with his mistresses!"

The publishers, with one eye on the British Obscene Publications Act, are consulting legal counsel.

Grant To HHOA

The Hart House Orchestra, conducted by Boyd Neel, has received a special grant of up to $11,000 from the Canada Council for a tour of the Western Provinces, September and October, 1960. Thirty concerts are planned including stops in remote spots like Yellowknife and Uranium City.

The Council has granted the Orchestra $1,000 to commission a Canadian composer to write a work for the group to be performed on this tour. Maurice Blackburn of Montreal, a member of the composing staff of the National Film Board, has accepted the commission.

The Orchestra was sent to the Brussel's World Fair as Canada's musical ambassador by the Council in 1958. A similar grant was also given by the Council for the orchestra's 1959 tour of the Maritime Provinces.

Considered Canada's leading string orchestra, its conductor, Boyd Neel, made an international reputation with the English Orchestra bearing his name, before coming to Canada in 1953 as Dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music.

INTOURIST

It has been said, that in Italy there is Mafia, and in the Soviet Union, Intourist. This comparison may be somewhat incorrect, for Intourist appears to be not only less resourceful, but more expensive.

The traveller to the Soviet Union will be asked to pay from $15 to $30 a day; plus transportation, plus extras. For this he will be supplied with a comfortable room, and rather poor meals. On occasion he will be supplied with a guide who will spout a list of figures indicating the percentage rise in Soviet flaxseed production over the base year of 1913, or the tinued from there to Moscow by train. They said this was all right.

We were pleasantly surprised by the rapidity with which they granted our visas. A few days later we landed in Tashkent. When we were finished with the simple formalities of immigration and customs, an airlines employee asked us why we had not already purchased our tickets to Moscow. We replied that we weren't going by air, but by train.

"Oh, but that's impossible," she said. "You have to go by air."

"Why?"

"Because the regulations don't permit foreigners to travel by train."

"But the Soviet Embassy in Delhi said we could go to Moscow by train."

"I'll check with the authorities if you like, but I'd suggest you buy your air tickets right away, or you'll miss tonight's flight."

"Thanks but we intend to go by train."

Half an hour later she came back to tell us that it was too late that evening to reach any of the higher authorities. We would have to wait until morning, unless of course we wanted to take tonight's plane. No, we didn't. We were told we would have to stay at the airport hotel overnight. This turned out to be enormously expensive, and far beyond our means. We were warned, and not very politely, that if we didn't like it we could leave.

To their considerable, and evident astonishment we picked up our bags and left, taking the local bus into town where some friendly Russians showed us the way to the railway station. As soon as we showed our faces at the wicket, the woman behind it slammed it shut and hurried out a side door. From a bystander we discovered that the next train for Moscow didn't leave until the following morning, so we decided to spend the night in the railway station waiting room. On our way we were stopped by a couple of plainclothesmen, accompanied by the ticket seller and some uniformed police. They asked for our passports, which they looked at and returned to us. Then they asked us to come back to the airport. We continued towards the waiting room, with the police trailing behind. The door to the room was blocked by another policeman who was told to refuse us entry. So we sat down and made ourselves as comfortable as possible on the steps in front of the station.

The plainclothesman — he claimed to be an Intourist official — whose name we later discovered to be Litzky, again asked to see our passports. Instead of looking at them, he put them in his jacket pocket and said they would be returned to us at the airport. I explained, in English and Russian, that a passport is private property, and he was welcome to look at it, but had no right to put it in his pocket. This seemed to have little effect upon him, and he yelled that we MUST go back to the airport. I kept asking for my passport, in an increasingly louder voice. All this yelling soon drew a crowd. As it gathered I noticed that Litzky was growing ill at ease. The bigger it became the more uncomfortable he looked. He apparently didn't know how to handle a situation in which someone dared talk back to him. The crowd enjoyed this enormously. As I yelled louder he suddenly handed back the passports and walked quickly away.

The crowd remained at the foot of the steps. Several times people came over, wished us well and offered us cigarettes. Each time the local police chased them away. Litzky returned to tell us that if we didn't go to the airport immediately he would have us taken there by force, put aboard a plane and shipped back to Kabul. I replied by taking out pencil and paper and writing down his name. This simple act seemed to cool him off a good deal. He stopped yelling and became polite.

The next morning we were taken to the Intourist office where the manager ordered us to buy air tickets to Moscow. We explained that the Soviet Embassy in Delhi had given us permission to go by train. But he said we should buy the air tickets or be shipped back to Kabul by force. We asked his name, and when he refused to give it I went outside and received it from one of the secretaries.

"Mr. Abramov," I said when I returned, "use force to send us back to Kabul. We'll see what Moscow says when they hear of it."

"No, no, don't get excited," he replied. "We'll see what we can do." He said he would go over to the Uzbek Foreign Ministry to see about obtaining special permission.

It took two hours, but when he got back you wouldn't have recognized him. He was all smiles, and the politest official I've had the pleasure to meet in a long time. Yes, permission had been granted. Train reservations are usually difficult to get, especially on short notice, but we were on the next train.

per hectare yield of newly-developed alfalfa crops, which neither the visitor nor the guide have seen. But as long as the visitor remains off the beaten track he will probably be subjected to only a few routine inefficiencies.

For example, we made reservations through Intourist at a restaurant and were promised a nice table. When we arrived at the restaurant no one had ever heard of us. Our Russian friends seemed much less astonished than we were, and explained that this was the rule rather than the exception.

When we left Moscow by train for Istanbul, Intourist had to purchase tickets for us. Two nights later, as the train stopped in a station somewhere near the Roumanian border, I got off to snatch a breath of fresh air. Happening to glance at the sign which is attached to the outside of every railway carriage, I noticed that ours wasn't going to Istanbul at all, but towards Varna, on the Bulgarian Black Sea coast. In the middle of the night we had to change into the proper car. The railways crew showed no surprise, "Oh that's Intourist," they said.

However, when you get out of the rut and want to do something for which there is no plain and clear-cut precedent, you may have a problem on your hands. Coming home from Burma my wife and I had decided that if possible we should go through Soviet Central Asia via the Trans-Siberian Railway. Accordingly, we went to the Soviet Embassy in Delhi and asked for a transit visa. One of the questions of the form which we had to fill out referred to the type of transportation desired. To this we replied that we would fly to the beginning of the southern branch of the Trans-Siberian railway at Tashkent, and con-

McGill Edge Blues In Lacklustre Game

MacDonald Scores 2 In Final Contest As Hundreds Yawn

AL ORCHESON (17) is stymied by McGill goalie Alex Herron in third period action in the game at the Arena won by McGill 4-3 in overtime. —Hoshkiw

By GENE GLISKY

Statistically speaking, McGill Redmen edged Varsity Blues 4-3 in two overtime periods to win the final contest of the Intercollegiate senior hockey league for the 1959-60 season.

And if viewed in the light of cold hard numbers, the game must have been a close, hair-raising battle, with both teams scoring twice in the first period, once each in the second and then settling down to ferocious defensive play until Jim Grant's spectacular goal at 2:07 of the second overtime period to bring the house down in a tremendous roar and win the game.

In actual fact it was an exhibition of the most inept, disorganized, ineffectual and butchered version of shinny as it shouldn't be played that has ever graced the halls of the old emporium.

The game collectively had little to endear it to the 1,000 give or take, fans who glumly watched the proceedings and painfully listened to a handful of Blue and White Band members who chose this occasion to rehearse every funeral dirge that has ever been waited. Right through the furious action on the ice, at that, came the mournful cry of the dinted French horn.

Leo Konyk, who played 70 minutes with nary a break, scored the first goal for McGill at 11:30 of the first period ably assisted by a Blues player who passed the puck right to the surprised Leo's stick. The play was set-up when two Varsity players fought for the puck between themselves, neither being adept enough to keep possession.

Gord Epp tied it up for Blues less than a minute later, assisted by George Hick-en and John Macdonald. It was a pretty goal from the point, making it appear that Varsity were beginning to shake the doldrums. Macdonald put Varsity ahead with the first of his two goals at 13:12 of the frame, only to have sprightly Jim Grant pull Redmen even a minute later. Grant, too had the puck handed to him when Blues couldn't withstand the tremendous pressure involved in playing with a man in the penalty box.

Macdonald again proved himself the most competent scorer for the blue-boys. Although not skating with his customary vim, he at least seemed to be the only Varsity player who believed pucks are for scoring goals with, planting the disk home from Howie Roth and Ian Sinclair.

McGill retaliated with a softy at the two minute mark of the second period. Bruce Hutchison scored from Tim Peters.

Then the fun began. Everybody skated, and poked about a bit, and took shots, and said nasty words (25 minutes in penalties worth) and had a helluva good time at the expense of the fans who sat and sat and sat and waited for something to happen.

It didn't. Until that fateful goal by Grant. Unassisted. It will go down in history with a sigh of relief, the game (?) was finally over.

McGill's Alex Herron blocked 39 shots in between misconduct penalties, while Bob Giroux stopped 21 in between goals.

Coaches of both teams should be commended in their ability to fire up their teams to such a display. It was an insult to any who call themselves hockey fans.

Western Win Girl's Basketball Tourney

Montreal—Girls' basketball ended for another year with the Intercollegiate Tournament played at Queen's this weekend. In the Round Robin, Western carried off the Bronze Baby for the third straight year with six points, followed by Toronto with four, McGill with two, and Queen's with nothing. These four closely-matched teams made this one of the best Tournaments in years.

After a slow start in the first game during which Queen's kept them to only a four point lead at half time, Toronto pulled away when their forwards, who had been relying on layups and jumps, switched to set shots and began hitting. This combined with excellent guarding gave them their first win 45-31. Judy Smith was high scorer with 20, then Marg Ann White with 10, and Joy Mahood with 12.

Friday's night game against McGill was even tougher. Toronto's poor passing and McGill's strong zone defense, vastly improved since their game with Western that morning which they lost 61-53, nearly cost Toronto the game. In the fourth quarter they settled down and the guard-line of Sandy McMullen, Judy Gray, Kathie Kennedy, held the opposition to a three point gain, giving Toronto their second win 34-25.

Toronto and Western, both undefeated, met in the deciding round on Saturday. Judy Smith, Varsity's leading playmaker, Joy Mahood, and Marg Ann White, who hit for 23 points, did their best to beat Western. The guards, Sandy McMullen, Alayne

Patterson, Kathie Kennedy, and Judy Gray, reached for rebounds and continually checked shots keeping the usually high scoring Western team to 46 points, their lowest total of the Tournament. In the last quarter, with two minutes to go and losing by 12 points, Toronto put on a last minute surge and scored seven fast points but time ran out and Western won 46-41.

Toronto put up a valiant effort to defeat the Western team, the same team that has kept them from the championship for the last three years. The whole team tried their hardest and, although they did not see much action, Lynn Philpott, Barb Black, Mary Timmins, Bev Bonnel, and Judy Skene came through when they were needed and helped Toronto wind up in second place.

Next year for the first time in four years the Tournament will be held in Toronto. Our team, with the help of Mickey Barnett, the coach, will be out for another crack at winning the Bronze Baby. Elaine Atkinson

Water Carnival A Smash Hit For 2nd Year

The Second Annual Water Carnival was again an unqualified success as more than 1,000 spectators applauded the record breaking efforts of top U.S. and Canadian swimmers Friday and Saturday nights.

Twenty records fell during the Carnival including nine Canadian marks. Leading the assault was Cameron Grouit who set new records in the 100-yard butterfly, the 100-yard freestyle and the 200-yard individual medley. Steve Rabinovitch set a new record in the 100-yard backstroke chopping a full second off the old time of 1:05.4 held by Varsity's John Deacon.

Grouit's teammate Dick Pound broke his associate 50-yard freestyle mark. He clocked 22.8 seconds, the old time was 23 flat. Toronto's Bob Fisher set a new mark in the 220-yard backstroke. He shaved .7 of a second off the old mark of 2:31.

Ronnie Benson bettered her own 100-yard breaststroke mark. She chopped 1/2 second off her old mark of 1:14.2.

In addition to the swimming the divers, Don Harper and Ron O'Brien thrilled the crowd with their topflight exhibitions of skill and clowning. The world's fastest freestyler, Jeff Farrel of the U.S., was unable to race because of bursitis in the shoulder. He gave an exhibition.

Sr. Skule Down SMC In Replay Of Semi

Sr. Skule advanced to the finals of the Jennings Cup competition by edging St. Michael's 4-3 in a replay of their final round game. Oddly enough, the player who caused the cancellation of the other game was ruled eligible this time and contributed an assist to the engineers cause.

SMC led 3-2 going into the last period but two fast and rather weak goals in the first minute and a half of the final stanza by Ev Rush and Bob Dawson respectively, won the game for Skule.

Other goalscorers for SPS were Way and McHardy. Frank Quinn had two for SMC while Kennedy netted the third.

St. Mike's were handicapped in the third period by a five minute penalty when a SPS player was cut by a high stick. This served to keep them on their heels until the ten minute mark and by that time Skule had a firm grip on the game.

The finals start today at 12:30 and continue Wednesday and Friday if necessary.

SPS — goal: Dawson; defence: Taylor, Diddin, Hamlin, Hogan; forwards: Way, Rush, Armitage, McHardy, Stee, Dawson.

SMC — goal: Bower; defence: McGrath, Markie, Smith, McElligott, Auchingloss, Halls, Hornberger, Macpherson, Kennedy, O'Donnell, Quinn, Ruest, Morse.

First Period
1. St. Mike's, Quinn (Morse) 2:37
2. St. Mike's, Quinn (Morse) 3:39
3. Sr. SPS, Way (Rush, Armitage) 14:11
Penalties — Hamlin (S), Markie (SM).

Second Period
4. Sr. SPS, McHardy (Taylor) 7:36
5. St. Mike's, Kennedy (unassisted) 11:32
Penalties — McElligott (SM).

Third Period
6. Sr. SPS, Rush (Diddin) 1:02
7. Sr. SPS, Dawson (Stee) 1:39
Penalties — Ruest (SM).

THINGS ARE TOUGH all over. Clutching a hand full of dividend coupons, Eunice Huff (II SMC) stands at the counter in the St. Mike's Cooperative restaurant, contemplating a gloomy future. She's just learned there'll be no dividend returns this year. The Coop broke even, and has no profits to declare. (VSP Cavanagh)

Queen's Professor Tells Us How

By John McGoe

A Queen's University professor last night listed some of the historical causes which produced attitudes last fall leading to charges of discrimination at the University of Toronto.

Prof. A. M. Keppel-Jones, a former Rhodes scholar, was speaking in the first of the Race Relations Lecture Series, sponsored by the Students Administrative Council in Convocation Hall, Trinity College.

"Every time you practice discrimination in some small way, you give aid and comfort to regimes such as those in South Africa," he said.

"In happier countries such as Canada there is still time to prevent the type of insoluble problem I have mentioned."

After events in U of T fraternities, the SAC appointed an Education Committee who eventually brought Prof. Keppel-Jones to campus.

He replied to the introduction of Bruce Barrett, SAC committee chairman who demanded: "Why do people discriminate. Is there any rationality behind it. As chairman I found that very few of us do not discriminate to some degree."

Answering, the prof. said: "If you are looking for some rationality I'm sorry I can't supply it. The problem hardly exists on the rational plane. But forced into a corner people will make up reasons often quite inconsistent."

He said at the moment there is a double attitude about the negro. On one hand some people consider him merely as a laborer; on the other they think of him as a deadly enemy.

"The labor attitude is formed previous experience with natives who are content with any level of pay.

The notorious pass laws, for example are remnants of an era, when the whites tried to keep the negro labor force in its place."

"Among some whites he said there is a loudly asserted belief in the superiority of the white race as such and a contempt of the non-European. All segregation was originally intended to prevent the people meeting socially. There is a passionate feeling against anything which may lead to intermarriage."

He pointed out that the acts of Christian groups were incompatible with the truths they teach.

"The Samaritan in the story of compassion was the early equivalent of a colored person."

He showed that whites professed brother love and worshiped white supremacy in face of the Second Commandment.

Prof. Keppel-Jones explained

Prof. A. M. Keppel-Jones

actions of the South African government. "In the face of the philosophical tradition of the Western world the system has no logical defence. Therefore you do not allow free discussions in education. Every opinion

No Coop Dividends

Student members of the St. Michael's College Cooperative restaurant will lose out this year on dividends given annually from the Coop business profits.

The Coop, however, will break even this month, with a small profit—but no dividends.

Coop manager Dick Napoli explained why: "A conscientious effort is made to keep the prices really low," he said.

"Probably we could still declare a return on this year's business; but we are operating under a deficit from last year which we would like to pay off in part."

The audits are made each November. Traditionally, coupons with the dividend returns are handed out in the last month of Coop business.

The coupons entitle the student to free goods in proportion to the amount of business he has given the coffee shop earlier in the year.

Student manager Napoli said, "In the past they tried to do too much; membership days with exceptionally reduced prices, regular prices for the members at a level below the ordinary, and a dividend at the end."

He urged those members interested to attend a general meeting to be held early in April.

Meanwhile, "the Coop still has the lowest priced hamburger on campus," he said.

Fraternity Integrates 1st Negro Members

The Phi Delta Epsilon medical fraternity has successfully integrated itself by admitting Negro members.

The formerly all Jewish fraternity decided in the spring of 1959 to inaugurate a completely non-sectarian pledging program which was completed this weekend with the admission of two Negro members.

Pledge Master Ted Tulchinsky (III Meds) pointed out that the decision to integrate was taken before the discrimination incident in the fall.

"There were absolutely no incidents during the pledging program," Tulchinsky said. "A few of the usual arguments were advanced against the program, but these were overwhelmed by the majority of the members."

"It was mainly a matter of setting a precedent in the fraternity," he said.

"We are assuring the continuation of the policy by making sure all pledges agree with the program."

"Many of the students in our fraternity were intellectually repelled by the situation as it previously was. I feel that there is this latent feeling in most U of T fraternities."

"All it takes is a few people in the fraternity to get things started and most of the members will back them up," he said.

"The purpose of publicizing this," Tulchinsky said, "was to show that such a project can, has been undertaken, and has succeeded. Any group undertaking this policy, however must make it clear to all parties that incidents might occur, and that they should be advised to pay no attention to them."

In a letter to The Varsity, Tulchinsky said, "I would be more than happy to discuss the problems involved with any members of other fraternities who are considering undertaking a similar project in the coming year so that the problems that do arise can be foreseen."

It was shown that the feeling by Canadians they are non-discriminatory was slightly questionable when it is realized that most of the fraternities in the United States are integrated, he said.

The fraternity feels that their successful program will be an example for open minded fraternities to follow.

Old Boys Ice Hockey

The University of Toronto School's Old Boy's Association celebrated its 50th anniversary this Friday.

Highlights of the festivities will be an Old Boy's Hockey game, in Varsity Arena at 8 p.m., Friday.

And this year there will be exciting relay races of lower school boys, hockey games between the house teams of the school for their points competition, a figure skating program by some young performers, lucky number draws, and selections by the school band.

Besides this the girls' hockey teams of St. Clements School and Havergal College will meet again in their traditional high spirited rivalry with St. Clements' unbeaten record at stake.

Finally the first UTS school team will try to break a string of victories by a selected team of old boys.

Officials feel that a high standard of competition assures a "full evening's entertainment".

Idea behind the night is "fellowship and fund raising".

The Old Boy's Association's ability to support the school and meet the increasing cost of obligations centers largely on the success of the hockey night.

Tickets are on sale at Varsity Arena.

'Mac Thinking Of TV Course

HAMILTON (CUP) — McMaster University may be the first Canadian University to offer credit courses on television.

The university announced last week that the role of television in academics must be inquired into, and McMaster is "very interested in this."

Officials said "we see a possible place for television in extension work."

No Canadian universities give formal instruction for academic credit so far, although this method is used in some US centres.

The shows could be taped or kinescoped, and shipped across Canada for use.

Meanwhile a series of experimental educational programs was launched in Hamilton last week, by a local TV station.

Two of the programs will deal with a pair of departments at McMaster.

The final one will be a discussion on education in Ontario universities with University of Toronto President Claude T. Bisell, Dr. Murray Ross, President of the newly formed York University, Dr. MacLachlan of OAC-OVC-Mac, and Dr. G. P. Gilmore of McMaster.

Moscow Youth

By PAUL UNTERBERG

Students in the Soviet Union were very interested in the West, just as we were interested in their country. We talked to them for hours in the cafes, on the streets and in the parks. When we spoke to someone, it was almost certain that friends passing by would stop and join the group when they saw we were foreigners.

I should like to point out the freedom with which I was allowed to explore Moscow. My wife and I spent the whole month of June, and part of the month of October there, and not once were we prevented from looking at something or staying as long as we wished. We were not led about, but wandered without a guide. To the best of my knowledge we were never followed.

We spoke to many Russians. Some of them were altogether afraid to speak to us. But these were a small minority. Most seemed very eager to converse with foreigners. I had crammed a night course in Russian before leaving and learnt a good deal more every day, by simply being forced to make myself understood. I made many mistakes, some of them probably amusing. Many of the Russians, particularly the students, spoke some English or French, and that made things easier.

We were astounded at how much they resembled Canadian or American youth. They were interested in exams, international politics, clothes, their jobs after graduation, jazz, women, summer vacations, and how to get a ticket to a champion soccer match. Many of them complained about the restrictions on travel which allowed only the rare exception to leave his native land. Others complained about the liberty of the press, but in an overwhelming majority they were behind their present form of government. Even those who complained about some of the restrictions, were unquestionably convinced that their present Communist government was the system which would bring them ever better conditions of life.

These students, and their elders, are justly proud of the Soviet Union's achievements in science and education. I was travelling on the Trans Siberian railway from Tashkent to Moscow when the Lunik first hit the moon. The train nearly went mad. Vodka, which flows freely enough in any case, was drunk tumbler-wise in celebration. People sang, yelled and congratulated one another as though it were a personal victory for each one of them. For this too they thank their government.

It is true that there are in Moscow certain groups who try to emulate some of our not very desirable Western "teddy boys". To these students, everything American is fine and desirable. They want to wear only American clothes, without looking at the quality; American is what matters. They want to hear only American jazz or "rock'n'roll". How terribly disappointed they were when they discovered that I unfortunately had never

FOLKSONGSTRESS

A hastily arranged and very, very special noon hour concert has been arranged for tomorrow in Hart House.

The artist is MARTHA SCHLAMME, who is in town all this week preparing for her concert in Eaton Auditorium Saturday night. She is a folksinger, but no ordinary folksinger, she. She is about as different from Odetta and such people as she could be, and still be a folksinger.

With accompanist Tanja Gould, she performs in the folk medium with a combination of classical voice training, character portrayal and insight into the cultures and nationalities which give her her repertoire. She is quite a sight to behold.

The concert is at 1.15 p.m., in the East Common Room, and it's for members of Hart House only — that is, just men. She is, by the way, quite a beauty.

"Laws are made so people can be silenced if they get too obnoxious. They allow the government to by-pass the courts, those outmoded remnants of liberalism."

He pointed out how the loop holes in the legislation were fixed up. There were laws against mixed bathing, but racial separation extended only to the high-tide limit.

When this was discovered the legislature extended the ban to the legal three mile limit.

He examined the accusations hurled by the white supremacists at the negro.

He concluded the so-called accusations were only grains of truth.

The African is in his present state because they are "forced" to go hungry and dwell in slums, in most cases, without enough water to wash.

He illustrated one of the reformers' dilemmas in South Africa. "If all are given votes you would have political chaos. This deplorable condition is not entirely due to the whites. It is just one vicious circle," he added.

"The situation is absolutely impossible on the present basis. The only hope is to forget them as groups and work it out on individual levels," he said:

Principles of friendship are difficult to apply because apartheid has made contact between races difficult, artificial and self-conscious.

"There tends to be an attitude of here we are . . . isn't it wonderful . . . I'm white, your black etc . . . This is hardly the basis for non-discrimination," he said.

In Musical Engineering"

Music To . . .

—Walter

Enter A Brave New World

The recent opening of the Electronic Music Studio on Divison St. puts Toronto in a conspicuous place on the musical map. A university grant made possible the purchase and construction of generators, stereophonic recording machines, filters and a multichannel tape recorder to be used in electronic composition. The centre which has already been deluged by applications from composers who want to work there is the fifth of its kind in the world, the second in North America.

From the first mentions of "electronic music" 10 years ago theorists have jumped to typewriters to tell the world of the inhumanity of certain musical crackpots. Even the most superficial study of the latest developments will show that questions such as "Will electronic music replace the orchestra?" or "Can a machine replace the expression of the human voice?" are academic and irrelevant.

The kind of "electronic music" that musicians worthy of the name have taken an interest in is embodied in the Toronto studio. This is primarily a composition laboratory: a sound element like the note of a piano, a tone made by an oscillator, a drop of water is molded as a sculptor molds a piece of clay. The composer changes the characteristics of the sound—its pitch, timbre, intensity, attack and duration. The tapes' variable speed changes not only the tempo but the spectrum; filters can affect the timbre; the many channels of the tape recorder can be synchronized, reversed, cut, and mounted. He can pass the sound through an echo chamber and remove the reverberation if the results are unsatisfactory.

The most important piece of equipment at the $50,000 Toronto laboratory is a sixteen channel tape recorder developed by Dr. H. LeCaine at the National Research Council. A track of "white noise"— a random series of beeps and tones produced by the oscillator and generators—is placed on one of the channels which is capable of infinite variations of speed and the results can then be isolated on another channel. These in turn can all be combined and/or reversed on other channels. In a matter of minutes the composer can judge whether the results are listenable.

Dr. Myron Schaeffer, who along with Professor Harry Olnick form the staff, under the supervision of Dr. Arnold Walter, demonstrated several compositions each based on a track of white noise. From a high frequency oscillator beep and a low grinding pulse from the generator, Dr. Schaeffer has composed a completely listenable piece of music for an Indian ballet. The throbbing beat, speeded up and slightly purified in the finished product combines with the eerie beep to give the music a raw, primitive quality which no orchestral instrument can hope to reproduce. The music can immediately be matched with surrealistic choreography and finds a place in the mainstream of the back-to-the-primitive movement in modern dance.

A point emphasized by this correspondent and with which Dr. Schaeffer quickly concurred is that electronic music in its present state cannot be listened to for its own sake. The development of electronic music is closely allied to the German idea of Gebräuchtmusik—music for use. It is very significant that most of the compositions in this medium have been used as a supplement to visual communication, in ballet, motion pictures and television. Dr. Schaeffer is currently working on the considerable possibilities of this new music in mental therapy. So the music lovers' fears that they will one day go to a concert hall to hear a machine are unfounded considering the ideological sources of the new medium.

The history of music in the Twentieth Century has tended toward the development of electronically processed sounds. The introduction of the complaint that the confounded Victrola had little similarity to live music. The listening public has long been accustomed to having its music changed or processed electronically, by radios and record players. It's about time that composers faced the hard fact that what we hear on our record players is something quite other than what the composer intended in the score. This dichotomy paves the way for electronic music—composers will now consider this difference, learn to control it and be able to handle it creatively.

music producing equipment elicited

The musicians connected with the Toronto centre are very sensitive about any publicity for fear they will be misunderstood. Arm-chair philosophers immediately conclude that musicians are at cross purposes when they tackle the tape recorder. The opposite is true: if they don't study electronic music they will be ignoring the particular musical experience of all those who own radios. Electronic music is the great, logical expansion which composers have often hoped for. The famous pianist Busoni said, at the turn of the century, that nothing really new could happen to music as long as it was "imprisoned in traditional instruments."

Atonal music is, in a way, an abortive attempt to contradict Busoni. In the past 50 years attempts have been made to increase the scope of some instruments—the huge quarter-tone piano with two keyboards and five pedals could never have been expected to last as a workable innovation. The violin literature sounds tortuous, unnatural for the instrument. At the risk of overstating the case, one could almost say that a lot of modern music sounds as if the composers had a deep-rooted hatred for the instruments of the orchestra.

It would seem then, that electronic music could satisfy one of the obvious needs of modern music. But this does not assure its future. Much of the interest that musicians show in the new medium must pass as mocking curiosity. It is much more likely that musicians will ruin the chances of electronic music, much more than the other way around. The scientific complications of the new instrument require that the composer be a top-notch engineer as well, a rare combination. The practical applications of electronic music have not as yet produced anything of symphonic genius. As the combination of totally premeditated sounds it is useless in jazz—good, improvised jazz, that is. But if enough musicians take the journey to the unfeeling territory of the tape-recorder electronic music should soon grow out of the Salvador Dali stage, provided that its lunatic fringe can be kept locked in laboratories.

Concert Tonight

The vista in the Great Hall of Hart House will be even more splendid than usual tonight with the American contralto Claramae Turner featured in a CBC Celebrity Concert.

Described as "a rare artist of voluptuous voice and stunning presence" (or was it stunning voice and voluptuous presence?—well, both are correct), she is one of the very few good contraltos of the day. Reviews of her concerts read like a glossary of the superlatives of the English language; in New York, it was her "majestic and fiery expression"; in Cincinnati, she was "vocally, physically, historically, operatically, one of the greatest Delilahs of our time and clime."

Miss Turner's artistry is a far-reaching thing. She seems forever to be seeking new facets of her leading ladies' personalities; she makes of every performance a portrait, memorable in depth and dimension.

Her career has ranged from the Metropolitan, San Francisco and Chicago operas to the motion picture Carousell, and from appearances with Toscanini to the creation of the title role in Menotti's The Medium. She began her current season with Stravinsky's Oedipus Rex under Leopold Stokowski at the New York City Opera.

She was born American—in a little California town named, of all things, Eureka—and she has reversed the usual trend of singers gaining experience in Europe and then appearing in America.

In her case this was no handicap—she draws huzzahs wherever she goes.

Tonight's concert begins promptly at 8:30 p.m., and as usual half of it will be broadcast on the national network. Tickets are free, that's F-R-E-E, at the Hall Porter's Desk in Hart House, and are available to men and women alike, with no discrimination, no need for an escort, etc. The Hall Porter is there all day.

It reads like a satire on Communism, but the news article was right there in black and white. 10,000 Russian he-women were awarded the title "Heroine of Socialist Labor" in honor of their "outstanding role in the development of the Soviet State." God, they'll be unbearable.

Probably less than 50 of you have ever seen a Students' Administrative Council meeting. You should. The representatives sit around and read letters to each other. They talk about ratifying things and proclaiming things and, when they get real brave, they may condemn things. At most meetings there is an audience of two, both from The Varsity. There's a meeting tonight. It's your government. Why not get out there and do a little democratic heckling?

In a dark, dilapidated barn-house on Asquith Ave, a respectable cross section of campus literati Monday night launched a popular form of entertainment—a vocal magazine—which we hope will gain momentum and character. After deluding even this correspondent with come-ons of 'jazz poetry', intimations of espresso and intoxicating ambiguities about tea, six healthy men dressed in rhyming outfits read white collar poetry. The real success of the evening was that some of the material heard suggested that it would suffer if read.

No—there wasn't a live jazz background, and the only fanatics were in the audience. A few bearded men and glazed women stumbled out mumbling something like "bores and squares". Weak wristed boys slopped up their cups of instant chicory waiting for the jazzmen to show. But most of us settled back against a painting to hear the writers out.

Emcee Michael John Nimchuck who co-edits the magazine with John Robert Colombo had the difficult job of introducing the program, reading four of his poems. The only member of the troupe suffering from butterflies, his short twists of poetry called for a light, aphoristic presentation which, under the circumstances he could not provide. This was evident in his delightful 'Zoo's Who', where he put us all in a cage and threw a few happy thoughts at us.

Warren Wilson's Endgame Revisited, a short play, broke the ice and threw the audience into an analytic stream. This hilarious spoof of Samuel Beckett opened with the author addressing John Harasti, the green colored second actor sitting immobile, with the words "But two months dead". The first loud bellow of the evening was followed by a skilfully contrived take-off on Beckett's hyper-self-conscious characters. It was all very funny, even for those who hadn't heard of Samuel Beckett. But more than that it evoked the fickle spirit of Waiting for Godot, bred into the Endgame characters, Clov and Hamm.

In Beckett, nothing happens; yet somehow a great deal happens; he is laughable and heartbreaking, ridiculous and tragic, all at the same time. Of course the laughable was emphasized for burlesque purposes: "Do you hear my Credo?" "No, no, no, sum!" But Beckett was heartbreaking, he was John Robert Colombo, an angry J the audience with the universe". He was the oral patterns of the poems conveyed an effect.

A Child Prodigy

by Terry Bourke

She's quite a gal . . .

Her name is Pierrette Ethel Marie Lepage.

Pierrette still remembers that day in Quebec City, 12 years ago.

She should; she made history.

It was a warm spring night. There was the concert hall, stately in age, and Quebec's largest. And that evening people from every part of the city and surrounding districts were pouring through its huge front doors.

Excited talk about a young musical prodigy rippled through the first night audience.

A full hour before the concert performance began, the building was jammed.

The program read: "A RECITAL by PIERRETTE LEPAGE." That's all.

The curtain rose, and a girl not much bigger than a pixie walked confidently on stage. When she seated herself at the piano, it was all she could do to make her fingers reach the extreme low and high keys.

It didn't handicap her.

From the moment her fingers touched the ivories, Pierrette Lepage captivated the hall under a magic of musical charm.

Her performance was brilliant. Critics talked about it for many days.

Quebec had never seen anything like it.

That was the way it was—a long time ago.

She was eight then.

Now she's 20, still pixieish in figure, and a third year student at St. Michael's College.

She has never stopped thrilling her audiences; and her talent with the keys has literally shot her up the scale of success until she now remembers another night.

This time in Toronto—at the top; a guest billing as soloist for the Toronto Symphony Orchestra in Massey Hall. Critics who know call her one of the best, not only in Toronto, but in the country.

Talk about music, especially classical music, and Pierrette Lepage's ebony eyes glisten with love.

Music is her life, and, in some ways Pierrette herself is music.

Pierrette Ethel Marie Lepage is a child prodigy. Besides this, people who have worked with her, people who have taught her the musical ropes, say she's a genius. She won't admit it.

"The word genius is a very hazy term," she laughed. "I can't tell you I'm a genius no matter what people may say or think. A genius at twenty. No. Genius comes with old age. "As a matter of fact I think all this harangue about genius has done me more harm than good," she continued. "Fellow students in the musical faculty, I am afraid, are reluctant to join me in recitals," she pouted.

Anyway you look at it, being a genius, having the reputation of being a genius, or having it rumoured you a genius, sometimes makes life a little awkward.

"Some of my friends," she says, "have queer notions over me. They seem happy when they see I can actually talk normally. Appear crazy? But it's true. It's true."

Here are the facts about her early life. They show her with a stratospheric IQ.

At 18 months most persons are just steadying themselves on their feet, let alone talking. Earlier than that Pierrette could not only speak, but sing songs.

She played her first tune on the piano when she was three and a half.

"Mom took me to the nearby convent to take lessons.

When the mother superior there told my parents I probably would never play well because I couldn't concentrate—I burst into tears."

The tears soon dried. And mother superior's prediction fell flat. At four Pierrette was reading music, before she had learned to print.

Three years later she gave her first solo recital in front of the foot lights.

The rest of her story has been in lights—bright lights.

The Ottawa Philharmonic Orchestra asked her back twice, after critics raved over her interpretation of the Mozart Concerto, one of the toughest pieces in classical music. She was twelve.

She has something to say about Mozart—in a philosophic vein. "I find him hard to play now. He's meant to be played while you're under twenty."

"Why?" we wondered.

"Simple. So much of his music is uncomplicated. And when we're young, we're always uncomplicated. No?"

Pierrette's talk is spiced with nous. Like any true-blue French Canadian, she automatically tucks them on the end of each sentence.

"What happens inside the concert pianist, just before curtain time?" we asked.

Pierrette looked up, fidgeted with her necklace. "I don't like to say this," she explained, "but it's sheer hell. In the half hour before any performance my body is tied in a knot of jitters. You don't know. You could never know. Sitting on the edge of my seat is like sitting on the edge of a cliff. You feel sick—only not from looking down."

"But this ends suddenly," she adds. It's OK after I strike the first key. Then everything is calm. The audience isn't there. Only the music. I like to play whole movements. When you play only parts there's never time to get what you might call a grip on the music. In short you can't project with all you've got—musically that is.

"How do you know if the audience is with you?"

"You don't," she snapped. "The secret is—play well and . . . pray. It's like giving a speech. Either the audience is put to sleep, or you hold them in the palm of your hand. If someone snores, the recital is dull. It's as simple and perfect as that."

"Has anyone ever snored on you?" we asked.

She blushed.

"No. If someone did—well, no one told me about it."

Pierrette has soft brown hair, set with efficient neatness, in cute wavy curls.

Her face is small, oval, and tinged with a flush of pink.

And something else. She's prettier without glasses.

"Musicians, and artists in general, are noted for their weird and sometimes hot temperaments. Are you temperamental?"

"Yes. But of course." She thought for a second. "I have the ups and downs. They are hard to explain. I just need understanding friends, I guess."

Pierrette and her family moved to Toronto several years ago. Her first stop was the University of Toronto Music Conservatory.

The professors heard her give little more than a few bars on the piano. That was all they needed. She was immediately offered a $400 scholarship, if she would stay with the conservatory.

She stayed.

The reason: to do post graduate work. She had already earned her "Musback", or Bachelor of Music, when she was eleven. Most students get it when they reach their late twenties.

There are sorrows in Pierrette's life. One of them is Alberto Guerrero, her tutor, who died earlier this year.

She spoke of him with reverence one shows a Pope.

"We were very close friends. As far as I am concerned he was the greatest teacher in Canada. He guided me through the five most important years of my musical development. No one can take his place."

"I know I'll have to find another teacher. But in awhile. I'm too emotional to switch or shuffle teachers just like that."

Pierrette's voice is soft and sure. If you listen hard enough, the slightest strain of a French accent peeps through. Her first contact with English was in an Ottawa high-school. She picked it up fast.

And what's in store for her next year? She answers. "Who knows, it could be anything. Maybe Europe. I'm sure of this. I intend to go on playing music forever."

What about the controversial mixture of career and marriage. Do they fuse?" we queried.

"I suppose so. Yes . . . they do. If I get married and try to carve out a career at the same time, no one has to tell me it's not going to be easy. I'm not kidding myself. Oh yes, he'd have to be interested in music, or I should think the whole thing impossible unless . . ."

"But then I'll probably end up marrying a dentist who doesn't know anything but jazz. Here's a second thought. I think it would be better not to marry a musician. They're so neurotic."

"Is there a boy friend?"

She grinned, tidied her hair, looked down at the floor for a second.

"I don't want to embarrass anybody. Let's say I have lots of friends; and I always manage to have a good time wherever I am."

Life has been good to Pierrette Ethel Marie Lepage. She has many things; beauty, charm, and a truck-load of talent.

But she lacks one thing; time. Her life is a perpetual green light. She's always on the go, caught by the heels in a seemingly endless whirl of concerts, recitals, parties, dances, and show.

"Dear God," she says, "grant me one thing—longer weekends. When musicians and college students get together, well, it's an unbeatable combination. The parties are gayer and the dances livelier. Weekends are never long enough, never. But I'm not the only one."

"Something else," she beamed. "My parents and teachers say I waste time at parties when I could be practising. Fine. But parties aren't made. Most of the time they just pop-up. I can't get out of them. I don't want to get out of them. Anyway, who can refuse a party. Can you. No? I thought so."

Not all of Pierrette's time is spent under the lights or at parties. She has other academic subjects to study besides music. She doesn't find them dull, but then, music is music.

Her hobby; cooking. "I putter around in the kitchen. The thing I do really well is pastry. And that's all. Somehow, I have an inkling my family wouldn't be in the mood for pastry seven days a week."

Last summer she visited Europe. She didn't go near a piano. It was a rest. And being French, it was only natural France should capture her heart. "In Paris there is something I thought never existed before, but it is there. Maybe the atmosphere, maybe . . ."

The romantic composers—Schuman, Liszt, Chopin—are her favorites. She compares them with modern composers. "Modern music is too intellectual. Schoenberg, for example. His music cannot be enjoyed. It's like a math problem; and I don't like maths. Art is to be enjoyed, not figured out."

Some of the most pleasurable moments in Pierrette's life are spent in a tiny carrel at the Conservatory. The little booth is equipped with earphones, and Pierrette sits by the hour listening to the great operas from the past centuries.

If you happen to pass by that way, you'll know how the music is affecting her. It will be written there—the expression on her face.

At one point we offered her a cigarette. She refused.

"I smoke cigars. Or at least I once did. A girl friend brought some back from Cuba. I tried them; they weren't half bad."

Quite a gal, this Pierrette Lepage.

Quite a gal . . .

U of T English Dept Wants Plain English

The University of Toronto English department is among those who have protested against the shortening of the title of a Shakespearean period play which is slated to open next week in Toronto.

The play, fully titled "Tis Pity She's a Whore," was written in England about the time of Shakespeare. It was a recent off-Broadway hit in New York. The English department accused the play's producer, Eric Greenwood of tampering with the title of a classic.

Publicity ads in a morning paper ran the play's full title. The paper then received a deluge of complaints about the title.

In future the title will be run in smaller type, but will still be run in full. Several telephone calls have been received from residents in the area of the Lansdowne Theatre where the play will open. They asked that the title of the play be changed.

At first Greenwood advertised the play as "Tis Pity". This is the "tampering" which the English department protested.

acquired a taste for this kind of music, and therefore didn't even know how to "rock'n'roll". But these students, called stillagi, are a minority, just as zootsuits were a minority here. As our educators devote considerable attention to the problem, so Soviet educators devote attention to this "lost youth".

They commented on the American refusal to take part in the Vienna Youth Festival. "What harm can it do for young people from all over the world to get together and come to know one another?" they asked. And I think they hit the nail on the head. For they were very much like us. They want a world of peace where they can grow up, work, have fun, raise a family. There may be differences between our systems; we may not see eye to eye on some things, but if we get together, talk about it, discuss it, we may not come to a solution, but we will probably not fight about it. That is what most of them seemed to be saying and it sounded very much akin to what we ourselves were saying.

Criticize Colleges Bissell Urges

University of Toronto President Claude T. Bissell last night told the Peterborough U of T Alumni Branch that a critical approach towards large universities is "healthy and desirable."

"It would be smugness to suggest that we have nothing to fear from bigness," he said. "Bigness is a danger in the world of business and government, and an even greater danger in education."

Dr. Bissell said it constituted an even greater danger in higher education where "the ultimate educational process is the direct communication between one mind and another."

However, he made it clear that large universities have certain assets, physical resources which no small university can hope to contain.

He said a small university can get along with a library of 200,000 volumes, but that a larger institution aspiring to carry out concentrated research work "should have at a minimum a library of 1,000,000 volumes."

Dr. Bissell said the freshman may find the large university's atmosphere "far too heady and bewildering. For him it is of the utmost importance that he be conscious of belonging to a community which his mind can encompass and in which he can feel at home."

He said the University of Toronto, with its system of federated colleges, was a "built-in guarantee against some of the dangers of a monolithic university."

He said in the expansion program he proposed to expand the college system so there would be multi-faculty and residential colleges, modelled on Oxford and Harvard.

Big Grant For U of T Medic

A $30,000 five year grant has been awarded to Dr. John Evans, a fellow in the department of medicine of the University of Toronto.

The scholarship, announced yesterday, carries a $30,000 grant over five years to supplement the scholars support and aid his research.

During the five year period Dr. Evans will lecture in internal medicine and undertake a research project to study the function of the heart on an experimental basis.

Dr. Evans is chief resident physician at Toronto General Hospital and is one of four Canadians among 25 medical scientists appointed Markle Scholarships in Medical Science by the John and Mary R. Markle Foundation of New York.

Bicycle - Borrowing And Late-Night Drinking: Life With The Natives At Cambridge

By Robert Eddison

Our landlady was missing her bicycle. "Oi don't know if one of the undergrads 'as borrowed it loik or whether someone 'as stolen it," she said.

Even if an undergraduate had purloined her machine for an indefinite period, she would be careful to use the euphemism "borrow" as it would be inconceivable to her that any of her "young men" would actually steal her bicycle.

This careful choice of words nicely illustrates the enormous gulf at Cambridge between the undergraduate population on the one hand and the townsfolk on the other. The university is not absorbed, as in London, by the town and it is fascinating at Cambridge to see two gentlemen" would actually steal her bicycle.

This anecdote was related by the opposition some days later during the Presidential debate, much to the discomfiture of Mr. Vane-Trumplington whose speech lacked the coherence that one expects from a retiring President. Generally, however, the standard of public speaking at Cambridge is very high, as the tone is set by a constant influx of distinguished visitors from all walks of life.

The operative word here is "all," as Cambridge's far-flung interests result in the issuing of invitations to anybody, from a cabinet minister to the principal of a nudist colony. The last nudist speaker to be invited arrived a little early; as he had to be entertained, he was taken (mercifully fully-clothed) for a punt-trip down the Cam river.

After about an hour, he complained of feeling uncomfortable in his clothes, and found himself punted radically different ways of life co-existing (but not co-mixing) within the same community.

Perhaps the only person with a foot in both camps is the long-suffering Cambridge landlady. Without her Cockney humour, hers would be an impossible job. Officially, she is appointed by the University to control back to the wharf with great alacrity. He was a chain smoker and even smoked while making his speech, strewing the lighted cigarette stubs all around him on the wooden platform.

After apologising for not stamping them out, he excused himself on the ground that if he did, the habit would stick and he would find himself doing it when in the nude, with somewhat painful consequences. Cambridge understood.

First-Floor

it is not itself in print.

Michael John Nimchuck's 'The Armoured Butterflies' a 'morality play' in his words, an 'immorality play' as Warren Wilson describes it. It was more of a dramatic reading with archetypal roles for man and woman. Reminiscent of Feiffer's cartoons, the banter went from "He just wants my body" to "Why doesn't she smarten up". But it was a little more penetrating and remedial than Feiffer. Holly Jordane and John Morley did their best, sight reading the script. Morley's resonant voice could conceal more; Miss Jordane garbled a few lines, including her punchline, but as an attractive woman, had all that it takes for the purpose of play and author.

The impersonal characters used every stylization to convey the oppressive sameness of these seemingly shallow attitudes. The play builds powerfully if roughly with both parties gaining momentum. Suddenly the gears are shifted and the roles reverse—it is the man who wants fidelity, the woman is flighty. But not for long—soon the moral emerges. Man must love in the way woman wants him to love. Marriage—carriage. The play could have been much more forceful, with a bit of staging and memory work. a

All in all a notable accomplishment which packed two full houses this week. The series will continue next Tuesday, March 15, with new material and new writers.

medievally speaking

Last week-end dragged out for a lot of St. Michael's girls, those in St. Joseph's residence. From Friday night until Monday, no phone calls were allowed in or out of the residence. Nobody talked to anybody. There were no leaves. The days were spent listening to what one SMC girl called "lectures on purity, morality and theology" and in meditation and the occasional silent and organized walk.

The yearly weekend "retreat" was compulsory for all girls in the college. Many of them didn't like it.

A girl told me of a lecture on purity given one year on "nylon blouses and how pernicious they are."

Well, at least the clerical administration didn't have the poor girls knitting leper bandages.

christopher jones, discwise

Katy Cruel had University College to pick from for its talent, for the most part. Christopher Jones had the whole campus plus the CBC and various other outside groups. That's why Christopher shows a polish that Katy Cruel didn't.

Christopher Jones is on record too. Smothered in my enthusiasm for the artistic merits of Katy Cruel as a piece of poetry and music, I forgot temporarily what a professionally produced show should sound like. That certain gloss, that professional touch shows up on the Christopher Jones recording even more than in the stage version. It's good music, enjoyable time after time.

And think of the many pleasant hours you can spend, if you're inclined towards musical puzzles, in comparing the numbers to My Fair Lady and Music Man.

The price is right ($3) and includes a handsome jacket and liner notes which the Katy record lacked. Both records, as examples of the best U of T can offer, belong in your collection.

They are available from any member of the cast, or from Lee Richardson, AVR Publicity Director, at WA. 4-2816.

women in hart house

Hart House publishes a little list for freshmen containing things that women are allowed to enjoy in Hart House. They include Sunday evening concerts, Wednesday recitals, art lectures, some debates, chapel privileges, some library evenings and most annoying of all, Arbor Room rights every day after 2 p.m. (when some of us are just getting up) and all day Saturday.

Here are some points:

- (a) Hart House was intended to be a place for males to enjoy themselves alone.
- (b) Male undergraduates of the university pay fees to Hart House.
- (c) Female undergraduates do not pay these fees.

CONCLUSION: They should be banned from Hart House.

the ghosts

Last week New York District Attorney Frank Hogan raided four ghost-writing agencies to determine whether college students have been getting their papers and theses written for them by professionals.

The raid followed a statement by newspaperman Alec Benson who cracked the ghost-writing business. Benson said college students paid anywhere from $50 to $350 for a term paper researched and given a professional gloss.

Certainly would make life around here easier.

the moment of truth

This takes a real imagination. It's a news story, reprinted from the annual gag issue of the McMaster Silhouette:

A distinguished American scholar will begin lecturing at this university next September. University officials announced today that Charles Van Doren, confessed contest-cheater, will take up lecturing duties in September.

Mr. Van Doren will lecture to first year students only. The course, which will be part of the English prerequisite, will be called "Honesty in English."

University officials are considering having Mr. Van Doren take on two graduate students interested in majoring in quiz shows.

Propose Increase In SAC Prexy's Powers

The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night set up a committee to consider an amendment to council's constitution giving its president powers to act outside council meetings.

The committee will study recommendations proposed by SAC president Walter McLean at the meeting. He proposed that the president be empowered to:

—direct any commission or committee of council to execute council policies coming within that commission's powers.

—act with executive committee approval on behalf of policy where action is immediately necessary and can not await a council meeting, and —suspend temporarily any council member or council activity provided that council be informed of the action at a special closed meeting within three days and sooner if possible.

McLean originally submitted these recommendations to council as notice of a proposed constitutional amendment, but changed them to recommendations to a committee when a number of councillors expressed doubt about them.

Under normal procedure, a constitutional amendment is voted on two meetings after first proposed. There is only one more council meeting this year—a joint meeting of the 1959-60 and 1960-1 SAC's.

SAC chairman Claude Brodeur said there is now a "gap" between meetings when the executive is unable to act if a councillor overreaches his powers or fails to fulfil his duties.

University College representative Mike Sherman said he "certainly would not support" giving the president power to fire councillors. Sherman's reasons were "obvious", he said.

Before McLean changed his constitutional amendment notice to a recommendation to a committee, Sherman said the three-meeting rule would put the proposal for decision to an early meeting of next year's council.

"It will seem to next year's council that the resolution has been discussed and approved" by the 1959-60 council, he said.

The committee set up to consider the amendments will report to the joint meeting two weeks Wednesday.

It will be chaired by Law representative Desmond O'Rourke and include U.C.'s Sherman, A. J. Earp, Trinity dean of residence and registrar and SAC faculty advisor, chairman Brodeur and president McLean.

THE HONORABLE PAUL MARTIN, former Minister of Health and Welfare, makes a point at a meeting of the U of T Liberal Club Wednesday night in Wymilwood, Victoria College. See story, page 7. VSP by Harpur.

SAC Will Join Rights Plea

The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night voted to back the Toronto and District Labor Committee for Human Rights in its fight to end racial segregation in apartment houses and other dwellings.

Council said its name could be put forward as backing a Human Rights Committee brief and promised to send a representative or representatives to join a delegation to the Metropolitan Toronto Council shortly.

Alan Borovoy, an official of the committee, addressed council and said the brief would call for:

—changes in the Ontario Fair Accommodations Act making it apply to apartment houses and other residences containing many self-contained living units but not boarding houses—it now applies to such establishments as hotels and restaurants—and —changes in the federal National Housing Act barring racial and religious criteria from being used to reject occupants of dwellings built with public funds.

Borovoy said the St. Catharines and Windsor city councils and a number of religious and other bodies have gone on record as backing the committee.

Debaters Lose Try At Execution Abolition

A debate on capital punishment held at Loretto College last night marked with readings of immortal prose and Greek aphorisms, concluded that the institution should be retained.

Lizzie Borden took an axe
And gave her mother forty whacks;
And when she saw what she had done
She gave her father forty-one.
Such argument marked the speeches of the government, Mary Holt and John McGoey. Somewhat more persuasive arguments came from the opposition, Edie Smith and Mike Pare, who won the debate 19-15. They spoke to a theme from from Gilbert and Sullivan's Mikado:

My object all sublime
I shall achieve in time
To let the punishment fit the crime.

The first government speaker John McGoey (I SMC) opened with a challenge that the government and citizens are guilty of grave moral evil when they preserve the public order on an outmoded scale, becoming themselves murderers in taking lives despite the fact it is no longer necessary with the alternative of life imprisonment available.

Opposition leader Smith (II SMC) said the system was primarily a "punitive" means which must be retained in fulfillment of divinely delegated justice, which the state must exercise.

Opposition criticism to substitution of imprisonment for execution was refuted by second government speaker Mary Holt (III SMC).

"If we object to this means on humanitarian grounds, then we must reform the prison system not necessarily retain the system," she said.

Mike Pare (I SMC) opened by reading from the label off a chair in the Sing-Sing chamber of executions: "You can be sure if it's Westinghouse". This he felt must bring great comfort to the men.

He went on to defend the institution of capital punishment, saying if the "state exercises mass murder in war and reminds the citizens that it is meritorious by giving medals, how can you deny it the right to take the life of an individual murderer?"

U of A Students March On Gov't

EDMONTON (CUP)—More than 400 University of Alberta students Thursday afternoon marched on the Provincial Legislature demanding construction of resident facilities.

It was the first mass march of university students in Alberta history.

The students, carrying signs and marching in orderly lines, moved at least a mile from the campus to the government grounds. In front of the legislature, they called for the appearance of government ministers.

When no ministers showed, the student mob flowed into the foyer of the government building where they called for Provincial Treasurer E. W. Hinman, and found him.

The night before, Mr. Hinman had told the legislature no new residences would be built at the university in the fiscal year 1960-61. It was an answer students had been hearing since the last official residence went up in 1914.

Several students asked the treasurer if the government planned residence construction in the next two years.

Mr. Hinman said unless residences can be financed by outside sources "the government will study another plan." He also recited the benefits that Alberta students receive from their provincial government.

One student asked Mr. Hinman if the government considered the distribution of Social Credit "dividends," to be more important than an adequately equipped university. Alberta's Social Credit government spent $21,000,000 on "citizens' dividends" before halting the program last year.

Although the student demonstration was orderly throughout, many of Mr. Hinman's remarks were greeted with boos and derision. When he finished speaking, students asked for an opposition member to answer the same questions. As a result of the last provincial election, Alberta has four opposition members, none of whom arrived for the afternoon session.

The demonstration was spontaneous. A few students prepared signs, with messages ranging from "There is Still Time Brother, but Not Much," to "I'm from Karachi, and Might Have to Commute Next Year," but there was no formal organization.

Before marching to the legislature, the demonstrators paraded around campus, recruiting marchers from residences and eating places.

$100 Extra To McLean

The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night voted SAC president Walter McLean an extra $100 for his expense account.

McLean said he needed the money because of unanticipated expenses.

McLean also suggested that council next year consider providing room and board for the SAC president, as is done at McGill and Queen's Universities.

SAC Will Advise On Discipline

The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night heard that its constitution committee has modified student discipline sections in a new council constitution to be submitted to the University of Toronto Caput soon.

The action was taken on the advice of the University solicitor who said sections in the proposed constitution giving SAC disciplinary power were contrary to the Ontario University of Toronto Act.

The solicitor, Hamilton Casel, reports to the university on legal matters.

Caput, the U of T's supreme disciplinary body, must approve the constitution. SAC president Walter McLean said he expects little opposition by Caput to other sections of the new constitution as Caput members seem to regard them as internal SAC matters.

The constitution has been three years in the making by SAC meetings and committees. After deletion of clauses giving council disciplinary powers, council was told, the new section provides the machinery for setting up a committee to investigate comparatively minor breaches of student discipline which reflect on the reputation of the student body.

The committee, it was explained, would make a report and recommendations to the appropriate university or college body the U of T Act charges with disciplinary matters.

The committee would be set up as needed, not on a standing basis.

Its meetings and reports to council would be closed and its documents would be kept secret.

sac at a glance

Before the eyes of a number of those already elected for 1960-1's Students' Administrative Council, SAC Wednesday night: —approved a policy of full-time students drawing SAC salaries without special council approval; —agreed with the finance commission to limit the number of pages in Varsity issues this year to eight, or twelve if approved after 10 days' notice has been given; —decided to publish a free magazine-size freshmen's handbook next year; —refused to pay for haircuts, shoeshines, cigarettes and lost clipboards during the visit of a debating team to Pennsylvania and heard that the debaters would not ask for entertainment expenses if it was kept quiet what kind of entertainment it was; —empowered national affairs chairman Mike Sherman to pick a committee to choose 11 U of T delegates to the National seminar; —heard that said seminar will be at the University of British Columbia, will discuss Canada in world affairs, will include 150 students compared with last year's 50 and will cost these students something; —reappoint the conductor of the Blue and White band who, it was reported, intends to organize his band so well he will be able to give the boot to band members who whoop it up at away football weekends; —heard that a lecture on race relations and a staff-student symposium were successful; —were told that students at the school of Physical and Occupational Therapy think The Varsity should be raised to standard standards; —heard that the Faculty of Dentistry is contributing $100 to the World Refugee Year on the assumption that the campus campaign did not do too well; —didn't hear a word about how the World Refugee Campaign actually did turn out, except that the councillor concerned had told council president McLean earlier in the day he did not know, and —saw Law representative Desmond O'Rourke and Trinity man Dave Tavender almost come to blows about five (count 'em) chocolate cookies O'Rourke had appropriated to his own use.

Watch For The Fence

Don't worry, you have a few more days to fool around before you start studying. The little fence isn't up yet. For years and years and years, somewhere around the beginning of spring, a little wooden fence has been erected around the squishy areas of the front campus, to protect the soon-to-be lush green grass from huge U of T feet. But the fence has a deeper, more significant use. It tells the U of T population that it's time to get cracking. Exams in about a month. Watch for that fence.

AVR Funds $1,700 In Red

The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night refused to raise the pay of this year's All-Varsity Revue orchestra leader to union rates and heard that the AVR deficit has now reached $1,787. Paud Robinson, AVR orchestra leader, has billed council for $180, it was reported. But council decided that a $25 honorarium as originally promised is all he gets. The AVR music arranger will get $200, council decided. It was reported that council had originally budgeted $150, but the job turned out to be bigger than expected, it was reported. Council also agreed to expenditures of $55.75 for damages to the rented AVR piano and $11.28 for the rental of drinking glasses.

Bourke Nails Boq and Zuk Under Library

The Varsity has found the strange zoological specimen called the Boq, loose somewhere on campus. The Boq, which escaped from the custody of the Bella Coola Indians on the West coast of the United States recently, has been terrorizing University of Toronto coeds for more than two weeks. Varsity News Editor Terry Bourke has succeeded in tracking the beast to its lair, however, and interviewing it. The exclusive article on the animal and his mate, the Zuk, will appear in Monday's Varsity. Jacques Roberge even got a photograph of the Boq in action in the stacks. Watch for it.

So, Draft 'Em!

Quebec's Finance Minister has come up with a novel solution to the college students summer employment problems — conscription. J. S. Bourque, a World War I veteran, has suggested college students should be conscripted during the summer months. "This would not only teach the boys discipline, but help bridge the gap between college education and the working life."

Send Aid

(Staff-CUP) -The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night approved sending a $100 cheque to the International Red Cross to aid victims of the earthquake in Agadir, Morocco.

Council will also send its sympathy directly to the Moroccan students.

After SAC finance commissioner Stan Dubas said his commission had not been consulted chairman Claude Brodeur said council's action constitutes only recommendation to the finance commission.

The commission will act if they find council has the money.

The money was voted after council heard a letter from the National Federation of Canadian University Students about the disaster.

An appeal for aid to the victims of the earthquake was received by NFCUS from the National Union of Moroccan Students (UNEM) urgently requesting assistance.

The appeal was forwarded to the Canadian federation by the co-ordinating secretariat (CO-SEC) of national unions of students. Both NFCUS and UNEM are members of this international student association.

So far NFCUS, on behalf of Canadian students and the University Montreal have sent $100 each towards the relief fund. Other assistance is needed, UNEM said, in the form of anti-biotics, anti-tetanus vaccine, or cash donations.

Nfcus French Program

OTTAWA, Mar. 7 (CUP) — Canadian students may live with a French family for 10 days or visit the Côte d'Azur following a summer at the Institute of Political Science at the University of Paris, as part of a program offered by the National Federation of Canadian University Students Travel department, for the first time in nine years.

Students may visit the Côte d'Azur or stay with the French family before or after the 10 day course July 15-31 which tentatively includes such studies as: French foreign policy, contemporary literature and thought, France and Africa, and French politics. Lectures will be in either French or English.

The French family lives in the village of Montargis 108 kilometers south of Paris. During the visit the students will visit farms, see the village administration, and come into contact with the local population. Students visiting the coast will stay at an International Student Centre.

This year the trip is sponsored by the Office du Tourisme Universitaire de France. If enough students take part, NFCUS will undertake a similar one, next year.

Russ Delegation May Visit Canadian U's

The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night agreed in principle to expenditure of $500 plus a few days' room, board and entertainment for a delegation of 10-15 Soviets who may tour Canadian universities next year.

The National Federation of Canadian University Students plans to invite such a delegation to Canada if sufficient university support is indicated by Canadian universities by March 18, a letter from NFCUS read at the meeting said.

Council also acknowledged reception of a letter describing a Soviet Union summer school open to foreign students.

It is sponsored by the Students' Council of the USSR and the Sputnik Bureau on International Youth Travel and will take place in the Crimea and in Moscow July 1-17.

Cost of the program is $100 (United States) plus the cost of meals and transportation from the Soviet Union border to Moscow.

Council president Walter McLean suggested council express its "interest and financial incapacity" with regard to the summer school.

Detailed information on the school for those willing to pay the expenses is available from SAC representatives.

retreat

We sit at our typewriters, in trepidation to discuss retreats, in the attempt to mediate between those who write and those who read on this campus.

Two things need to be said. First about retreats, and then about what was written on retreats in the Odds and Ends column on Wednesday.

What we want to say about retreats is something that anyone was free to conclude on the basis of what information was contained in wkr's column: that although wkr obviously appears to be opposed to retreats for reasons that he does not make very clear, it is just as obvious that a retreat of this kind is a vital spiritual necessity. We can honestly see no objection to a period of silence and personal spiritual isolation (from other people, though not perhaps from God) or to "lectures on purity, morality, and theology". The lectures, we assume, were meant to inform Christians of some of the implications of Christianity that they may or may not have been completely aware of, and as such can hardly be criticized. A critic of Christianity itself, on the other hand, may fairly be expected to state some of the grounds for his criticism, and need only be taken as seriously as these grounds can be taken.

We can say all this, however, without being forced to answer in the negative the question one student asked in a letter: "Have you any right to criticize any creed?"

We cannot honestly see that any creed whatever is exempt from criticism. To lie about a creed is another matter. But the one piece of misinformation that appeared in the column—i.e., that the retreat ended Monday instead of Sunday afternoon when it actually ended, leading to the further mistaken assumption that phone calls were not accepted on Sunday night—can hardly be construed as a lie. The facts on which the criticism were based were largely correct, and it remained possible, as we have said, to decide that on the basis of those very facts the criticism was unjustified.

Furthermore, the only obligation that one has to comply with when one publicly asks a group to justify their creed or explain its basis is to provide an opportunity for them to do so publicly. We have and will continue to comply with that condition.

Such questions, calling forth such answers are a basic condition of free communication. Mutual respect is also a condition of communication. But can men not respect each other without respecting all or any of each others' beliefs?

We do not consider your beliefs, or even ours to be sacred. Only you yourselves are sacred to us.

"Like Morality Should

Since the appearance of the annual gag issue which featured a mock story of Alan Walker's death, The Varsity has received a number of letters criticizing the paper's lack of good taste.

The SAC even saw fit to pass a motion of censure against the editor of the paper for his alleged lack of good taste. But throughout the discussion at the SAC meeting and in the boxfuls of letters that followed, we could find no adequate working definition of what good taste is supposed to be.

This article is an attempt to work towards a definition of "good taste".

Most of the complaints against the Walker story seemed to dwell on the fact that death was not something to be trifled with. Most of the correspondents felt that death was a solemn occasion and should not be trifled with in the pages of a student newspaper.

And there were many who were outraged in the "gag" that had played lightly with their emotions.

It seems that death is one of our taboos. And any jocular reference to it, a lessening of its gravity, is regarded as a breach of "good taste".

Another subject for good taste is language. Every language contains certain common words for parts of the body, excrement and excrementary functions and sexual intercourse. These words form a definite part of the fabric of the common language. Indeed, we have heard some men speak who could not express themselves in a single sentence without incorporating into the sentence some reference to excrement or sexual intercourse.

Yet these words never appear in print. When it was contemplated using a story for the proposed literary issue that contained in it a reference to sexual intercourse used in the form of an epithet, there was a question as to whether this would not leave the paper open to legal action!

At any rate, whatever we privately felt about using the story, we felt it too dangerous for us to print.

Another area where the criterion of "good taste" is consistently applied is the human body. Perennially self-appointed guardians of public morality have demanded that nude paintings be covered up and the local burlesque houses, which emphasize secondary sexual characteristics of the female body, be closed up.

This type of action always provokes the question whether the works in question are truly seems to be assumed that nudity is permissible but must be banned if it is for any other purpose. "Good taste" also plays a large part in the body of unwritten laws called etiquette by our daily conduct and make life in enforced bearable.

Almost every conceivable social situation has its own set of unwritten rules. What is perfectly acceptable in one situation is blatant "bad taste" in another. One can play the conversational keyboard by ear, and time, inevitably, the right note, but most of us are very few, social situations in which we are at ease.

It seems that in almost every conceivable social situation, there is a hidden dimension which must be applied. "Good taste" seems to be that no politician or artist can break through the areas of "good taste" which we have so carefully guarded.

Whenever the cry of "bad taste" is raised by people whose sensibilities have been offended, accustomed to think of death in a solemn way, we will not tolerate any deviations from this tradition.

They have been brought up to consider the human body and vernacular references as immodest.

Even though they are well aware of their own mean and may even, on occasion employ the word, feel that such words have a place in written language.

In short, whatever upsets the intrinsic logic of whatever creates in the beholder an indefinable feeling labelled as "bad taste".

One might make an excellent case for rejecting art by this criterion. Tradition, explicit and implicit, one of the strongest threads in the fabric of our culture.

When one begins to pull at the individual threads, the guardians of tradition become alarmed that they are pulling too hard and unravel the whole fabric.

Consequently, the guardians of tradition are when they feel a threat arising to their position.

A Most Unusual Folk-Singer

by pamela

Saturday night will bring to the Eaton Auditorium stage one of the world's leading musical talents, Martha Schlamme.

She comes from Vienna, although that was a long time ago, and true to the tradition of her homeland, she has musical ability that marks her not merely as a singer of folk songs, but as an interpretive artist.

Her flair for performing made an early appearance. In Vienna, as a child of seven, she would sing songs learned at school and Yiddish ballads taught her by her family. When she was eight, however, her family left Austria, spent two months in France, then moved to England.

Wednesday night I sat and talked with her about music, folk songs, and her career. I asked her how she became interested in folk music. Her answer was a story of once hearing Engel Lund, a Norwegian folk singer, sing a Yiddish song which she could remember her grandfather teaching her years before.

"I was deeply moved. I had never before given such a beautiful rendition of a song always associated with my family, to Miss Lund, and 'pleaded with me. She told me that she didn't know how to teach, but she did find me a caparison'."

Her extensive tours of North America, Europe, which began almost as soon as she arrived here twelve years ago, have built up a comprehensive repertoire of folk songs from more than a dozen languages. The cultures reflected in these songs are brought through her dramatic presentation, which communicates with her audience on a basic so that they can share what she has to say. "basic universal patterns of love, death and sadness, anger and fear".

Many of the songs that have come from mouth to mouth were recorded by travelling bards who told musical stories things near to the hearts of the people. Here, Martha Schlamme's talents find expression; she has an intuitive sense of what a song means, what its core is and what the audience will understand.

Although her songs are those traditionally been sung by untrained people, she brings to the concert stage a learned only through years of practice. It is this combination of tradition and classical training which makes her a unique artist.

I asked her whether she has a favourite in her repertoire, and her answer was "I love them all. When I love a song, it is dropped." The repertoire ranges from light, simple ballads to German lieder and Russian folk songs arranged for violin, cello and piano.

Character and its environment are the subject of folk music; the folk artist brings this closer to the audience. Schlamme does much more. Her depth and charm enable her to bring colour and mood of her songs to life. A song emerges as a unique picture.

Yesterday, in a noon hour concert at the House, 200 students crowded in the Common Room for a look at Martha Schlamme. Larry Lederman, Secretary of the Student Body, said that it was the best received by an artist at these concerts in years. There must be something about her, because 60 of those listening bought tickets to her Saturday night concert. The message had come through.

stronger they feel the threat to be, the more fervent they become. And the more small print in the codified tradition, the more fervent and intemperate become its guardians.

The question then seems to be whether or not it is dangerous to the society to attack its traditions with any works of "bad taste".

We wish to maintain that it is not only beneficial to society to discard all criteria of "good taste" but imperative to the advancement of the society.

When a society becomes so rigid in its traditions that it can tolerate no deviation from the imposed norm of conduct, then it is on its way to a violent explosion.

And when the entrenched ruling class of that society is allowed freely to drag the red herring of bad taste across any criticism of their practices, then all of the safety valves in the society have been closed and the machinery of a revolution has been set in motion.

We are not arguing here that all references to the body and its excremental functions are veiled criticisms of the status quo, but only that such references must not be disallowed because they offend the established tradition.

The history of art and literature is filled with rebels who have overthrown the "establishment" only to become themselves "established" and in turn be overthrown.

And again and again the new order, as it first appeared, has been condemned for its "bad taste". And the next generation of critics have used the now-established "rebels" as the criterion by which to condemn their successors.

This almost ludicrous perennial retreat of the critics from their canons should be reason enough for the rejection of any fixed standards of "good taste".

If art is to advance, if it is to grow and be a valid expression of men's questioning and struggles, then it must be free from any considerations beyond the aesthetic.

And if a society is to remain flexible enough to meet each new demand that is made upon it, then it must incorporate into its texture every expression and practice of its members.

For these reasons then, we maintain that there is not a pose of the human body that is not permissible for public exhibition.

And there is not a practice in our society so sacrosanct that it cannot be carefully examined and presented in a new fashion, even a satirical fashion, if the examiner finds in it elements that strike him as incongruous.

picture of a beaten man

Last night I had the misfortune to see a man utterly embarrassed. The man had lost his address book. It was filled with girls' names. Last night he got it back, in a large group.

Somehow, somewhere, a Whitney Hall girl got hold of it. When he heard what had happened to it, he pulled his coat over his head and crouched in the corner. Then he left, several inches shorter than when he had entered.

It had destroyed him.

knifery

There is no finer way to relieve tensions than by throwing a knife into a wall, particularly if it is into a photograph of one you hate.

Get a photograph, the bigger the better. Pin it to a more or less soft surface like a bulletin board. Rear back and throw the knife (scissors or a screwdriver may also be used, but these require more practice). The sound of the blade hitting the wood, the very feel of the steel piercing the surface of the target, is instantly transferred to your brain.

The pleasure is indescribable.

Knife-throwing, or the more professional scissor-throwing, is very scientific. Every sharp instrument has what is called a "point of balance". Depending on how close this point of balance is to the sharp point, the knife will make a certain number of revolutions in a set distance, if the knife is thrown in exactly the same way every time.

For instance, the rate of turn for a large pair of scissors is nine feet. So walk back from the target nine feet, add three feet for the length of your arm, and let fly.

It'll do you a world of good.

menagerie

Neil Thomas, CHUM announcer, and occasional University of Toronto student, passed this along, ripped from the Broadcast News teletype.

"St. Louis: The warden of a men's dormitory at the University of St. Louis has urged the students' council to pass a bill banning from all dormitories 'creatures which walk upon the ground, fly through the air, crawl upon the surface and burrow into the earth.' The move came after one eery night when he tripped over a student's pet boa constrictor while he was on his rounds."

Try and get OUR Smaller Animals' Council to pass a bill like that!

in here, slob

Shelley Berman natters about the little white bags into which you are supposed to be sick while travelling by air. He refers to them as "ominous."

They don't seem to bother Paul Walker of UC (no relation) however. They have a water-tight air-tight plastic lining, and he uses them for lunch bags.

Such use can be seen in the Arbor Room every day around noon.

death by fire

When somebody burns their finger on a stove, you can usually hear them for days after shrieking "I got a first degree burn!" as if they had been an inch from death. There are actually seven degrees of burning, according to the Dupuytren System.

First degree: redness of skin.

Second degree: blistering.

Third degree: destruction of the true skin, leaving scars.

Fourth degree: total destruction of the true skin.

Fifth degree: destruction of fat layer and muscle.

Sixth degree: destruction of great vessels and organs.

Thought you might like to know.

"retreat" letters

In Which We Are Routed

information

March 10, 1960

Varsity, The Editor,
University of Toronto.

Dear Sir:

Facts on figures at St. Joseph's.

Please allow us to correct certain mistakes in Wednesday's "Odds and Ends" column. Mr. Walker has definitely erred in his description of the retreat at St. Joseph's College for girls.

1) The duration of the retreat was from Friday night to 5:00 Sunday, not Monday as stated.

2) Necessary phone calls in and out were allowed.

3) Late leaves were issued Sunday night.

Before Mr. Walker criticizes he should seek out the facts.

When applying for admission to this College girls are well aware of the rules they will be expected to obey. After actual entrance, therefore, they voluntarily accept these rules or freely move elsewhere. So too, all students entering the University of Toronto voluntarily agree to complete certain courses and write scheduled examinations; dissenters must give up university life. The analogue is clear. The retreat was not "compulsory" in the true sense.

Apparently Mr. Walker finds nothing obnoxious about immodesty, but this is a personal matter and an issue in itself. We remind him only that "medievally speaking" nylon did not then exist. Mr. Walker must also admit that if he were a leper, he would accept the good bandages gratefully from any source, even from the poor girls at St. Joseph's.

Yours very sincerely,
Felix Kapron and John Jacobs,
(II SPS)

This is for Mr. Walker.

Students cordially invited

Michael's College. However, after deliberation I decided you didn't need to be chastised—you needed to be enlightened! Obviously you don't have A CLUE about what you expound.

Retreats, my dear Mister Walker, no matter what you were told by St. Joseph's, are not compulsory—one is "advised to attend for one's own benefit, but they are quite easily gotten out of—if one so desires. Neither is one forbidden to talk, that is left up to the individual. You see, St. Mike's is not an institution for wayward children to be indoctrinated by patriarchal monastics—it is a university for intelligent rational students (by and large), taught by intelligent, rational professors—like the other universities on the Campus of U of T.

A retreat is a traditional, annual event of the College. On a retreat one leaves the outside world for a weekend to think—to learn more about oneself, one's future, and one's God.

Most of the S.M.C. students welcome this weekend of meditation and rest. You would be surprised, Mr. Walker, what self-analysis reveals to one.

I hope, Mr. Walker, this letter will help you and others ignorant of the truth regarding retreats and other St. Mike's practices, realize that we are not religious fanatics, nor queers, nor squares, but actually quite normal, and occasionally we like time to think. Maybe Mr. Walker, you need some time to think too?

Sincerely,
Jane McCaig, (I SMC)

discrimination

March 10, '60

Dear Varsity,

May I comment on the Varsity's practice of what is commonly called "discrimination"? In regard to your article on the retreat held at St. Michael's last weekend, I can't help but feel that you are completely confused.

First of all, phone calls were allowed into St. Joseph's on Sunday. I phoned myself! Secondly, leaves were allowed! I know one girl who had one. Please get your facts correct before attempting to print them.

It was quite ironic also that on page one the headline was "Fraternity Integrates First Negro Member" and on page 8, the stab at the beliefs and religious practices of the Roman Catholics.

Now tell me, have you any right to criticise any creed? Certainly not!

Just for your information, a "retreat" is a time of recollection and meditation. Perhaps it would do the world in general, and you in particular, a lot of good to meditate and recollect—if only for a moment.

David Rossi (I PHM)

P.S. You probably won't print this letter. If you don't (I hope you do), consider it when writing any future articles about any religious denominations and perhaps you won't be led astray.

Martin Says

Armaments Alone No War Cause

Armaments in themselves are not a cause of war, former Health Minister Paul Martin said at an open meeting of the T of T Liberal Club Wednesday night.

Speaking in a crowded Wynnwood Music room on "Disarmament" Mr. Martin said, "I think it is true to say we do build up a reserve of great danger if we go on in this mad competition without taking steps to prevent it."

Striking a warning note Mr. Martin said while no one wants war "least of all a nuclear war, there is always the danger of mistakes being made and the very existence of these weapons makes their possible use a danger that confronts all the world."

Mr. Martin referred to the statement of External Affairs Minister Mr. Howard Green in which he said from now on in disarmament meetings Canada was not going to pursue the course "of an honest broker, but one of an independent nation."

Mr. Martin praised the idea of an independent policy but said, "this doesn't mean we should overlook the opportunity of explaining the position of countries with whom Canada has a close association."

"Independence is not sacrificed when we act as an intermediary."

"Our independence said Mr. Martin could be displayed in a constructive manner in the interests of Canada."

"Would we be prepared to stand up against Britain, the United States and France on disarmament policies we disagree with?" he asked.

Realizing it is vital for Canada "to pursue every honorable course that we can," Mr. Martin said, "this is a very difficult role for Canada to assume. Because of the close association with the NATO powers any disagreement on disarmament policies endangers NATO unity. Nevertheless we can play a very important role in the situation."

Mr. Martin outlined his belief in cessation of tests under conditions which would guarantee the necessary controls to insure all sides carrying out their agreements.

On disarmament discussions

Mr. Martin said, "I believe these discussions are imperative. I hope they will succeed. But false hope and too much optimism can be satisfying and dangerous."

In closing, he said we are presently beginning a new chapter in disarmament.

"I think disarmament is essential not only for the peace of the world, but so that nations can carry on with schemes now suspended because of terrific expenditures involved," he said.

"We must be prepared to recognize that we can't go on this way for ever," he concluded.

PEOPLE MAKE THE DIFFERENCE...

MME. MARIE CURIE

In an era when women were chained to Victorian parlours, Marie Curie proved beyond question that a brilliant and imaginative mind cannot be confined, even in the most dogmatic of societies.

But despite the overwhelming restrictions put upon her by the times in which she lived, Marie Curie clung to the certainty, which she shared with her husband, that the world around us was abundant with untapped elements that would ultimately benefit mankind to a greater extent than anything yet known to mere mortals.

During their struggle for knowledge, Mme. Curie revealed two outstanding personal qualities, an unfettered creative zeal and a deep-rooted responsibility to her fellow men. Without her great personality the world might well have waited much longer for the discovery of life-giving radium.

In these days of formulated judgement and machine-made decisions, it is wise to remember that the minds of men are most often moved by the spirit of man. People... with their capacity to respond to each other's needs and problems... make the significant difference. This has always been our philosophy at "The Bank." Our men and women are considered our greatest asset.

Should you be considering banking as a career, you will find our booklet "New Horizons At THE BANK" both interesting and informative. It outlines the many rewarding opportunities that are yours when you choose a career with Toronto-Dominion. For your free copy simply write: The Personnel Superintendent, The Toronto-Dominion Bank, 55 King St. W., Toronto. It will be sent along to you by return mail.

The lecture is open to the public and starts at 8.15 p.m.

State Algeria Students May Obtain Education

OTTAWA, Mar. 7 (CUP)—A University of Paris official stated recently that 800 Algerian students are studying at the University of Algiers contrary to a statement issued by the president of the Algerian student union in a Canadian University Press interview.

Ait Chaalal, the president of the outlawed national union of students, (UGEMA), claimed that no Algerian student had studied in Algerian universities since 1957. Grant Nielsen, an Alberta student, doubted this and sent a clipping of the story to the secretary general of the University of Paris.

He replied, "Contrary to the assertions reported in The Gateway (U of A campus paper) article, Moslem Algerian students, are in no way stopped from studying in French universities. About 800 of them are taking courses at the University of Algiers, and 450 attend the universities in Metropolitan France.

Pat Benham, of The Manitoban, who interviewed Chaalal following his speech at the Canadian University Press annual conference, stated today the Chaalal had told her, "There were no Algerians allowed in Algerian universities."

She said he admitted that there were some in French universities, but these were persecuted.

The CUP passed a motion to support "in principle" the scholarship campaign being undertaken by The National Federation of Canadian University students for Algerian students, some of whom live in refugee camps.

The residence will house 40 students and two professors.

Writer About Intellect Will Deliver Lectures

BARZUN — 3 3 likesasyM "Our Scientific Culture: Its Anatomy" is the title of the three-part Marfleet Lecture to be given in Convocation Hall, March 14, 15 and 16.

Speaker for the series is Dr. Jacques Barzun, Dean of Faculties, Provost of Columbia University and author of the best-seller, "The House of Intellect." Dr. Barzun's interests also include art, anthropology, history, ethnology and music.

On Monday evening, Dr. Barzun will speak on "The One Culture", on Tuesday "Profit and Loss", and on Wednesday "Man Within and Without the Sciences."

Dr. Barzun is the eleventh person to give the Marfleet Lecture which was established in 1915 by Mrs. Lydia Marfleet in memory of her late husband, an American greatly interested in Canada.

The lectures begin at 8.30 p.m. and are open to staff, students and the public without charge.

Engineers Help Settlement

University of Toronto Engineers have donated more money to the University of Toronto Settlement Fund than all the other faculties and colleges put together.

Louise MacDonald, Settlement House representative to the Students' Administrative Council last night congratulated the Engineers for their total of $500 in donations.

The goal of the fund campaign, now in its third week, is $2,000. Almost $1,000 has been collected.

The money will be used for a camp fund for needy children, for the settlement furnishing fund, and for a fund used to train volunteers working at the Settlement House.

This volunteer training program benefits students participating in the Settlement.

Among the other donors is the Faculty of Medicine with $300, Victoria College with $150, Pharmacy with $75 and Physical and Occupational Therapy with $30.

Miss MacDonald feels the fund drive is going very well.

texas and the world

State Of Shock

by Ken Wyman

What are the views of Southern students on international problems? How informed are those opinions? How flat is the landscape of Texas? These and other questions occupied my mind towards the end of last year while Peter Dembski and I were flying down to Texas A&M, a military school located one hundred miles south of Dallas, to participate as delegates from the University of Toronto in SCONA — Student Conference on International Affairs.

We left Toronto at 9:00 p.m. eastern time, and changed planes in Chicago, arriving in Dallas at 5:45 Texas time. We had a three-hour wait until the departure of our flight to Texas A&M. I amused myself by reading the Dallas morning newspaper. There were three editorials—the lead one denounced the United Nations as a socialistic organisation, the second called Senator McLellan a traitor for speaking a few good words about trade-unions, and the third praised the formation of a new states-rights bloc in Buffalo, New York, which has never been heard from since.

In a state of profound shock, I climbed into the DC-3 that was to take us to Texas A&M. I wondered whether the school could be anymore isolated geographically than the Dallas morning newspaper appeared to be intellectually. I noticed that the plane was more or less filled with crew-cut college kids who were obviously heading for the same conference I was. With a mounting sense of trepidation, I sat down beside an attractive-looking girl who was holding a copy of McCall's magazine in her lap. Glancing out the window of the plane I could see that the landscape of this part of Texas was definitely flatter than the proverbial pancake. I was still hoping that the answers to my other questions would not be equally flat.

The girl turned out to be a real charmer—intellectually as well as emotionally. "Ahm from Dallas," she said, "but ah go to Randolph Macon in Gohja." And then she peered at me with those delightfully blue eyes and said, "wheah are yall from?" I grinned sheepishly, and in my best sheepish, and in my best Southern drawl, replied, "Ahm from Toronto. Shonuff pleased to meet yall." In the course of our conversation I elicited the following observations: 1.) not everybody in Dallas reads or likes the Dallas morning newspaper (some even read the New York Times although it is considered in 'conservative' quarters to be a Communist journal); 2.) she did not approve of segregation, but several of her 'best friends' at Randolph Macon were violent on the subject (violent in the wrong direction needless to say); 3.) she thought fraternities were wonderful, and she, in fact, was the president of her sorority, which was only now threatened with extinction under the terms of order px-59 issued by the president of Randolph Macon for the purpose of banning all sororities on the campus. In this last opinion, my travelling companion was vociferously seconded by a large number of students sitting across and behind me on both sides of the aisle. Mr. Dembski had lapsed into obscurity at the back of the plane. I felt inundated.

On November 11, we published our own memorial to the men who died in the two great wars. We called it A Manual For Death. It was an attempt to show our love for those men and our gratitude to them by telling the truth about war. It is in the same spirit that we attempt in A Manual of Life, the first of two articles, to describe in concrete terms the position of those of us who will refuse to kill in defence of any cause.

necessity

A great deal of the talk I still hear about the anti-war article of November 11, centres around things I have been hoping for time and space to discuss in this paper. That article did not begin to scratch the surface of the problem of pacifism. It was meant only to make the simple point that anyone who joins an army in time of war is accepting the proposition, which may possibly be true, after all, that there is sometimes no way to deal with spreading evil except to kill as efficiently as possible those who are spreading it. We then tried to point out to advocates of efficient killing just what the nature of efficient killing was, in the hope that when it was exposed in some detail, it would be recognized as an intolerable conclusion. The question I have heard since more often than any other is: Perhaps all you say is true; after all, nobody wants to kill. Does it not remain true that killing is at times absolutely necessary? Are there not in fact times when there is no way of dealing with a spreading evil except to kill those who are spreading it? This is the question I want to talk about here.

cowards?

I would like to get into the discussion by quoting a letter I wrote, as part of a pacifist-debate-by-mail with a friend last year. Since I have recently thought out some of the problems a bit more I shall insert parenthetical passages of explanation, clarification, or change of mind, in the course of the letter.

"Most of the difficulty is over our use of words. To you, 'pacifist' seems to be a mild form of 'coward'. To quote from your letter: 'people are scared stiff'. . . You'll find pacifism is not only the norm—it's essential, and again 'as far as I can see it's a fashionable excuse between wars to be scared'.

"I will admit that a great many people are scared to fight but this is not pacifism. Furthermore, only if pacifism was simply a desire for peace and a repugnance for war would you be right in saying that pacifism is the norm. Under those circumstances Nikita Khrushchev and Dwight Eisenhower might well qualify as two of our most prominent pacifists.

"But do they? Of course not, because although they may regard war as an evil and may love peace as much as the next man, still they believe as ruthlessly and questioningly as the most vicious theorist of a cause ever did that in the world as it is today and has been in all history it is necessary and therefore justifiable to kill in order to preserve one's basic principles.

decision

"The pacifist, whether he is a religious person or an atheist humanist believes that in his relations with his fellow men no decision is more basic than the decision 'I will not kill'. (Not the commandment 'Thou shalt not kill' but the decision I will not kill.) Why does he make this decision? At bottom the only good reason is love of others. (Although almost all of us actually make this decision we often tack on the rider that invalidates it: 'I will not kill; not that is unless I absolutely have to.' Right there we open the door to all manner of absurd necessities.) Why do I call this the most basic of decisions? 1) In itself, this decision creates the brotherhood of man through respect for all human life; 2) It is basic to all other principles of human relations because once this principle or decision is suspended all the others are destroyed."

starting point

This is the pacifist's starting point. He cannot as you suggest "stop pretending that pacifism is the great god-given answer to all the troubles and start figuring out better answers" simply because his first principle is that any answer that does not include the inviolability of human life is no answer at all, just as knocking over the chess board does not constitute a legitimate move in chess. The question you must ask is not—"is any cause or principle worth dying for?" because the pacifist may well agree that some things are worth dying for. The question is: "Is any cause or principle worth killing for?" And since the very principles we traditionally go to war over democracy, freedom, etc. . . are themselves ultimately based on respect for the preciousness of the individual's existence, I don't see how the answer can be anything but "no".

survival

(Two things in this last paragraph need comment. I think. The obvious answer to my last sentence is of course that the real reason that takes us to war is not the defence of values or anything like that, but something closer to the preservation of life. Now there are certainly two of the many reasons that can be used to talk people into going to war, true or not; the defence of values and the defence of lives. How compelling these and other reasons really are I shall again save 'o later. The answer to both reasons in capsule form is that the first seeks to defend values by destroying their foundation, and the second prefers life as an animal rather than life as a human being because the latter involves the risk inherent in letting your enemy live.)

refusal

"So this is all that the pacifist has to begin with—the conviction that at all costs any solution to world problems which involves killing must be rejected at the outset. (It must be pointed out strongly here that pacifism is not a solution to those differences that constitute sources of conflict between people and nations. It is simply a refusal to regard war as a solution. To say that all of the differences between people must be done away with before war will cease, is as silly as to say, for example, that all men must be the same color before they can live together peacefully.

Ex SAC Pres. "Prohibited on Campus"

By Barry Zimmerman

A University of Toronto scholarship graduate and former Students' Administrative Council President claimed last night that he has been "practically prohibited on campus for the last ten years."

Dr. James G. Endicott, Vice-Chairman of the World Council for Peace, and brother of Professor N. J. Endicott of University College spoke to members of the Toronto Association For Peace in the Fiesta Room of the Prince George Hotel.

Dr. Endicott, who won the Moss scholarship in 1923 and was president of SAC in 1924, was at a loss to explain this alleged snub.

Speaking on "what we can hope from the summit meeting," he said, "no responsible person can possibly believe the Soviet Union is going to collapse because of the cold war."

Dr. Endicott showed the audience the 1951 edition of Colliers magazine which predicted Russia's defeat and occupation by the United States through atomic power in 1960.

The magazine's cover portrays a victorious American soldier armed with a bayonet and flanked by the Stars and Stripes.

Dr. Endicott quoted two of the magazine's contributors, Walter Reuther and J. E. Priestly, who he said "now regret having written the article."

In his article, Reuther offered to go to the Soviet Union after the downfall of Communism and set up Capitalist Unions so the Russians could have the "happy relationship between labor and business that the U.S. enjoys," he said.

Priestly, on the other hand, would bring culture to the Soviet Union by exporting 'Guys and Dolls' to Russia via the Bolshoi ballet.

Dr. Endicott who at one time was personal advisor to Chiang Kai Shek said, "I have visited China three times since the revolution and have found the advances in all fields unbelievable compared to the old China I knew and was born into."

"I found that they entirely welcome cooperative co-existence," he continued. "People who believe the Chinese can not live peacefully with U.S. are under the spell of McCarthyism."

"Communists have never said they would overthrow Capitalism by military means. Moreover," Dr. Endicott added, "Capitalists believe that once Russia becomes prosperous she will turn to a free-enterprise society."

Dr. Endicott also debunked persons who believe we cannot live with people who hold moral or religious beliefs contrary to the ones we hold.

He said, "I cannot see why persons with my type of moral or religious code should find difficulty in belonging to a peace movement such as ours. A person cannot regard about half the world as moral outcasts," he added.

Dr. Endicott denounced pamphlets which call upon ex-Communists to suggest that peace conferences are a trick to get people to let their guard down.

Dr. Endicott read from a Communist pamphlet and suggested the ideas expressed in the article could be placed in the Book of Luke or Isaiah.

"Do not be misled by ideology," he warned, "the problems of the world must not be settled by war. Let history decide which system is better."

"The Communists say let us use the science and wealth of the world for its betterment and then history will decide which way of life is better," he said.

Dr. Endicott suggested, "the Soviet Union have always said they agree to a great many controls."

He called for abolition of nuclear arms and total world disarmament with a tight system of controls.

He said, "In the early days the U.S. thought they had a monopoly on the atomic bomb. They never thought Russia was developing it and President Truman estimated the USSR would fall," Dr. Endicott continued.

"The World Council for Peace was assured after the war by eminent scientists such as Pierre Curie and Leopold Infeld, who worked with Einstein, that the United States had no monopoly on atomic weapons."

"At that time we launched the Stockholm appeal which was echoed around the world," he added.

Dr. Endicott stressed the need for continued marches and petitions for peace especially now that there will be a summit conference.

Schlamme cont'd

little less enthusiastic and in Spanish, Miss Schlamme did a solo.

Most artists plan their program in sort of climactic order so that by the end of the evening the audience is worked up to fever pitch and clamour for more, but there was no noticeable climax during the evening, probably because each song was equal to the other in artistic perfection, beauty and exquisiteness. There was no vying of one song over another. They were all of equal, high merit.

One Pleasant Surprise After Another

Anyone who attended the Martha Schlamme concert Saturday evening last at Eaton Auditorium with a preconceived notion that he was to be entertained by a homespun, untrained, self-accompanied voice, would have been either bitterly disappointed or exquisitely surprised, for, Martha Schlamme is perhaps the greatest antithesis to the stereotyped concept many people entertained; that folksingers are necessarily an unrefined, sometimes vulgar, backwoods lot whose chief virtue seems to be that their crude little offerings to the art are completely 'pure', undefiled and also untouched by anything that could even remotely be construed as artistry or good taste.

Miss Schlamme provided an evening of delightful surprises, not the least of which was her appearance. Gowned in a floor-length red velvet dress, the diminutive artist looked every inch a prima donna. This concert setting was rounded out by the accompanist, a most remarkable young pianist, Tanya Gould.

The second surprise was the choice of selections on the program, few of which were familiar to the audience. It may be urged that to choose a relatively obscure program is artistic suicide, but to the contrary, it may be said that unfamiliar or little-known folksongs can be even fresher and more interesting than the old war horses, especially if handled by a capable musician. After all, no folksinger is obliged to imitate a better-known repertoire of his compeer. And Miss Schlamme continued to delight us throughout the concert with a wide variety of just such songs from France, Canada, Israel, Yugoslavia, Ireland and many other lands.

Since the majority of the program was sung in languages that were 'foreign' to most of us, Miss Schlamme introduced each item, gave us a short history of its origin, and a brief run-down of the plot, but even without benefit of this preamble, her interpretive ability and communication with hands, eyes, facial expression and body movement as well as with vocal inflection, was such that with a pinch of imagination, one could almost know, without knowing in reality, what it was that she was saying.

Probably the greatest surprise of all was the operatic contralto voice that the singer possessed. If one can reconcile oneself to the fact that one is not listening to a displaced operatic contralto, but a very talented artist who brings polish, refinement and dignity to her art, then one can readily let oneself be captivated by her expressiveness.

The concert was opened with two beautiful love songs from derness and insight. Following Yugoslavia, sung with great tenthis was an exciting, inspiring and we will make cities out of the sand.

Probably the most humorous item on the program was a folksong from the United States which tells the tale of a frustrated child at bedtime who tries to devise as many procrastinations as possible to delay his going. Miss Schlamme was first the bothered child—'Mommy, I want a drink of water'—and then the patient mother. The song ends on a drowsy note as the child falls to sleep, still fighting it to the end and here, Miss Schlamme displayed some of her most brilliant vocal technique as she sang—and stayed right on key—the child's incoherent muttering towards the end. The highlight of the concert, if it is at all possible to pick one out, was, from the audience reaction point of view, a tragic folksong, really a diatribe against war, entitled 'Ach! Johnny, I Hardly Know You'. It tells of the return from the wars of a once-whole boy, now a legless, armless remnant of humanity. This was sung with such a conviction that many members of the audience, and even the artist herself, shed a few tears at the end.

During the second half of the program we were treated to a cycle of Russian Folksongs arranged by Beethoven. Miss Schlamme was assisted in this section of the concert by Toronto's Morris Kainerman violinist and Robert Pack, cellist. At this point in the evening, the concert took on an even more formal aspect, and was in fact, very similar to a classical presentation. The cellist could not always be heard in some sections and it seemed that he was particularly drowned out by the violin, but this may have been the fault of the technicians in placing the microphones.

The inevitable community singing came at the end of the program, but was none too successful as the song Miss Schlamme chose to sing was either not very well known, or the audience was too self-conscious to sing out. Undoubtedly, the greatest stumbling block was that each time a chorus was sung, the next one would be in a different language. The first time around, in English, Miss Schlamme received lots of support, in Yiddish, the response was good, in French, people were a

the highest maxim

No government admits anymore that it keeps an army to satisfy occasionally the desire for conquest. Rather the army is supposed to serve for defence, and one invokes the morality that approves of self-defence. But this implies one's own morality and the neighbour's immorality; for the neighbour must be thought of as eager to attack and conquer if our state must think of means of self-defence. Moreover, the reasons we give for requiring an army imply that our neighbour who denies the desire for conquest just as much as does our own state and who, for his part, also keeps an army only for reasons of self-defence, is a hypocrite and a cunning criminal who would like nothing better than to overpower a harmless and awkward victim without any fight. Thus all states are now ranged against each other; they presuppose their neighbour's bad disposition and their own good disposition. This presupposition however, is inhumane, as bad as war and worse. At bottom, indeed, it is itself the challenge and the cause of wars, because, as I have said, it attributes immorality to the neighbour and thus provokes a hostile disposition and act. We must abjure the doctrine of the army as a means of self-defence just as completely as the desire for conquest.

And perhaps the great day will come when a people, distinguished by wars and victories and by the highest development of a military order and intelligence, and accustomed to make the heaviest sacrifices for these things, will exclaim of its own free will, "We break the sword", and will smash its entire military establishment down to its lowest foundations. Rendering oneself unarmed when one had been the best armed out of a height of feeling—that is the means to real peace which must always rest on a peace of mind; whereas the so-called armed peace, as it now exists in all countries, is the absence of peace of mind. One trusts neither oneself nor one's neighbour and, half from hatred, half from fear, does not lay down arms. Rather perish than hate and fear, and twice rather perish than make oneself hated and feared—this must someday become the highest maxim for every single commonwealth too.

Our liberal representatives as is well known, lack the time for reflecting on the nature of man: else they would know that they work in vain when they work for a "gradual decrease of the military burden." Rather, only when this kind of need has become greatest will the kind of god be nearest who alone can help here. The tree of war-glory can only be destroyed all at once, by a stroke of lightning: but lightning, as indeed you know, comes from a cloud—and from up high.

If the opponents of nuclear war can realize that from this point all wars will be nuclear wars, then the dilemma of the pacifist is seen to be the dilemma of all; for the pacifist, war cannot be used because he has taken his stand on the refusal to kill; for the ordinary anti-nuclear-war citizen war cannot be used because it leads to nuclear war, which is a tactical problem, which will inflict suffering on the practical or the what can the

A Manual

The clash of interest between people may be as basic to them as the differences in color and creed. If a man said there must be war between Negroes and whites because Negroes are black and whites are white, he would hardly be taken seriously by people of any intelligence. Yet this is the kind of argument that is so often used to explain why there must be war on the international level, or even worse to explain how to do away with war.)

"War must be rejected at the outset as a solution" is of course a negative statement but has a lot more of positive principle behind it, i.e., it is not simply inaction or passivity. However, having made up his mind as to the immorality of war the pacifist must begin to decide just what he wants to do about it.

disarmament

"One possible way of avoiding war that has been worked at is disarmament (nuclear disarmament, that is). I am afraid you are mistaken in assuming that 'pacifism embraces disarmament the way an art dealer embraces the Venus de Milo'. (A rather one-sided embrace, by the way.) Disarmament as you say is not pacifism. I don't have to add anything to your statement that 'disarmament is just reducing the coming conflict to much less destructive forces'. This may be fine but pacifism must obviously pick up where disarmament stops."

"Actually I find that I do have quite a bit to add to that statement. There would seem to be two possible types of disarmament in a country; disarmament based on a scheme—an inspection scheme, for instance—that would make it physically impossible to produce the weapons in question; and disarmament based simply on the intent not to use the weapon even if it is possible to produce it. Now the kind of disarmament that is usually talked about is the first; disarmament based on inspection. The idea here is to find some mutually agreeable system of inspection that will render it impossible for one side to test, or perhaps even to make nuclear weapons. Now I do not think such a system can succeed. It seems to me a basic fact, more important than any other, that both the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. know how to make nuclear weapons, and as long as both know how, either need only want to make one badly enough in order to be able to find a way of doing so. The basic fallacy as I see it is this: Once a weapon exists—and a weapon exists as long as someone knows how to make it—there can be no effective scheme of physical disarmament. Let me try to illustrate.

inspection

If an inspection scheme is put into operation, both sides must be convinced either that it is working or that it isn't working. In order to avoid political embarrassments let us call our sides A and B. If A is convinced that the inspection scheme is not working, i.e., that B is managing to make nuclear weapons, then of course the inspection scheme will never get off the ground. One of the main reasons we cannot get one right now is that neither A or B can believe that such a scheme could work. In this case then, failure. But what if, on the other hand, A is convinced that the inspection scheme is working. With the deterrent of utter world annihilation gone, all those impulses that make for a good clean conventional war will take ascendancy in A; the psychological drives, the biological drives, the ideological drives, the mythological drives, not to mention the "moral" drives, and, not forgetting Marx, the economic drives, all of which are either causes of war, or are turned into causes of war in combination with the others. With these forces working on both sides, neither side being pacifistic (i.e., opposed uncompromisingly to war as such), there is sooner or later bound to be war between A and B. Not only that, but is it not true, that there are a great many people on both sides right now, who believe that except for nuclear weapons a war between A and B would be a good thing? Of course there are.

conventional war

Now, the minute a conventional war starts between A and B the inspection system to all intents and purposes breaks down, and each side scurries to have a nuclear bomb on hand just in case. And it has been pointed out often, that if in World War II even the obvious winner could not refrain from using such a weapon, it would seem reasonable to expect that in World War III at least the loser will use his bomb as a last frantic measure. Let us say we are losing. We as everyone knows it is better to destroy the whole world than to let the Communists take it over. It isn't then what are we arming for now? On the other hand if the Communists are losing, surely those irrational mad monsters would think nothing of destroying the world. They are not irrational mad monsters? Then what are we arming for now?

I am sure the advocates of disarmament by inspection could find a number of grounds on which to attack what I have just said. I hope they do. But just for the moment let me anticipate one or two possible arguments.

discretion

One thing they might say is that even if a conventional war starts while an inspection scheme was presumably in operation both sides would have the discretion not to use these weapons. But if you sooner or later have to start counting on discretion then there is no much point having an inspection scheme in the first place, is there? If non-nuclear war is all right in itself and if we can count on the other side to decide against using nuclear weapons in a pinch, why not start fighting it out right now?

Another belief of the disarmament-inspection school is that although it is quite true that a system of inspection for nuclear disarmament provides no guarantee whatever against the manufacture and possible use of such weapons in event of war, still the very existence of inspection teams, moving freely both in A and B, would tend to reduce world tensions and reduce the likelihood of a war of any kind. Now certainly the possibility is not to be overlooked. But how strong is the possibility is it? Are not the inspection teams symbols of mistrust? Did not Neville Chamberlain at Munich put too great a premium on what he thought was a reduction of tension brought about by a bit of cordial fraternization? Was there not war before nuclear weapons existed? It is perhaps salutary to think of mutual hostility as simply a function of a lack of understanding, but how can we do so while we simultaneously cherish the notion that there are good reasons for the hostility. That is, how can we think of the Russians as simultaneously bad enough to make stringent inspection controls necessary, and good enough to make such controls possible, not to mention conducive to world peace.

moral disarmament

What I have been saying has been to illustrate the statement I made a while back that once a weapon exists as it does when someone knows how to make it, then no physical scheme of disarmament is possible. The alternative would seem to be moral disarmament, i.e., the decision not to kill, nor to commit oneself to a policy that involves killing in the defence of anything whatsoever. But that is pacifism. We can now take a look at some of the things pacifism involves. This is something my friend and I never got around to doing by mail so I shall dispense with the letter from here on.

Before I set forth a pacifistic platform I must make one very important point. A great many people who are not pacifists, who think that under certain circumstances wars are both necessary and just, nevertheless are absolutely opposed to a nuclear war and believe that any country that arms itself with nuclear weapons is immoral, in fact, that nuclear war does not constitute a solution to the problem of aggression although conventional war might. Now in the Second World War most of these people had no trouble deciding that Hitler should be opposed by armed force. They did not put themselves the pacifist dilemma: if we cannot meet evil with physical violence, how can we meet it? Only the pacifist was faced with this problem; nothing but war would work; but war, for different reasons would not work either.

good vs evil 1960

Today things are a bit different. Most people feel the same way about nuclear war as the pacifist feels about war in general; although again for different reasons. If the opponents of nuclear war can realize that from this point all wars will be nuclear wars, then the dilemma of the pacifist is seen to be the dilemma of all; for the pacifist, war cannot be used because war and total annihilation. For both, the practical: if aggression, evil, immorality, the will to others, cannot be fought with war, either for reasons, then how can it be fought? In 1960 man do against evil?

of Life continued

has taken his stand on the refusal to kill; for the ordinary anti-nuclear-war citizen war cannot be used because it leads to nuclear war and total annihilation. For both, the practical problem is this: if aggression, evil, immorality, the will to inflict suffering on others, cannot be fought with war, either for practical or moral reasons, then how can it be fought? In 1960 what the good man do against evil?

dilemma

The pacifist, for whom war has always been intolerable, has been trying to answer this question for more than two thousand years. Now that events have intruded to make everyone face the dilemma he has always faced, his answer, or attempt at an answer is more important than it ever was. Those who look nostalgically back to the Oxford Union in the 1930's and decide that pacifism 30 years later must be out of date are mistaken. The Oxford Union was prophetic. Pacifism was never as "up to date" as it is now, and if the problem of what the good man can do against evil is deeper than ever, it is or should be more and more clear to more and more people what the good man cannot do. He cannot kill.

What we must ask in an attempt to find the solution is: 1) what action is involved in being a pacifist? 2) what consequences are likely to follow if we take such action? i.e., what further action will be demanded of us. In Wednesday's issue I shall attempt to answer these questions.

State Of Shock continued

opinions flew back and forth about the injustices of the faculty. A fellow from Florida State (he was quite emphatic on that point) asserted "After all, what does a person come to college for? To get an education? Of course not. He comes to get contacts, and a frat is tremendous for that sort of thing?" The Randolph Macon girl tepidly contradicted him. "I think," she said, "that education is still important." I sat stone-faced.

We landed at College Station. It was 70 degrees, and I was hot under the collar. We were greeted by a number of husky Texas A&M cadets. They shook our hands vigorously (I knew then that I should have done my hand-grip exercises more faithfully), and they said 'howdy'. Later I learned that every student at Texas A&M is required to say 'howdy' to every person he meets on campus, whether aunt, uncle, cousin, Communist, or Martian. Try that at Philadelphia's walk and see what happens!

We were whisked to the school, and plunked down in our lavish accommodations at the Student Memorial Centre. The efficiency routine was tremendous. Within an hour we were ready for our first plenary session. The guest speaker was General Howard K. Medaris, head of the army's missile-testing program (he has since retired and the program has been placed under civilian control). He spoke on missiles. His thesis boiled down to three propositions: 1.) The American Way of Life, the Christian Way of Life (as a Jew I felt slightly left out), is Absolute Good; 2.) Soviet-Chinese Communism (no distinction is made) is Absolute Evil; 3.) Evil will win, unless we make sacrifices, which means more missiles, more scientists, more engineers, less progressive education, and a return to morality. Medaris snarled rather gratuitously that any Christian who didn't believe in rearmament was really anti-Christian. Martin Luther would have been proud of that! No mistake: the simplicity of his case did not detract from its potency for his listeners. This was a clarion call to America's national patriotism. This was the voice of self-sacrifice appealing to the flag. This was a message which struck a sharply responding chord in the hearts of a generation brought up to revere George Washington and to hate Karl Marx. I could see the fraternity boy from Florida State rising to cheer with the rest. For him, and for many others, the process of growing up in the 50's had been a process of extreme self-indulgence. This rich, prosperous America, gorging on its goodies, sneering at education, choosing fun-loving fraternalities, rather than serious-minded academics. And now these self-indulgent were being persuaded to do penance. And what kind of penance does a wastrel do? Sometimes the pleasure-loving cynic is to be preferred to the stupid idealistic fanatic. I was beginning to think that this might be the case with all the little Medaris that were cropping up in that hall. Progressive education didn't seem so bad after all.

It was a black moment in the Conference. No one pretending that this wasn't so. I was genuinely scared. I could feel the waves of xenophobic nationalism beating at my feet. I detested them. A few shared my feelings, notably the representatives from McGill, and, hopefully, the occasional delegate from the South. The sessions began to take shape. We had five plenary meetings, and a round-table following each one. The major speakers, after Medaris, were Ambassador Gunawardene from Ceylon who gave the 'neutralist' slant, an academic from Ginnell College who talked about the affluent society and was decent but dull, William Lawrence of the New York Times who didn't like Stevenson because his speeches in the '56 campaign weren't handed to the press on time (the fact that at least he wrote his own words apparently didn't cut any ice with Lawrence), and Sir Leslie Munro of New Zealand who was rather more pompous than General Medaris, but not quite as sanctimonious.

Bleak impressions they gave. But fortunately the round tables were another story. Our group was composed of students from the South and Southwest, except for a Venezuelan studying at Texas A&M and myself. Contrary to what I by now was led to expect, I found the participants, as a whole, intelligent, very critical, and not altogether certain of where they were going or why. There was a common desire to resurrect some sense of national purpose. But there were two positions, irreconcilable it seemed to me, about what form this resurrection should take. The first was the Military Christian point of view of General Medaris. America was to become moral again, and the injection which was to make her moral would contain a virus of pure hate. The second position, the Liberal Christian point of view, was to make America moral, not by preaching the hate of nation for nation, but by preaching a new internationalism, love by the rich countries, including the Soviet Union, for the underprivileged poor of Africa and Asia. Usually, these positions would be taken by the same individuals, at various times, as though there was a struggle going on in their own minds about what the Good should be.

For example, a boy from Alabama took the following stands: 1. He was in favour of recognising Red China (a view shared by everyone in the roundtable). 2. He was in favour of giving Formosa to Communist China. (I had argued for a plebiscite but the general consensus was that we might as well go the whole hog). 3. He thought that probably Communism was best for the underdeveloped countries. 4. He believed that any negotiation with the Russians or Chinese was impossible. There would have to be war.

This boy was not atypical. There is a thrashing about for change in the student body. No-one knows where that thrashing about will cease. But after a decade of complacency and rigidity the American intelligentsia is emerging from its iceberg. As Arthur Schlesinger Jr. put it recently, "a new mood is abroad in the land." The signs are everywhere: sick humour, the rise of the beatnik philosophy, the popularity of books like the Organization Man and The Lonely Crowd. I was, unaware of how things were moving until I went to Texas. I had to go there to discover flux. We in Canada are, as usual, five years behind the times. I'm not sure whether I would wish us to catch up. Medaris' image still haunts me.

ODDS&ENDS

By Alan Walker

note to fraternity member (anonymous)

No sir, we do not print anonymous letters, except where such anonymity is requested after we know who wrote the particular letter. As a matter of fact, so far as I am concerned, I don't even READ anonymous letters as a general rule. I certainly don't pay any attention to them. However, if you would care to make yourself known to me, we can talk about printing the letter, and about the very important difference between fraternities and sororities (or as they insist on paradoxing themselves, women's fraternities.)

the greatest hoax of them all

The Varsity has had a few hoaxes within its pages this year. Some, like Zen Druidism, have been revealed. Some, like Ries Karvanaque, have been partially revealed (watch for later developments). Some are still secret.

But none of The Varsity's hoaxes have met with the success of the Great Bathtub Hoax of 1917, created by H. L. Mencken. In a column in the New York Evening Mail, Mencken tried to relieve the tensions of his readers in a time of war with a spoofing history of the invention and introduction into America of the bathtub.

According to Mencken, the bathtub was invented in England in 1828 by Lord John Russell and brought to America in 1842 by Adam Thompson. Thompson allegedly had a huge 1,750-pound wooden and lead structure built, water being supplied in buckets by six slaves.

The idea caught, and the rich citizens of Cincinnati scrambled to be next to own one of the new toys. The medical faculty attacked the device as dangerous to health and a certain inviter of "phthisic, rheumatic fevers, inflammation of the lungs, and the whole category of zymotic diseases." (Mencken quoted from the "Western Medical Repository", whatever that was.)

The rest of the column was even more unbelievable, dwelling on various legislative acts passed against the new invention and the first use of a bathtub in the White House (by Millard Fillmore).

Mencken's article was promptly reprinted by learned journals, and he began to get letters asking for more information, and even corroborating him on some points. His history of the bathtub began to be quoted by medical men as proof of the progress of public hygiene. And in 1926, Mencken wrote, "Today, I believe (the article) is accepted as gospel everywhere on earth."

how little we are

Comments while shivering to death on the roof of my house in the wee hours yesterday morning (by various friends, relations, ids and super egos).

"You know, I bet that damn thing the United States shot up there is interfering with it."

"Can't we go down, the Globe will have pictures."

"They'll probably fake it with a 200-watt bulb, their deadline is about 2 a.m."

"It's Sunday."

"Get out of the way you clot, I'm trying to focus."

"Isn't it romantic?"

"Get out of my way again, I'm still trying to focus."

"Hand me some of that rum and coffee, will you."

"Have you not got a romantic bone in your body?"

"Bloody lens, the stupid moon looks like a pinpoint."

"Makes you realize how vast the universe is, doesn't it?"

"Sure . . . sure . . ."

"There's something about a full moon in a clear sky . . ."

"Yeah, on a freezing cold night."

"What stupidity, up at 4 a.m. watching a shadow."

And so on. But it was impressive. And in 25 years when I am perched on another roof watching Halley's Comet with my great-God-children, I can tell them about the time I stood on a roof watching a full eclipse of the moon, when I was still comparatively young and more or less impressed by the sight.

And if we are not ourselves a comet in 1985, the children will ask, hauntingly, "What the heck were you standing on a roof watching a shadow in the middle of the winter for?"

Maybe then, I'll be able to tell them what it meant.

P.S. Somehow out of all that nonsense, a photo got taken. Here it is, in case you had the misfortune to be in a nice warm bed at 3.28 a.m. yesterday morning and missed the eclipse.

THE FIRST STEP towards an organized paper is the makeup editor. The duty is shared on The Varsity. For this particular issue, Executive Editor Mark Nichols is in the chair.

COPY IS SET into lines of type on a linotype machine. The Varsity's press has three such machines in operation. Bill Foster mans this one.

PICTURE REPRODUCTION is done on a scan engraver, by Harold Mang. On the right you can see the photo being copied onto a plastic sheet. Tracing over it is an electronic eye. On the left is the plastic sheet.

THE LAST STEP before the paper goes onto the press is putting the type, engravings and heads into forms. Foreman Lance Affleck and compositor Bob Yerex work over the pages.

THIS IS IT. The fiendish device that somehow gets The Varsity into your eager hands three times a week. Read all about it below.

THE VARSITY

photostory
by wkr

Three times each week, stacks of Varsities are placed at various points around the campus. Usually students pick up all that are left. Whether they read them is another problem, but at least they get them.

The Varsities are delivered about 11 a.m. Work starts on them more than 12 hours before. This is how they get to you.

About 6 p.m. on the day before publication, the staff starts straggling down to The Varsity office, deep in the diseased bowels of the Students' Administrative Council building. People start vaguely talking of dummies and spreads. Phrases such as "do we have any news?" and "who is in the slot?" ring out happily for an hour or so. (These esoteric terms will be explained presently.)

For the next six or eight hours the editorial staff fills up the eight pages of the paper. (The advertisements have been placed earlier in the day by Barbara Paszly, a full-time employee of the SAC.)

The backbone of the paper is the reportorial staff, culled at the beginning of each year from a large number of dew-eyed girls that come down to the office with glamorous ideas about the newspaper business. Some of them take almost ten minutes to realize it isn't that glamorous. Many of them decide they're interested and stay around for the year.

And they're usually thankful for it in the long run. There may not be a journalism course available at the U of T, but there's The Varsity, and its alumni almost always manage to talk themselves into a good job in the journalism racket, a hard one to break.

The reporters are fresh, crisp and green for the first few assignments, and their writing shows it, but the news editor is an understanding man (?) and helps them out, especially if he is lecherous and the girls are passably fair as it were.

The man in the slot, or portion of the news desk in the middle (there's no other way to describe it) surrounded by a reporter or two, edits all the copy that is written. That is, he takes a pencil and corrects all the errors in style, grammar, etc. Then the copy (anything that is written with the intention of being printed) is handed to the makeup editor.

He figures out where each story is to be placed on the page, and then marks it in place on a dummy, or blank page the same size as The Varsity page. The same thing, roughly happens with the features and sports pages, although the feature pages are a bit more complicated.

The spread, or pages four and five, is so-called because every available inch of space across the two pages is used—five columns plus the "gutter" in the middle, almost another full column.

Every hour or so during the evening, as much copy as is available is sent up to the North Toronto Herald Press. Yonge and Eglinton area, to keep the foreman happy, and the linotype operators working.

The last copy run is usually about midnight.

Then the scene changes. While all the editorial, features and sports staff members are safely tucked into one bed or another, the mechanical staff at the press takes over, assisted and interfered with by a managing editor (press).

The press take the copy and translates it into lead—every word of it. The basic copy is put into the form of lines of type on a linotype machine (logically). There are three such machines in operation at the Herald. A keyboard slightly more complicated than that of a typewriter is used. The operator taps out words until he has exactly enough to fill a line. Three or four automatic spacers are placed in the line between words so the line will be filled out.

For every key he punches, a small brass "mat" slides gracefully out of a magazine, and down into a retaining slot. Each mat is responsible for the printing of one letter.

When all the mats are in place, the operator punches a couple of buttons, pulls a lever or two, and the machine takes over.

Liquid metal, mostly lead, is forced up against the mats, and a line of type is the result.

Headlines are set on a different machine, but on the same principle, called a Ludlow. These lines are set in "sticks" by hand. Heads are available in a number of sizes, from 14 points to 72 point.

(A point is a measure of type height. There are 72 points to the inch.)

The heads are available in all sorts of styles too, and the makeup editor uses a variety of "heads" to break up the monotony of the page and to give an "artistic effect" he says.

Photo reproduction, such as it is in The Varsity, is obtained through the use of engravings or "cuts".

The brilliantly clear and contrasty photos of the photo staff are sent to the engraver by means of the intrepid copy runner. With a "scan-engraver" the photos are reproduced in plastic sheets which are then glued to wooden blocks, type high.

In the scanner, an electric eye moves across the photo and translates impulses into electricity which moves a hot stylus into the plastic. At a light point on the photo, the stylus digs in farther than for a dark point. The result is a "cut" made up of hundreds of tiny hills and dales which carry the ink.

Bit by bit the type is cast, and placed into the forms. This is where the trouble starts.

There are rules for counting the lines in pieces of copy, but unfortunately they aren't always accurate. Often a story runs as much as six inches longer than it was intended. Often, too, it's short.

Usually the difference will only be that of a half dozen lines. If the story is long by six lines, six lines are cut out. If it's short, the type is "ledged" or spaced out. If it's really short, an ad can be shifted from another page to fill up the space. Chances are something on the other page will run long.

Near the final moments of the morning, a hole two columns wide and three inches deep may appear almost anywhere. Sometimes stories are hanging around for such emergencies. The managing editor (press) has been known to write a letter, editorial, advertisement or even a news story at the last minute.

Eventually the pages are locked up for the night, and they go on the press, one of the oldest flat-bed presses in the Dominion of Canada. This device, laboriously creaks out 7,735 copies of The Varsity in about four hours.

(The complete press run of the Toronto Telegram, by way of comparison, takes about 25 minutes.)

The proofreader, managing editor and pressman gather around the press. The paper threads slowly through, and in a few moments, a copy is in their hands.

Errors stick out like sore thumbs. The reproduction looks like they ran out of ink and substituted tar at the last minute.

The men wash the layer of ink (tar?) off their hands, dry their hands on newspaper (The North Toronto Herald is the only press known which uses paper which will actually absorb water in large quantities) and go home.

"What's in The Varsity today?" asks the student brightly. "Nothing," as he throws it aside.

From Chekov To Christie

Michael Jacot, author of Honour Thy Father, the most recent arrival at the Crest Theatre, certainly has dramatic talent, but his new play shows only sporadically. Strangely enough, his first act is the strongest. By the time the revelations of the third act are reached, the audience has figured them out for themselves.

The play has powerful scenes that held the opening night audience silent, but it also has many signs of inexperience and a couple of examples of dramatic ineptitude. Of these, the most continuously annoying is the presence of Armande in a family gathering at which she does not belong. There is no apparent dramatic reason for her presence, and she was obviously an embarrassment for Director George McCowan who resorted to stationing her in a doorway which got her as far as possible offstage while still leaving her theoretically part of the play.

There seemed little reason for the fortunate accident which made the heroine's attempt to kill her mother unsuccessful. This threw too much weight on the inadequately prepared religious issue. Both these structural flaws resulted in a loss of focus on the dramatic situation.

The play was greatly strengthened by two fine performances, those of Norma Renault as Blanche and Powys Thomas as her father. The play's most difficult role was given to David White who had to provide comic relief, have a private detective's curiosity about other people's secrets, try to decide whether or not he was in love and create a characterization with overtones of incest. He failed, but who could blame him.

The final effect of the play was one of disappointment because it had started so well. In the first act I was reminded of Chekov; in the third act I was reminded of Agatha Christie.

A Somewhat Disappointment

For the first time since its inception, the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra was this year without the sponsorship of the Royal Conservatory of Music. The orchestra's annual concert in Hart House last night showed, that the group has suffered greatly because of this.

It is quite understandable that embryo conductors, Douglas James and John Swan, both 3rd year Mus. Ed. students had a certain degree of difficulty preparing the ensemble and therefore their obvious lack of direction may to some extent be forgiven because of inexperience. However, some twenty rehearsals should be adequate to prepare a group even so amateur as this to perform with some degree of spirit and unity. The cello section had difficulty keeping together. The groans they sometimes emitted, especially in the Haydn could have been suffered had they been paying some attention to the conductor. The French horn section never really got off the ground all night. The violin sections under the leadership of concert master Metro Kozak performed with the best competence. Unfortunately, it takes a lot more players than just violinists to comprise an orchestra. The audience was often reminded of this fact with many players regularly forgetting about the presence of the conductor. The results were interesting.

The highlight of the evening was the performance of Bach's fourth Brandenburg concerto. The soloists, Metro Kozak, violinist and Robert Aitkin and David Drew, flautists, performed excellently. Mr. Kozak began nervously, but his performance which matured as it went along indicated a fine talent. His apparent lack of power was due to the orchestral accompaniment which never sank below mezzo forte and also to the fact that he was positioned on the wrong side of the stage so that his violin faced the orchestra and the back of the stage, instead of the audience. His magnificent artistry was further displayed in a solo passage in the third movement of the Haydn symphony.

One still cannot overlook the effort that went into the evening's works. The conductors need nothing but experience and the players nothing but practice. In the light of the overall result, one can do nothing but hope that the Conservatory will take the orchestra back beneath its wing for future years, under the direction of a staff member. Aspiring conductors should still be given the opportunity to conduct the ensemble. To ask them to assume the entire responsibility of direction is unfair.

Vocal Magazine

Part II of VOCAL MAGAZINE comes into existence tomorrow night at 8.30 p.m. at the First Floor Club. If you weren't there last week, or if you were using last week's Varsity for other than reading purposes (well, who needs to be specific?), Vocal Magazine is an evening of plays, stories, monologues and poems with a background of modern jazz.

Our reviewer at large spent last Monday night with these neophyte writers and such, and it didn't seem to do him any harm. In fact, he says he'll go back some time.

Program for tomorrow night:

Selected Elegies—David Humphreys

Teddy Bear and the Pregnant Parallel—A short story by Michael John Nimchuk

Three University Poets:

Lyrics and Non-Lyrics—John Robert Colombo

Three Voices and Others—Christopher Priestley

A Few Poems—Robert McCaldon

Palisade Park of the Soul—R. C. Pinto

Embryo—A dramatic monologue by Lionel Willis

Christopher Jones—Excerpts from the musical by

G. Matteo and J. Doris (with Marian Metcalfe, Sandy Leggett, John Harasti and Mike Cowan)

Volume III is scheduled for Tuesday, March 22nd, with new material and new writers. The address is 33 Asquith Avenue.

Cambridge

Has Them All.

The Professor

The Bicycle

And

The Gown

During the fall, Cambridge University offers a pretty sight. Imagine 8,000 undergraduates, newly returned to work, tearing around Cambridge on bicycles like so many bats out of hell, with their gowns streaming out behind them. Imagine this and you have a rough idea of what Cambridge looks like in term time.

It is not that bikes are good in themselves. Emphatically they are not. It is just that they are by far the quickest form of transport in Cambridge. The roads are narrow, and motor traffic is only mobile one minute out of every five, like a long soporific serpent that occasionally wakes up, gives a spasmodic jerk, and promptly relapses into sleep again. Yet, despite these difficulties, lectures have to be attended. As they begin at five, not ten, past the hour, speed is at a premium. As if this were not enough, the vast owl faces of sundry church clocks stare down remorselessly at the toiling undergraduates as if to remind them that punctuality is the end, and not the means, of existence.

Cambridge cyclists are the most skilful in the world. They are artists and, like most artists, the take a real pride in their art. With consummate grace they weave an intricate pattern through stationery cars, past octogenarian professors, indeed almost through the legs of the very policemen or 'bobbies' whose thankless job it is to 'control' them. Every law in the book is broken and every broken law is excused by the virtue of necessity. At Cambridge, time has got to be beaten, not killed.

The amazing thing is that time is the only thing that is beaten. After all, it is not easy at night to propel a disintegrating bike without lights (and often without hands) down a narrow dark alley and cause no injury. Yet this is the miracle performed every day by countless Cambridge undergraduates. Defective mechanical brakes are largely compensated for by the parachute-braking effect of a gown and by the constant use for braking purposes of one's feet. (The number of shoe shops in Cambridge is constantly increasing). Feats of this kind rekindle one's faith in the adaptability of man and in his natural ability to cope with a hostile environment with a minimum of external resources.

The operative word here is 'minimum' as most bikes are really little more than a skeleton of two wheels and crossbar. Like the Austrian's leather shorts, all of them are old or, if they are not, then at least they must look old. Most of them have had at least twelve owners. From the pedestrians' point of view, (and I speak here of the Cambridge pedestrian) it is a pity that the British love for antiquity should extend to bicycles. It can, I suppose, be explained in financial terms. (In Cambridge a bike is expensive at $4.50. Yet, I feel this is not the whole explanation as professors, too, go in for 'bargain bikes'.

As cyclists, the professors are at a severe disadvantage. Although they have excellent shoes to brake with, their gowns are less suitable for the purpose. Being by definition graduates, they are obliged to are as close to the mysteries of the mechanical world as they will probably ever get.

Certainly this true of the famous British philosopher, Bertrand Russell. In his undergraduate days he had a puncture, and was seen by a friend to be pumping up the sound tire. When asked why he did not pump the punctured tire instead, he replied: "Don't they communicate?" Yet, despite his mechanical ignorance, he continued riding a bicycle later as a member of the University staff. In spite of long experience, however, the older Cambridge professors always manage to look a little lost on a bicycle.

On the campus, however, they really come into their own. Most colleges in the University have well-kept lawns and these lawns are strictly the preserves of the staff. Here they congregate in twos and threes to discuss Kierkegaard's conception of immortality or Picasso's blue period. And here they rise to their full stature. No one could fail to be impressed by the sight of so much wisdom concentrated in so small an area, or by the lofty detachment of a Cambridge professor strolling in solitary meditation across the lawn with head bent and scarlet and black robes aflame in the evening sun.

Such, then, are a few of the impressions which will greet the Freshman as he comes up to Cambridge for his first year. Through his eyes we have seen the three things most abused at Cambridge—the professor, the bicycle and the gown. Next week we will follow him further on his way.

wear the long gowns decreed by tradition or, more probably, by some shortsighted out-of-touch gown stylist. However, as they ride rather slower than the undergraduates, the braking problem does not have quite the same ring of urgency. If, then, they take to bikes (and most of them do) they wisely pack their gowns into their rear baskets and keep to the inside curb.

It is curious how out of place a senior professor looks on a bicycle. All the pomp and circumstance are gone. He is striped of all those grandiloquent gestures that, on the rostrum, add such dignity to his bearing. On a bicycle, both his hands are planted firmly on the handlebars. They

Science New Fetish

The Dean of Faculties at Columbia University said last night in Convocation Hall modern science has "banished miracles and werewolves from everyday life."

Dr. Jacques Barzun, speaking in the second of the Marfleet Lecture series, said the chances of a new superstitious belief in science remain great, and the chances of intelligent direction of scientific advance are remote.

"The superstition," he said, "consists in the irrational feeling of security given to man by modern scientific methods."

"Scientific method," he pointed out, "has required that we subdue man's ego and pride. This attitude assures an unreasonable assurance and contentment until a further improvement marks a flaw in past results. The method has the force of a classical commandment. The thesis fits the mold of truth or it is rejected whole-hog."

The Dr. said that science today makes it clear that the invisible and intangible have no reality.

He said scientific certainty has been equated with the ability to be produced in visual form for the "greedy eye of man."

He said the mind is accustomed to a new enslavement, to unnecessary ritual—method—which binds the worker to his task.

"Factual error today is a mortal sin. A new puritanism has come from the labs where it is thought a high degree of accuracy prevails," he said.

"If the moral deterioration, incessant literalism, persists, the culture of life is bound to be lost," he said.

Dean Barzun said the order of the arts has been changed with degenerating to point of little import.

"This has led to the modern phenomenon of vague, metaphysical thought and phrasing.

A secondary effect is the placing of a premium on perception, not on thinking; man is reasoning by a dating notion of the mind called insight."

He said the scientific culture was built on "a suppression of the will leaving only enough will to fear that culture or to flee from it. Thus the idea that the only good is Art. This public platitude turns some men against life and others retreat as refugees into art."

Speaking of art he said persons are trying to solve the problems in great paintings which people 50 generations ago thought they understood.

Modern society has new desire to live intensively, yet with social and spiritual security. "The existentialists are the brave ones today," he added.

A Manual Of Life

despair

A reader may agree with all that was said in this column on Monday, but may find that his agreement impels him not toward a concrete policy but to complete despair. He may agree that apart from the uncompromising decision not to kill, there can be no solution to the problem of war, but he may also believe that the decision not to kill will not work either. And if neither violence nor non-violence will avail in the face of evil what hope is there that a man may live and yet not become a scourge to his neighbour? To suggest that the complete answer to this question is easy or even possible, would be to falsify that element of tragedy which may inhere in human life. But, starting with the easy answers and working his way toward the harder ones, the pacifist, like everyone else must attempt to map out a strategy by which he can live the kind of life he wants to live; a life that does not require the death of others.

The questions we were left with on Monday were these: 1) What action is involved in being a pacifist? 2) What consequences are likely to follow if we take such action, i.e., what further action will be demanded of us?

a pacifist nation

Let us discuss this problem mainly from the point of view of a pacifist nation, and then from that of a pacifist individual. The initial action that a pacifist nation will take will be simply, in Nietzsche's phrase, to "smash its entire military establishment down to its lowest foundations." It will let it be known that it does not intend to meet any aggression by armed force, it will divest itself of all military alliances, and turn itself and its money to providing a materially and intellectually full life for anyone that wants it.

What will happen to a country that pursues such a foreign policy? The best possibility, of course, is that nothing will happen, that such a country although it could continue to compete economically and ideologically on the international level would have no fear of aggression. Is this such a far-fetched hope? Surely, although a few of us can believe that USSR would respect an unarmed US a great many of us insist on believing that the US would respect an unarmed USSR.

domination

Since, however, such trust is possibly unfounded on both sides, let us consider the worst possibility. If the West were to pursue a policy of pacifism, chances are that the Communists would quietly walk in and take over. Once that happened either our lives would be changed very little or very much. Yet how much could the Communists hope to change our lives? As far as ordinary day-to-day life was concerned, surely not much. As far as the jobs we are doing and the standard of living are concerned it would be to the benefit of anyone interested in ruling us to leave things much as they are. If our country is taken over by Communists there is a good chance that those who do not resist will be allowed to live lives that are materially much as they were before. It cannot be reiterated enough that if anyone really wishes to govern this country either democratically or dictatorially, the country must be allowed to run on an economically feasible basis.

The one fact and the only fact perhaps that

This is the second of a two part series on pacifism. Today, a concrete plan of pacifist action. By the way, Monday's editorial called The Highest Maxim and signed F.N. was written by Friedrich Nietzsche and was published as aphorism 284 of his The Wanderer and His Shadow in 1880.

will tend to militate towards the re-emergence of democratic procedures and basic freedoms that a dictator may begin by suppressing is simply that a man cannot be driven against his nature without breaking down. Suppressed freedom will re-emerge simply because freedom is practical.

vainglory

Am I painting too rasy a picture of Communist dictatorship? You wish to point out that there is little in countries presently under Communist dictatorship to suggest such a picture? True, but we shall soon be painting in some rather darker tones and some two passages within the context of which the discussion can proceed. Because if it is important to take into account how bad a Communist dictatorship might gloomier suggestions. Before I do so I wish to quote be, it is equally important to take into account what is contained in these two quotations.

The first is from St. Augustine's City of God, "For what skills it in respect of this short and transitory life, under whose dominion a mortal man doth live, so he be not compelled to acts of impiety and injustice . . . For what does conquering, or being conquered, hurt or profit men's lives, manners or dignities either? I see no good it does, but only adds unto their intolerable vainglory, who aim at such matters, and war for them, and lastly receive them as their labour's reward . . . Take away vainglory, and what are men but men?"

among ourselves

The second quotation is from Simone de Beau-

Track Champs

Victoria College won the University Indoor Track Championship last night in Hart House as they racked up four wins in five events to score 134 points on the year. University College could get only four thirds in the five events and thus fell to 107 points, far behind the leaders.

Top man for Vic was Al Brereton, who won the Senior Broad Jump, and anchored the winning team in the distance relay. Other winners for Vic were Jim Watt in the Junior High Jump, and Bob Ecclestone in the Junior Broad Jump. The lone "foreign" winner was Vin Crawford in the Senior High Jump.

During the year, the stalwarts of the Vic team included Jim Snider, who won six events (30 points) and captured innumerable other points on relay teams; Al Brereton and Peter Watson, who between them garnered another 35 points.

McGoey Leaves The Ladies

A University of Toronto lecturer broke a long established campus tradition yesterday when she heaved a visiting student out of her household science class.

Varsity Staff reporter John McGoey who was attending the lecture "to round out his education" said it was a "shocking blow" when the lecturer, Mrs. P. F. Coleman, asked him to leave the room.

"I was not only embarrassed," McGoey said, "but I felt like a little boy in kindergarten."

McGoey, an arts student, said he noticed one other male in the class; but later the reporter discovered the lone male hadn't been ejected because he was in the course—due to time-table difficulties.

"When Mrs. Coleman noticed me, probably because I was the only one not talking," she said fiercely, "we'll have no extras today, I left," McGoey said.

As McGoey walked out of the class, head bowed, the coeds burst into laughter.

Asked if he planned to take steps to correct the situation, McGoey flatly said, "No."

"This campus has long been bothered by discrimination," McGoey said. "Now, I at least see one thing: the girls practice it more than anybody else." "I wouldn't want to impeach Mrs. Coleman. I suppose she acted in good faith."

prof debate

"Resolved That Man Is Obsolete," will be the subject discussed at the Victoria College Debating Parliament March 17.

Debating will be four Victoria college professors. On the affirmative side will be Dr. D. J. Knight and Dr. P. Buitenhuis, and on the negative will be Principal Northrop Frye and Rev. K. J. Joblin.

The debate will take place in Alumni Hall at 8 p.m. and refreshments will be served after in the Copper Room.

And it isn't always in the world of major sports that the really thrilling contests take place. The Musicians won their two game total point series by the narrowest of margins, downing Pharmacy Anions 103-102.

The Pillrollers won the first game of the series 49-43, but the undaunted Musicians roared back to win the final 60-53. Sulev and Head paced the winners in the last contest scoring 18 and 16 points respectively. Thompson led the Druggists, hooping 21 points.

A Manual Of Life continued

voir's The Mandarins. One of the characters tells this story:

"The major subject of conversation between my parents," he began, "was the disasters that were menacing the world—the red peril, the yellow peril, barbarism, decadence, revolution, bolshevism. And I imagined them all as horrible monsters who were going to swallow up all humanity. Well, at dinner one evening, my father was doing his usual prophesying—the revolution was imminent, civilization was foundering. And my mother was nodding agreement, a look of terror on her face. And then suddenly I thought, 'But no matter what happens, the winners will still be men.' Maybe those aren't exactly the words I used, but that's the gist of it. The effect was miraculous. No more monsters. It was all here on earth among human creatures, among ourselves."

What I have meant to say with these two quotations is simply: If our press is taken from us, our freedom of assembly, our freedom to profess our religion, is not our real freedom left intact, and are we not after all still human beings, ruled by human beings? For some the answer may well be "no", but the question must be asked.

survival

The general questions that all of us, including the pacifists, must ask today are these: What is it about a totalitarian dictatorship that is most horrible to me and what can I do to fight it? Now what is most horrible about a totalitarian dictatorship to me and I think to most others is that in one of two ways it will not allow us to survive as human beings. Either it will take away our lives, or if it allows us to live will remove from our lives those intellectual spiritual and material conditions of well-being, that define our survival as not simply existence but as human existence. Simply stated: human survival is impossible not only when we are not allowed to survive, but as well when we are not allowed to be human, when life becomes bestial partly, in Augustine's phrase, because we are "compelled to acts of impiety and injustice." One of these acts is the killing of another human being.

If these are the things that are most horrible to us we must decide how we are to resist them. But before we can proceed any further it must be understood that from the pacifist's point of view it is only reasonable that if we feel we must resist these things then we must do so no matter who tries to impose them on us. There is no point resisting these horrors in a foreign government or ideology if we are willing to let our own government or ideology impose them on us. When the pacifist says, "I will not go to war" he is resisting the attempt on the part of his own nation to make him act unjustly, i.e. either to die or to kill or both, and it is precisely the method he uses to resist injustice in his own nation that provides him with the clue to how to resist injustice imposed upon him by any nation, specifically a totalitarian nation.

a clue

The clue lies in the words "I will not". The weapon is the weapon of refusal.

Two examples will show how effective refusal can be. The first is from the sphere of labor relations. It must be fairly clear to anyone who thinks about it seriously for a while that the trade-union movement has saved capitalism. A hundred years ago the picture that capitalism presented to an observer like Karl Marx, was that of two irreconcilable enemies, capital and labor, that must sooner or later clash in a bloody revolution. There seemed to be no alternative for the working class, denied as it was the most basic material and psychological requisites of a decent life, but to overturn society and destroy the class that was keeping it in a state not unlike slavery. But there was no revolution, and conditions have improved.

the strike

At least part of the answer is that labor found and used a weapon that made violent revolution unnecessary—the method of refusal as embodied mainly in the strike. The very fact that there was an economic relationship between the worker and the capitalist made it possible for the worker to withhold his labor as a way of restraining the capitalist from injustice without destroying either that economic relationship or the society of which it formed a part. By giving the worker a source of pressure as a basis for collective bargaining, the strike helped keep capitalism from becoming a thoroughly vicious and therefore obsolete way of organizing a society for production. This fact is often overlooked by those who complain about the "power of unions." The strike was not allowed to become an institution unopposed, but labor's right to refuse intolerable conditions has become relatively established.

The second example of refusal lies in events going on right now and for the past few years in the southern United States. The Negroes have discovered the method of civil disobedience and as they use it they bear witness to the force with which ideas can circle the world and return to their original home; for the present wave of civil disobedience is derived in part from the example of Gandhi, and Gandhi in turn derived his ideas of civil disobedience partly from Thoreau who used it a hundred years ago to fight for the abolition of Negro slavery. (This is a point I first heard from Bruno Morawetz.)

intimidation

The method of refusal, then, is not unknown as a method of resisting injustice in the non-totalitarian nations. Can it not be effectively used to intimidate a totalitarian nation that has taken over here?

What I am suggesting is that we meet any attempt by a totalitarian regime to suppress our liberties with a general strike on a sufficient scale to cripple the entire industry of this country.

It is my belief that such a tactic could work as effectively as it ever has in other spheres where the strikers seemed doomed to fail or give in but did not. However, let us discuss some of the objections to this tactic.

It might be argued in the first place, that faced with a general strike a totalitarian regime would not scruple to shoot down as many strikers as they had to in order to make the rest go back to work. Now, this is a horrible possibility and it would perhaps seem callous in the face of it to urge the strikers to stand firm. The only thing I can say although it does not perhaps constitute an answer is this: if it happened it would not be the first time in the history of this country or of the US that striking workers were gunned down. Only a few decades ago right here, machine guns were used on striking workers by the men they were striking against. And yet, horrible as it is, those men stood firm, and they won. Similarly in India, the platoons upon platoons of Indians that Gandhi mobilized on behalf of non-violence were beaten down and yet they did not let a hand be laid on them. And yet they too stood firm and even today we are not at all sure for these men that they died for peace in a way that no man with a gun in his hand ever could?

insanity

There is one more objection, the most horrible yet. It is almost inconceivable and the answer is almost impossible. It is this: what if the regime is sufficiently irrational and in fact insane enough to be willing to annihilate every last person in a country at the first hint of opposition, or even without opposition, but just on whim?

Before the Second World War such a question could hardly have come up. Now, however, most other questions and answers grow pale in its presence. The totally irrational decision of the Nazis to destroy an entire race, so-called, has given us new insight into the dark potentialities of the human spirit. Again infallible answers are not possible; only a few points can be made.

the yellow band

Someone once told me that when the Nazis occupied Denmark all the Jews in the country were ordered to wear the yellow armband marking them out for slaughter. The King of Denmark broadcast a message to all the Danes asking them to wear yellow armbands. Within days according to the story it was no longer compulsory for anyone to wear the bands. A small incident. It is even possible to wonder incredulously how true it is. It serves to point out, however, that there always remains the hope, that even the most irrational enemy can be intimidated by moral force.

In case this seems implausible yet, let me ask one question. In the years from 1933 to 1939 did the nations of the world give a single concrete display of moral disapproval at the Nazi intention to annihilate the Jews? Why did no allied country open its doors to mass Jewish immigration during those years? True, Hitler might sooner or later have defeated even those countries, but such a policy of open immigration would have represented an unequal vocal display of moral force. Instead, for one reason or another throughout the entire period very little happened on an international scale to suggest that any nation even disapproved of what Hitler was doing. Only Jews seemed to disapprove, but that was understandable.

We cannot decide that moral force is worthless until we try to use it. We cannot say that the enemy is immovable until we try to move him.

If all this is of no avail and the two sides do join combat, the problem shifts from the shoulders of the pacifist nation to those of the pacifist individual in a world at war. But the problem is in reality still the same.

experiment

What I have written here represents perhaps only a small part of the pacifist debate. Much perhaps remains to be said on both sides. But there is just one more thing I would like to say. It is this: Pacifism is a bold and ambitious experiment. It is exactly the same as another experiment the human animal has tried to perform: the experiment of civilization. What is the nature of this experiment? It is an attempt to see if we can formulate a high and noble set of imperatives and succeed in governing our lives according to them, uncompromisingly. The experiment of pacifism is only the most recent and now the most crucial manifestation of the continuing experiment of human civilization. And I for one am not yet willing to admit that the experiment has failed.

Communists, Credulity And A

"... A smooth forehead

Is a sign of insensitivity

The man who laughs

Has merely not yet been told

The terrible news."

- Bertolt Brecht

The story of Joe Salsberg and his personal odyssey through the wonderland of the Communist Party is of great importance to all of us.

It should serve to remind us of the true nature of the Communist Movement and why we are committed to struggle against it.

For whether we choose to acknowledge it or not, we are engaged in a bitter struggle with Communism.

The Communists have declared the time and place for the war. It is doubtful if we have even the choice of weapons.

Why this struggle?

Why should it be that those who wish only to be left in peace, must engage in a bitter fight with a remote and alien way of life?

Our way of life is based upon the principle that the human being is somehow "sacred". That there are things he cannot and should not be made to do.

To the Communist Movement, the individual is simply a tool to be utilized for the improvement of the state. Outside the party, outside the larger aims of the movement and the state, he counts for nothing.

To the Communist our concept of the individual is sentimentality. It is merely a historical curiosity that arose during the struggle of the bourgeoisie to establish themselves over the remnants of feudal society.

It remains for us now to show that our principles, our belief in the sanctity of the individual is worth preserving.

And the necessity for such proof comes at the worst possible time.

Our religious leaders have given us only factional dogmatism and pious pronouncements in place of leadership.

Our political leaders have shown themselves either vain and posturing or foolish and preposterously greedy.

Our ethics are blurred by various shades of honesty and our moral standards are attacked and ridiculed in lewd magazines and the twisted humor of "sick" comedians.

One begins to feel that perhaps we have nothing worth defending. To merely survive, to carve out a niche and line it with sufficient creature comforts, seems to be the only goal worth the effort.

Since Macarthyism has left its ugly stain across the United States, it has become almost unfashionable to be militantly anti-communist.

We want to build our own little worlds within the world and forget all about everything except our own survival.

Unfortunately, no matter how passionately we desire "peace" we are committed to "war".

We must fashion out of ourselves a set of principles and a way of life built upon those principles which will vigorously oppose the Communists.

Without God, without faith, and without illusion, we must establish a definition of the human being that preserves his dignity and defends him from humiliation and degradation.

And we must be able to oppose the Communists without sacrificing a single pillar of that definition.

We have no choice.

Fifteen years ago, at the height of his power, J. B. Salsberg was the representative of St. Andrews' Riding in the provincial legislature. And although he was an avowed Communist, a member of the Central Committee and the Political Bureau of the Labor Progressive Party, he was respected by even the most resolutely conservative members of the Progressive Conservative majority of the house.

When he walked down Spadina Avenue everyone, the garment workers, the taxi drivers, the little storekeepers, the bookies and the racketeers all had a word to say to "J.B.". Whatever his politics were, they remembered him from the grim days when he fought to organize the sweatshops and he was their man.

on King Street, a long way from his old offices at the corner of Spadina and College. He is no longer a representative of Spadina Riding and he is no longer a member of the Communist Party. And when he walks down Spadina Avenue, it is only the rare "old-timer" who recognizes him and stops to pass the time of day.

J. B. Salsberg is one of the many former members of the Communist party who after years of service decided to leave the party.

Since 1917, when the Bolsheviks seized power in Russia, every decade has produced at least one catastrophic experience that has left legions of disillusioned and disaffected Communists in its wake. In the 20's there was the fight for control of the party between Stalin and Trotsky; in the 30's there were the long protracted purges and the Stalin-Hitler pact of the 1939. And in our own generation there was the Hungarian revolution and the speech of Khrushchov to the twentieth congress of the Soviet Communist Party.

J. B. Salsberg was a member of the party in the 1930's. He knew of the purges in Russia, and he saw the unbelievable when Stalin and Hitler, the two arch-enemies signed a non-aggression pact.

Why was it not until 1956 that Joe Salsberg finally left the Communist Party?

Why did he not see in the activities of the Soviet Communist party the same inconsistencies that others had seen and so vehemently pointed out?

Joe Salsberg does not attempt to excuse himself or his conduct during those years.

"We should have asked questions," he says. "We would not have accepted so much on faith. But Fascism was rising. And Chamberlain obviously wanted a situation where Hitler would fight Russia. Only Soviet Russia seemed to be fighting Fascism. We had no choice!"

It is difficult for us now to imagine just what it was like in the 1930's when Hitler seemed omnipotent and the western nations sat and watched while Hitler and Mussolini helped Franco take over Spain. It was not hard then to see the Second World War approaching and only the Soviet Union seemed to be working to prevent it.

For years, Maxim Litvinov, the Russian Foreign Minister, had been calling for a tri-partite treaty among Britain, France and the Soviet Union that would have effectively encircled Hitler and perhaps have prevented him from launching his attack upon Poland. And he had been persistently cold-shouldered.

"The Stalin-Hitler pact was horrible," Mr. Salsberg says, "but we were carried by a basic faith that they were building a better order."

Mr. Salsberg's gradual withdrawal from the Communist party began in 1948, when suddenly all of the Yiddish writers and publications seemed to disappear from Russia. There was no explanation given and it took time for people outside to realize fully what had happened to the once flourishing Yiddish culture in Russia.

When he realized the extent of the disaster that had befallen the Yiddish culture in the Soviet Union, J. B. Salsberg requested the Canadian Communist Party to ask the Russian Communist party for some sort of explanation.

His request was rejected by the Canadian Communist Party who said that such a request indicated lack of confidence in the Soviets. Private inquiries were made, but the replies were not satisfactory to Mr. Salsberg.

In 1950, the Canadian Communist Party adopted an official position concerning the disappearance of the Yiddish culture within the Soviet Union.

They stated that the modern democratic system of Russian Socialism had progressed to such a point that all barriers had been removed and there was no longer any need for separate cultures.

J. B. Salsberg could not accept such a statement. To him it was simply not a "reflection of reality." He demanded an opportunity to go to Russia and make a personal investigation. He was told by Tim Buck, leader of the Communist party, that such a thing "just isn't done!" and at first his request was refused.

It was not until 1955 that Salsberg was finally able to go to Moscow. He found conditions even worse than he had suspected. He learned that most of the leading Jewish writers had been shot. The administrators blamed it on the excesses of the former NKVD chief Beria who was the only leading Communist purged after the death of Stalin.

But such explanations did not satisfy Mr. Salsberg. In 1948 there had been grandiose schemes for the expansion of Yiddish culture. Overnight all of the Jewish institutions in Russia had been closed up. When the staffs of the Yiddish publishing houses, the Yiddish Theatre and the Jewish Anti-Fascist com-came to work in the morning they found that their offices had been padlocked during the night. When he returned to Canada, he was asked by Tim Buck not to state his views at the next meeting of the Central Committee. Mr. Salsberg limited himself to some remarks concerning the need for Communist Parties throughout the world to question and examine their principles.

Even such mild-seeming remarks as these were enough to shock the assembled Party leaders.

It was at this meeting that Tim Buck made his famous statement that "What is good enough for the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Soviet Russia is good enough for me."

"Only an enslaved mentality," says Mr. Salsberg, "can an atrophied mind could adopt such a position." The Canadian Party prepared several statements for Mr. Salsberg to sign concerning the Jewish question in Russia but Mr. Salsberg refused all of them.

"I was blocked," he says, "I just couldn't go forward."

In the meantime, conditions within the Labor Progressive Party were becoming steadily more strained. Although Mr. Salsberg had not been a member of the Political Bureau of the Party since 1954, most of his disagreements with the party had been revealed to the rank and file. But they had nevertheless begun to be aware of the dissension. Then came Premier Khrushchov's speech in 1956 at the twentieth congress of the Soviet Communist Party with his revelations concerning Stalin's regime. Communist parties throughout the world, the Khrushchov speech caused bitter dissension and resignations, as the old-line Communists struggled to readjust their thinking to the fact that they had

But there is no bitterness in Joe Salsberg.

"It isn't to cry," he says, "and it isn't to laugh. It is to understand. I did what my conscience dictated, what I believed to be in the interests of my fellow men. Most of what I did in that period (organizing in the labor movement, two years on city council, twelve years in the provincial legislature) was of great benefit to the people of Ontario."

Although it was the Jewish Question which began his personal dispute with the Communist movement, Mr. Salsberg feels that the conduct of the Russians towards the Jews was only one aspect of the fundamental problem within the whole Communist Movement.

And although he feels strongly about being a Jew, it was not just as an outraged member of a religious minority that he left the Communist Party, but as a human being, personally outraged by the party's "self-assumed right to judge and destroy people".

"It isn't to laugh and it isn't to cry. It is to understand."

en supporting an admitted criminal for thirty years. In Canada, the party passed a resolution stating that Joe Salsberg's position in 1955 had been correct and inviting him to return to the Political Bureau. Mr. Salsberg was hesitant about accepting.

He felt that a whole new approach to Socialism was needed. He wanted a re-examination of the whole principle of "democratic centralism" that had permitted the excesses of Stalin. He felt that this was necessary for every Communist Party in every country throughout the world to study and question of its basic principles.

The crucial point in Mr. Salsberg's dispute with the Communist Party in Canada and with the world communist movement was his insistence upon a return to democratic principles and actions. He felt that the party had degenerated when it assumed the right to speak on behalf of the proletariat rather than as an expression of the will of the proletariat. He wanted the Communist Party in Canada and the Communist Movement throughout the world to establish democratic principles of action so that dissenting voices could be heard and issues publicly debated.

He had widespread support within the Canadian Party and even before his own formal withdrawal many members had already quit.

Tim Buck admitted that mistakes had been made but he saw no need for a radical change in the conduct of the Party.

As he put it once, "Let's stop wallowing in the past and get on with the work."

Although he had already left the party in all but name, Mr. Salsberg attended a final party convention in 1956 where he and Tim Buck debated formally before the assembled members, each speaking for an hour.

Following the debate, Mr. Salsberg left the Communist party. A large segment of the party went with him. The LPP was so torn by dispute and resignations that it was forced to withdraw and organize itself under the new title of the Communist Party of Canada.

And what about Joe Salsberg?

The course of "history" is now moving on without him. For a while he was "hot copy" in the daily newspapers but they have now, more or less, forgotten him. For a while, too, he was busy on several speaking engagements. But then personal difficulties forced him to withdraw from the lecture circuit and only recently has he begun to accept speaking engagements.

"my early days, dear god"

Things ain't what they used to be, as a newspaperman of the 1920s allegedly would have said, according to Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur. They were newspapermen. They wrote a play called The Front Page. It's about newspapermen.

So when I dropped in on a rehearsal of the Penguin Productions' version of The Front Page I thought I'd be right at home.

On the stage were five "newspapermen." Half of them were smoking cigars. They were stomping excitedly around the press room. They wore their hats on the backs of their heads. They butchered the English, even the American language.

It probably was like that then. The reporters could turn out competent news copy while half drunk, tell off their managing editors without worrying where their next meal was coming from, (although they might not know), and generally live a life of romantic freedom.

It ain't that way now.

The Front Page re-creates an atmosphere of a hard-hitting newspaper business.

I'm a little sorry I missed it then.

You can get a healthy taste of that atmosphere now (April 4-9) when The Front Page will be at the House of Hambourg Theater.

Today is the last day for the skating on the steps of the City Hall. Today the ice placed there in one-foot blocks has served its purpose. Today the Metro engineers have a problem. How to get rid of the ice.

The 400 square feet of ice was piled up on the steps of Nathan's Palace and skaters have been amusing the public for three days around the lunch hour.

Yesterday several engineers were standing around the structure, now frozen into one solid mass of ice.

Now what are we going to do with it?

Suggestion: Every University of Toronto student with nothing to do should this afternoon go down to the City Hall with an ice pick or other sharp instrument. Then, for the benefit of our fair city, they should chip away about one cubic foot of the ice.

Bring it to the Students' Administrative Council office. Ask for the president, and stack the blocks neatly in his office.

He likes ice.

National Fund Still After Dough

The University of Toronto National Fund Drive is not over yet.

It's still barreling along in Canadian towns out West.

At the moment, the U of T Director of Alumni Affairs and former Registrar, Joseph Cooper Evans, is touring the West speaking to alumni groups, in an effort to raise more money for U of T's massive expansion program.

He's in Calgary now. Next stop, is Vancouver; and after that Mr. Evans plans to swing his tour through the United States.

Last night his daughter, Sally Joe, said: "Some of the alumni in the West are well organized, and it's quite possible any money they may give will be a terrific boon to the fund."

"Besides this," she added, "the National Fund Drive is not finished as most people at this university seem to think. It needs the support of enthusiastic graduates."

Mr. Evans is a University College graduate, 1929.

Executions In Hungary All So Much Nonsense

By PAT BENHAM

The Manitoban

WINNIPEG, March 14 (CUP)—A Canadian who lived through the exciting times of the 1956 Hungarian revolt, and "settling down" period following it has called recent reports of executions of 18-year-old students as "so much nonsense."

Floyd Williston was Canadian representative at the Budapest, Hungary, headquarters of the World Federation of Democratic Youth for three years. The federation's membership is largely communist.

He finished his duties last fall and settled in Winnipeg to manage a bookstore.

Said Mr. Williston, "Ed Sullivan went out on a limb and made a fool of himself, though he still hasn't admitted it."

Mr. Sullivan and his informants started the rumors "to stir up the question of Hungary again, because it was becoming a 'dead fish' on the international scene," he said.

Last November Mr. Sullivan told the University of Manitoba campus newspaper, The Manitoban, his charges concerning the imminent execution of 150 Hungarian students were not reckless. "I wouldn't go on the air to 5,000,000 people and spout reckless charges," he said in a telephone interview. He promised other facts would be released nationally.

The WFDY headquarters is in Budapest, Mr. Williston said, and if there had been any substance to the rumors the federation would have issued a statement on the question.

Formed after the war, the original of WFDY was to bring together young people from countries which had fought Germany. Since then some countries have withdrawn because the majority of the federation supporters are either Socialist or Communist, he said. He added in spite of their defection, membership in WFDY is now estimated at 87,000,000 in 97 countries.

To attribute the executions to Russian orders was to show a complete ignorance of the Hungarian situation, he said. He claimed Russia has no more connection with actions of the Hungarian government than the United States has with those of the West German government.

On the other hand, although most of the population supports the state and its policies, the Catholic church is still very active, and not in the least persecuted, Mr. Williston said.

Women's Athletic Elections

Women's Athletic Directorate

The electoral meeting of the University of Toronto Women's Athletic Association to elect the six student representatives of the Women's Athletic Directorate for 1960-61 will be held in the lecture room, Women's Athletic Building on Thursday March 24th, at 5:00 p.m. sharp.

Nominations will be received by the Secretary of the Association until Friday, March 18th at 4:00 p.m. Nominations must be signed by two members of the University of Toronto W.A.A. and must be made on the forms to be obtained from the secretary in the Athletic Office, Women's Athletic Building.

Representatives to the Electoral Body must be appointed and sent to the meeting as follows: the W.A.A. of University College, Victoria, St. Michael's St. Hilda's, the Faculty of Medicine, the School of Physical and Health Education and the School of Physical and Occupational Therapy, four representatives each; the W.A.A. of the School of Nursing two representatives; the W.A.A. of Pharmacy, one representative; Basketball Club, six; Hockey, Swimming and Volleyball Clubs, four each; Tennis, Badminton and Softball Clubs, two each; Archery-Ski and Fencing Clubs, one each; the Undergraduate members of the 1959-60 Directorate. Names of voting representatives must be given the Secretary not later than Monday March 21st, 4:00 p.m. and no proxies will be permitted except upon written notice to the Secretary prior to the election. Electoral Body representatives may only carry one vote each.

Women's Athletic Clubs

The annual elections for the women's Basketball, Hockey, Swimming, Tennis, Badminton, Softball, Volleyball, Ski, Archery, Bowling and Fencing Club will be held on Wednesday March 23rd. Voting will be held from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. in room 102, Women's Athletic Building.

An election for the presidency ONLY of each club must be signed by two voting members of the club in question and filed with the Secretary of the Athletic Association, Women's Athletic Buildings by 4:00 p.m. Monday, March 21st.

Voting members for each club are restricted to those who have been registered as playing members of an intramural or intercollegiate sport during the past academic year, or who are certified by a team manager to have attended at least 50 per cent of the practices of that team; members of the club executive and managers of all teams playing under the club.

Each faculty, college and department entering one or more teams in an intramural series is entitled to ONE representative on the executive of the club directing that sport. The president of the club is not regarded as representative and her faculty is entitled to its regular representative.

Scholarly Magazines Are Better Than Ever

Two second-year psychology students will learn a lesson about The Varsity's respect for truth today.

Fred Takerer and Ross Park, appeared in the Varsity office last night claiming to have an announcement for the paper.

The announcement? "The ASAC (All-Students' Anthropology Club) is holding its centennial meeting to discuss Dr. Alan H. Kelso de Montigny's paper: The degeneration of the female breast in a supporting gadget. Will all members please come to the meeting (11 p.m. at 240a Bloor St. East above the Lady Ellis Shop) equipped with suitable paraphernalia for discussion. This promises to be one of the most uplifting meetings in many a century."

Well, we didn't believe them for one minute.

Then they showed us the 1957-8 edition of a learned journal from down Florida way. There was Dr. H. Alan de Montigny's incredible name and the incredible title of his article.

Takerer and Park did hint that there really isn't any All Campus Anthropology Club and there really isn't going to be any meeting.

But the learned journal was for real. Our friends had taken it from the U of T library.

Its title: International Anthropological and Linguistic Review. The title page says it is published "for scientists, for statesmen and for the cultured public in general."

The review is published in Miami, Fla., but printed in Holland.

The secretary - treasurer is Dr. H. Alan de Montigny. The editor-in-chief is Dr. H. Alan de Montigny. There are other people on the editorial staff.

But for anyone who tends to take the magazine lightly, we reprint in full the advertisement appearing in English and Spanish on the inside front cover:

"This journal owes its continued existence to the understanding and foresight, as well as to the moral and financial support of the brilliant statesman and leader of the Dominican Nation, His Excellency, Generalissimo Dr. Rafael Leonidas Trujillo M., Former President of the Dominican Republic."

It wasn't necessary for Takerer and Park to lie to us.

We're always happy to give credit to the Trujillos.

Problem

A first-year St. Mike's student was having trouble with metaphysics essay recently.

After about a page, he discovered he didn't have much more to say.

He wrote:

"Excuse me, a white rat just ran across the room."

He then continued with his essay for a while, but later inserted.

"I caught the rat and threw it against the wall. The smell is making me nauseated but I shall try to continue."

More essay.

"Excuse me. A knock at the door."

More essay.

"It was the most beautiful girl in the world, my mother."

More essay.

"Excuse me, another knock."

More essay.

"It was the second most beautiful girl in the world, my next door neighbour."

More essay.

"My neighbour has gone back next door. Excuse me. When I get back I'll tell you what happened."

More essay.

"I followed my neighbour into the room. She had changed into a negligee. She began to walk towards me. Suddenly I discovered:

"SHE WAS A VAMPIRE"

End of essay.

His teacher refused to mark the paper. He is scheduled to have an interview with the St. Mike's English department today.

Senior Engineers Win Jennings Hockey Cup

By GENE GLISKY

The Jennings Cup, symbol of University of Toronto Intramural hockey supremacy since 1961 has found its resting place firmly clutched in the hands of the Varsity engineers for the 21st time.

Sr. SPS defeated Jr. SPS 3-0 in the final game of the best of three championship series to win the honors at Varsity Arena yesterday afternoon. This makes it the 16th time the elderly Skulemen have won the Cup, their younger counterparts winning the laurels five times.

Sr. SPS won the first game of the series 5-2 but the undaunted Juniors won the next 3-1 to set up the final contest.

The game was a matter of superior size and experience overcoming youthful enthusiasm. In the scoreless first period, Sr. Skulemen handed out punishing checks with devastating accuracy to take the wind out of the Juniors' sails.

Bill Dibdin drew first blood for the Old Guys with a goal from the point mid-way through the second period. Jack Way garnered the assist.

Ev Rush, returning to action after an injury in the Inter-collegiate senior wars, two minutes later, tipped the puck in from a defender's stick to put the game on ice for the Senior Beersmen.

Any hope the Little Slide-rulers had for organizing a rally were shattered by import Doug Armitage, as he rifled home a pass from Rush in the last minute of the contest.

In the battle of the Arts Colleges, powerful Trinity College squashers squashed the slightly less powerful University College squashers 2-1 to win the Boake Trophy as the undisputed University of Toronto Intramural, Intracollege, interfaculty team racquette squash championship (whew).

In the best of five games series, Trinity's Chris English and William Parker oversquashed George Watkin and Brian McGrath respectively.

Ted Kosoy duly representative of University College won the UC squashmen's only series by downing Harry Miller of Trinity.

The VARSITY

The Undergraduate Newspaper

Vol. LXXIX — No. 69

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

Friday, March 18th, 1960

This is The Varsity literary issue, more or less a dozen pages of poems, short stories, drawings and comment. It is also the next-to-last issue of The Varsity for the academic year 1959-60. The publication is intended to fill a gap left by the cancellation of the magazine supplement of this newspaper and the absence this year of Jargon, the all-university review of writing, once published by the Students' Council. We hope you enjoy the issue. We hope also that it will seem to fill a need and that the students of this university will urge their elected representatives to assure the continued publication of student writing.

Charlie Chan And Number One Son

by David Lewis Stein

The woman's curse, long and fierce, like steel scraped against a steel wall, caught George and held him motionless. He clutched his parcels to his chest and tried to squeeze himself into a doorway. They had no right to do this to him. He paid his rent, stayed in his own room, and minded his own business. He bothered no one. He wanted no trouble anywhere. He would fix them if they started up with him. He would call the police and see them all in jail.

Scattered along the dim hallway, the foreigners locked in the woman's fury, stood momentarily silent. Then one answered the woman, another turned on him, and two more began to pound on the door of the room where the woman was. They paid no attention to George. A stocky, barefoot little man wearing only trousers and an undershirt ran past the doorway without even pausing to look at him. It was as if George were an invisible man. He wound his way between them, across the landing, and went up the stairs.

Enclosed again in the still space of his own room, George spread the paper bags out on the table and began to prepare his evening meal. Saturday night suppers were a ritual with George. He began by pouring himself a glass of whisky and sipping it while he heated up the can of soup and waited for the potatoes to fry and the pork chops to turn black around the edges. For dessert he cut himself a thick slice of jelly roll and brewed a large pot of tea. By the time he had finished washing the dishes, cleaning the table and sweeping the floor, it was almost time to watch the hockey game. George lived in Toronto, but because of the generally snotty way in which Connie Smythe ran things, he gave his loyalty to Montreal. He maintained a careful record of their weekly progress, and kept a large color photograph of Maurice Richard, clipped from a weekend newspaper, pinned up over his sink. Usually George poured himself another glass of whisky to go with the hockey game and timed it so that he finished the glass as the game ended.

After the hockey game, there was the news and the weather report and then it was time for the late movie. Motion pictures were, for George, the finest thing on the television, and the perfect ending to his Saturday nights. Not only was he able to see a first-class sports event but he could, also, in the same evening, enjoy a good movie without ever leaving the warm comfort of his own room.

George's favorite movie character was Charlie Chan. The Chinese detective had a suave elegance about him that George greatly admired. He would amble onto the scene of the crime, serene and unshakably polite, and inevitably pick up the vital clue that the local police had missed. Charlie's whole family occasionally appeared in a picture with him, but mostly it was just the Number One Son. The Number One Son wanted to be a detective like his "Pop" and he was always butting into Charlie's cases and musing things up. He had a squeaky adolescent voice and a wonderful stock of irreverent wisecracks. George could never quite decide who he liked more, Charlie Chan or his Number One Son.

On the floor below him, the foreigners had started up again. They were the only flaw in his perfect enjoyment of the world. They had been in the house for about a month, and except for talking at the tops of their voices, and occasionally even singing, they had been no problem. But when the woman came, the fighting started. Sometimes it began with the woman screaming at one of them and sometimes it seemed to start among themselves, but always, all of them were involved in it and the racket went on for hours.

The landlord did not live in the house or George would have said something to him and he would most certainly have thrown the whole pack of them out the first week. George had often thought of complaining when he paid his rent but so far, they had not really interfered with him, and just as long as they did nothing overt against him, George did not want to start any trouble.

As the confusion of voices below seemed to increase in volume, the woman's voice rose in pitch and ricocheted through the house. One of the foreigners seemed to be doing most of the talking, but the others kept up a furious babble around him. Sometimes they were in English and sometimes they were jabbering away at each other in their strange, harsh, foreign tongue. George was not sure whether the foreigners were fighting with the woman, or whether they were quarreling amongst themselves and she was taking someone's part. Once, he was sure he heard the sound of blows.

On the television, Charlie Chan was in Honolulu. A rich Englishman, taking his race horse from Australia to the United States, had been murdered on board the ship, and Charlie was despatched to handle the case. The Number One Son arrived at the ship first and promptly confused everyone. George poured himself a cup of tea, and settled back to enjoy the show. Saturday nights were the finest time of the week.

The first time George, actually saw the woman he hated her. He was on his way home from shopping and she was standing by the window in one of the rooms dressed only in a slip. The streaks of reddish hair, the chalk-white skin, and shining blue fabric of the slip looked as if a child had slashed against the old wall with gay tempera paint. As the woman turned from the window, George darted past the door and ran on up to his own room.

He did not think that it was right for the woman to do this to him. He lived quietly by himself and bothered no one. In his room, there was a stove and an icebox and he had purchased his own television set. There was a toilet on his floor and he was completely self-contained. No matter how cold it was outside, he had only to turn up the gas jets of his stove to stay safe and warm. It was not fair of the woman to parade around where he could see her in her underclothes.

In the mirror, George was not an old man. He was short and had, perhaps, the beginnings of a beer belly, but his legs were still good and he could still, if he had to, carry a bag of cement under one arm. His hair was thinning, but combing it from one side to the other carefully, across the top of his scalp, made it appear better than it was, and he wore his glasses only for reading and his teeth were still good. He wondered what the woman would be like.

But as quickly as the thought came, he abandoned it. He had long been accustomed to making regular trips to a downtown hotel where he knew precisely how much it cost and how long it took, and the women knew precisely why he came. There was no need of idle, embarrassing conversation, and afterwards there was no mess. The woman was something else again.

George drove a tractor-lift in a plant which manufactured washing machines and electrical appliances. He had accumulated eleven years seniority, so when things began to tighten up, instead of being laid off he was put onto the night shift in the stock room. It meant that he came home at two-thirty in the morning and did not have to go into work again until late the following afternoon. He and the woman were alone on the top floor of the house during the day.

By carefully listening through the floor, he learned that she did not rise until late in the afternoon. She seldom went anywhere during the day. She spent most of her time until the foreigners came home wandering from room to room, turning radios on and off as she went.

Although he made several trips outside during the day, sometimes only to the corner cigar store for a newspaper, and caught several glimpses of the woman, George could not bring himself to say anything to her. Once, she was even standing in the hall when he went by and she smiled at him, but he simply lowered his head and walked past. He still felt that it was better to avoid all complications.

A mistake could be a disaster. He was totally unprepared when she came, finally, and spoke to him.

He was on his way to the grocery store when she called to him from one of the rooms and came running out onto the landing.

"Would you do me a big favor," she said, "and get me some milk and eggs?"

Before he could say anything, she took a bill from the pocket of her housecoat and pressed it into his hand.

"I'd go myself," she said, "but I got to stay here and wait for a 'phone call." She turned back into a room and George went off down the stairs.

He made his own purchases in the grocery store and then picked out her eggs and milk. He made sure that the cashier put them in a separate bag, with the bill and change on the top. When he returned again to the house he stopped on the landing and called to the woman. She came and took the bag from his hands.

"Come in and have a drink," she said. "You look half frozen."

George followed her into the narrow kitchen and stood awkwardly against the sink while she put the food away. The room was almost completely filled by an old porcelain-topped kitchen table still littered with egg-stained plates, pieces of toast, and empty coffee cups. The woman took a bottle of whisky and two tumblers from a cupboard. She gathered the mess on the table into the center and set the bottle and the glasses down on it.

"Sit down," she said. "Take off your coat and relax a bit."

George unbuttoned his coat and pulled a chair to the table. The woman uncorked the bottle and poured whisky into his glass.

"That's enough," George said. "I only want enough to warm me up."

The woman poured herself a full glass and sat down across from him.

"You sure saved my life today," she said. "I didn't have a damned thing in the house for supper."

Sitting so close to him, the woman appeared as several shades of red. Her hair was tinted a brilliant orange-red, her cheeks were dominated by two large patches of pale strawberry-colored powder, and her fingernails were painted a glowing scarlet. Even the old flowered housecoat she wore draped loosely around her was decorated with red and yellow flowers.

"I go out shopping every day," George said. "Just let me know when you want anything."

The woman smiled and went over to the sink to turn on the small mantel radio that stood on a ledge above it. The radio, of jaunty yellow plastic, stood out boldly against the faded wallpaper. The woman's arm, as she reached up to turn the dial, tightened the housecoat, and showed the ample outline of her body.

"I love music," she said. "If I didn't have a radio in here, I think I'd go buggy within a week. Do you have a radio?"

"I have a television set," George told her.

"Television's all right," she said, "but you never get enough music on it."

She twirled twice to the sound of a waltz, ending up at her chair, and sat down again. George could feel the pressure of the woman's leg against his own beneath the table. He told her how things were going with him at the plant and how he had been "bumped" onto the night shift and given a job in the stock room which could have been done by a 14-year-old child.

"It's tough to make a dollar," the woman said. "They just don't let you live any more."

It turned out that she was from Newfoundland and George was from Nova Scotia. George could feel it growing in him now, slowly, deliciously, and after a brief struggle, he let it come. It spread all through until it parched his throat. He leaned forward and told the woman about the only store in the whole city of Toronto where one could purchase genuine New Brunswick canned clams. The woman giggled.

"I can't stand the bloody things," she said. "Just the smell of them makes me sick."

"You don't know what's good!" George said. "Sometimes when I get a can of clams, I don't even wait to put them on a plate. I just open the top and eat them right out of the tin."

He took the woman's hand from the table and began to stroke it. She did not pull back or look upset. She simply smiled evenly at him across the table.

"You have rough hands," the woman said. "I bet you once worked pick and shovel."

"When I was a kid," George told her, "I worked all over the Maritimes and was as far out west as Edmonton." It was so easy that it amazed him. Money had not even been mentioned. He could not remember why he had not come downstairs earlier. This was going to be much better than the old hotel. He had almost two hours until he had to be at work.

Abruptly, the woman drew her hand from his.

"My God!" she said. "It's almost four o'clock. The men will be coming home and I haven't even started supper!" She went to the sink and began to fill it with hot water.

George finished his glass of whisky and stood up.

"I guess I'd better get moving too," he said. "I got to go to work soon."

But the woman seemed to have forgotten all about him. She was busily dropping dishes into (Continued on page 3) the sink and swirling soapsuds around them. George picked up his bag of groceries and started to leave. He lingered by the door, but the woman did not even look up.

George did not believe that the foreigners were on their way home. The woman had simply guessed his intention and decided to get rid of him. It was just as well. Women in a boarding house were always trouble. Things went fine for a while, but then the woman started to become sloppy, the neighbours began to talk, someone yelled to the landlord, and soon the whole thing was indescribably messy.

Below him, he heard the sound of men's voices, the woman's voice answering them, and then the sound of music on the radio became blurred as someone played with the dial and then the radio went off. The men, it sounded as if there were at least a dozen of them, began to sing, loudly, raucous foreign songs.

George banged on the floor with a broom handle. All of the warmth seemed to have leaked away from his own room. He turned on all four gas jets but it did no good. The yellow flames seemed pale and sickly, and were of little use against the grey patches of dampness that clung to the walls and ceiling.

George very deliberately filled the kettle with water and set it on the stove. He would make himself a quiet cup of tea, finish reading his newspaper, and go to work. Organization was the way to everything. If you did the same things every day at the same time, ate your meals slowly and read the newspaper, there was no need to become disturbed. Before the woman came, his life had been so well-organized that it ran almost without effort on his part. It would be like that again.

George had almost stopped worrying about the incident in the kitchen by the time he saw the woman again. His life was once more smooth and even. He rose early in the morning, did his shopping, and was back long before the woman had gotten up. He cooked his lunch and stayed in his room watching television through the afternoon until it was time to go to work.

She was standing at the top of the stairs, in front of an open closet, when George opened the door of his room and saw her. She had a small suitcase in her hand.

"Just some stuff of my own," she said. "They're fixing up things down there, and I don't want to get broken."

George did not reply.

"Look," the woman said. "It's kind of a surprise I got planned for them downstairs. You won't say anything, eh? We'll keep it a secret."

"I won't say anything," George said.

"You're a nice guy," the woman said. "Would you like to come downstairs for a little nip?"

"I got to go to work," George said.

After the first time when he opened the door and caught the woman with the suitcase in her hand, George heard her on the stairs several times but did not see her. She came almost every day to the closet. Sometimes, she seemed to pause infinitely at the top of the stairs. Once he was sure that she was standing just outside his door, waiting for him to open it, but he stayed obstinately in front of the television. It was as if the woman came every day only to torment him.

At last, she came by herself, and knocked at the door.

"I want to talk to you," she said. "Can I come in for a minute?"

George opened the door fully, and she came in and sat down on the bed. She was still wearing only the housecoat and she wrapped it tightly around her shoulders.

"It's cold as hell up here," she said. "Don't they give you any heat?"

"I got a stove," George told her. "When I turn up all the burners, it's all right."

The woman took a cigarette from the pocket of her robe and lit it. She took several slow puffs, eyeing George through the smoke, and then she spoke again.

"I'm leaving," she said. "I've had enough. I'm sick of cooking every day and cleaning up after them. I'm not a maid. I don't have to do that for a living."

"It's not right," George said. "I knew you'd understand."

The woman said, "You're no damned ignorant greenie. You know how a woman should be treated." The housecoat was coming loose, and George could see the lace edging at the top of the slip.

"I've been around a little," he said. "I know the score." It rose in him, now, so quickly that there was not even time to organize a defence against it. He felt that he could almost reach and grasp the thick, sweet smell of the woman.

"Do you have a place to go yet?" he said.

"One of my girl friends has an apartment and she wants me to come in with her, but I don't want to unless it's absolutely necessary. You know how it is."

"I know a good rooming house about ten blocks from here," George said.

"Well, I don't want anything too expensive."

"The landlady," George said, "is a friend of mine. I should be able to arrange something for you."

"You're a nice guy," the woman said. "I'll let you know when I'm ready to go."

George took the bottle of whisky from the cupboard and poured a glass for the woman and a glass for himself. She came to get it and stood so close to him that he could feel the exciting rustle of the housecoat against his hand.

George put his arm around her waist and pulled her closer. She put the glass of whisky down on the table, clasped her hands expertly around the back of his head, and drew his mouth slowly down to hers.

"Mmmmmmm, you're strong," she said. "You don't know how strong you really are."

George picked her up with one arm, but she pushed her hands against his chest and stepped back.

"Not now," she said. "Not here. We don't want them to suspect anything."

George turned back to the table and picked up the glass of whisky. The woman came and put her arms on his shoulder.

"We have to be careful," she said. "We don't want to spoil everything now."

George nodded his head in agreement. The woman straightened the housecoat and went out and down the stairs. George stood in the doorway watching the orange hair descend and disappear onto the landing below.

He heard her come several more times to the closet, but she did not knock and he did not open the door. Enough had been said and understood between them. He would treat her well, and ask no questions as to how she spent her time when he was not around. And there would be no unreasonable demands. She would never leave him the way she was walking out on the foreigners. He lay for hours on his moist bed and thought about how grand it was going to be.

On the Saturday night before she left the house, the woman engaged in a long and bitter quarrel. It started during the hockey game. George heard one of the foreigners suddenly begin to shout, the woman answered him and within moments, the whole floor seemed to erupt with angry voices hurtling off angles to each other, and men stomping loudly from room to room.

He wondered how the woman was going to handle it. If she could just last out the night, everything was going to be all right. He would come for her early in the morning and have her out of the house before the foreigners were even awake. And only George would know where she had gone. He chuckled to himself when he thought of it.

By the time the news and the weather were over, the violence of the fight had spread itself through the house, and it was plain that it was going to envelop George. The mess terrified him, but he grew determined that the foreigners were not going to spoil anything. He had waited too long for something like this. He would never give it up. Not now. Not when it was so close.

Charlie Chan was in Shanghai. He had gone there to receive a special award from the police department, and the Number One Son had gone with him. They were all seated in a banquet room, watching the presentation, and the Chief of Police was taking a scroll from a black box, when a gun, concealed in the box, went off and got him just below the heart. Charlie had just ordered the doors of the room locked when the footsteps grew louder and the knock he had been waiting for came to George's door.

"I'm in bed," he said.

"Please mister, we want to talk to you."

George went to the door and opened it slightly keeping his leg wedged against it, just in case he had to shut it quickly.

Poem

There shall be night
Falling upon the burning hilltops
Black as angry robes.
Pale as the hands upon the surplice
Moonlight will waste.

Pain shall not cease
Veining the hands that hold the chalice
Thin as brittle bones.
Strength in the cords will not hold darkness
Back from the hills.

Death still shall come
Quick as the leaves and strong as blossoms
Burst from the waxen buds.
I, when I question death and suffering,
Question the wind.

Yet there is love.
Under the shadowed cowl of evening
Light will surely break
Warm as the voice of fire in Nancy
Dark as the sun.

Time must go on,
Holding his fool within his sorrow,
Pain as cold as priests.
Hands as they pray will ever shatter;
Yet there is love.

David Helwig

Directly below him, three of the foreigners were standing on the top step.

"Please mister," the tallest of them said, "you tell us where the money is."

"I don't know what you're talking about," George said. "I don't know anything about any money."

"Please mister," the foreigner said again. "That money not belong to her."

"I don't care who it belongs to. It's none of my business and I don't know anything about it."

George began to gain confidence in his ability to bluff them.

"You people," he said, "have been causing trouble in this house ever since you got here. I never said nothing as long as you left me alone, but after tonight, I'm going to talk to the landlord for sure."

The woman appeared in the narrow rectangle of light at the bottom of the stairs. Her furious expression and disheveled housecoat and it hung loose and open around her. George could see that even the delicate white slip beneath it had been disarranged and twisted against the rich firmness of her body.

"Don't tell them nothing!" she screamed up at him. "The miserable, stinking bastards! You're the only friend I've got left, George! Don't tell them a God-damned thing!"

One of the foreigners stepped up until he was standing beside George in the doorway. He was a short, thin man, but his hands were large and his watery, blood-shot eyes fixed on George's face.

"Mister," he said, "you stop fooling with us. You tell us now where the money is."

The woman started to mount the stairs, but one of the foreigners from below grabbed her and held her around the waist.

"You're the only friend I've got left in the world, George!" she screamed. "Don't tell them nothing! The dirty, rotten, sons-of-bitches!"

George tried to slam the door shut, but the foreigner kept his foot in it. The other two came to help and they leaned their weight against it. George was forced to gradually give way. He felt almost submerged in the confusion and mess. The thin foreigner with the fixed eyes grabbed him by the shirt and pushed him against the door jamb. The other two pushed close around him and it was impossible, then, to see the woman.

"Over there," he said. "The closet!"

The foreigner let his shirt go and ran to open the closet.

"Mister," he said, "you are a good man."

The woman struggled to mount the stairs, but the foreigner held her firmly. She stretched out her hand as if George were near enough for her to clutch his neck. George closed the door and returned to the television. A bullet came whistling through the room where Charlie Chan and his Number One Son were sleeping, but George had already lost the thread of the story, and he turned the television off. The woman's curse, burning and vicious, growing until the words were compressed together in one enduring cry of outrage, rose and filled the house.

Exaltation Exaltation Exaltation continued

How I wished for a friend. Someone who felt as I felt. Someone I could phone and say 'Come on you son-of-a-bitch. It's eleven in the morning and the day is beautiful and it's ours and we can walk along Bloor Street in the sun and see the peasants follow their mundane routine and watch them build the subway and go to the King Cole Room and drink beer and talk about the theatre and novels and poetry and men and women and religions and get drunk and forget routine forever even if forever is a day.' I had no friend to call.

In the kitchen my wife was coughing. She was six months pregnant and I wished that my son was born and grown already so that he could be that friend and this would be our day.

My heart was palpitating all through brunch. I wanted to get out and my wife wouldn't why, because I didn't know why myself. There was something I wanted to do. Read Henry Miller for one thing. I had a book in my pocket but I needed the right atmosphere. Not at home on a beautiful day with someone coughing to disturb me.

I walked over to the Banting Institute and saw some classmates and found out that a lecture had been cancelled and decided to kill the rest of the day and walked into the Autopsy room where a wonderful old guy, Mr. Bishop, was sewing up a cadaver and I felt sorry for him because he was missing his lunch. It's silly that the dead who have an eternity should deprive a man with numbered years of the pleasure of eating.

In the Arbor Room, I had a coke and a cigarette and then went up to the Reading Room and read an article on Arthur Miller and another on Simon Bar Giora—a waste of time. I took out Henry Miller and read Max. I fell in love with Henry Miller as I had fallen in love with Sinclair Lewis and Dylan Thomas and Keats and Oscar Wilde and Gershwin and Zoroaster and Finian's Rainbow and The Wizard of Oz.

Henry Miller became my friend. A better friend than any drinking friend. He knew me. His words were meant for me and our thoughts travelled together.

I walked up Avenue Road to Bloor and saw them building the Subway. I was in no mood to stay. A few beers seemed inviting but I stopped myself . . . to read alone is sad, to drink alone is boring. As I walked alone along Bloor street I thought of all the good people in the world. All the people I loved . . . my wife.

I loved my wife because she was good and there are so few good people in the world. It was sad to think that I had not appreciated goodness as it deserves. Miller appreciated it and so did Kerouac. It was a goodness that couldn't be measured. It was absolute and divorced from human weakness. It exalted man.

I was going to make supper and I had never done that before even when my wife was ill. I picked up two steaks and a loaf of French bread and twelve chocolate covered doughnuts. I was starving. As I turned the corner on my way home an old newsy was telling a customer that he was hungry. I stopped. In all my life I had never done this before. Have a doughnut.

He looked at me, suspiciously.

Have a doughnut. I'll have one with you. I'm starving too.

I opened the package and we ate. I gave him another and walked on.

Hey, Thanks—he hollered.

I waved. God. How good I felt. It was better than reading any book. It was human to human relationship and it was spontaneous and I had broken another routine . . . the routine of never speaking to anyone on the street. I rushed home to cook a meal. I felt good . . . free . . . exalted.

a drama for radio: A Place Of Pilgrimage

BY CHRISTOPHER PRIESTLEY

(Sound of a streetcar slowing to a stop; its doors open; shuffling noises.)

YOUNG WOMAN: Here's the stop: no here. Why didn't they give you canes? Wait; you have to go round this way. Excuse me, please. Up this way, Lonnie. (Sound of three tokens dropping into the far-box.) You see they're blind. (Doors close; streetcar starts.) Wait, Noll. Sit . . . no . . . here. (Sound of moving streetcar continues, also murmur of conversations.)

NOLL: Thank you.

YOUNG WOMAN: Yes.

YOUNG WOMAN: Oh, it's nothing; I'm going this way.

N: You're doing so much for us.

L: There aren't many . . .

Y.W.: Somebody will always help. But you should have canes.

N: We didn't know where we were.

L: It's hard you know.

N: We often get lost.

Y.W.: You ought to have canes. People don't always notice . . .

L: White ones. Yes.

Y.W.: The people would know, and they'd tell you where you were.

N: But we get along. (Streetcar stops; doors open; sound of people getting off and on; doors close; streetcar continues.) We don't really need canes.

Y.W.: But you owe it to people.

L: We should have canes, Noll. Remember when we spent three days in that restaurant because it was snowing? It was kind of him . . . Remember when they knocked us down?

N: What's that? There! Ah.

Y.W.: What?

N: Perfume. She's beautiful.

Y.W.: She's old! Wrinkled.

N: Fat?

Y.W.: Yes, and she looks irritable.

N: She's beautiful.

L: Noll, let's get canes. Where could we get canes, Miss . . . Mrs? We could get around faster . . .

N: No! No canes.

L: We could use them for everything.

N: No. They'd look silly. (pause) People would laugh.

Y.W.: (laughing) No! You're talking just . . .

N: Like a child? (pause) All right I'm a child. I'm afraid of laughter.

L: But you don't know, do you? You don't know how much there is to be afraid of here.

Y.W.: In the dark?

L: No dark. Here. (streetcar stops, takes on passengers; continues.) Noll is very brave, much more than I am.

Y.W.: It must take much strength of character.

N: No; I'm naturally fearless.

Y.W.: I see.

N: But Lonnie's more sensitive than I am.

Y.W.: Sensitive?

N: He knows when things are happening. He can . . . I don't know how he can tell.

L: I pay attention, is how.

N: He saved my life once. I was going on ahead, you know, and then Lonnie shouted at me; he said, "Noll! There's a car!" And he was right.

Y.W.: And what did you do?

N: I stood still of course.

Y.W.: And it missed you.

N: Didn't come close. But it tore the coat right off Lonnie's back.

L: The driver was annoyed about it. (Streetcar stops to take on passengers; sound of pneumatic drills, louder when doors open.)

N: What's that? (Doors close, streetcar continues.)

Y.W.: They were excavating, digging up the road. There was a man with a red flag . . .

L: A red flag! Why red?

Y.W.: It means danger.

L: Ah. I knew it must.

Y.W.: You knew? Why?

L: Because of the holes they were digging. They were rectangular?

Y.W.: Yes.

L: About seven feet long?

Y.W.: Yes, I think they were.

L: But not very wide.

Y.W.: About shoulder-width I suppose.

L: I knew.

Y.W.: I don't understand.

N: But you can see. You must understand so much.

Y.W.: I can see; but I don't understand everything I see.

N: But you can see, you must understand.

L: Listen!

Y.W.: What?

L: There! (Very faintly, the sound of car horns.)

N: It's only cars.

Y.W.: No. It's a wedding.

N: Ah.

L: Can you see it?

Y.W.: Not yet.

Y.W.: There! On another street. Just a glimpse.

N: The car?

Y.W.: With streamers

L: I can still hear them.

Y.W.: Oh, they're coming by! (Horns grow louder and louder, then die away.) So many streamers. Pink and white and blue . . .

L: Was there a bride?

Y.W.: I couldn't see. I wonder why they always make so much noise?

N: Can you see anything else now?

Y.W.: No; they've all gone now.

N: But anything?

Y.W.: Just people, and shops and trees, and parked cars. We're getting close to the stop now.

L: Is the sun still shining?

Y.W.: Yes, and there's a great wind blowing; the branches are tossing and leaping, and green leaves are flying; there goes a man's hat and girls are holding their skirts down; how they all have to lean! There; a cloud went across the sun. And I can almost . . . yes, I can see the hill where the park is, way over, just above the rooftops.

L: It must be a long way.

Y.W.: Oh, it isn't far. There's a short cut . . .

N: Where is it?

Y.W.: Past the bakery and the post office, then right at the corner.

N: What corner?

Y.W.: There's . . . let me see . . . a house with green drainpipes. And then a little way to the crossroads; then left up the hill—we'd better start to get off—and into the lane by the gift shop . . .

N: Does it have a blue door?

Y.W.: It may have. I don't know. And then left around the tree with kite in it, and past the cemetery (the buzzer sounds). Then up past the walled garden and beehives, and there's the gate. Come on. We get off here. (Shuffling noises as the streetcar stops; sound of treadle, and rear doors open.)

L: Where?

Y.W.: Here. Come on. Here we are. (Sound of streetcar doors closing; also faint sound of wind.) Wait. (Sound of car driving past.) Now. Come on. (Sound of streetcar pulling away; Three sets of footsteps together on asphalt.) Curb. There.

Y.W.: That's right.

L: I can smell them, all of them. Every kind. Oh, there! Strongly. And now this one. If only I knew what they were.

Y.W.: There's an oak tree across there, and an elm tree beyond the houses; there's a beech, and several maples; this one beside us is a maple; and there's a pine.

L: But which is which? Is this the maple? Or this? Perhaps the bold one?

N: She doesn't know, Lonnie. I don't know, either; I can hardly catch them. But I can hear; listen! They beat; they rattle. And so high above, all around us; with this wind, and so many, you can almost distinguish each.

L: So bare and open; no echoes. Where are you, Miss?

Y.W.: Here I am. Come now; we'll go on (footsteps). We turn left here. Be careful; that's a holly hedge.

L: Holly. Yes.

Y.W.: It stays green even in the winter.

N: Listen. (Sounds of children; a splashing noise; indistinguishable shouts and shrill chanting.) What is it?

Y.W.: An old man's fallen into the wading pool; and the children are calling him names. He's climbing out now.

N: I can hear them laughing. (Beyond children's laughter, sound of train whistle, very faint.) Let's go on. Is the garden far from here?

Y.W.: No, not far. (footsteps) We step down here, on to a path. There. Now. This way. I can see the post office through the trees. (Footsteps muffled, then stop.)

N: Why have you stopped?

Y.W.: There are some men over there; they're looking up into a tree.

L: Into a tree?

Y.W.: Someone's climbing down from it. They're waving.

N: Is something wrong?

Y.W.: They look happy. Wait; I'll go and see.

L: You'll come back? (Single footsteps, muffled and crunching, fade out.) Miss? (Silence. A robin chirps; far off, the barking of a dog.)

N: I think we should look for her.

L: She said wait.

N: We've waited, and she isn't here.

L: We waited a very long.

N: All right; we'll wait. (Silence, except for dog in distance.) Come on, Lonnie. She isn't coming back.

L: She said wait.

N: I'll call. Miss? Hello? Miss! (pause) She doesn't answer.

L: No.

N: We'd better go on.

L: She won't be able to find us.

N: She can see; she'll find us anywhere.

L: Well, then . . .

N: Come on, Lonnie. She must want us to go on.

L: Do you think so?

N: It's the only explanation.

L: All right, then. (Shuffling footsteps; they stop.) No.

N: What's the matter?

L: We'd better wait.

N: She wants us to go on.

L: But we need her.

N: We're not children.

L: To guide us.

N: We'll guide each other. We've always done that. (Begins to walk; pauses.) Are you coming?

L: No. We don't know where we're going.

N: To the park; don't you remember? The little garden on the hilltop.

L: On the outskirts.

N: Yes.

L: She said it wasn't far.

N: Come on, then.

N: In that case . . . (pause) You won't come?

L: No.

N: I'll go on by myself.

L: You wouldn't.

N: Yes. (Takes two or three steps, stumbles on a stone, takes another step, pauses, from a distance, speaks) You won't come with me?

L: Noll! Noll!

(Sound of car approaching on pavement, then off edge of paving on to gravel; goes past, and as it fades in the distance, its horn sounds.)

BOTH: Are you hurt?

N: (from a distance) Lonnie? Don't move; I'll come to you. (Steps, sometimes on rock, sometimes on gravel, sometimes muffled; they stop once, then continue, becoming louder as they approach, and finally fading again.) Where are you?

L: Here.

N: I said not to move.

L: I didn't move.

N: Wait. (More steps, growing louder.)

L: Ah!

N: Good. Now what was it she said?

L: You put your finger in my eye.

N: There's a red letterbox in the wall, and then the house on the corner with the green drain-pipe.

L: I think it's bleeding.

N: The drain-pipe?

L: My eye.

N: Oh. (pause) You must have hurt it.

L: You stuck your finger in it.

N: I did? (pause) I'm sorry. Where was I? The letterbox. And left at the green drain-pipe. Then forty yards to the crossroads; then right, and up the hill, and left into the lane by the shop that has a blue door. Then we go past the cemetery . . .

L: Wasn't it right again for the lane?

N: She said left.

L: The door was blue?

N: Blue.

L: Not green?

N: Emphatically blue. (pause) Then we pass the tree with a kite in its branches . . .

L: I remember the kite.

L: She definitely said 'kite'.

N: Or do we keep it on our left?

L: Noll?

N: That would mean go right.

L: How can we recognize the tree?

N: How? By the kite.

L: But its trunk!

N: Yes, its trunk?

L: Just like every other tree.

N: Ah. (pause) We'll ask somebody.

L: Yes, we'll ask.

N: Come on, then.

L: No.

N: Then I'll go alone.

L: You don't know which way to go.

N: She . . . she said north.

L: Which way?

N: This . . . no. Wait. Where did she leave us?

L: We left her . . . it was a schoolyard.

N: I could hear children. They were loud, yes, and running. I remember. I could hear them laughing and fighting.

L: But we walked after that.

N: Did we? I think we did. (Sound of approaching footsteps.) Listen!

L: Some one's coming.

N: We'll ask him.

L: Maybe it's a woman.

N: They're too slow for a woman.

L: They're too light for a man.

N: I'll ask.

L: Do we dare?

N: Of course we do.

L: It might be savage. (Footsteps now beginning to recede.)

N: I'll call. Hello! (footsteps continue) Can you tell us where we are? (footsteps receding) Where are we? (footsteps fading out)

L: Perhaps it's deaf.

N: It didn't answer.

L: Maybe it was afraid.

N: It ignored us. I heard it myself.

L: Perhaps it will come back.

N: We don't need it.

L: But it didn't hear us call.

N: We'll find the garden.

L: What if it's blind?

N: She told us enough; there was a tree.

L: It might not know we're here.

N: With a kite up in the branches.

L: And it can't find anybody to tell.

N: But we can't see it; so we'll ask somebody.

L: It can't see anybody.

N: We'll ask somebody who can see.

L: We'll have to wait!

N: We can start now; I remember enough. And we can ask somebody if we get lost.

L: No one will come.

N: Come on. (pause) Come on, Lonnie.

L: No . . . but it's no good here.

N: We'll go then.

L: All right; we'll go. (Sound of stumbling footsteps; robin whistles; rustling in dead leaves; still faint sound of wind in trees.)

N: Lonnie, are you there?

L: Over here.

N: Let's go this way. (footsteps)

L: Where are you?

N: Here.

L: So close!

N: Come on.

L: Wait!

N: Well?

L: Too fast; I'm losing you.

N: Come on, then. (footsteps) There's a tree here; and another. (footsteps) Watch. (footsteps in long grass) Lonnie?

L: Yes?

N: Come on.

L: Not so fast.

N: It's late.

L: We'll fall.

N: It's getting late; come on.

L: No.

N: We can't stay here.

L: No. You go on.

N: You can't stay here. (pause) Wait. I'll go ahead, and you stay here and shout so I'll know where you are.

L: And if you find anything?

N: I'll call. Shout every minute or so. (Sound of single, slow footsteps receding.)

L: Hello! (Footsteps go on, through grass and leaves.) Hi! (Footsteps even fainter; wind in trees; far off, a train whistle.) Wow! (scarcely any sound) Noll!

N: (form great distance) Yes.

L: Have you found anything?

N: There's a wall!

L: A wall?

N: It feels like stone!

L: High?

N: No; I'm climbing over!

L: Wait! (Rapid footsteps and scrabbings; a grunt; more footsteps.)

N: (normal volume) Here.

L: Ah. (slithering sound; heavy breathing) Now.

N: It's level here.

L: a thump

N: There. Where are we?

N: (from moderate distance) I've found some paving. No, it's only a slab; it isn't very big.

L: (shuffling noise) Where?

N: Here's another beside it.

L: We're in the cemetery.

N: Very smooth, with ridges near the corner, and this corner too.

L: Here, standing; a headstone.

N: And these, under my thumbnail, they must be letters.

L: There will be others, if I look.

N: Lonnie, I've found a slab with writing on it.

L: It's full of people.

N: I can't make out what it says.

L: And quiet.

N: (footsteps; normal volume) I know Lonnie! We're in the cemetery. She said there was a cemetery.

L: What shall we do now?

N: We'll go across. Come on.

N: You wouldn't think anyone was here.

N: (footsteps; from moderate distance) Come on.

L: All right, Noll. (footsteps through grass, over gravel, through more grass.)

N: What did she say came next after the cemetery?

Three Metaphysicals

Deerslayer

As Catherine stood by the open window and felt the damp air, she glanced at the books on the shelf by her hand. She picked up one that looked familiar and held it in her hand as she watched a light far off across the city. Her brother lay still.

"Do you ever stop drinking?" she said.

"No," her brother answered from the bed.

"Who brings you home nowadays?"

"Any one of a number of friends."

"Do you have an arrest to your credit yet?"

"No. My youthful charm seems to hold the police in abeyance."

"I used to wish that I was going to school in the city so that I could look after you and bring you home."

Catherine looked down at the book and opened it. On the title page there was an inscription that read "To Hawkeye from Chingachgook."

"I'm probably the only law student in the city with the complete works of Fenimore, Cooper. You gave me all the decent books I own," Mike said.

Catherine looked out the window and down the hill at the moving lights below. She remembered the times at home when she had covered for her brother when he was drunk.

"That building with the red sign is the Park Plaza," her brother said. "The sign is a kind of beacon. Red in the winter to make you feel warm, and blue in the summer to make you feel cool. It's really very comforting. Seems they haven't discovered that it's spring."

The book reminded Catherine of the first time she had bought lipstick. The man in the store had been kind, not made a joke or teased her. She had put her two quarters on the counter with what she hoped was mature know-how, taken the bag and her one cent change and walked carefully and slowly out of the store.

"Can I get you a drink Cathy?" Mike said. "It's about all I have to offer."

"Why did she have to come to me, Mike?"

"You have a kind face."

When Catherine had reached home with the lipstick, she had put her hand in her jacket pocket to cover it before going into the house.

"Catherine," he mother had called as she came in.

"Yes?" Her mother had appeared down the hall.

"You're not letting what I told you bother you?"

"No."

"It may not happen to you for a long time. Some girls are older than others. But when it happens, it means you're becoming a woman and that is something quite wonderful."

"Yes, mother, I know." She had hurried upstairs to her room and shut the door. After making sure that everything was quiet, she had taken the lipstick out of her pocket and settled herself in front of the mirror to draw dark red circles on both her cheeks and then begin a series of heavy checkmarks on her forehead. The lipstick had started to crumble when she pressed too hard. To finish off her makeup, she had put large spots on her nose and chin. When she had carefully considered her image in the mirror, she had hidden the lipstick in a drawer and slipped out by the back stairs.

"There might be some food in the refrigerator," Mike said, but Catherine did not turn away from the window.

"What are you going to do?" she said.

"Get sober enough to apologize and then get drunk enough to forget."

"She's in love with you."

"I'm sorry about that."

"Why did you pick one of my friends?"

"I've always admired your taste in people. I thought at first she was like you. She isn't though. Not a bit."

As Catherine had hurried down the back stairs with the lipstick on her face, she had listened carefully so that her mother wouldn't intercept her. She had reached the back door safely and raced across the yard.

"Hawkeye," she had called, "Hawkeye, Hawkeye."

There had been no answer from the tree house.

"It's me, it's Chingachgook." Catherine had hoisted herself up the trunk of the tree and banged on the door. "Hawkeye," she had called, "it's Chingachgook. Come on and open up. The Min-goos aren't around. It's safe." She had dropped to the ground as the door of the tree house opened. Mike had come to the door.

"Can't you be quiet, we're trying to work. What's wrong with your face?"

"It's war paint."

"Chingachgook didn't wear war paint."

"We can pretend he did."

"You can if you like. Murray and I are making a rabbit trap."

"Drop down the ladder and let me see."

"There isn't enough room for three people."

"But I'm Chingachgook. There's got to be room for me."

Murray was standing at the door.

"What's that your sister has on her face?"

"She says it's war paint."

"I'm Chingachgook and he's Hawkeye."

"Who're they?"

"From a book," Mike had said, "Let's get back to the trap. I'll see you later Chingachgook," he had said and closed the door.

Catherine had turned away and gone back into the house and up to her room. She had taken off the lipstick and lain on the bed, and after a while her mother had come in to see if she was upset and explain about growing up.

Catherine put down the book and turned from the window. She looked at her brother.

"Sorry Pathfinder," he said.

"I was Chingachgook, Mike."

"So you were."

Catherine picked up her coat and walked to the door.

"And as far as I'm concerned," she said, "you can go to hell." When she left the room, her brother had not said another word.

Beaver Lake

"Mademoiselle, sais-tu jouer?" the young Boys of the province which a system runs In shelter from a picnic rain had sung— Sung, and been led in singing by two nuns.

The song asks if mademoiselle can play Music on this, and on that instrument; Yet many, hearing just a line, might say Mademoiselle could not be innocent. And many, strangers to the place, will see The system evil, as they see the song; And stranger I judge their judgment to be About the system right, and singing wrong.

Yet I draw back, lest I judge not by wholes; For minds can judge, but God damns only souls.

The Bottled Women

The green of her island is a special shade Reserved for fish, and bottles on the shelf; Her sky and sea are smooth as scales, as cold;

They curve around her in a wave of grass And static water, brittle as the glass Of eyes she looks through, or of hands that hold

Her many-angled mirror, where her self Glances in shattered light along her glade.

Her frozen prism is a burning lens Where all green things are focused to a flare

And then project, distorted as they fall

To broken facets on the fragile wall That shell-like shackles but like shell defends

The prisoned genie with the light-green hair.

The Expelled

Two pieces of uneasy earth, darker Than deserts of asphalt or dead hills of house

With dust of cells in our mind, salt in our mouth

We meditate a further turning south

Always to darker seas and warmer skies Bloodred lands back in our impressed eyes Away from the hard lightgreen that shuts us out

Forever from our former silences

Back in our mindless past; then was decay Unknown to us unknown; the asphalt taste Of scent of burning bone along our skin Signal of slow coals eating our bone within

Intruded not on us; but now smoked skin Craves the salt comfort of a diving mouth; We turn wormed faces to each others' eyes

And watch the worn flesh fall.

Story

He saw her small well formed body pushing against the screen and when she looked at him he noticed the outline of her pretty face, softened by the veil-like mesh. Like a retouched movie photo. Her voice reminded him of long ago and the sea and the beach with a veil of soft spray and fringe of briny foam. "You shouldn't have come. This is no place for you. Go home." His words stuck in his throat. He wanted to tell her how much he loved her.

by Fred Host

She decided her friends were right. They had been right all along only she had been blind to see. What kind of a husband would he have made? No security and what if we had children? Drunken brawler, Drunken brawler. It was not until another month had passed that she threw the jade handkerchief into the milling traffic from the high front window. She cried then for him for the last time.

"The strangest people sell you insurance"

When children sing their little skipping song about, "Tinkers, tailors, soldiers, sailors," I can't help a side glance at our list of NALAC representatives: Not only is their wide variety of backgrounds noteworthy, but I am astonished by the success in our business of those who are trained teachers, lawyers, social workers and the like.

Why is this so? Like any other profession, selling insurance is a calling. Not all are attracted to it, nor could all be successful at it. It involves a certain amount of training, but more important requires a genuine enthusiasm for helping others to solve their problems.

An outstanding career opportunity with our company awaits those qualified young men who are interested in this type of work, no matter what their present position may be. It's a satisfying profession, I can assure you from long experience. And best of all, the rewards are proportionate to the amount of effort that you put into it. Interested? Our local manager has any further information that you may need. Get in touch with him to arrange an interview.

He didn't write her any letters. Mornings he went with the other men to the room in the back and picked up a mop and broom. In the afternoon he sat on his plank bunk looking out through the small meshed window at the sky. Sometimes he lay on his back and watched the sky change color. It was constantly changing and the sun on cloudless days would pass across his little piece of sky. Some days it was deep blue and other days it was almost white. Starch white. It changed constantly. From hour to hour, from day to day or from minute to minute. He wondered if it really changed or if it was his eyes that changed. He supposed it could be either.

Sometimes he thought about his girl. It hurt him to think about her and he didn't know why he thought about her. They had had fun together and probably would have had more fun. He didn't know why he had loved her or if he had loved her at all. He wondered if he still loved her but it only confused him so he stopped. Love is like the color of the sky he decided. One day he received a letter from her telling him she was married to a banker and was very happy. She thought of him regularly she explained. He wondered why she had written; he was glad she was happy, for some reason. He had almost forgotten what she looked like. It surprised him to discover that. He wondered if she was really happy but stopped when he suddenly discovered he didn't really know what he meant by "happy". He wondered if he was happy. He didn't know. His mind was growing damp like his blankets.

He received another letter from her a year later. It was a long letter and he enjoyed reading it but it didn't seem to say much. He recalled the line "I don't care if I live or die" somewhere in it. He assumed she was unhappy and he thought he should be unhappy for her but he remembered he didn't know how. He wondered at "I don't care". He remembered saying he didn't know whether he cared or not to a man once before he came to prison. The man laughed at him. The man told him he was sleeping through life and that he wasn't getting anything out of it. That confused him at the time. He remembered thinking about it often after that and once in a while he would sort of see a light but it only lasted a few minutes. After that he remembered becoming confused and stopping his thinking. He was confused now but not for long. He felt sleepy and he dozed off.

The cold woke him a few hours later and he pulled the dirty blankets over himself and watched the sky through the dirty little window. It was dark. He could see the Big Dipper in his piece of sky and he wondered what it was like up there. It sometimes shattered him to think about the stars. He wondered who put them there and why. He sometimes wondered who put him there but it always ended in confusion. He just looked at the stars. They came and went. Soon it was morning.

He received two more letters from his girl and enjoyed reading them. The writing was large and perfect and the words looked good to him. He rarely had the opportunity to read anything. In the middle of one of them he noticed the sentence. "I have never been more miserable. There is no chance of it ever improving." He didn't remember what "it" referred to but he assumed it was something quite important. He read it a second time and found out. It was something important. He wasn't sure, however, for nothing seemed important or unimportant to him.

The years were alike and nothing changed. One day he died.

L: I don't know; I don't remember.
N: It was the tree. Watch; there's a stone here. I remember now.
L: With the kite?
N: Torn and weathered; yes.
L: No.
N: What do you mean?
L: It was a garden; a walled garden.
N: But that's where we're going. That comes last.
L: No. The garden.
N: I remember what she said: she said 'the tree with a kite in its branches'.
L: Don't go so fast, Noll.
N: I remember it clearly.
L: Noll, I can't keep up.
N: She described it: grey and in fatters, with onestrut broken, and a tail with little pieces of paper.
L: (from a moderate distance) Noll! Wait!
N: I remember exactly. (stumbling; muffled crash; grunt)
L: (approaching) What's happened? (pause) Noll?
N: It's made out of newspaper and lath. Help me up.
L: (pause) Noll! It's a bird!
N: Bird?
L: In the tree. It isn't a paper thing at all, it's a bird. (pause) A bird.
N: She said 'kite'. I remember. Help me up.
L: Yes, I know; kite. It's a bird.
N: What kind of bird?
L: I don't know. Yes, I do. It's a sort of . . . like a hawk. You know? Noll?
N: No.
L: Yes, it's a kind of falcon. But it's called a kite.
N: How do you know?
L: I don't know. I remember it. Somebody told me, a long time ago; I can't remember when. (pause) Ah, there! The jesses, the jesses caught.
N: What? What is it?
L: The morning's favorite. No, that's not right. The morning's . . . (pause) Noll? Where are you?
N: Here; I'm sitting on a stone.
L: Oh. You didn't hurt yourself.
N: No. I'm all right. (pause) Can we go?
L: I don't know. Yes, all right. I'll follow.
N: All right. (pause) Yes. Come on, then. (sound of slow, stumbling footsteps; a robin chirps twice.)

L: The morning's . . . I can't remember.
N: Branches here, Lonnie. You have to bend. (scratching noise; more footsteps, still in deep grass.) Here's the wall. (pause) It feels like the other wall. (pause) What if it's the same wall?
L: It is.
N: We must have circled. How does it run? There; my back to it, outstretched arms, touching, so.
L: But Noll . . .
N: Now straight out, along this line.
L: Noll, were here.
N: And straight. Come on. (footsteps receding)
L: Noll!
N: (from moderate distance) What?
L: We're here.
N: I know. We've got to try again.
L: But we're here. We've crossed.
N: (footsteps returning; normal volume) You said it was the same wall.
L: Yes, it is.
N: Come on, then. (footsteps receding)
L: Wait! The wall's curved. (footsteps stop) It's the same wall, but the other side.
N: (from moderate distance) Ah. (footsteps returning) I see. (pause) We'd better climb over.
L: Wait, Listen.
N: (pause) What?
L: Listen. (silence) So quiet
N: Yes. (pause) It's getting late.
L: What stillness.
N: (scrabbling, slithering noises). There. (Deep growl; sound of heavy weight hitting end of chain; thunderous snarl and barking.)
L: Noll! Noll! What is it? (barking continues unabated)
N: I think it's a dog.
L: We'll have to go back.
N: She didn't say there was a dog. (furious barking)
L: If only we had canes! (barking) Noll, pull up your feet!
N: I'm sitting on them. Maybe if I slide along . . . (snarl; sound of weight crashing repeatedly against chain.)
L: Come down, Noll. We'll go back. (barking) All wasted, lost. Noll? (momentary silence; then rapid, stumbling footsteps receding, and rattle of chain, panting, snap of teeth; in moderate distance, sound of weight hitting end of chain, then barking.) Noll! Are you all right? (sporadic barking at moderate distance) Noll!

N: (from a distance) I made it! (barks) Climb a bit to the left, and run for it!
L: (scrabbling, slithering noise; barks in middle distance) No! I can't!
N: (from distance) It's at the end of its chain! Come on! (occasional barks; quiet moaning, and sound of chattering teeth) Come on! (moaning and chattering of teeth; patter of approaching animal, with chain rattling; crash against end of chain; loud barking) Come on! (whines and savage barking; thud, then rapid, stumbling footsteps and frantic snarl; thud and gasp; sound of chain and barking at moderate distance) Lonnie! (normal volume) Lonnie? (shuddering breathing) Did you fall? Where are you?
L: (pause) Here.
N: Are you all right? (occasional barks)
L: I don't know. (pause) I think so.
N: Can you get up?
L: Yes. Ah!
N: What's wrong?
L: Thistle. (pause) There.
N: Come on, then. It's late. (Footsteps through grass and leaves; occasional barks, becoming fainter; robin sings, then other birds; in extreme distance, church bells.)
L: Listen. (footsteps stop)
N: Bells.
L: What is it?
N: A wedding, somewhere in the town.
L: They seem to come almost from below us.
N: We must be on the hill.
L: (bells continue) Let me clasp the earth.
N: Lonnie? (pause) Lonnie?
L: What?
N: What did you say? (bells stop ringing; birdsong)
L: I don't know. (pause): very distant, a car horn) I remember I said something.
N: There was a car again, sounding its horn. Was it a signal?
L: I don't know. (pause) So many birds.
N: Lonnie? Shall we go?
L: What do they mean? Yes,

I'm coming. (footsteps through grass; birdsongs)
N: Ah, there! So strong, and gone. Again, flowers. (pause) The wind's changed now; I've lost them.
L: It must be near; she said there was a garden.
N: Come on, then.
L: But where? Which way?
N: This. Come on. (footsteps through grass; fewer birds)
L: If we're wrong . . .
N: We can't be, not so near. (footsteps) Come on! (Footsteps, occasionally stumbling, through grass; birdsongs at intervals; stumbling, then slithering, with pebbles.)
L: Noll!
N: (single footsteps continue for a moment, then stop: from moderate distance) What is it?
L: I've fallen into a ditch or something. It's dry, not very deep. Some grass, and something metal, long and round. I'm crawling along it. (shuffling noise) It's tapering.
N: From moderate distance) Come on, Lonnie.
L: Wait, wait. I've found the end of it. There's a straight bar sticking out on each side, like handles. And the end is just beyond, all twisted and sharp, and it's open; I could put my hand inside.
N: (from same distance) It's only a broken lamp standard. Come on, Lonnie; it's late.
L: All right. (pause) I'll . . . (scrapping and scuffling; pebbles rattling against each other and once on metal; a few steps in grass) I'm coming, Noll; where are you?
N: Over here; come on.
L: I'm coming. (footsteps; otherwise, quiet) Ah! (silence) Gone!
N: What is it? Is it flowers?
L: (pause) No. No flowers. (pause) I've lost it. Where . . .
N: What? What was it?
L: I don't know. It's gone. Wait . . . (Silence) There; almost. So faint . . .
N: What is it?
L: Is it there, that way?
N: What, Lonnie? Tell me.
L: No . . . no. This? No . . . There! Strong, ah, through me, ringing; there, there . . . not lose it, there . . . but fainter
N: Lonnie?

L: It's gone. Noll, it's gone. N: (pause). What was it?
L: I don't know.
N: You must; you had it
L: No. I don't understand. It was old, remembered. I never felt anything like it before.
N: A feeling?
L: It's gone. Maybe this way. (shuffling steps) Or here. (slow footsteps)
N: Lonnie? Is it like a smell?
L: (shuffling) Try over here. I thought . . . like an echo . . .
N: A sound?
L: Wait, it's coming; I'm finding it.
N: Lonnie?
L: There, not strong, but there! This way; Noll, this way . . . (shuffling, footsteps in grass, then on gravel, quickly, almost a run) There, there again, stronger; ah, delicate, plangent! Come, Noll, come on! This way . . .
N: (from moderate distance) Lonnie? You're turning! (footsteps joining in) Lonnie, wait, wait.
L: I have it, hold; clear, like a bell, like water; ah, piercing, twinkling of beads, limpid, like chimes, fields . . . (footsteps faltering)
N: (in distance) Wait! Lonnie!
L: Through and through . . . (stop; single footsteps approach, uneven) Where?
N: (footsteps stop) Wait. (breathing hard) Wait.
L: Here? Here? No . . . There, a touch . . .
N: Wait, Lonnie.
L: There; faint but true. (Footsteps begin, still on gravel) Come on, Noll.
N: Wait; too fast.
L: My belt.
N: Where?
L: Here; grip hard. Which way? This . . . no, this . . . ah, sweet and piercing, like wire ringing in the head . . . (footsteps off gravel, scarcely audible on short grass) Noll, don't you feel? Can't you . . . ? (sound of trickling water, then fainter as receding) Fainter, losing . . . No! This way! (momentary crunch of bare ground; sound of pebbles rattling down slope and falling into still water.) It's wider now; not so sharp, but stronger. Noll, so full, like a chord; like a soft,

God

"Mary," said the minister at last, "I would not wish to embarrass you unduly for anything in the world. But The Lord knows the secrets of our hearts and, after a great deal of searching within my own heart, I have decided that perhaps it is necessary for the good of my brother's soul that he should know about our marriage."

"Oh for Christ's sake George!" Bill gasped.

Mary whitened and stared for many seconds at the table. Finally she answered, shaken, "Anything you say, George."

"Perhaps, Bill," the minister said, "you smiled a guilty smile when you learned that Mary and I had been married for ten years or perhaps you felt a touch of guilty sadness. I am sure, at any rate, that you were puzzled that I had done this; probably you had had a hard time understanding why she chose to marry me. After all, although I had had a much more wise and stable plan for my future life than you, you had always been more of a favorite with the young ladies than I." Mary was looking constantly at the table now. The countenance of the preacher grew very serious now. "Although you had been seeing a great deal of Mary, she had always struck me as being a modest and fine young lady. And when you left, for good, for the United States, I, oc-asionally, would come out to her house and visit her and her parents for tea. I suppose, he added a little reproachfully, that I got to know Mary really better than you ever had. I'm afraid you tended only to be interested . . . "He broke off in confusion and glanced anxiously at his wife. "Or rather we, ah, talked about serious matters."

Mary looked up from the table. She smiled weakly and started to talk nervously. "Yes, yes. Remember how you used to tell me how you were going to have a parish right here in town and buy a little home out in the country and how you wanted to have a whole lot of children and a big red Irish Setter?" The nervousness was going from her voice now and her smile was becoming more sincere. "You know, George, I guess most of those dreams have come true—for both of us, I mean."

George stretched back in his chair with a smile. "Yes, I suppose they have. Except perhaps for the Irish Setter. Eh, Cicero?"

A very fat black Cocker Spaniel in the corner by the electric range opened his eyes momentarily, rolled over slightly so all four short, fat legs were protruding on the same side, shut his eyes again, uttered a grunt which seemed to bury itself in the folds of his neck and went back to sleep.

Even Bill laughed a little.

"Mary," said George, laughing, "what is it, Peter and Martha see in that beast?"

"Goodness only know George. I sometime wonder if I'll ever figure those kids out. George, have you seen Peter play with his baseball bat?"

"Mary, have you seen the dent he put in my fender with his baseball? Didn't have the heart to do anything about it, though. When I spoke to him about it, he looked so . . .

"Cute?"

"My word no, Mary!" said the minister. "Cute indeed!"

The three laughed. A normal pause in the conversation followed.

Finally, Bill spoke. "You know, George, maybe I'm not as incorrigible as you think. Anyway, I kind of envy you and Mary and the kids' and everything."

Bill's comment, which had been pleasant enough, had an immediate and sobering effect upon his brother.

"It didn't start out this pleasantly, Bill," he said. "It started out very sadly — especially for Mary."

The woman's face became very pale. The change in her was so marked that the room became silent. Suddenly she buried her face in her hands.

"George, I don't want to talk about it now."

Bill interjected, "I don't know what this sorrow was, George. But does she have to re-live it now?"

"Mary," said the minister, "I think it hurts me almost as much as it does you to have your life laid bare like this. But this is no longer a story for you to be ashamed of, my dear. It is a story of your triumph, my dear, a victory that makes me proud to be your husband. And could it not be true, Mary, that hearing how you conquered your sin, Bill could be inspired to conquer his own likewise?"

"Yes, George, yes of course," she murmured. "You . . . you see, Bill, there was a sermon about purity one Sunday night. And when George brought me to my door after the service, I . . . I told him I didn't think it would be right for him to go on seeing me."

"I don't get it."

"I didn't understand it either, for a while," said George, taking his wife's hand. "And I questioned her about it until finally . . . finally she admitted to me that, just before you left and nobody heard from you again . . . she told me how you had sinned together and then you had left."

"I thought neither of us would ever hear of you again," Mary sobbed.

"You told him that!"

George continued. "Of course, I was shocked, Bill. I must have left her that night without a word. I kept the secret to myself, too proud at first even to discuss it with The Almighty. I tried and tried to reach you but, of course, I had no idea where you were. At last I gave up the search. But then, Bill, I prayed as I had never prayed before. And God washed away my bitterness and made clear to me what I should do to preserve Mary from bearing the stain of my brother's guilt forever. I met her again, for the first time, after church one evening. I told Mary how The Lord had shown me what it was that I had to do. I told her how He had shown me that it was my duty to marry her."

The couple looked anxiously at Bill. He had sat rigidly in his chair when mention of Mary's sin had first been made. But he was beginning to relax now and his comparative nonchalance was reflected to a much lesser degree in Mary.

"We prayed together a great deal before our marriage," George continued. "At first, Mary did not consider herself worthy of me and thought that we ought not to marry because we were not 'in love.' But slowly, through prayer, she saw that through her repentance and through my fulfilling of my obligation she could be cleansed of her sin."

"You see, Bill," said Mary. "I guess you might say that it was because of what I'd done that we were married. But really it was also because George was such a wonderful person."

"It was a shoddy performance I put on—beside the example of Our Lord," George corrected her. "At first, dear, in the hour of your deepest affliction, I deserted you. You had a little forgiving to do too."

Everyone was quiet for a moment. Then Bill spoke, thoughtfully. "And it has been a wonderful life for you two, hasn't it?"

"Oh, it has, Bill," Mary said immediately and passionately.

"Bill, I don't want to sound like a preacher now," George said after a short pause; "but I think you can see that this marriage which, mind you, began, not only with sin on Mary's part, but with bitterness and hard-heartedness on my own became the instrument of God which pulled Mary out from the sin into which she had fallen with you. And, what is more, this contrast between us has become a contract blessed, not only with holiness, but with a deep and abiding love. It is much like what Joseph said on being recognized by his brothers again, after his long exile in Egypt. Wait a minute; perhaps it would be well if I got my Bible and we read the section together."

George eased himself out of his chair and left the room. Immediately a silent tension arose in the room between the woman and her brother-in-law. They stared at each other for a few seconds. Then Mary dropped her eyes to the floor. She got up then, walked to the window, placed her hands on the sill and stood looking out into the night. Finally she spoke.

"I guess you must hate me very much now, Bill."

Bill quietly got up. He walked over to the counter and picked up a small, soiled baseball cap. Then he took walked over to the window. He clasped her shoulder heartily and chuckled a little.

Way continued

"Hell, you didn't do me any injustice. You know, I guess half the marriages in this damn county happened because of some poor son-of-a-gun getting intimidated by some honey after a hot night in a hayloft. But I think this is the first time it's been promoted by talking about somebody else's whoopee. There's only one thing that puzzles me."

"Yes?"

"How did you keep him from finding out you were a virgin?"

A Story By Cullene Bryant

"I don't want him to hold my hand. His are hot and wet. I hate it when he touches me. Back there, when he put his arm around me . . . Oh why must he look so intently. I can't keep my eyes lowered on the floor all night. I must seem so foolish. Shall I look at him?"

Slowly she raises her eyes. She sees the white tablecloth where his cigarette ashes spilt over the tray. A little higher she now sees his black bow tie. It needs straightening. His neck is thick and short. His penetrating grey eyes are too small for his broad puffy face. A pair of wet, full lips protrude from an untidy brown mustache.

At last she meets his gaze. He smiles, almost too warmly and squeezes her hand.

'She pulled it away. I suppose I make her nervous. She has barely tasted the drink I ordered. I wish she would empty the glass. She'd be freer with me then. I'll be damned if I'll spend the money on a girl and not enjoy myself with her. Maybe the noise makes her head ache. I wonder how old she is? Those earrings aren't hers, they are her mother's. Maybe the smoke bothers her. Kids these days dress up and look ten years older than they really are. She'll loosen up before the evening's through.'

'Say, waiter, two more drinks here.'

Then the waiter nods assent but the frown on his forehead burrows deeper. His feet are aching; the perspiration stings his eyes; his white uniform is wet.

The tables are far too close together. I'll never balance the tray all the way across to the other end of the room and back here again. Oh well it is New Year's Eve. People order more drinks than usual and then expect faster service. Oh lady, I'm not that thin, move your chair!

He wends his way around the edge of the dance floor as best he can. He has almost reached the far table when a bald headed man, intent upon stroking his partner's blond hair as they sway to the music, collides with the waiter. The glasses clatter to the floor. The bald headed man, still caressing her tresses, dances on. A shrill feminine cry, that is quickly transformed into a hysterical giggle, pierces the waiter's ears.

"Ooo, all down my neck!"

The waiter is quick to apologize, but the woman pushes him rudely away.

'Victor will fix it,' she squeals.

Victor lunges forward, flourishing a white napkin in the air, eager to wipe the brown thick liquid from the lady's bosom. Abruptly she snatches the serviette from his hand and titters teasingly:

'Tut, tut, Victor, what would your wife say?'

Victor settles back discontentedly beside a sparrow-like woman who is obviously disgusted and noticeably pregnant.

"To hell with my wife! She has been sitting on that chair all evening like a dead fly that is stuck to sticking paper. Why doesn't she lower that raised eyebrow? She's got that puritan look about her again. If she doesn't like it here, she shouldn't have come. She's been worrying about the children all night anyway. I wish she had stayed at home."

"There, he is looking at her again. He's comparing us. He can't expect me to look like her in my condition. Surely he realizes that. Can't he see how brazenly she flaunts herself about? Her neckline is disgustingly low. Next year we'll have a quiet evening at home. No more of this debauchery. I wish her husband would come back. He's probably being sick in the men's room. All three of them are drunk. They're all drunk. Oh dear, I feel quite ill."

The sparrow-like woman flashes her darting eyes to the back of the room in search of the errant husband. A bright light blinds her vision and raucous music deafens her ears. The woman turns about to see, under the burning spotlight, a young girl.

She is scantily dressed in black lace. Her shapely legs are covered in net but her arms and shoulders are generously displayed. At first she sings a seductive song in a low whisper, apparently about her hungry yearning for kisses. Then as though she is not yet sure she has everyone's attention, she withdraws a pink rose that has been strategically placed in the neckline of her costume and pretends to offer it to the men. Each one tries his turn at catching the rose but each one fails as the girl whirls lightly away, now with a little pout, now with a teasing smile, now with a mocking laugh. And how well those men play the part with her. How well they reach and grasp the air, striving vainly for the elusive rose. At last she tires of the game and as she tucks the flower back into its place, the band strikes up another flare. Then the sentimental melancholy tune begins. The people rise in one accord and grasp each other's hand, mouthing the familiar words and singing off key.

Then in a moment the room explodes in a pandemonium of harsh discordant sounds. Blasting horns, beating drums, incessant rattles rouse the revellers into a frenzy of excitement.

Somewhere in the room a young girl, light headed and giddy with the flush of wine, clings to an older man.

Seated in a chair, a tired waiter in white uniform, slyly removes his shoes and wiggles his toes.

Deep in the darkness a bald headed man is stroking the curls of his sweetheart.

Off in a corner a sparrow-like woman tugs at her husband's sleeve for fear he gives another woman more than a platonic kiss.

Somewhere above the din, a young girl's voice can be heard crying:

"Happy New Year, everybody, Happy New Year!"

N.: Miss. I can't go through.

Y.W.: Of course you can.

L.: Why not, Noll? I can find the way.

N.: It's all right for him to go through, Miss. He's more sensitive than I am. He understands.

But I can't understand, Miss. I'm not here the way he is. I can't go through.

L.: But I don't understand either!

Y.W.: Noll, you can go.

N.: (pause) All right.

Y.W.: Good-bye. I'll see you both on the other side.

L.: Good-bye. (footsteps) I'm through! Come on, Noll.

N.: (moderate distance) No!

L.: Come on!

N.: (pause) Good-bye (footsteps approaching) Lonnie?

(pause) There's no sting.

L.: Listen.

N.: What?

L.: (pause) I thought I could hear a trumpet.

Y.W.: (from distance) Good-bye!

LAURA

I must apologize for my previous misperception. I used to think you plain, dull, dedicatedly christian; in short—highly unattractive.

Then someone made love to you.

Incredulous, I re-assessed, deigned to know you and found you warm, vibrant, fascinating, and able to arouse an unspeakable lust in me.

Students' March Will Protest South Africa

University of Toronto students are scheduled to march on City Hall this afternoon to protest the murder of South African demonstrators by South African police. Don Roebuck (II UC), one of the organizers of the march stressed that the demonstration is not the action of any group or organization but represents "the outraged conscience of the student body."

Before leaving for the march, the students will be addressed by Rev. J. S. Cunningham of Hart House and Rabbi Abraham L. Feinberg of Holy Blossom Temple.

"Canada," said Roebuck, "has been thoroughly disgusted by the recent actions of South African police, who fired brutally and at random into a peaceful demonstration of men, women and children."

Roebuck and the two other organizers, Peter Dembski (III SMC) and Peter Horbatiuk (I UC) are calling on the support of all students and members of the faculty for full support.

"We have organized this demonstration as an expression of the outraged opinion of the student body," said Roebuck. "I believe that all students of the University, indeed, the vast majority of Canadians, are revolted at the South African's policy of apartheid, with its fascist-like implications of race hatred and white supremacy."

Students will gather in front of the main library at 3 p.m. Friday afternoon. The marchers will demonstrate until 5 p.m.

A Toronto taxi driver last night volunteered his services for the demonstration. Mr. Dave Kunigas said he is willing to deliver placards and signs and transport demonstrators or do whatever he can to aid the protest.

"I would like to see a boycott of South African goods in Canada along the lines of the present boycott in Britain," he said.

Meanwhile students at the University of Ottawa and Carleton University are planning protest marches this Saturday on the Office of the South African High Commissioner. Students will place a wreath on the South African War Memorial and call for a one minute silence.

At University of British Columbia an emergency council meeting was called to discuss the South African situation. UBC president Dave Edgar asked NFCSU "to initiate and co-ordinate action by student councils."

A leaflet has been circulated on the U of T campus with particulars of the demonstration. It is headed, "Protest The Murder of South Africans." The leaflet says, "the demonstration has been organized by a group of students who believe that the slaughtering of South African natives is a crime against humanity and must not be allowed to pass without protest."

Roberts New Editor:

Pick Dembski Pres.

Peter Dembski, a third-year St. Michael's College student was Wednesday night chosen by acclamation president of next year's Students' Administrative Council.

At the year's last meeting, council also approved 15-10 a disputed publications commission report that Ed Roberts, a third-year Victoria College student who quit The Varsity's staff in January, edit the paper next year.

Harvey Shepherd, Varsity managing editor, had also applied for the position.

Roberts accompanied his resignation as Varsity news editor in January with a letter to The Varsity's editor and the SAC charging the Varsity's staff with inefficient management and a policy of superfluous cultural material in the paper.

Marion Hebb (III Vic) was elected council vice-president Wednesday, beating out Judy Heard (II Meds) and Ann Tottenham (II Trin).

Mike Copeland (III Vic) was named Finance Commissioner and Bruce Barret (SGS) Publications Commissioner.

Dembski's unopposed move into the presidency was without incident aside from applause.

Discussion over the motion to make Roberts Varsity editor was concluded with a passionate speech by Walter McLean, outgoing president and SAC Knox College representative, in favor of Roberts.

In the Publications Commission's 3-1 vote for Roberts, Varsity Editor Sam Aizenstat was the only opponent to the motion. Publications Commissioner Clive Chamberlain, who chaired the meeting and could not vote, told council he also supported Shepherd.

A large amount of the discussion over the editorship centered around this year's Varsity, with speakers supporting Roberts enumerating complaints about the paper and speakers supporting Shepherd praising the large amount of cultural material in the paper.

McLean's speech included a list of the complaints he had heard about the paper this year as well as criticism of recommendations Shepherd had made in his application regarding Varsity business arrangements.

Council took this action after hearing a letter from Trinity's Dean A. J. Earp requesting it.

Appointment of Jim Doris and Gino Matteo, writers of this year's All-Varsity Revue, to write next year's revue and of Jim Rumble, director of this year's Victoria College Bob Revue to direct the AVR were announced.

Dr. Ross, 34 Students Awarded at U. Dinner

Dr. Murray Ross, president of Toronto's new York University, and 34 students of the University of Toronto received honor awards of the university at the second annual honor banquet on March 17.

Dr. Ross commented that none of his many academic honors has meant as much to him as this honor award, presented by the students of the university.

He is one of the few non-students to be singled out for this award. It is ordinarily given to undergraduates each year for unusual contributions in scholarship, extra-curricular activities and athletics. It was given to Dr. Ross in recognition of the active part he has taken in student activity since 1951, when he joined the university teaching staff.

He later became Executive Assistant to the president, then Vice-President.

Typical of the 34 student winners, this year are: Joseph Lipman, Toronto, of University College, winner of the Putnam Scholarship, given to the outstanding mathematical student in North America; Miss Nancy Davison, Toronto, Physical and Occupational Therapy, runner-up in the Miss Varsity contest, organizer of the student financial blitz and other campaigns; Miss Adrienne Poy, Toronto, Trinity College, head girl at St. Hilda's; and Stephen H. Chisholm, Port Credit, School of Practical Science, captain of the Blues runner-up football team.

Presentation of the honor to Dr. Ross and the student winners was made by the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, the Honorable J. Keiler MacKay at the dinner in Hart House. As well as a gold key medallion, he received a special certificate signed by Dr. Claude Bissell, University of Toronto President, and Walter McLean, President of the Students' Administrative Council.

Dr. Ross was guest of honor and main speaker for the dinner at which some 200 representatives of various aspects of university life gathered to pay tribute to the winners.

Other student winners of the honor award this year are: Arthur Scace, Trinity, of Toronto; Brian Gregory, School of Practical Science, of Toronto; Carol Marie Jones, St. Michael's, of Plushing N.Y.; Robert Daniel Norman, Victoria, of Toronto; R. Lawrence Joynt, Medicine, of Toronto; Sandra Whittall, University College, of Richmond Hill; Don Dickson, Forestry, of Thamesville, Ont.; Audrey Switzer, Social Work, of Toronto; Edward Moxon Roberts, Victoria, of St. Johns, Nfld.; Michael Eric Sherman, University College, of Toronto.

Judith Marjorie Smith, Physical Education, of Ancaster, Ont.; Frank E. Collins, School of Practical Science, of Toronto; John Trevor Eytan, Law, of Toronto; Carol G. Rennie, Trinity, of Toronto; Barry David Moore, Emmanuel College, of Toronto; John Albert Pierce, St. Michael's, of Worcester, Mass.; Samuel Aizenstat, University College, of Toronto; Herb Brown, School of Practical Science, of Toronto; John Swan, Music, of Toronto; Robert Lee, Medicine, of Toronto; Mary Frances Percival, Trinity, of Toronto.

Two Fund Drives Collect Extra $$

Campaign-wise, this has been a disappointing year. However, two campaign directors announced last night that the drives they headed have surpassed their goals.

The amount collected in the University Settlement Campaign, which began in mid-February and continues till the end of term, has reached $2,178. SAC Settlement House representative Louise . . . Donald said.

Contributions will be used to finance furnishings for the House and to send needy children to camp. $500 from UC will be used to establish a volunteer training program. About a dozen faculties have yet to contribute, Miss MacDonald added.

The final figure for January's SHARE Campaign is $3,893, Campaign Chairman Doug Ward said yesterday. The World University Service-sponsored drive had set a goal of $3,500.

Ward attributed the success of the campaign to the emphasis the WUS Committee placed on educating canvassers about the purpose and aims of the international mutual assistance organization. "This education should pay dividends next year by creating a broader campus interest in WUS," he added.

As 1960-61 WUS Chairman, Ward plans to further international understanding by initiating a series of Sunday discussion seminars for Canadian and foreign U of T students next year.

In Wallace Room . . .

Lock Last Books

Books on the open shelf in the Wallace Room are being put away behind the counter.

The head librarian of the University of Toronto, Mr. Blackburn, said yesterday, "The reason is that the loss of books has been heavier than ever. So far, losses have been 10 per cent of the total number of books."

Mr. Blackburn said not only had books been stolen, but students were also mutilating books by marking them and tearing out whole chapters.

"I think it is deplorable that a few people in the university are so selfish and thoughtless, not to say dishonest, as to make things difficult for everybody. When we opened the new wing we instituted a lot of open shelves and thought we were moving into a new and freer system, but now we are right back to where we were," he said.

The Union National, a student political party meets this weekend at Caledon Farms. The new student Administrative Council President Peter Dembski, Harvey Shepherd of The Varsity, and Progressive Conservative member David Crane will be spearheading the group. The discussion will center around social development in the province of Quebec.

Aroutunian Pushes Plan For World Disarmament

By JACQUES ROBERGE

"The Soviet Union endeavours to prevent and destroy any means of waging a new war, so that no state—big or small—could launch a war," Dr. Amasasp Aroutunian said last Friday, in an address to the University of Toronto United Nations Club meeting held in Trinity Convocation Hall.

Dr. Aroutunian spoke on "The Plan of General and Complete Disarmament," and outlined a plan by which disarmament and peaceful coexistence are possible to both the Eastern and Western nations without loss of prestige.

"It is a comprehensive disarmament which will guarantee security of all nations, which will bring no special benefit or advantage for any nation. We are trying to exhort all people to renounce arms and to stop wars among nations forever," he said.

"Appearance of A and H bombs, intercontinental and 'upper-space' rockets, missiles and other modern weapons have made a war at the present time too dangerous and catastrophic. Never in history has humanity faced such a situation when stockpiles of weapons were in a position to annihilate entire nations and bring catastrophe," said the ambassador.

The Ambassador said, "I can assure you that the Soviet Union and other socialist countries are genuine in their attempt to strive for general and complete disarmament."

Dr. Aroutunian summed up "his" proposals on disarmament in a five point program which stated:

1) Establishment of a control and inspection zone, with reduction of foreign troops in the territories of the corresponding countries of Western Europe.

2) Establishment of an Atom-Free zone in Central Europe.

3) Withdrawal of all foreign troops from the territories of European states, and liquidation of military bases on foreign territories.

4) Conclusion of a non-aggression pact between NATO members and the Warsaw Treaty States.

5) Agreement on the prevention of surprise attack by one state against another.

On banning nuclear weapons, the Soviet Ambassador said: "I am happy to say that in this country more and more people and officials back the requirements of banning all nuclear tests completely and forever. If I may, I wish to say that students and professors at the U of T can be proud of the initiative they took in that field."

radicalism of strong young men and women of articulate intelligence, arouse, alert, agitate!

During the disarmament talks now revolving around empty concepts in Geneva, college students should be demonstrating throughout the world. All the personal and cherished plans for comfortable and secure status in suburbia, all this pervasive, cautious conservatism, will be barren and useless as long as the governments of our earth refuse to confront reality instead of romance, the grim, gory facts of atomic life rather than visions of pre-Einstein national glory and grandeur.

Of course we shall be told to mind our own business. But peace is our business — as it is of every human being on earth. War has become too important to leave to generals and politicians! And mankind is safer with academic egg-heads than with atomic war-heads!

In the southern states below the border, college students are going to jail because they are not afraid to sting the conscience of the white majority with peaceful demonstrations against segregation of the Negro race. We should have enough political maturity, moral courage, simple common sense concern for self-preservation to demonstrate against suicide of the human race.

the bell tolls

Last fall, Dr. Edward T. Eddy, a well-known American educator, declared that students are ready to be challenged, in an article he wrote on the "tension" which exists beneath the "apathy" of today's college campus.

Not long thereafter, the nature of that challenge began to be revealed. A University of California freshman went on a hunger strike against compulsory R.O.T.C., and his stand was upheld by a petition to which more than a thousand students put their names.

Similar protests, not against R.O.T.C. as such but against all symptoms of the drift toward resignation and preparation for war, are enlivening the air of many American colleges. It is not a mass movement, yet. The "normal" student is solidly, stolidly and sometimes disdainfully cold to the radical few. But the opinion vacuum which has reigned over the college campus is at last being disturbed and the student involved in the critical affairs of mankind.

This great University can give leadership to Canada and to colleges on this entire continent

"Ask not for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee."

A REQUIEM FOR RADICALISM

"The atom-bomb has given me more relaxation and serenity than ever. I'll never need to make any decisions about using it. The matter is out of my hands." This bored shrug of self-abdication was written recently by an Oxford College student in a campus paper.

Since Oxford is the home of romantic lost causes and rebellion, it might be considered a minority attitude. Yet who can say that the cool detachment of beatnik-ism has not really invaded the college mind during the decades? Radicalism has become as old-fashioned as the coon-skin coat and Charleston.

Forty years ago, in my undergraduate days, a college class-room was a hot bed of revolt, not a preliminary rehearsal for suburbanite middle-age. Anti-war sentiment seethed and sizzled; I for one refused to don an R.O.T.C. uniform. Pitched battles of 25 years ago between socialists and fascists have succumbed to Presley-type parades of trivia. Picket lines for Sacco and Vanzetti are now pension line-ups for a plush executive desk in a big corporation. A dream of fringe benefits drives many earnest students out to the far fringes of society, where they need not be involved in world affairs. A contented cow mooing at the sacred cow of conformity appears to be the ideal success-image of the glorified vocational school into which some universities have gently settled. "Angry young men" seem confined to literature and to England.

the bomb

This phlegmatic low-pressure area is nowhere more evident than in relation to the H-bomb. We may all be atomized in the near future; we are not bothered. The few who join parades to ban the bomb run the calculated risk of a screwball label. . . . Yet this bomb threatens the life of that very civilization from which alone the hoped-for comfort and security of a stable economic and social system can come to the sleek college boys who couldn't care less. Let us look at the atomic-age world for a moment.

When a country spends billions of dollars a year on nuclear weapons that often become obsolete the day of their birth, weapons it hopes never to use, in a war no one can win — and whose manufacture and testing doom thousands of human beings to bone-cancer, leukemia, death and monstrous mutation of the genes of reproduction — I term it madness. . . . Who can name, and oppose it, if not the representatives of culture and intelligence on the college campus?

the arms race

In 1955 I was one of the very few who opposed West German re-armament; today I am among the many who look at her growing military and munition-making strength with anxiety. Within the next few years the West Germans, with at least American approval, will be forging their own nuclear weapons. When that happens, or before, the Adenauer government will be replaced, perhaps by men who will not hesitate to exchange neutrality for re-unification, in a deal with the Soviet Union and cooperate with whatever side appears to have the preponderance of power. In the meantime, the myths of German superiority, infallibility, and master-race destiny have begun once more to glitter before the eyes of a German youth kept ignorant of the truth about the Nazi past. Just a week ago, the West German Ministry of Labor selected Professor Valentin Mueller, a former leading Nazi race ideologist, who glorified the "blood superiority" of the "Nordic working man" under Hitler's regime, to conduct a major research assignment for the Federal government.

What group can see through this hypocrisy, if not college students trained in skepticism?

Honest nuclear scientists are agreed, apparently, that there is no defence against nuclear attack except peace. It seems clear, therefore that defensive preparations for nuclear war are a waste of time, energy and money. Even if nuclear bombs from an enemy are intercepted over Canadian territory on their way to the United States and detonated, their fall-out fragments would cause enormous desolation and suffering. One H-bomb on a city would cause unprecedented destruction — far beyond the ghastly ruins of Hiroshima's cement-pit the nerve-centers of Canada out of commission and leave this country a helpless hulk. The false belief that defence is possible might lull public opinion into an idiotic drift to war. Yet war would be suicide, since no air defence can prevent the break-through of enough nuclear weapons to destroy us. . . . Who is to awaken the people to this shadow on the future of their children, if not young college students who will live — or die — in that future?

An arms race between two garrison states is not conducive to intellectual freedom. The military bureaucracy and apocalyptic anti-Communists in Washington, the ambitious patriots in Paris who want to redeem French honor by membership in the atomic league, the German generals thirsting to re-unify the Reich even at the cost of war, and certainly the architects of the massive monolithic power of the Soviet Union, are not concerned with academic brains except insofar as they will produce greater and greater technological data for more deadly weapons of war. . . . Who should be more zealous about preserving the freedom of the mind than college students aware of its necessity for any civilization worthy of the name?

the missiles

On the west coast of the United States, there is an air base with 22 launching sites, fifteen of them capable of firing missiles across the ocean. The press described it as the first firing-pad for an intercontinental missile into Russia. On one of these pads is an 82-foot Atlas standing upright like a silver bullet. The service tower has been pulled back; the missile is armed with a war-head and ready. Fifteen minutes after an alert it can be sped into the air — if the new Soviet ICBM's allow that much time.

Undoubtedly, Russia has similar launching-sites directed eastward, and some perhaps toward the North Pole, and over the Arctic Circle, and across Canada, primed with these angels of death from the sky.

The American base has a lieutenant with a secret code in an envelope around his neck. When that cryptic message is combined with another from Strategic Air Command headquarters the button will be pushed — for the final war to end the march of mankind towards a better and securer life on this planet.

Do we want the destiny of the human race to rest on such a deliberate balance in this precarious margin, a razor's-edge, of human error?

Fear is master of our world — a legitimate fear based on military technology and its dramatic impact on time in the strategy of war. Think of the speed with which one side can shatter its foe in surprise attack! In World War Two, a blow could come no sooner than the 200-mile per hour aircraft limit — and counter defense would permit. In the last days, the perfected German V-2 could be delivered from 50 miles in minutes and could usually not be detected until its downward trajectory, seconds before it touched earth. With earlier production of the V-2 and increased range, the Nazis might have won that war.

Today, each side has ICBM's capable of delivering megaton nuclear warheads for 1800 miles at speeds up to 15 times that of sound, the USSR is believed to possess about a hundred pads for ICBM's ranging to 6200 miles and reports of 8000 mile rockets landing within a mile of target were in the press not long ago. Each side could destroy most of the other's industrial and population centers, and its retaliatory bases, within less than 20 minutes warning-time and with a negligible chance of effective defence. A surprise attack might lead to victory in less than 24 hours!

The situation is all the more dangerous because both the United States and the Soviets are aware of the possibility and potency of a surprise. Realizing its temptations, each side assumes that the other must be considering it. Thus the vicious psychological cycle begins. If the planners on one side become convinced that the other is about to strike first, they will try to beat it to the punch. And when the heads of state, as Eisenhower and Khrushchev recently, boast about their incalculable, invincible power and massive retaliation, how can either be certain of its security from a sneak Pearl Harbour? Even a mistake in reading a radar screen — thinking that birds are bombing planes, and meteors missiles, as one scientist suggested — might send the civilized world to flaming ruin with no time to lose. The risks of waiting for certain knowledge are so great that a "counter-attack" must be launched at once. . . . On such a perilously unstable tight-rope of terror is humanity teetering at this moment.

And it is made even more ominous by the fear of a major technological "break-through". Suppose one side has evidence that the other is about to produce a successful anti-missile device which would enable it to smash an enemy without much damage to itself. In the international climate of today, that could lead to an offensive war for self-protection.

A speech given by Rabbi Abraham L. Feinberg of the Holy Blossom Temple, Toronto, to a meeting of the "Students for Peace", University of Toronto, March 16th, 1960.

These are not paranoid fears; they are the kind of realistic, practical, routine, calculations that take place daily in military and political circles of the Pentagon and the Kremlin.

Would not Hitler have used the H-bomb, even if it meant his own obliteration — in a grand gesture of nihilism?

Would not Nasser be tempted to employ it against Israel, instead of satisfying himself with belligerent speeches in Cairo and Damascus?

It has been stated that any nation with enough technology to manufacture a good car or wrist-watch will soon be able to join the atomic league. As long as the human race exists it will have an easy do-it-yourself way to suicide; we cannot unlearn what science has already taught about nuclear fission. The strategist of today is no longer the old military Colonel Blimp stereotype; he reads, thinks, writes more regarding the intricacies of his profession. The most precise and exacting and concentrated mental power ever assembled is being drafted for the H-bomb game.

No leader of any nation should, or can, rest content with a precarious equilibrium of fear. An atmosphere of hair-trigger fright, in such an arsenal of devastation, will never breed peace; it must almost inevitably catapult us into the final holocaust. . . .

a reply

The world of 1960 requires a new and different spirit. On the threshold of the Geneva conference the peoples of the world must demand the risk of peace, not of arms. There is no better prevention of total nuclear destruction than total nuclear disarmament. The H-bomb game of prestige and derring-do is fit for adolescents, not for grown-up statesmen cognizant of the terrible forces at their disposal. Boldness and honesty and moral courage are the redemptive qualities we have the right to expect from our spokesmen.

Canada has an unprecedented historic opportunity. Not being a competing member of the nuclear club, it has no chips, or "face" to lose. As a nation without an imperialistic past or potency, it has not been morally compromised. In fact, this country occupies an enviable and strong moral position. Also, Canada has a pressing obligation. We are "in the middle", under the celestial path of these hellish harbingers of desolation that ache to shuttle across the Arctic between Russia and the United States of America.

From what group is the urgent challenge to come, if not from university students who are ready to replace campus-capors with the stringent mature, earnest will to survival?

Chancellor Adenauer of West Germany recently claimed that he and his nation have the God-given duty to forestall the victory of Communism. As a theologian, I may be permitted to observe that such a confident assumption of Divine mission is not only incapable of verification, but very dangerous. In any case I am more impressed by the moving, tormented public confession of Viscount Hailsham, Britain's Minister of Science, in the House just a week ago. "When I contemplate the hideous weapons on both sides, which even in my partially informed state I find to have been invented, I regard either a world authority or total disarmament . . . as the only rational objective. Today the only significant prayer in international affairs is the prayer for peace."

That prayer will not be effectuated by the miraculous intervention of God—but by men filled with His spirit. Of courage there is no guarantee that the pilgrimage of man on this minuscule orb in space will not end in an underground cave, or that the continuing adventure of life is not being reserved for other planets in the vast and populous universe.

Do we want our species to persist, and to build new mansions for its spirit? Atomic energy has been placed in our hands — that bestows on man the power of the sun itself. In one hand is its marvellous potentiality for a golden age of plenty; in the other is its diabolic fragmenting power of destruction, the massive embodiment of the psychological death-wish expanded to global dimensions. Which shall we choose?

Shall we watch entranced while Washington and Moscow chalk up their box scores, raising the number of megatons of ruin compressed into war-heads and lowering the number of minutes to deliver them on target? Shall we listen paralyzed to men who seem more worried about giving a good account of themselves in a nuclear war than about giving an account to future generations? Shall we make our peace with lunacy — or demand that peace be established?

indifferent students

To College students, it is appalling to accept the premise that the individual is basically helpless and disassociated from events and decisions. Serious thinking is a force in itself. Nothing is more dynamic than an individual speaking and acting out of inescapable moral necessity and conscience — and nothing more powerful than an idea whose hour has come.

I believe a chain reaction within man no less potent than the chain reaction of electrons and nuclei in the atom, can be set up to stir the collective conscience of all men.

Some time ago a Committee of the University of Toronto Faculty drew up a petition for nuclear sanity. It got wide support from teachers. A chain reaction might have been started; the indifference of students brought the process of public enlightenment to a halt. Not opposition, mind you, but unconcern!

Had the petition precipitated intense controversy about its content, this campus would have proved mature and solemn awareness of the dread issue. Instead it seemed to become, for the mass of students, quickly a dead issue, unworthy of their time and energy, far less vital to well-being than a tea-pot tempest about fraternities or a hockey match.

That Faculty group has now been joined by four clergymen, including myself. We are preparing the final version of a statement which demands total nuclear disarmament as the only road to security from the threat of an annihilating war.

no other way

There is no other way, as the already anticipated failure of the Geneva Conference just begun will testify. The proposals advanced by the Western powers are so superficial and unrealistic that they will achieve nothing but false hope for the masses, and deeper cynicism among the politicians.

They deal with conventional weapons—armies—probably mere spectators in a nuclear war, if they remain alive. The hub of the problem, nuclear armament, is postponed to a later stage — while the H-bomb game and the space-race merrily continue. Furthermore, any disarmament program which leaves out Red China is a deformed and incomplete political monstrosity, which permits and encourages the missing member to go its own way. And in this case, the absent partner is the most populous and potentially the most powerful nation in the last decades of the twentieth century. Does anyone nourish the delusion that an industrialized galvanized and robotized China of 600,000,000 workers cannot, or would not, build an H-bomb?

The world needs a voice which will cut through the miasma of outworn nationalisms and clichés and intrigue, and cleave to the heart of the matter. It needs courage and clarity! It needs the

A Varsity Exclusive:

The Story Of The Varsity Editorship: Why The Council Wanted A Stooge

By Mark Nichols

Varsity Executive Editor

It is a comfort to reflect in life's bad moments that at least some of the forms of mass insanity exhibited by the institutions and organizations with which we have to co-exist are, after all, only comparatively harmless sublimations of the bad side of man.

In this way, society by its genius, allows ordinary citizens in white collars and blue blazers to enjoy the pleasures ordinarily reserved for hounded sex perverts, murderers and frothing mobs.

There is, however, one example of this species of mob insanity which is reserved exclusively for universities and this is most unfortunate. This is the institution known as the student council.

As an example of its kind of thing, the student council would present some interesting problems for the social psychologist. For the student council is a fascinating beast in any circumstance. Its frenzies and hallucinations are many.

But what I am interested in arguing here is that this year's student council at the University of Toronto has elected by due democratic confusion to reject as unacceptable those virtues which traditionally have been associated with the concept of a university.

In arguing this, I shall refer expressly to the council's action Wednesday in electing to the editorship of this newspaper for next year what I call a stooge dedicated to feeding the 13,000 students here a diet of eviscerated slop that the council has decided it wants.

Since I am going to argue this, and since it happens to be the case that the editor-elect was defeated in the customary Varsity office vote, that is, he was not favored by the present Varsity staff, it will probably be said that this article is only sour grapes.

It isn't. I can see no reason in the world why the SAC's choice of editor shouldn't have been made as it was. The point is that the choice was made for the worst reasons.

To return to the student council in general, the social psychologist, if he examined it, would find that it is schizophrenic, sometimes sadistic, frequently hysterical, always in a state of high anxiety, and morbidly self-conscious.

The reason for this is fairly simple. The student council, at this university at least, is the unfortunate product of an historical confusion. It has totally forgotten what its purpose is. It has become an embarrassed, and neurotic hybrid completely lacking in self-understanding and highly paranoid.

There is only one real reason for a student council. It is to collect and distribute money. Somewhere along the line, however, the idea of power has become involved. As things have turned out, the council has come to think of itself as an organization which exists for the purpose of wielding power. Its collective misery is never so great as when it lacks some object for the exercise of its power.

A final peculiar quality has come to the exercise of this power: it is almost inevitably negative in character.

This year, for example, the council managed to act in a positive way with regard to a major issue only once. This was to deal with the presence of racial prejudice on campus. Aside from this, the council has occupied itself with acting like a star chamber and turfing out one of its own members who had made the mistake of trying to do something positive, arranging for quite a number of undoubtedly pleasant student exchanges and, most of the time, in inquiring into the affairs of The Varsity.

This last interest, apparently for lack of anything else, developed into an obsession with the council. In the beginning they were occupied mainly with late newspapers, resulting financial problems and other technical and business matters that always occur.

To demonstrate its irritation, the council imposed a number of more or less innocuous restrictions, on the editor. Later, when, as I shall argue, for quite different reasons the council's mental indigestion had become acute, it vented its spleen by cancelling the publication of the magazine Otherside. In this regard the council's reason was that the magazine had twice appeared late and there had been general business inefficiency which caused certain embarrassment to the council.

This, in a sense was fair. In another sense it wasn't. The point was that the council refused to consider was that the magazine in its early stages was bound to have troubles of the sort it had. The council was unwilling, for some reason, to wait for the troubles to be sorted out.

The council's unhappiness increased by leaps and bounds. Still charging inefficiency and bad business procedures, the council began to occupy the editor for dozens of hours a week with inquiries and threats. Finally, the council moved tentatively, but failed, to suspend the paper. It satisfied itself with an empty censure that seemed to reflect nothing but a confused unhappiness.

Now I would like to discuss the question of the editorship.

As I said above, it is my opinion that the council has chosen to elect a stooge whose campaign was founded on a rejection of traditional university values.

The stooge is named Ed Roberts, a student at Victoria College and as editor he will be a graduate student, the first to serve as editor in many years.

I should make it clear that I am not calling Roberts a stooge because he is one personally, though this may be the case. I am calling him a stooge because of the part he played in the SAC's quarrel with this year's staff.

I also wish to make the point that the council's quarrel involves something more than a question of business procedures, that it involves a question of what university students are, and that the question of the editorship proves this.

Roberts concluded a totally undistinguished career with The Varsity this winter by resigning and handing the SAC a seven-page letter of complaint about the paper. He subsequently worked closely with the student council, at least once against The Varsity.

Perhaps there is a question of honor here. What Roberts did could be construed as a stab in the back. What is significant, however, is that his campaign for the editorship against his competitor Harvey Shepherd was built on an undertaking to put out a paper directly opposed in the nature of its content to this year's paper. As nearly as one can gather, this means, simply, dull.

I suggested earlier that the council's continual fury with The Varsity this year was due to some factor other than those business matters that were continually raised.

On the basis of what was said by council members on this subject, as well as Roberts' application and campaign, it is clear that what the council was objecting to was the singular preoccupation of The Varsity this year with intellectual matters.

It has been, because of the nature of the editor, a paper dedicated above all to matters of art, of drama, of writing, of political theory and the like. It was dedicated to what Roberts called in his letter or resignation, "artsy-craftsy" things, those things with which one would naturally assume university students to be concerned.

The preoccupation with these things was meant, and no one will deny it, that the editors this year have felt only a secondary concern with ordinary coverage of ordinary news and sports. What they were concerned with was interesting the students of the university in those things which are generally given a

Now Roberts' platform was that this sort of "artsy-craftsy" nonsense would go by the boards, that good solid meat and potatoes news and sports — the things students want — would predominate. As I understand it, movie reviews would replace book reviews, sports stories would take precedence over "artsy-craftsy" things like theatre and art, and so on.

The issue, as far as I can tell shaped up this way when the matter came to a vote with the council. Shepherd, who under normal circumstances would have stood a better than average chance of becoming editor, was denied a fair vote, I think, since the council felt he would represent a continuation of the kind of editing that had existed this year.

That this was the issue in question was made fairly clear at the meeting. A rough but fair paraphrase of what SAC president Walter MacLean said just prior to the vote would read like this:

"... Mr. Shepherd's application leaves no doubt that he approves of and intends to carry out a policy such as that which Mr. Sam Ajzenstat pursued this year."

In other words, Harvey Shepherd's application was to be accepted or rejected on the basis that to accept it would be to endorse the present editor's general policies.

Aside from the fact that this was grossly unfair, I regret that the council was actually making a choice between an intellectual and non-intellectual newspaper. In view of what we generally consider a university ought to be, that a student council should make such a choice seems ludicrous.

At the very least, this whole business seems a shame. To state the case more strongly, if you have ever stopped for a moment to make a comparative estimate of television sets as against books and a luxurious material somnolence against a thoughtful interest in life, and perhaps even the possibility of its continuation, it is a tragedy.

DEBUTANTES

By ROBERT EDDISON

As Rare As Log Fires In The Living Room

Anyone who has seen "The Reluctant Debutante" can only feel sympathy for the country-loving girl who is dragged against her will into being a social success; moreover, at the prospect of Jane's future happiness through her marriage to "that undesirable young man", the audience, if it has any heart, will surely sigh with relief.

To Canadians, the high-pressure propulsion of a sweet, unsullied girl into London's social whirl must seem rather strange, particularly when in many cases this is done against her will. It is a vast butterscotch organization over which she has no control. Canadians have every right to be puzzled as they live in a country where Debutantes are as rare as log-fires in the living room: at Toronto's last Garrison Ball, for instance, only about a dozen Debs "came out". Poor things, it must have been a bit cold for them.

The reason for this, of course, is that in Canada no social cachet attaches to being a Deb since there is no Court Chamberlain, as in Britain, to probe into your ancestry. (The latest bit of ancestry-probing has revealed that Anthony Armstrong-Jones has royal blood in his veins after all; it must be getting a trifle thin by now though as the royal connection goes back to the twelfth century). So in Canada all are eligible to be Debs and this lack of exclusiveness takes the fun out of it. Moreover, most girls over here seem to be working and presumably haven't the time for such frivolities.

In fact it beats me why there are any Debs here at all. I suppose the "Season" makes them a lot of nice new friends and this is particularly welcome if they have been away for a year at some European finishing school; all the more necessary when it is remembered that most finishing schools are buried in remote Swiss mountains and (social) intercourse except with the peasants becomes very difficult. Paris is even worse as you have to be chaperoned everywhere and what's the fun of going to a night club with a leech-like forgotten spinster? So maybe for these "finished" girls a season back home might be a good thing if only to help them "un-finish" themselves again in the intoxicating freedom of a great progressive democracy. Perhaps also it gives freedom of movement and a chance to meet Older Men, for the boys they knew at high school are all so tiresomely young.

In Britain it's all very, very different. Over there the girls positively need to do a Season. They need to be brought out of themselves. Whereas the average Canadian girl of 18 knows what is expected of her on a date and has been disgustingly sophisticated since the age of 15, her British counterpart frankly hasn't a clue about men, at any rate not if she has been well brought up. "Mummy, what shall I say if Jim asks me what I do?" "Say nothing, dear. Men are always intrigued by mystery; that was how I married your Father."

Father looks upon his daughter's "coming out" as an investment. "It costs me £500 a year to keep her; early marriage will save me all that." Marriage, of course, is the main motive. At its lowest (or ugliest) a teenage girl is thrown into her London Season "so that she can make a collection of nice friends in the best houses in every corner of England". I question the value of this mainly on the ground that it entails a good deal of travelling, and British Railways are notoriously sooty.

If these are the prizes to be won, the cost of obtaining them is high in terms of nervous energy. Months before the Season, the girls' mums all flock to London like so many plump pigeons and consult over tea in the best hotels. If a mum decides to give a dance for her daughter, she will most likely cut the cost by sharing it with some friend or acquaintance. Unless she acts quickly, however, other mums may approach her first and it is sometimes difficult to refuse a request to share a dance from an older edition of that awful girl with pig-tails and buck teeth (Continued on Page 8)

resolutions

This is my last column, joyous news for (a) sororities, (b) Catholics, (c) the SAC and (d) everyone who I have managed to offend in some small way this year. As a parting gift I have made some resolutions of things I will do next year.

I will pledge Kappa Kappa Gamma.
I will turn Roman Catholic.
I will run for SAC President.
I will buy a Kingston Trio record.
I will be embalmed.

What more could you ask?

skidsmanship

I am a night creature. I am awake all night, every night. I sleep, when I sleep, in daylight. I have, to the best of my recollection, never heard noon strike.

Unless (a) there is money to be made, or (b) there is a story to be written, I am not to be rolled out of bed.

So when a colleague telephoned me one head-splitting red-eyed morning, I yelled at him. I had been more or less prepared to meet the new day by a phone call a few minutes before, but I took it out on him anyway.

That's when he said it.

"I know you told me not to wake you up, but I knew you were awake this morning," he said calmly. "I phoned ten minutes ago and the line was busy."

About 20 minutes and 1,000 throbs later the breathtaking significance of his remark dawned on me.

If I can catch him, I intend to boil him in JCR coffee.

an eye for a life

Richard Gladstone, a U of T medical student, has come up with an idea which he hopes will revolutionize crime prevention and lick the controversy of capital punishment. He suggests the compulsory removal of one eye or another dispensable organ in the case of a convicted murderer. The eye would be contributed to an eye bank.

Now it would be even cuter if this whole idea were carried two steps further. I propose that no anaesthetic be administered and that the operation be performed with a rusty spoon.

fraternities occasionally do go on record

In a little brown booklet I obtained recently are some fascinating statements. The booklet is called "College Fraternities". It is undated, unsigned and purports to be "an outgrowth of many similar publications and of discussions in interfraternity meetings." From the context, it is apparent it was published here at the University of Toronto.

"The new man steps into a congenial atmosphere where firm and lasting friendships are formed. These intimate relationships . . . often ripen into lifelong friendships of social, and sometimes, of material benefit." (You too can go from square to wheel. And think of those material benefits.)

Politicking About

OUR LIVING TRADITION.
ROBERT L. MACDOUGALL (ed.)

The search for a Canadian identity has been one of the great preoccupations in thought in this country in recent years. The attempt to discover this sense of identity has been encouraged by the government through the appointment of a Royal Commission and its subsequent establishment of the Canada Council. It has been tracked down in a group of essays on Canadian culture edited by a professor at Cornell University. In fact the proliferation of essays and not-so-belles lettres all seeking to describe this apparently rare abstract creature has reached almost fantastic levels in the last decade. Yet most of these books have been devoted to analysis of our contemporary culture, not to the explanation of how that culture was created. And without some analysis of the threads from the past which have woven the tapestry of a Canadian society and culture, our knowledge of this identity will continue to be at best very shallow.

Canadian nationalism is by no means the fragile and delicate flower to be sought in shaded Laurentian groves as might be suggested by the intensive search being conducted at present. We do have something unique to Canada in our society, politics and culture. We have been aware of this ever since the first United Empire Loyalists settled in this country and began to create a distinctive English-speaking nation on the North American continent. At the same time, the French-speaking people began their long struggle to preserve their identity in an English-speaking continent, a struggling which has become less needful since 1867 but more important and influential in its creative element. Two strains of thought caused the awareness of this identity: one the romantic glow which flowed from the vision of a transcontinental nation after Confederation; the other the nationalistic reaction to growing British imperialism at the end of the last century. The product of the one was a spate of romantic history and even more romantic poetry; the product of the other was the growing study of constitutional history. The fact that Canadian historians of thirty and forty years ago were concerned most with our developing nationality is a direct result of our colonial status. To find our identity, we must trace our emancipation from Britain. High school students have been inflicted with the boring task of learning all about the growth of responsible government and autonomy as a result; and, at the same time, been persuaded of the dullness of our past. The all-pervading grayness of Canadian history has only recently begun to be covered over in historical thought with more vivid shades from the past.

The three collections of papers in "Our Living Tradition" have been a most important contribution to this re-thinking. They constitute an essay in understanding of our culture and identity in terms of the people who have contributed to it. As such, they have been very good. Like all such collections, the total effect is spotty. The first series was perhaps marred by too large a number of poor essays; yet it also had one or two far better than the best offered in the new series. On the whole, the quality of the papers in the second and third series is good—and is uniform.

These papers were originally offered as public lectures at Carleton University's Institute of Canadian Studies. Perhaps the best in the collection is one on Thomas Chandler Haliburton presented by the volume's editor, and the Director of the Institute, Robert L. McDougall. Not only his remarks on Haliburton, but also his reflections on our Canadian identity and culture, are the highlights of the book. A bright paper on George Brown by Prof. Careless is another highlight. Other subjects are E. J. Pratt, Duncan Campbell-Scott, Sir Robert Borden, P. A. de Gaspé, T. H. Varley, F. X. Garneau, J. S. Ewart, L. J. Papineau, Egerton Ryerson and Isabella Valancy Crawford. Each of these essays is entirely rewarding.

This book deserves both high praise for carrying out its purpose so well, and also high sales which will reflect the desire of an intelligent Canadian reading public to find out some worthwhile things about themselves and their culture. If the editor can promise that future papers and lectures will be as good as these, this reviewer urges strongly that the series should be carried on.

R.E.S.

UP FROM LIBERALISM, JOHN BUCKLEY.

"We know that we have made no discoveries, and we think that no discoveries are to be made, in morality; nor marry in the great principles of government, nor in the idea of liberty, which were understood long before we were born, altogether as well as they will be after the grave has heaped its mould upon our presumption, and the silent tomb shall have imposed its law upon our pert loquacity." (Edmund Burke)

Pert loquacity is the word for Mr. Buckley as he appears in "Up from Liberalism", though he lacks the Master's clarity and ring. He is the editor of "National Review", a magazine much read in the Middle West, published by McDowell, Obolensky, Inc., a firm whose Czarist Russian partner gives it an understandable tilt to the right.

whom you disliked so intensely at school.

Once the mums have selected a partner and the date of their dance, they are ready to embark on the second operational stage of training and equipping the troops. Their snappy, rustic, daughters are dragged up to the metropolis from all over England to be aimed for the fray. Visits are made to the fashionable armoures of Mayfair and the latest information garnered on the length of skirt slits and finger nails; outsize puppy-fat figures are jellied into an aching harness of corsetry and, if your feet are not the same size, you are told that one foot is smaller than the other, rather than the other way round: "So genteel dear, that's what puts London in a class of its own."

Meanwhile, mum will be hard at work in her newly-acquired apartment. One of her main headaches will be the laying-on of dinner for the guests she has invited to her daughter's dance. It is customary in London to arrange for one's dance guests to have dinner at the houses of friends. As each friend (or dinner hostess) is given, as a matter of courtesy, a wide choice in the selection of guests, the mums have a complex administrative job on their hands. One way of keeping track is to label cocktail glasses with the names of the various dinner hostesses and to fill each glass with a selection of guests' names for them to choose from. If, as sometimes happens, the dinner hostess has a Deb daughter of her own she will very likely provide the male dinner guests herself from among her daughter's acquaintances. In such cases, it becomes vital only to ask those of one's friends to give dinners who can be relied upon to invite the right kind of men. Finally, a larger (champagne) glass comes in very handy to act as a "rubbish bin". This is for all the Debs whom the dinner hostesses have rejected; normally, they simply get lumped together and sent for dinner to a "stand-in" hostess—very often to some dear old soul who knew you when you were a little girl.

At the beginning of the Season, very little is known about anyone and the names of eligible young escorts on a mum's list convey very little to her. As the Season progresses, however, an alert mum generally manages to acquire some inside information on the young men and accordingly enters meaningful hieroglyphics against their names. A common one is N.S.I.T. (Not Safe In Taxis) and there are others showing even worse propensities, from which her daughter must be protected. But, whatever their vices or virtues, the men, known as Debs' Delights, are in great demand and are very biased about the whole thing. Consequently, invitations are rarely sent to them more than three weeks in advance, for fear they will either lose or forget about them. The pre-dance dinner parties, moreover, are given not so much to provide food as to ensure that the men parade in time to escort the girls to the dance.

To the dance... Before the war, it was the practice for each of the young men invited to dinner to dance with the dinner hostess' daughter, but, as this custom is now dying out, the latter is often left standing conspicuously alone and a prey to all her chinless acquaintances with whom she would rather be seen dead. To dance even with one of these, however, is preferable to remaining a wallflower, so she accepts with the fervent prayer that he will not cling to her indefinitely and turn out to be what is known in Deb circles as a Deadly Nightshade. In the days of programmes, of course, a man who threatened to cling to you all night was no real problem as you could always leave him as soon as the band had stopped playing; today, however, there are fewer breaks.

The question therefore arises: how to get rid of one's partner and acquire another? The complicated exercise of "slipping your partner" is performed in the bar to which the younger men are drawn in pursuit of Debs rather than of alcohol. The process of finding a partner thus taxes their ingenuity far more than formerly. No longer can they book a girl in advance for a dance and write the number on their shirt cuffs; nor can they tap their favourite girl's partner smartly on the shoulder and carry off the prize, since the British system does not recognize cutting in. Consequently, if a man wants to dance with a particular girl, he must keep his eyes glued on her and pounce during the partner-slipping period between break-off and pick-up and, even then, he may not get her for long if her Father feels he is Undesirable. Parents like to think they exert on Influence For Good as they sit in the background, hawk-eyed and vigilant, polluting the atmosphere with virtue. As Jimmy Broadbent put it: "I kept watch over Jane from nine to two and even sentries only do a stretch of two hours."

A Deb daughter often takes full and grateful advantage of Father's laissez-faire attitude reflected in his progressively longer absence at the bar; indeed, she frequently finds it easier to give the slip to Father than to her importunate partners. The chances are she will escape from parental surveillance and retire with her favourite boy-friend to his gin and jazz-laced haven. Let us draw the curtain here and hope (hypocritically and for the record, as it were) that hers will not be the epitaph, pronounced by David Bullock in "The Reluctant Debutante": "I fed her some brandy and nuts and after that it was a piece of cake."

group is a more powerful deterrent than the fiat of absolute authority." (Be honest now, what happens when you put half a dozen children together in a sand box?)

"Assistance in helping a brother to find a job is traditional." (This, it is true, is an advantage to otherwise hopeless individuals.)

"Both pride in their good name, and the selfish interest of a fraternity lead them to do their best to keep their members in college, and in good standing." (So help me, that's accurate.)

"Fraternity life... at once provides a boy with a group of friends who have chosen him because they like him." (At once?)

"The undergraduate body has full control of its affairs, including the rushing, pledging and initiation of new members." (Oh, really?)

"It is important that a man new to college should exercise diligence in the selection of friends and not drift with the multitude." (With an eye on those material benefits, of course.)

At the end of the book, there is a list of questions prospective fraternity members should ask themselves. If they really did ask themselves these questions, and demanded answers, they probably wouldn't have joined.

"1. Are the motives, ideals and principles of the chapter in keeping with those which I desire to observe?"

"2. To what scholastic standards does the chapter aspire and what is their relative standing scholastically on the campus?"

"3. Are the members the kind of men I want as intimate friends? Will I take pride in introducing them to my family?"

"4. In what form of social life does the chapter engage?"

"5. What are the financial obligations?"

That third one is a real scream. Maybe it was meant for a coed fraternity-sorority.

Well she turned up. That smudgy photo reproduced here a couple of weeks ago was Daria Kobuziak (I UC) and she is now on her way to becoming a famous model maybe.

"This guy asked me for directions," Daria told me, "and then said 'just a second I want to take your picture.' I didn't give it a second thought."

jobwise

A second year Meds student, Jim Paupst, has figured out a unique way to pay his next year's tuition. He's editing a magazine which he says will contain "oblique attacks on everything." The first issue of the "Adversary" will appear in three months and will contain among other things an article on skin diving, a criticism of rock and roll by Boyd Neel and a photo spread by Ron Carr.

It should sell for about 50 cents and copies of the first issue will be sent to 2,000 U of T students more or less on approval. Paupst hopes to sell subscriptions after that.

books continued

He might have been expected, then, to offer us a modern conservative program, a review of man, of economic responsibility, and of the nature of social justice at once consonant with the tradition of the West and an indictment of the American Liberal Establishment, fatty as it is in some of its members. Sad to say, he has produced exactly the blend of personal venom and muddily day-dreaming typical of his Liberal enemy at its worst.

As far as I can gather, Mr. Buckley has four principal charges against Liberalism in America, its doctrines and legislative proposals. They are: (a) That the movement is led by fools, or by those whose toleration of fools disqualifies them as public counsellors. Mr. Buckley has no difficulty in proving that Mrs. Roosevelt has said stupid things, or that many Liberal attacks on McCarthy used his own methods. For a man who parades his logic, however, it seems a little odd to ignore the little lesson and make half his books an exercise in the ad hominem fallacy (that a man's personal failings invalidate his argument). Mr. Buckley knows, and we know, that political allies support, though they may detest, each other, in every age and party.

When he solemnly announces that Professor Galbraith has not once publicly criticised Mrs. Roosevelt, and then adds darkly that this is the sort of thing Liberalism leads to, it becomes difficult to take him seriously.

(b) "That the tenets of Liberalism are vague, and foster cloud-mindedness and decline of the standards of debate." This would be firmer ground if the author stuck to "progressive" education. But when he tells us that general extension of the vote to all Southern Negroes is misguided, he steps off a precipice. "If the majority (i.e. Northern Liberals) will what is socially atavistic, (i.e. admission of all Negroes to full citizenship), then to thwart the majority may be the indicated course." Yet later we learn: "Freedom (allows) the individual to acquire and dispose of property in ways that he decides on." But some property (slaves, monopolies) is "socially atavistic" and Southern Negroes cannot enjoy economic without political freedom. Does Buckley mean that only present property-holders may defy the majority will? Alas for "the Liberal decline of clear debate"—shall we ever know.

(c) That the program of Liberalism is economically unfeasible—Yet the author himself admits that the present U.S. social security system costs .03 per cent of the national income, or 73c per person, in 1957, and is driven to argue that its danger lies in its being "redistributive" (i.e. that it stops the accumulation of capital in a very few hands, that is, checks the main cause of the revolution Buckley so abhors).

(d) The Liberal program would be compulsory and would therefore restrict freedom—perhaps even the freedom of a minority to restrict majority freedom, as advocated by Buckley in (b).

The root of Buckley's dishonesty (with himself as much as with us) in his failure to examine his deepest beliefs (Catholicism and its authoritarian social consequences) in the light of the revolutions in science and logic since the Renaissance, which left us with fewer truths, and harsher criteria for finding them.

It's a barren landscape, and no one can blame him for dreaming of a world where "certain problems have been disposed of—certain questions are closed."

It would take Burke himself to convince the educated nowadays that this is so, but his tomb, as he predicted, is silent.

Fraters Praise "Bull Sessions", Quiet As Mice About Bobbi

Sure fraternities can be defended, as long as you have something written up in advance.

That's apparently how two U of T students felt when they showed up at a CBC radio show to be interviewed on the question of fraternities and sororities in the general vicinity of the U of T.

Maryanne Kelso (II UC), a member of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority, and John MacFarlane (III Vic), president of Phi Gamma Delta fraternity, appeared on "Teen Tempo" last week.

The students appeared at the request of the CBC to answer criticism of fraternities and sororities levelled on an earlier show by Varsity writers David Lewis Stein and Alan Walker.

The producer and director of the show said the two students appeared with carefully prepared statements concerning the "high purpose" of their organizations, and that they refused to make any comment on the Bobbi Arrington case.

"Of course we wouldn't let them read their statements," the producer told The Varsity, "but they remembered them quite well."

Stein and Walker had explained the Arrington case to the audience and had outlined the complaints against the discriminating Greek letter organizations.

(Most of the listeners are in the later years of high school and the CBC said they felt many of the students should be told about fraternities and sororities before entering universities.)

So Miss Kelso and MacFarlane gave what they termed "the fraternities' side".

"It is an association of men with high ideals and common principles," MacFarlane recalled. "Miss Kelso said the members 'live for each other rather than for themselves. We each have a position to fulfill in the fraternity (sorority)."

MacFarlane praised the organizations, which Stein and Walker had attacked, by saying they provided for "bull sessions, the discussing with other brothers of different courses, of different parts of the countries, of their ideas, what they have picked up in the lectures and from other students".

MacFarlane said, "the greatest, most important part of university life is the bull session, and this is well recognized."

Commenting on the "high scholarship" standards of fraternities and sororities, Miss Kelso said Alpha Gamma Delta granted "recognition such as scrolls or your name on a plaque".

Both members lauded the social advantages of their organizations.

"We are in a different position from the boys' fraternities," Miss Kelso said, "in that we don't ask boys to the house every Saturday night whereas they have the social freedom of asking the girls to their houses." MacFarlane broke in with "It's usually customary for the boys to ask the girls out and we have the football parties on football weekends plus numerous other dances throughout the year."

Outlining rushing procedures, Miss Kelso said almost every girl "finds a place" in one of the eight sororities around the U of T campus.

"None of the fraternities are the same," she added, "and many of them have different bases on which they . . . well, live their lives. You will find all kinds of people in a fraternity, from every social level, I don't think that . . . certainly they have been called snob groups and I think this is a gross exaggeration."

MacFarlane said he didn't believe there was any social stigma attached "one way or another as to whether you are in a fraternity".

Before the interview a letter from an irate frat man was read, suggesting Stein and Walker could have been utterly destroyed by arguments from a fraternity member.

Following the interview, one of the program editors said he didn't think the statements of Miss Kelso and MacFarlane constituted a defence.

"This was a general statement of principle," he said, "and the Barbara Arrington case, which triggered the controversy in the first place, was not discussed. The fraternity members refused to comment on that issue. They stayed clear of specifics. We may not have heard the last of this fight."

Although the Caput carefully severed all ties between the U of T and the fraternities and sororities last month, the program ended with the strains of the University song.

Nfcus Plans Nat'l Seminar At UBC

The National Federation of Canadian University Students will hold its third national seminar this August at the University of British Columbia.

The 150 student discussion group will talk about research, education and National development and concentrate on economic and technological aspects.

Students are eligible to participate if they are returning to their university the following year. The university must be a member of Nfcus.

A Nfcus release said the seminar hopes, "to encourage Canadian students to face the reality of local and national problems with qualified leaders, and to stimulate thinking among students on issues that effect the universities".

Another purpose of the seminar is to, "strengthen Nfcus in its efforts to reflect and represent the interest of the students of Canada, and to make a more effective contribution to their material and intellectual well-being".

Food, lodging and travelling expenses will be provided by Nfcus but there is an initial registration fee of $10. Application forms are available in the SAC office and in Simcoe Hall.

Architecture Open House

The School of Architecture of the University of Toronto will present its annual open house, 1960 edition, tonight and tomorrow.

Displays will be arranged to give future students and other visitors some idea of what the architectural students do during their five years of school and the students themselves will be on hand to answer questions.

The times of the open house are from 2 to 11 p.m. today and from 10 to 5 p.m. tomorrow at 277 Huron St.

Gets Award

A student at Osgoode Hall, Martin Lawrence Eberle, of Toronto, has been awarded the first Canada-Soviet and McGill-Soviet Award for the Student of Architecture in the Soviet Union.

He was selected at the University of Toronto, B.Sc., 1st B.A. At present he is taking his final semester at Osgoode Hall, while awaiting the term of Kuno's Degree at Eberle.

Russian Student Tour Of Canada U's Likely

OTTAWA (CUP) — Russian students may be touring Canadian universities this fall for the first time.

The president of NFCUS announced today that following negotiations by the Federation, 11 universities have agreed to house, feed and pay the travel expenses of ten Russian university students.

"We are making preparations to receive the Russians in October and hope for a similar tour for Canadian students in May of 1961," Jacques Gerin said.

The universities which have agreed to host the Russians are: Toronto, McGill, Queen's, UBC, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Mc-Master, Western U.N.B., U.S. of Alberta at Calgary, and University of King's College. The others, Manitoba and OAC-OVC-MAC have tentatively agreed, but need council approval.

Formulated at the last Nfcus Congress, the plan had been gathering steam ever since prior to that, in April of 1959. Since the Congress, Roy Heenan (McGill), International Affairs Chairman of Nfcus, has been putting the idea into motion.

Under the plan, each university must house and feed the delegation at its university—probably for two days—and must contribute to the travel expenses in a ration based on enrolment ranging from $50 for 500 students to $500 for 6,000.

Victorious Year For UTDUmen

The University of Toronto's debating team last week ended its activities for the year after successfully competing on many Canadian and American campuses.

Debates were held with Michigan State, Assumption University, University of New Brunswick, Queen's, St. Francis Xavier, Royal Military College, University of Michigan, McGill, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Radcliffe, Boston University, University of Western Ontario, Mt. Allison and Sir George Williams.

All of these debates and tournaments were won by the Varsity team, with the exception of two which were tied.

Max Rothstein (I Law) and Bob Kaplan (II Law) pocketed a win over each of the three colleges they debated against in the Maritimes.

Dick Jones (I ApSc) and Dick Tan (II SMC) debated in a tournament at Penn State which was essentially a congress. The debaters from nine colleges were divided into committees to discuss topics. Reports were given to an assembly and debaters rose to support or oppose. The U. of T. won two Keystone keys, top award at the tournament.

At this same event, Dick Jones was elected Vice-president of next year's congress.

Next year the Uof T Debating Union is planning another round of off-campus debates, but also what they expect will be the most spectacular on-campus tournament ever.

There will be more service debates. These debates are put on at high schools and on television as examples of and instruction in debating and current events.

SPS Men Win Awards

Winners of Engineering Debating awards were announced last night by debates organizer Daye Rutenberg (III ApSc).

The Sedgewick Cup for the final tournament was won jointly by George White (III ApSc) and Ian Middleton (III ApSc). The tournament, judged by Society President Frank Collins, debated the subject of recognition for Red China.

For proficiency in debating through the year, Roger Jones (III ApSc) and Dick Jones (I ApSc) were awarded the annual Sedgeworth Shield for carrying out Engineering debating on the one debate per week basis this past year.

UC Fire Architecture

A small fire at Whitney Hall, University College's women's residence on Wednesday, caused little damage, but much excitement.

Dinner was interrupted at about 6.30 p.m. at the residence, as fire trucks came to a screaming stop under the windows of the building.

The fire was discovered under a tarpaulin-covered shack which houses materials being used in the construction of a new wing on the residence.

The 1960-61 executive of the Architectural Society, School of Architecture, University of Toronto were announced last night.

President is M. Ross and vice-president is M. McMordie. Other officers are: Miss M. Rose, treasurer; J. Evans, secretary; F. Valentine, SAC representative; A. Zdanowicz, athletic director; G. Taber, social director; A. Benedek, employment director; P. Wise, publicity director.

PEOPLE MAKE THE DIFFERENCE...

LEONARDO DA VINCI

In every age it has always been people, not machines or methods, that have made the difference. Leonardo da Vinci illustrated this great truth for all who followed him.

For the painter of the Mona Lisa believed, above all things, in the endless range of man's understanding. Because of his genius, his awareness and his great humanity, he helped the whole of Western thought take a giant stride forward into the modern world.

In today's community, it is the capacity of people to respond with genuine warmth and interest to the needs of others that distinguishes one business enterprise from another. This is our philosophy at "The Bank" and the reason why we consider our people to be our greatest asset.

Should you be considering banking as a career, you will find our booklet "New Horizons At THE BANK" both interesting and informative. It outlines the many rewarding opportunities that are yours when you choose a career with Toronto-Dominion. For your free copy, simply write: The Personnel Superintendent, The Toronto-Dominion Bank, 55 King Street W., Toronto. It will be sent along to you by return mail.

A Farewell Speech by benny and dish

So it is sadly coming on the day when Benny graduates and leaves the ivied walls of Varsity. I leave the walls only because they are being too firmly anchored to their foundation but I do not leave even a wit on the inside as I strip everything bare except for a few overly-modest professors and the odd mangy co-ed who does not appeal to my better senses.

There comes a letter to me from my onetime buddy and long-time associate one Claude Carpet-sweeper, who now is being employed by the Syndicate which runs the education racket as a frontman and shill plenipotentiary. He is operating as an organizer too as he attempts to rope in the teen-agers by offering a few free samples which he calls bursaries so that they get hooked but good on the education habit and stagger about hither and wan bearing king-size gorillas on their backs.

But old Carpet-sweeper informs me that it is decided at a midnight meeting of the group that old Benny which I am is to have a place of honor at the Convocation Festivities so that I am being seen by all who are attending and also maybe so that the when they shower me with lead confetti and old steel rails which they describe as a kind of "thicker ticker tape" . . .

Mine eyes are misting over as I walk up upon the dais and they slip over my head the old mothtrap and mumble, "Admitto te in grad dummyhood" and I think of the glorious things that are being no more if at all and even then hardly ever. No more am I manipulating the tiny fatelets which scurry hither and yon on yon gridiron to do my bidding so that my own dear Bloosies win and I am becoming richer while those boors who bet against me are getting poorer and boorer as they bang their heads against the wall of averages which is actually nothing more than an old Gardol shield which I purchase for my protection from the nasty decay germs which the Morality Squad sics upon me every time I show my face which is a thing better left undone and it usually is.

And then all is turning from gloom to boom when Crafty Claude sidles up to me and snickers slyly: "Benny, my bosom buddy, I am having a deal for you." I am becoming all ears which is a big step forward and up from my usual state.

Claude is offering me a deal which is involving various and nefarious skulduggery but nothing which goes against my morals. It is appearing that the Mafia which does a good job up to this point is going to be junked because they are too unrefined.

Immediately I am tumbling to the point. And I am returning surreptitiously for the next season so that our little racket is working which is something I personally prefer not to do.

"Oh say, Miss Boyd, could I have those results from the water polo game?"

"Thanks."

I picked them up and left the intramural office at Hart House. As I turned to go out, an unusual activity down at the weights and boxing room caught my eye.

Walking down the corridor the clinking of weights and the sound of voices was heard.

"How the hell am I going to get my 30 credits in the next couple of weeks when I have all my studying to do?"

"Well why didn't you come earlier in the year like all the rest of us did?" his friend says.

"And to think that we have to pay fifty clams if we don't get them."

This interesting episode brought me to consider some strange facts found in an Athletic Participation report in the Varsity Office.

- over 50% of those who failed first year physical education (i.e. get the required number of credits) also failed academically.
- 25% of male students at U of T were exempted from physical education (latest figures).
- the easiest way to get an exemption is to join the University armed forces, join a religious order or be of a mature age.
- more engineers fail than any other faculty.
- all first year girls on campus in spite of having a lovely new swimming pool and a three metre board, a brand new gymnasium and other new equipment do not have to get credits because of inadequate facilities!

Well gang that is about it!

Toronto has one of the best organized intramural program on the continent.

This is quite true but when 25% of the students who are supposed to be in intramural athletics can get off one wonders about the calibre of the other Universities.

Or perhaps they have the right idea!

Why bother having Athletic participation at all?

Sure we can have the hogwash about a "fit body makes a fit mind" but why force someone to participate?

Physical Education is the only activity that is compulsory around the University.

Those who are interested will participate whether or not they are forced into it.

Athletics are a good recreation for some people!

Athletics can be fun for some people.

So why the devil force someone who feels that it isn't fun and gets no recreation out of it to participate!

P.S. You will find (if you are interested) that Toronto has one of the best Intramural Athletic systems in North America. If you drop over good but I don't feel that you should be forced to.

As one unabashedly devoted to the sporting section of this erstwhile Academy of sporty individuals, I have always felt a wee mite disturbed over the fact that no one, but no one, has taken the time to define what the word sport really means.

The matter was particularly brought to a head when I had the pleasure of listening to the Hon. George Hees address the cream of the sporty crop at the U of T annual athletic banquet last Monday.

Here, as I'll later prove, the definition of SPORT was treated with absolutely no consistency. The transport Minister waxed enthusiastic over the over 'ome manner of conducting sports. You know—the tired old pip pip of "gentlemen tis not whether you win or lose, tis how you play the game" and "tis not how you play the game, tis how you conduct yourself on the field of play" and "tis not how you conduct yourself on the field of play but whether you buy the opposing chaps an arf 'n arf when it's all over."

Which of course is al very fine and all very old and all very proper and possibly quite true, but Mr. Hees did not let it rest at that. He went on to develop a philosophy of life out of poor old sport. You've probably guessed the gist of it. Determination, team spirit, the will to win under overwhelming odds, guts, pressure, courage, understand your fellow man . . . AW NUTS!!

I feel it has been too long since anyone of us has looked in a dictionary for the definition for the Word SPORT. We tend to attach meaning to it that we wish to believe rather than agreeing that any word does have its limitations.

My pocket Webster's who's what in the world of words defines SPORT as; That which diverts and makes mirth; pastime, amusement, some particular play, game or mode of amusement; a laughing stock; amorous play; one interested in sports, a gambler.

So make a philosophy out of that one, playboy. Sounds like fun, but I'm sure it was hardly what Mr. Hees intended.

And where does that leave all professional SPORT or even good old fashioned competition on the amateur level? An activity without a name I'm afraid.

I'm positive then that when in the name of SPORT, we fussed and worried and cried encouragement to Varsity Athletes to fight for glory and the U of T we were all making one horrible mistake. It appears that when they went out on the muddy grid, the hockey rink, the basketball court or wherever, they weren't involved in sport at all (or were they).

And heavens to Betsy, the SPORTS page has not been covering sports at all. We should have been writing about games of a different sort I'm sure.

Somebody like; Victoria win BINGO championship; St. Mike's wallop SPS in CRAPS; UC win fourth AMOROUS PLAY cup; Blackjack Kennedy to coach BLACKJACK entry, and so on.

It's a bit disappointing kiddies, I admit. We shall do our best to bring you the real thing next year, unless some genius suggests a name for the "Thing" we so blithely wrote about all year.

Till that time, have a good year in SPORTS, and if he deals from the bottom of the deck, break his cottonpickin' arm.

The sentimentality is well taken care of elsewhere on this page so I'll donate my space to catching up on the news which has not been covered in the last two weeks.

First: Congratulations to SPS on winning the Jennings Cup, symbol of Intramural Hockey supremacy.

Second: The same to St. Michael's and the Faculty of Law for winning their respective divisions of the T. A. Reed Trophy.

Third: Good luck to the St. Michael's and SPS basketball teams who are currently fighting it out in the final series. Each team has won one game in the best of three series. The final is today at noon in the Hart House Gym.

Here is a dandy little note from south of the border.

Riverside, California — Students at the University of California at Riverside have ended a marathon basketball game that lasted for 85 hours. The final score was 4,053 to 3,969.

The Women's Athletic Directorate for that dandy little segregated institution on the other side of the campus reads as follows: Elaine Atkinson (Nursing), Laurel Ball (Trinity), Viliu Kanep (Phys Ed), Lowell Peltan (UC), Laurann Van Valkenburg (Victoria), Margaret Ann White (P&OT).

SPS defeated Trinity to win the Intramural Waterpolo Championship in two straight games. The scores were 14-13 and 6-4.

Next year should be a good one for Varsity in the field of Intercollegiate Sports.— I will now go on record as predicting the following with the utmost confidence.

(1) Varsity will win the Yates Cup despite Dalt White's pre-game insistence that anything can happen.

(2) Varsity will win the Intercollegiate basketball despite John MacManus' insistence that he is coaching a bunch of morons who couldn't beat their own grandmothers in a euchre tournament.

(3) Varsity will win the Intercollegiate Hockey despite the KCR, Laval, and Mike Chykaliuk.

(4) Despite the efforts of the professors enough of Jack Amos' wrestlers will pass to bring this title back to U of T.

(5) Try as he may, boxing coach Tony Canzano will not be able to restrain himself from urging his boys to clobber those coached by Jack Jarvis of Queen's and so Varsity win again in this field.
